Alio quoque tempore in eadem Campaniae regione fames incubuerat, [in communi fame, vt praedixerat,] magnaque omnes alimentorum indigentia coangustabat: iamque in Benedicti monasterio triticum deerat, panes vero paene omnes consumpti fuerant, vt non plusquam quinque ad refectionis horam fratribus inueniri potuissent. Cumque eos venerabilis Pater contristatos cerneret, eorum pusillanimitatem studuit modesta increpatione corrigere, et rursum promissione subleuare, dicens: Quare de panis inopia vester animus contristatur? Hodie quidem minus est, sed die crastina abundanter habebitis. [farinam diuinitus allatam pro suis accipit:] Sequenti autem die ducenti farinae modii ante fores cellae in saccis inuenti sunt, quos omnipotens Deus, quibus deferentibus transmisisset, nunc vsque manet incognitum. Quod cum Fratres cernerent, Domino gratias referentes, didicerunt iam de abundantia nec in egestate dubitare. PETRUS: Dic, quaeso te, numquid non credendum est, huic Dei famulo semper prophetiae spiritum adesse potuisse, an per interualla temporum eius mentem prophetiae spiritus implebat? GREGORIUS: Prophetiae spiritus, Petre, prophetarum mentes non semper irradiat: quia sicut de sancto Spiritu scriptum est, Vbi vult, spirat; ita sciendum est, quia et quando vult, adspirat. [Ioa. 3] Hinc enim est, quod Nathan a Rege requisitus, si construere templum posset, prius consensit, et postmodum prohibuit. Hinc est, quod Elisaeus cum flentem mulierem cerneret, caussamque nescisset; ad prohibentem hanc puerum dicit: Dimitte eam, quia anima eius in amaritudine est, et Dominus celauit a me, et non indicauit mihi. Quod omnipotens Deus ex magnae pietatis dispensatione disponit: [Spiritus prophetiae subinde Sanctis subtrahitur.] quia dum prophetiae spiritum aliquando dat, et aliquando subtrahit, prophetantium mentes et eleuat in celsitudine et custodit in humilitate: vt et accipientes spiritum, inueniant quid de Deo sint: et rursum prophetiae spiritum non habentes, cognoscant quid sint de semetipsis. PETRUS: Ita hoc esse, vt asseris, magna ratio clamat: sed, quaeso, de venerabili Patre Benedicto, quicquid adhuc animo occurrit, exequere.

GREGORIUS: Alio quoque tempore a quodam fideli viro fuerat rogatus, vt in eius praedio iuxta Taracinensem vrbem, missis discipulis suis, construere monasterium debuisset. Qui roganti consentiens, deputatis Fratribus Patrem constituit, et quis ei secundus esset, ordinauit: quibus euntibus spopondit, dicens: Ite, et die illo ego venio, et ostendo vobis, in quo loco oratorium, in quo refectorium Fratrum, in quo susceptionem hospitum, [Addicit se certo die coram omnia pro nouo monasterio extruendo ordinaturum:] vel quaeque sunt necessaria, aedificare debeatis. Qui benedictione percepta, illico perrexerunt, et constitutum diem magnopere praestolantes, parauerunt omnia, quae his, qui cum tanto Patre venire potuissent, videbantur esse necessaria. Nocte vero eadem, qua promissus illucescebat dies, eidem seruo Dei, quem illic Patrem constituerat, atque eius Praeposito, vir Domini in somnis apparuit, et loca singula, vbi quid aedificare debuissent, subtiliter designauit. Cumque vtrique a somno surgerent, sibi inuicem, quid viderant retulerunt: non tamen visioni illi omnimodo fidem dantes, virum Dei, sicut se venire promiserat, expectabant. Cumque vir Dei constituto die minime venisset ad eum, [id in somno praestat,] cum moerore reuersi sunt, dicentes: Expectauimus, Pater, vt venires, sicut promiseras, et nobis ostenderes, vbi quid aedificare deberemus, et non venisti. Quibus ipse ait: Quare Fratres, quare ista dicitis? Numquid sicut promisi, non veni? Cui cum ipsi dicerent, Quando venisti? Respondit, Numquid vtrisque vobis dormientibus non apparui, [et se fecisse indicat:] et loca singula designaui? Ite, et sicut per visionem vidistis, omne habitaculum monasterii ita construite. Qui haec audientes, vehementer admirati, ad praedictum praedium sunt reuersi, et cuncta habitacula, sicut ex reuelatione didicerant, construxerunt. PETRUS: Doceri velim, quo fieri ordine potuit, vt longe iret, responsum dormientibus diceret, quod ipsi per visionem audirent, et recognoscerent. GREGORIUS: Quid est, quod perscrutans rei gestae ordinem, [instar Abacuc ad Danielem,] ambigis Petre? Liquet profecto, quia nobilioris naturae est spiritus quam corpus. Et certe, Scriptura teste, nouimus quod Propheta ex Iudaea subleuatus, repente est cum prandio in Chaldaea depositus, quo videlicet prandio Prophetam refecit, seque repente in Iudaea iterum inuenit. Si igitur tam longe Abacuc potuit sub momento corporaliter ire et prandium deferre, quid mirum, si Benedictus Pater obtinuit, quatenus iret per spiritum, [in spiritu ad illos missus.] et Fratrum quiescentium spiritibus necessaria narraret: vt sicut ille ad cibum corporis corporaliter perrexit, ita iste ad institutionem spiritalis vitae spiritaliter pergeret? PETRUS: Manus tuae locutionis tersit meae (fateor) dubietatem mentis: sed velim nosse, in communi locutione qualis iste vir fuit.

GREGORIUS: Vix ipsa, Petre, communis eius locutio a virtutis erat pondere vacua: quia, cuius cor sese in alta suspenderat, [Sanctimonialibus ob linguam procacem minatur excommunicationem,] nequaquam verba de ore illius incassum cadebant. Si quid vero vmquam non iam decernendo, sed minando diceret, tantas vires sermo illius habebat, acsi hoc non dubie atque suspense, sed iam per sententiam protulisset. Nam longe ab eius monasterio duae quaedam sanctimoniales faeminae, nobiliori genere exortae, in loco proprio conuersabantur, quibus quidam religiosus vir ad exterioris vitae vsum praebebat obsequium. Sed sicut nonnullis solet nobilitas generis parare ignobilitatem mentis, vt minus se in hoc mundo despiciant, qui plus se ceteris aliquid fuisse meminerunt; necdum praedictae sanctimoniales faeminae perfecte linguam suam sub habitus sui fraeno restrinxerant, et eumdem religiosum virum, qui ad exteriora necessaria eis obsequium praebebat, incautis saepe sermonibus ad iracundiam prouocabant. Qui dum diu ista toleraret, perrexit ad Dei hominem, quantasque pateretur verborum contumelias enarrauit. Vir autem Dei haec de illis audiens, eis protinus mandauit, [quas mortuas, ab aliis a Missa ideo visas exire,] dicens: Corrigite linguam vestram: quia si non emendaueritis, excommunico vos: quam videlicet excommunicationis sententiam non proferendo intulit sed minando. Illae autem a pristinis moribus nihil mutatae, intra paucos dies defunctae sunt, atque in ecclesia sepultae. Cumque in eadem ecclesia Missarum solennia celebrarentur, atque ex more Diaconus clamaret, Si quis non communicat, det locum: nutrix earum, quae pro eis oblationem Domino offerre consueuerat, eas de sepulcris suis progredi et exire videbat. Quod dum saepius cerneret, quia ad vocem Diaconi clamantis exibant foras, atque intra ecclesiam permanere non poterant; ad memoriam reduxit quae vir Dei illis adhuc viuentibus mandauit: eas quippe se communione priuare dixerat, nisi mores suos et verba corrigerent. [factis precibus absoluit:] Tunc seruo Dei cum graui moerore indicatum est: qui manu sua protinus oblationem dedit, dicens: Ite, et hanc oblationem pro eis offerri Domino facite, et vlterius excommunicatae non erunt. Quae dum oblatio pro eis fuisset immolata, et a Diacono iuxta morem clamatum est, vt non communicantes ab ecclesia exirent, illae exire ab ecclesia vlterius visae non sunt. Qua ex re indubitanter patuit, quia dum inter eos, qui communione priuati sunt, minime recederent, communionem a Domino per servum Domini recepissent. PETRUS: Mirum valde quod dicis, quamuis venerabilem et sanctissimum virum, adhuc tamen in hac carne corruptibili degentem, potuisse animas soluere, in illo iam inuisibili iudicio constitutas. GREGORIUS: Numquidnam, Petre, in hac adhuc carne non erat, qui audiebat, Quodcumque ligaueris super terram, erit ligatum et in caelis: [facta potestate a Deo absoluendi etia spiritus.] et quae solueris super terram; soluta erunt et in caelis? [Matth. 16] Cuius nunc vicem ligando et soluendo obtinent, qui locum sancti regiminis fide et moribus tenent. Sed vt tanta valeat homo de terra, caeli et terrae Conditor in terram venit e caelo: atque vt iudicare caro etiam de spiritibus possit, hoc ei largiri dignatus est, factus pro hominibus Deus caro: quia inde surrexit vltra se infirmitas nostra, vnde sub se infirmata est firmitas Dei. PETRUS: Cum virtute signorum concorditer loquitur ratio verborum.

Gregorius. Quadam quoque die dum quidam eius puerulus monachus parentes suos ultra quam deberet diligens, atque ad eorum habitaculum tendens, sine benedictione de monasterio exiisset, eodem die mox ut ad eos pervenit, defunctus est. Cumque esset sepultus, die altero proiectum foras corpus eius inventum est, quod rursus tradere sepulturae curaverunt. Sed sequenti die iterum proiectum exterius atque inhumatum sicut prius invenerunt. Tunc concite ad Benedicti Patris vestigia currentes, cum magno fletu petierunt ut ei suam gratiam largiri dignaretur. Quibus vir Dei manu sua protinus communionem dominici corporis dedit dicens: Ite, atque hoc dominicum corpus super pectus eius cum magna reverentia ponite, et sic sepulturae eum tradite. Quod dum factum fuisset, susceptum corpus eius terra tenuit, nec ultra proiecit. Perpendis, Petre, apud Iesum Christum Dominum cuius meriti iste vir fuerit, ut eius corpus etiam terra proiecerit, qui Benedicti gratiam non haberet. Petr. Perpendo plane, et vehementer stupeo.

GREGORIUS: Quidam autem eius monachus mobilitati mentis deditus erat, [instabilem monachum dimittit: dracone apparente territam recipit.] et permanere in monasterio nolebat. Cumque eum vir Dei assidue corriperet, et frequenter admoneret, ipse vero nullo modo consentiret in congregatione persistere, atque importunis precibus, vt relaxaretur, immineret; quadam die idem venerabilis Pater, nimietatis eius taedio affectus, iratus iussit vt discederet. Qui mox vt monasterium exiit, contra se assistere aperto ore draconem in itinere inuenit: cumque eum idem draco, qui apparuerat, deuorare vellet; coepit ipse tremens et palpitans magnis vocibus clamare, dicens: Succurrite, succurrite: quia draco iste me deuorare vult. Currentes autem Fratres, draconem minime viderunt; sed trementem atque palpitantem monachum ad monasterium reduxerunt: qui statim promisit numquam se esse a monasterio recessurum, atque ex hora eadem in sua promissione permansit: quippe qui sancti viri orationibus contra se assistere draconem viderat, quem prius non videndo sequebatur.

CAPUT V. Miracula varia, etiam mortui resuscitati.

Sed neque hoc silendum puto, quod illustri viro Antonio narrante, [Pellit elephantinum morbum,] cognoui; qui aiebat patris sui puerum morbo elephantino fuisse correptum, ita vt iam pilis cadentibus, cutis intumesceret, atque increscentem saniem occultare non posset: qui ad virum Dei ab eodem patre eius missus est, et saluti pristinae sub omni celeritate restitutus.

Neque illud taceam, quod eius discipulus, Peregrinus nomine, narrare consueuerat: quia die quadam fidelis vir quidam necessitate debiti compulsus, vnum fore sibi remedium credidit, [iuvat aere alieno pressum,] si ad Dei virum pergeret, et quae eum vrgeret debiti necessitas indicaret. Venit itaque ad monasterium, omnipotentis Dei famulum reperit: quia a creditore suo pro duodecim solidis grauiter affligeretur, intimavit. Cui venerabilis Pater nequaquam se habere duodecim solidos, respondit, sed tamen eius inopiam blanda locutione consolatus, ait: Vade, et post biduum reuertere: quia deest hodie quod tibi debeam dare. In ipso autem biduo more suo in oratione fuit occupatus: cumque die tertio is, qui necessitate debiti affligebatur, rediit; super arcam monasterii, quae erat frumento plena, subito tredecim solidi sunt inuenti: quos vir Dei deferri iussit, et afflicto petitori tribuit, dicens, vt duodecim redderet, et vnum in expensis propriis haberet. Sed ad ea nunc redeam, quae eius discipulis, in libri huius exordio praedictis, referentibus agnoui. Quidam vir grauissima aduersarii sui aemulatione laborabat, cuius ad hoc vsque odium prorupit, vt ei nescienti in potu venenum daret. Qui quamuis vitam auferre non valuit, cutis tamen colorem mutauit, [sanat veneno infectum:] ita vt diffusa in corpore eius varietas, leprae morem imitari videretur. Sed ad Dei hominem deductus, salutem pristinam citius recepit: nam mox vt eum tetigit, omnem cutis illius varietatem fugauit.

Eo quoque tempore, quo alimentorum inopia Campaniam grauiter affligebat, [benignus in egenos:] vir Dei diuersis indigentibus monasterii sui cuncta tribuerat, vt paene nihil in cellario, nisi parum quid olei in vitreo vase remaneret. Tunc quidam Subdiaconus, Agapitus nomine, aduenit, magnopere postulans; vt sibi aliquantulum olei dari debuisset. [oleum petenti iussit dari:] Vir autem Domini, qui cuncta decreuerat in terra tribuere, vt in caelo omnia reseruaret, hoc ipsum parum, quod remanserat, olei iussit petenti dari. Monachus vero, qui cellarium tenebat, audiuit quidem iubentis verba, sed implere distulit. Cumque post paullulum, si id quod iusserat, datum esset inquireret, respondit monachus, se minime dedisse: quia si illud ei tribueret, omnino nihil Fratribus remaneret. [cum vase vitreo illaesum,] Tunc vir Dei iratus aliis praecepit, vt hoc ipsum vas vitreum, in quo parum olei remansisse videbatur, per fenestram proiicerent, ne in cella aliquid per inobedientiam remaneret. Factumque est. [cum miraculo seruatum,] Sub fenestra autem eadem ingens praecipitium patebat, saxorum molibus asperum. Proiectum itaque vas vitreum venit in saxis, sed sic mansit incolume, acsi proiectum minime fuisset, ita vt neque frangi, neque oleum effundi potuisset: quod vir Domini praecepit leuari, atque vt erat integrum petenti tribui. Tunc collectis Fratribus inobedientem monachum de infidelitate sua et superbia coram omnibus increpauit.

Qua increpatione completa, sese cum eisdem Fratribus in orationem dedit. In eo autem loco, [precibus impetrat oleo dolium impleri:] vbi cum Fratribus orabat, vacuum erat ab oleo dolium coopertum: cumque sanctus vir in oratione persisteret, coepit operimentum eiusdem dolii oleo excrescente subleuari: quo commoto atque subleuato, oleum, quod excreuerat, ora dolii transiens, pauimentum loci, in quo incubuerat, inundabat. Quod Benedictus Dei famulus vt aspexit, protinus orationem compleuit, atque in pauimentum oleum defluere cessauit. Tunc diffidentem inobedientemque Fratrem latius admonuit, vt fidem habere disceret et humilitatem. Idem vero Frater salubriter correptus erubuit, quia venerabilis Pater virtutem omnipotentis Dei, quam admonitione intimauerat, miraculis ostendebat: nec erat iam, vt quisquam de eius promissionibus dubitare posset, qui in vno eodemque momento pro vitreo vase paene vacuo, plenum oleo dolium reddidisset.

Quadam die dum ad S. Ioannis oratorium, quod in ipsa montis celsitudine situm est, pergeret, ei antiquus hostis in mulo medici specie obuiam factus est, cornu et tripedicam ferens. Quem cum requisisset, dicens: Quo vadis? Ille respondit: Ecce ad Fratres vado, potionem eis dare. [alapa pellit daemonem:] Itaque perrexit venerabilis Pater Benedictus ad orationem, qua completa, concitus rediit: malignus vero spiritus vnum seniorem monachum inuenit aquam haurientem; in quem statim ingressus est, eumque in terram proiecit et vehementissime vexauit. Quem cum vir Dei ab oratione rediens, tam crudeliter vexari conspiceret, ei solummodo alapam dedit, et malignum ab eo spiritum protinus excussit, ita vt ad eum redire vlterius non auderet. PETRUS: Velim nosse, si haec tanta miracula virtute semper orationis impetrabat, an aliquando etiam solo voluntatis exhibebat nutu. GREGORIUS: Qui deuota mente Deo adhaerent, [Miracula facit,] cum rerum necessitas exposcit, exhibere signa modo vtroque solent, vt mira quaeque aliquando ex prece faciant, aliquando ex potestate. [Ioan. I] Cum enim Ioannes dicat: Quotquot autem receperunt eum, dedit eis potestatem filios Dei fieri: qui filii ex potestate sunt, quid mirum, si signa facere ex potestate valeant? Quia enim vtroque modo miracula exhibeant, testatur Petrus, qui Tabitham mortuam orando suscitauit: Ananiam vero et Saphiram mentientes, morti increpando tradidit. Neque enim orasse in eorum extinctione legitur, sed solummodo culpam, quam perpetrauerant, increpasse. Constat ergo, quod aliquando haec ex potestate, aliquando vero exhibent ex postulatione, [tum precibus tum accepta potestate:] dum et istis vitam increpando abstulit, et illi reddidit orando. Nam duo quoque fidelis famuli Dei Benedicti facta nunc replico, in quibus aperte clareat, aliud hunc accepta diuinitus ex potestate, aliud ex oratione potuisse.

Gothorum quidam, Zalla nomine, perfidiae fuit Arianae, qui Totilae Regis eorum temporibus, contra Catholicae Ecclesiae religiosos viros ardore immanissimae crudelitatis exarsit, [ita lora, quibus a Gotho Ariano adstrictus erat rusticus] ita vt quisquis ei Clericus monachusue ante faciem venisset, ab eius manibus vivus nullo modo exiret. Quadam vero die auaritiae suae aestu succensus, in rapinam rerum inhians, dum quemdam rusticum tormentis crudelibus affligeret, eumque per supplicia diuersa laniaret; victus poenis rusticus, sese res suas Benedicto Dei famulo commendasse professus est, vt dum hoc a torquente crederetur, suspensa interim crudelitate, ad horam vita repararetur. Tunc idem Zalla cessauit rusticum tormentis affligere, sed eius brachia loris fortibus adstringens, ante equum suum coepit impellere, vt quis esset Benedictus qui eius res susceperat, demonstraret. Quem ligatis brachiis rusticus antecedens, duxit ad sancti viri monasterium, eumque ante ingressum cellae solum sedentem reperit et legentem. Eidem autem subsequenti et saeuienti Zallae rusticus dixit: Ecce iste est, de quo dixeram tibi, Benedictus Pater. Quem dum feruido spiritu cum peruersae mentis insania fuisset intuitus, eo terrore quo consueuerat acturum se existimans, magnis coepit vocibus clamare, dicens, Surge, surge, et res istius rustici redde quas accepisti. Ad cuius vocem vir Dei protinus oculos leuauit a lectione, eumque intuitus, mox etiam rusticum qui ligatus tenebatur attendit. Ad cuius brachia dum oculos deflexisset, miro modo tanta se celeritate coeperunt illigata brachiis lora dissoluere, [celerrime dissoluit:] vt dissolui tam concite nulla hominum festinatione potuissent. Cumque is, qui ligatus venerat, coepisset subito adstare solutus, ad tantae potestatis vim tremefactus Zalla, ad terram corruit, et ceruicem crudelitatis rigidae ad eius vestigia inclinans, se orationibus illius commendauit. Vir autem sanctus a lectione minime surrexit: sed vocatis Fratribus, eum introrsus tolli, vt benedictionem acciperet, praecepit: quem ad se reductum, vt a tantae crudelitatis insania quiescere deberet, admonuit. Qui fractus, recedens, nil vlterius petere a rustico praesumpsit, [et ferocitatem Gothi reprimit:] quem vir Domini non tangendo, sed respiciendo soluerat. Ecce est, Petre, quod dixi, quia hi, qui omnipotenti Deo familiarius seruiunt, aliquando mira facere etiam ex potestate possunt. Qui enim ferocitatem Gotthi terribilis sedens repressit, lora vero nodosque ligaturae, quae innocentis brachia adstrinxerant, oculis dissoluit; ipsa miraculi celeritate indicat, quia ex potestate acceperat habere quod fecit. Rursum quoque quale quantumque miraculum orando valuit obtinere, subiungam.

Quodam die cum Fratribus ad agri opera fuerat egressus: quidam vero rusticus defuncti filii corpus in vlnis ferens, orbitatis luctu aestuans, ad monasterium venit, [puerum mortuum] Benedictum Patrem quaesiuit. Cui cum dictum esset, quia idem Pater cum Fratribus in agro moraretur, protinus ante monasterii ianuam corpus extincti filii proiecit, et dolore turbatus, ad inueniendum venerabilem Patrem sese in cursum concitus dedit: eadem vero hora vir Dei ab agri opere iam cum Fratribus reuertebatur. Quem mox vt orbatus rusticus adspexit, clamare coepit: Redde filium meum, redde filium meum. Vir autem Dei in hac voce substitit, dicens: Numquid ego filium tuam tibi abstuli? Cui ille respondit: Mortuus est: veni, resuscita eum. Quod vt mox Dei famulus audiuit, valde contristatus est, dicens: Recedite Fratres, recedite: haec nostra non sunt, sed sanctorum Apostolorum. Quid nobis onera vultis imponere, quae non possumus portare? [post humilem excusationem] At ille, quem nimius cogebat dolor, in sua petitione persistit, iurans quod non recederet, nisi eius filium resuscitaret. Quem mox Dei famulus inquisiuit, dicens: Vbi est? Cui ille respondit: Ecce corpus eius ad ianuam monasterii iacet. Vbi cum vir Dei cum Fratribus peruenisset, flexit genu, et super corpusculum infantis incubuit, seseque erigens, ad caelum palmas tetendit, [precibus restituit vitae:] dicens: Domine, non adspicias peccata mea, sed fidem huius hominis, qui resuscitari filium suum rogat, et redde in hoc corpusculum animam, quam abstulisti. Vix in oratione verba compleverat, et regrediente anima ita corpusculum pueri omne contremuit, vt sub oculis omnium, qui aderant, apparuerit, concussione mirifica tremendo palpitasse: cuius mox manum tenuit, et eum patri viuentem atque incolumen dedit. Liquet, Petre, quia hoc miraculum in potestate non habuit, quod prostratus petiit vt exhibere potuisset. PETRUS: Sic cuncta esse, vt asseris, constat patenter: quia verba, quae proposueras, rebus probas. Sed quaeso te, vt indices, si sancti viri omnia quae volunt, possunt; et cuncta impetrant, quae desiderant obtinere.

CAPUT VI. Colloquium cum S. Scholastica. Huius et S. Germani animae visae deferri in caelum. Obitus S. Benedicti.

GREGORIUS: Quisnam erit, Petre, in hac vita Paulo sublimior, [S. Scholasticam ad se quotannis venientem in vicina aliqua dome invisit:] qui de carnis suae stimulo ter Dominum rogauit, et tamen quod voluit obtinere non valuit? Ex qua re necesse est, vt tibi de venerabili Patre Benedicto narrem, quia fuit quiddam quod voluit, sed non valuit implere. Soror namque eius, a Scholastica nomine, omnipotenti Domino ab ipso infantiae tempore dedicata, ad eum semel per annum venire consueuerat, ad quam vir Dei non longe extra ianuam in possessionem monasterii descendebat. Quadam vero die venit ex more, atque ad eam cum discipulis venerabilis eius descendit frater: qui totum diem in Dei laudibus sacrisque colloquiis ducentes, incumbentibus iam noctis tenebris, simul acceperunt cibos. Cumque adhuc ad mensam sederent, et inter sacra colloquia tardior se hora protraheret, eadem sanctimonialis faemina soror eius eum rogauit, dicens: Quaeso te, vt ista nocte me non deseras, vt vsque mane de caelestis vitae gaudiis loquamur. Cui ille respondit: Quid est, quod loqueris soror? Manere extra cellam nullatenus possum. Tanta vero erat caeli serenitas, vt nulla in aëre nubes appareret: sanctimonialis autem faemina, cum verba fratris negantis audisset, [redire cupiens impeditur, tempestate precibus S. Scholasticae impetrata:] insertas digitis manus super mensam posuit, et caput in manibus, omnipotentem Dominum rogatura, declinauit. Cumque de mensa leuaret caput, tanta coruscationis et tonitrui virtus, tantaque inundatio pluviae erupit, vt neque venerabilis Benedictus, neque Fratres, qui cum eo aderant, extra loci limen, quo consederant, pedem mouere potuissent. Sanctimonialis quippe faemina caput in manibus declinans, lacrymarum fluuium in mensam fuderat, per quas serenitatem aëris ad pluviam traxit. Nec paullo tardius post orationem inundatio illa secura est: sed tanta fuit convenientia orationis et inundationis, vt de mensa caput iam cum tonitruo leuaret, quatenus vnum idemque esset momentum, et leuare caput et pluuiam deponere. Tunc vir Dei inter coruscos et tonitruos atque ingentis pluuiae inundationem videns se ad monasterium non posse remeare, coepit conqueri contristatus, dicens: Parcat tibi omnipotens Deus, soror: quid est quod fecisti? Cui illa respondit: Ecce te rogaui, et audire me noluisti: rogaui

Dominum meum, et audiuit me. Modo ergo, si potes, egredere, et me dimissa, ad monasterium recede. Ipse autem exire extra tectum non valens, quia remanere sponte noluit, in loco mansit inuitus: sicque factum est, vt totam noctem peruigilem ducerent, atque per sacra spiritalis vitae colloquia sese vicaria relatione satiarent. Qua de re dixi eum voluisse aliquid, sed minime potuisse: quia si venerabilis viri mentem adspicimus, dubium non est, quin eamdem serenitatem voluerit, in qua descenderat, permanere: sed contra hoc, quod voluit, in virtute omnipotentis Dei ex faeminae pectore miraculum inuenit. Nec mirum, quod plus illo faemina, quae diu fratrem videre cupiebat, in eodem tempore valuit: quia enim iuxta Ioannis vocem, Deus caritas est; iusto valde iudicio illa plus potuit, quae amplius amauit. PETRUS: Fateor, multum placet quod dicis. [1. Ioan. 4.]

GREGORIUS: Cumque die altero eadem venerabilis faemina ad cellam propriam recessisset, [animam eius videt in columbae specie caelum petere:] vir Dei ad monasterium rediit. Cum ecce post triduum in cella consistens, eleuatis in aëra oculis, vidit eiusdem sororis suae animam de eius corpore egressam, in columbae specie caeli secreta penetrare. Qui tantae eius gloriae congaudens, omnipotenti Deo in hymnis et laudibus gratias reddidit, eiusque obitum Fratribus denuntiauit. Quos etiam protinus misit, vt eius corpus ad monasterium deferrent, atque in sepulcro, quod sibi ipse parauerat, ponerent: quo facto contigit, vt quorum mens vna semper in Domino fuerat, eorum quoque corpora nec sepultura separaret.

[Seruandum Diaconum et Abbatem excipit sancto colloquio:] Alio quoque tempore Seruandus Diaconus atque Abbas eius monasterii, quod in Campaniae partibus a Liberio quondam Patricio fuerat constructum, ad eum visitationis gratia ex more venire consueuerat: eius quippe monasterium frequentabat, vt quia idem quoque vir doctrina gratiae caelestis influebat, dulcia sibi inuicem vitae verba transfunderent, et suauem cibum caelestis patriae, quia adhuc perfecte gaudendo non poterant, saltem suspirando

gustarent. Cumque hora iam quietis exigeret, in cuius turris superioribus se venerabilis Benedictus, in eius quoque inferioribus se Seruandus Diaconus collocauit: quo videlicet in loco inferiora ad superiora pervius continuabat ascensus: ante eamdem vero turrim largius erat habitaculum, in quo vtriusque discipuli quiescebant. Cumque vir Dei Benedictus, quiescentibus adhuc Fratribus, instans vigiliis, nocturnae orationis tempora praeuenisset, ad fenestram stans et omnipotentem Deum deprecans; subito intempesta noctis hora respiciens, vidit fusam lucem desuper, cunctas noctis tenebras effugasse, tantoque splendore clarescere, vt diem vinceret lux illa, [videt animam S. Germani Episcopi Capuani ferri in caelum.] quae in tenebris radiasset. Mira autem res valde in hac speculatione secuta est: quia, sicut post ipse narrauit, omnis etiam mundus, velut sub vno solis radio collectus, ante oculos eius adductus est. Qui venerabilis Pater dum intentam oculorum aciem in hoc splendore coruscae lucis infigeret, vidit Germani Capuani Episcopi animam in sphaera ignea ab Angelis in caelum ferri. Tunc tanti sibi testem volens adhibere miraculi: Seruandum Diaconum, iterato bis terque eius nomine, cum clamoris magnitudine vocauit. Cumque ille fuisset insolito tanti viri clamore turbatus, [testem adhibet Seruandum,] ascendit, respexit, partemque iam lucis exiguam vidit: cui tantum hoc obstupescenti miraculum, vir Dei per ordinem, quae fuerant gesta, narrauit: statimque in Cassinum castrum religioso viro Theoprobo mandauit, vt ad Capuanam vrbem sub eadem nocte transmitteret, et quid de Germano Episcopo ageretur, agnosceret et indicaret. Factumque est et reuerendissimum virum Germanum Episcopum is qui missus fuerat iam defunctum reperit, et requirens subtiliter, agnouit eodem momento fuisse illius obitum, quo vir Domini eius cognouit ascensum. PETRUS: Mira res valde, et vehementer stupenda! Sed hoc, quod dictum est, quia ante oculos ipsius quasi sub vno solis radio collectus omnis mundus adductus est, sicut numquam expertus sum, ita nec coniicere scio, quonam ordine fieri potest, vt mundus omnis ab homine vno videatur. GREGORIUS: Fixum tene, Petre, [eleuatus in Deum mundum sub radio solis collectum vidit:] quod loquor: quia animae videnti Creatorem angusta est omnis creatura. Quamlibet etenim parum de luce Creatoris adspexerit, breue ei fit omne, quod creatum est: quin ipsa luce visionis, intimae mentis laxatur sinus, tantumque expanditur in Deo, vt superior existat mundo. Fit vero ipsa videntis anima etiam super semetipsam; cumque in Dei lumine rapitur, super se in interioribus ampliatur; et dum se sub se conspicit, exaltata comprehendit quam breue sit, quod comprehendere humiliata non poterat. Vir ergo Dei, qui in turri globum igneum, Angelos quoque ad caelum redeuntes videbat, haec proculdubio cernere non nisi in Dei lumine poterat. Quid itaque mirum, si mundum ante se collectum vidit, qui subleuatus in mentis lumine, extra mundum fuit? Quod autem collectus mundus ante eius oculos dicitur, non caelum et terra contracta est, sed videntis animus est dilatatus: qui in Deo raptus, videre sine difficultate potuit omne, quod infra Deum est. In illa ergo luce, quae exterioribus oculis fulsit, lux interior in mente fuit, quae videntis animum cum ad superiora rapuit, ei quam angusta essent omnia inferiora monstrauit. PETRUS: Videor mihi vtiliter non intellexisse quae dixeras, quando ex tarditate mea tantum creuit expositio tua. Sed quia haec liquide meis sensibus infudisti, quaeso vt ad narrationis ordinem redeas.

[Scribit regulam discretione praecipuam,] GREGORIUS: Libet, Petre, adhuc de hoc venerabili Patre multa narrare; sed quaedam eius studiose praetereo, quia ad aliorum gesta reuoluenda festino. Hoc autem nolo te lateat, quod vir Dei inter tot miracula, quibus in mundo claruit, doctrinae quoque verbo non mediocriter fulsit. Nam scripsit monachorum Regulam, discretione praecipuam, sermone luculentam: cuius si quis velit subtilius mores vitamque cognoscere, potest in eadem institutione regulae omnes magisterii illius actus inuenire: quia sanctus vir nullo modo potuit aliter docere quam vixit.

[Mortem praedicit:] Eodem vero anno, quo de hac vita erat exiturus, quibusdam discipulis secum conuersantibus, quibusdam longe manentibus, sanctissimi sui obitus denuntiauit diem: praesentibus indicens, vt audita per silentium tegerent, absentibus indicans, quod vel quale eis signum fieret, quando eius anima de corpore exiret. Ante sextum vero sui exitus diem aperiri sibi sepulturam iubet: qui mox correptus febribus, [sepulcrum aperiri iubet:] acri coepit ardore fatigari. Cumque per dies singulos languor ingrauesceret, sexta die portari se in oratorium a discipulis fecit, ibique exitium suum Dominici Corporis et Sanguinis perceptione muniuit, atque inter discipulorum manus imbecillia membra sustentans, erectis in caelum manibus stetit, et vltimum spiritum inter verba orationis efflavit. Qua scilicet die duobus de eo Fratribus, vni in cella commoranti, [accepto viatico moritur:] alteri autem longius posito, reuelatio vnius atque indissimilis visionis apparuit. Viderunt namque, quia strata palliis atque innumeris corusca lampadibus via, recto Orientis tramite ab eius cella in caelum vsque tendebatur: cui venerando habitu vir desuper clarus assistens, cuius esset via, quam cernerent inquisiuit. Illi autem se nescire professi sunt. Quibus ipse ait: Haec est via, [in caelum ascendisse ostenditur:] qua dilectus Domino caelum Benedictus ascendit. Tunc itaque sancti viri obitum, sicut praesentes discipuli viderunt, ita absentes ex signo, quod eis praedictum fuerat, agnouerunt. Sepultus vero est in oratorio S. Ioannis Baptistae, quod, destructa ara Apollinis, [sepelitur.] ipse construxit: qui et in eo specu, in quo prius habitauit, nunc vsque, si petentium fides exigat, miraculis coruscat.

ibique nesciens ingressa mansit. Mane autem facto, ita sanato sensu egressa est, ac si eam numquam insania capitis vlla tenuisset: quae omni vitae suae tempore in eadem, quam accepit, salute permansit. PETRUS: Quidnam esse dicimus, quod plerumque in ipsis quoque patrociniis Martyrum sic esse sentimus; vt non tanta per corpora sua, quanta beneficia per Reliquias ostendant; atque illic maiora signa faciant, vbi minime per semetipsos iacent? GREGORIUS: Vbi in suis corporibus sancti Martyres iacent, dubium, Petre, non est, quod multa valeant signa demonstrare, sicut et faciunt, et pura mente quaerentibus innumera miracula ostendunt: sed quia ab infirmis potest mentibus dubitari, vtrumne ad exaudiendum ibi praesentes sint, vbi constat, quia in suis corporibus non sunt; ibi necesse est eos maiora signa ostendere, vbi de eorum praesentia potest mens infirma dubitare. [Sancti vbique possunt ipsos inuocantes exaudire.] Quorum vero mens in Deo fixa est, tanto maius habet fidei meritum, quanto illic eos nouit et non iacere corpore, et tamen non deesse ab exauditione. Vnde ipsa quoque Veritas, vt fidem discipulis augeret, dixit: Si ego non abiero, Paracletus non veniet ad vos. Cum enim constet, quia Paracletus Spiritus a Patre semper procedat et Filio, cur se Filius recessurum dicit, vt ille veniat, qui a Filio numquam recedit? Sed quia discipuli Dominum in carne cernentes, corporeis hunc oculis semper videre sitiebant, recte eis dicitur: Nisi ego abiero, Paracletus non veniet: acsi aperte diceretur: Si corpus non subtraho, quis sit amor spiritus non ostendo: et nisi me desieritis carnaliter cernere, numquam me discetis spiritaliter amare. PETRUS: Placet quod dicis. GREGORIUS: Aliquantum iam a locutione cessandum est, ut si ad aliorum miracula enarranda tendimus, loquendi vires interim per silentium reparemus.

Liber III

CAPUT I. De Paulino Nolanae urbis episcopo.

Dum vicinis valde Patribus intendo, majorum facta reliqueram, ita ut Paulini miraculum, Nolanae urbis episcopi, qui multos quorum memini virtute et tempore praecessit, memoriae defuisse videatur. Sed ad priora nunc redeo, eaque quanta valeo brevitate perstringo. Sicut enim bonorum facta innotescere citius similibus solent, senioribus nostris per justorum exempla gradientibus praedicti venerabilis viri celebre nomen innotuit, ejusque opus admirabile ad eorum se instruenda studia tetendit, quorum me necesse fuit grandaevitati tam certo credere, ac si ea quae dicerent meis oculis vidissem. Cum saevientium Vandalorum tempore fuisset Italia in Campaniae partibus depopulata, multique essent de hac terra in Africanam regionem transducti, vir Domini Paulinus cuncta quae ad episcopii usum habere potuit captivis indigentibusque largitus est. Cumque jam nihil omnino superesset quod petentibus dare potuisset, quodam die quaedam vidua advenit, quae a regis Vandalorum genero suum filium in captivitatem fuisse ductum perhibuit, atque a viro Dei ejus pretium postulavit, si forte illius dominus hoc dignaretur accipere, et hunc concederet ad propria remeare. Sed vir Dei magnopere petenti feminae quid dare potuisset inquirens, nihil apud se aliud nisi se invenit, petentique feminae respondit, dicens: Mulier, quod possim dare non habeo, sed memetipsum tolle, servum me juris tui esse profitere, atque ut filium tuum recipias, me vice illius in servitium trade. Quod illa ex ore tanti viri audiens, irrisionem potius credidit quam compassionem. At ille, ut erat vir eloquentissimus, atque apprime exterioribus quoque studiis eruditus, dubitanti feminae citius persuasit ut audita crederet, et pro receptione filii sui in servitium episcopum tradere non dubitaret. Perrexere igitur utrique ad Africam.

Procedenti autem regis genero, qui ejus filium habebat, vidua rogatura se obtulit, ac prius petiit ut ei filium donare debuisset. Quod cum vir barbarus typho superbiae turgidus, gaudio transitoriae prosperitatis inflatus, non solum facere, sed etiam audire despiceret, vidua subjunxit, dicens: Ecce hunc hominem pro eo vicarium praebeo, solummodo pietatem in me exhibe, mihique unicum filium redde. Cumque ille venusti vultus hominem conspexisset, quam artem nosset inquisivit. Cui vir Dei Paulinus respondit, dicens: Artem quidem aliquam nescio, sed hortum bene excolere scio. Quod vir gentilis valde libenter accepit, cum in nutriendis oleribus quia peritus esset audivit. Suscepit itaque servum, et roganti viduae reddidit filium. Quo accepto, vidua ab Africana regione discessit. Paulinus vero excolendi horti suscepit curam. Cumque idem regis gener crebro ingrederetur hortum, suumque hortulanum quaedam requireret, et sapientem valde esse hominem videret, amicos coepit et familiares deserere, et saepius cum suo hortulano colloqui, atque ejus sermonibus delectari. Cui Paulinus quotidie ad mensam odoriferas virentesque herbas deferre consueverat, et accepto pane ad curam horti remeare. Cumque hoc diutius ageretur, quadam die suo domino secum secretius loquenti ait: Vide quid agas, et Vandalorum regnum qualiter disponi debeat provide, quia rex citius et sub omni celeritate est moriturus. Quod ille audiens, quia ab eodem rege prae caeteris diligebatur, ei minime tacuit, sed quid a suo hortulano, sapienti scilicet viro, agnovisset indicavit. Quod dum rex audisset, illico respondit: Ego vellem hunc de quo loqueris hominem videre. Cui gener ejus, venerabilis Paulini temporalis dominus, respondit dicens: Virentes herbas mihi ad prandium deferre consuevit, has itaque huc ad mensam eum deportare facio, ut quis sit qui mihi haec est locutus agnoscas. Factumque est. Et dum rex ad prandendum discubuit, Paulinus ex suo opere odora quaeque et virentia delaturus advenit. Cumque hunc rex subito conspexisset, intremuit, atque, accersito ejus domino, sibi per filiam propinquo, ei secretum quod prius absconderat indicavit, dicens:

Verum est quod audisti; nam nocte hac in somnio, sedentes in tribunalibus contra me judices vidi, inter quos iste etiam simul sedebat, et flagellum quod aliquando acceperam eorum mihi judicio tollebatur. Sed percunctare quisnam sit; nam ego hunc tanti meriti virum, popularem, ut conspicitur, esse non suspicor. Tunc regis gener secreto Paulinum tulit, et quisnam esset inquisivit. Cui vir Domini respondit: Servus tuus sum, quem pro filio viduae vicarium suscepisti. Cumque instanter ille requireret ut non quid esset, sed quid in terra sua fuisset indicaret, atque hoc ab eo iteratione frequentis inquisitionis exigeret, vir Domini, constrictus magnis conjurationibus, jam non valens negare quid esset, episcopum se fuisse testatus est. Quod possessor ejus audiens, valde pertimuit, atque humiliter obtulit, dicens: Pete quod vis, quatenus ad terram tuam a me cum magno munere revertaris. Cui vir Domini Paulinus ait: Unum est quod mihi impendere beneficium potes, ut omnes civitatis meae captivos relaxes. Qui cuncti protinus in Africana regione requisiti, cum onustis frumento navibus pro venerandi viri Paulini satisfactione, in ejus comitatu laxati sunt. Post non multos vero dies Vandalorum rex occubuit, et flagellum quod ad suam perniciem, dispensante Deo, pro fidelium disciplina acceperat amisit. Sicque factum est ut omnipotentis Dei famulus Paulinus vera praediceret, et qui se in servitium solum tradiderat, cum multis a servitio ad libertatem rediret, illum videlicet imitatus qui formam servi assumpsit, ne nos essemus servi peccati. Cujus sequens vestigia Paulinus, ad tempus voluntarie servus factus est solus, ut esset postmodum liber cum multis. PETRUS: Dum me audire contingit quod imitari non valeo, flere magis libet quam aliquid dicere. GREGORIUS: De cujus etiam morte apud ejus Ecclesiam scriptum est, quia cum dolore esset lateris tactus, ad extrema perductus est. Dumque ejus omnis domus in sua soliditate persisteret, cubiculum in quo jacebat aeger, facto terrae motu, contremuit, omnesque qui illic aderant nimio terrore concussit; sicque sancta illa anima carne soluta est. Factumque est ut magnus pavor invaderet eos qui Paulini mortem videre potuissent. Sed quia haec, quam superius dixi, Paulini virtus valde est intima, nunc, si placet, ad miracula exteriora veniamus, quae et multis jam nota sunt, et ego tam religiosorum virorum relatione didici, ut de his omnimodo ambigere non possim.

CAPUT II. De sancto Joanne papa.

Gothorum tempore, cum Joannes vir beatissimus hujus Romanae Ecclesiae pontifex ad Justinum seniorem principem pergeret, in Corinthi partibus advenit, cui necesse fuit ut in itinere ad sedendum equus requiri debuisset. Quod illic quidam vir nobilis audiens, equum, quem pro magna mansuetudine ejus conjux sedere consueverat, ita ei obtulit, ut cum ad loca alia pervenienti aptus equus inveniri potuisset, deberet ille quem dederat propter suam conjugem retransmitti. Factumque est, et usque ad certum locum praedictus vir equo eodem subvehente perductus est. Qui mox ut alium reperit, illum quem acceperat retransmisit. Cumque eum praedicti nobilis viri conjux sedere ex more voluisset, ultra non valuit, quia post sessionem tanti pontificis mulierem ferre recusavit. Coepit namque immenso flatu et fremitu, atque incessanti totius corporis motu quasi despiciendo prodere, quia post membra pontificis mulierem ferre non posset. Quod vir ejus prudenter intuitus, hunc ad eumdem venerabilem virum protinus retransmisit, magnis precibus petens ut equum ipse possideret, quem juri suo sedendo dedicasset. De quo etiam illud mirabile a nostris senioribus narrari solet, quod in Constantinopolitana urbe ad portam quae vocatur Aurea, veniens, populorum turbis sibi occurrentibus, in conspectu omnium roganti caeco lumen reddidit, et manu superposita oculorum tenebras fugavit.

CAPUT III. De sancto Agapito papa.

Post non multum vero temporis, exigente causa Gothorum, vir quoque beatissimus Agapitus hujus sanctae Romanae Ecclesiae pontifex, cui Deo dispensante deservio, ad Justinianum principem accessit. Cui adhuc pergenti quadam die in Graeciarum jam partibus curandus oblatus est mutus et claudus, qui neque ulla verba edere, neque ex terra unquam surgere valebat. Cumque hunc propinqui illius flentes obtulissent, vir Domini sollicite requisivit an curationis illius haberent fidem. Cui dum in virtute Dei, ex auctoritate Petri, fixam salutis illius spem habere se dicerent, protinus venerandus vir orationi incubuit, et missarum solemnia exorsus, sacrificium in conspectu Dei omnipotentis immolavit. Quo peracto, ab altari exiens, claudi manum tenuit, atque assistente et aspiciente populo, eum mox a terra in propriis gressibus erexit. Cumque ei Dominicum corpus in os mitteret, illa diu muta ad loquendum lingua soluta est. Mirati omnes flere prae gaudio coeperunt, eorumque mentes illico metus et reverentia invasit, cum videlicet cernerent quid Agapitus facere in virtute Domini ex adjutorio Petri potuisset.

CAPUT IV. De Datio Mediolanensi episcopo.

Ejusdem quoque principis tempore cum Datius Mediolanensis urbis episcopus causa fidei exactus, ad Constantinopolitanam urbem pergeret, Corinthum devenit. Qui dum largam domum ad hospitandum quaereret, quae comitatum illius totum ferre potuisset, et vix inveniret, aspexit eminus domum congruentis magnitudinis, eamque sibi praeparari ad hospitandum jussit. Cumque ejusdem loci incolae dicerent, in ea hunc manere non posse, quia multis jam annis hanc diabolus inhabitaret, atque ideo vacua remansisset, vir venerabilis Datius respondit, dicens: Imo ideo hospitari in domo eadem debemus, si hanc spiritus malignus invasit, et ab ea hominum inhabitationem repulit. In ea igitur sibi parari praecepit, securusque illam, antiqui hostis certamina toleraturus, intravit. Itaque intempestae noctis silentio, cum vir Dei quiesceret, antiquus hostis immensis vocibus magnisque clamoribus coepit imitari rugitus leonum, balatus pecorum, ruditus asinorum, sibilos serpentium, porcorum stridores et soricum. Tunc repente Datius tot bestiarum vocibus excitatus surrexit, vehementer iratus, et contra antiquum hostem magnis coepit vocibus clamare, dicens: Bene tibi contigit, miser, tu ille es qui dixisti: Ponam sedem meam ad Aquilonem, et ero similis Altissimo; ecce per superbiam tuam porcis et soricibus similis factus es; et qui imitari Deum indigne voluisti, ecce, ut dignus es, bestias imitaris. Ad quam ejus vocem, ut ita dicam, dejectionem suam malignus spiritus erubuit. An non erubuit, qui eamdem domum ad exhibenda monstra quae consueverat ulterius non intravit? Sicque postmodum fidelium habitaculum facta est, quia dum eam unus veraciter fidelis ingressus est, ab ea protinus mendax spiritus atque infidelis abscessit. Sed oportet jam ut priora taceamus, ad ea quae diebus nostris sunt gesta veniendum est, CAPUT V. De Sabino Canusinae civitatis episcopo.

Quidam enim religiosi viri Apuliae provinciae partibus cogniti, hoc quod apud multorum notitiam longe lateque percrebuit, de Sabino Canusinae urbis episcopo testari solent, quia idem vir longo jam senio oculorum lumen amiserat, ita ut omnimodo nil videret. Quem rex Gothorum Totila prophetiae habere spiritum audiens, minime credidit, sed probare studuit quod audivit. Qui cum in iisdem partibus devenisset, hunc vir Domini ad prandium rogavit. Cumque jam ventum esset ad mensam, rex discumbere noluit, sed ad Sabini venerabilis viri dexteram sedit. Cum vero eidem patri puer ex more poculum vini praeberet, rex silenter manum tetendit, calicem abstulit, eumque per se episcopo vice pueri praebuit, ut videret an spiritu providente discerneret quis ei poculum praeberet. Tunc vir Dei, accipiens calicem, sed tamen ministrum non videns, dixit: Vivat ipsa manus. De quo verbo rex laetatus erubuit, quia quamvis ipse deprehensus fuisset, in viro tamen Dei quod quaerebat invenit. Hujus autem venerabilis viri, cum ad exemplum vitae sequentium in longum senium vita traheretur, ejus archidiaconus ambitione adipiscendi episcopatus accensus, eum exstinguere veneno molitus est. Qui cum vini fusoris ejus animum corrupisset, ut mistum vino veneni ei poculum praeberet, refectionis hora cum jam vir Dei ad edendum discumberet, ei praemiis corruptus puer hoc quod ab archidiacono ejus acceperat veneni poculum obtulit. Cui statim venerabilis episcopus dixit: Bibe tu hoc quod mihi bibendum praebes. Tremefactus puer, deprehensum se esse sentiens, maluit moriturus bibere quam poenas pro illa tanti homicidii culpa tolerare. Cumque sibi ad os calicem duceret, vir Domini compescuit, dicens: Non bibas, da mihi, ego bibo; sed vade, dic ei qui tibi illud dedit: Ego quidem venenum bibo, sed tu episcopus non eris. Facto igitur signo crucis, venenum episcopus bibit securus. Eademque hora in loco alio quo inerat archidiaconus ejus defunctus est, ac si per os episcopi ad archidiaconi viscera illa venena transissent. Cui tamen ad inferendam mortem venenum quidem corporale defuit, sed hunc in conspectu aeterni judicis venenum suae malitiae occidit. PETRUS: Mira sunt haec, et nostris valde stupenda temporibus; sed talis ejusdem viri vita perhibetur ut qui conversationem ejus agnoverit, virtutem non debeat mirari.

CAPUT VI. De Cassio Narniensis civitatis episcopo.

GREGORIUS: Neque hoc, Petre, sileam quod multi nunc qui hic de Narniensi civitate adsunt mihi sedulo testificantur. Eodem namque Gothorum tempore, cum praefatus rex Totila Narniam venisset, ei vir vitae venerabilis Cassius ejusdem urbis episcopus occurrit. Cui quia ex conspersione semper facies rubere consueverat, hoc rex Totila non conspersionis esse credidit, sed assiduae potationis, eumque omnimodo despexit. Sed omnipotens Deus, ut quantus vir esset qui despiciebatur ostenderet, in Narniensi campo quo rex advenerat, malignus spiritus coram omni exercitu ejus spatharium invasit, eumque vexare crudeliter coepit. Qui cum ante regis oculos ad venerandum virum Cassium fuisset adductus, hunc ab eo vir Domini oratione facta, signo crucis expulit, qui in eum ingredi ulterius non praesumpsit. Sicque factum est ut rex barbarus servum Dei ab illo jam die veneraretur ex corde, quem despectum valde judicabat ex facie. Nam quia virum tantae virtutis vidit, erga illum illa mens effera ab elationis fastu detumuit.

CAPUT VII. De Andrea Fundanae civitatus episcopo.

Sed ecce dum facta fortium virorum narro, repente ad memoriam venit quid erga Andream Fundanae civitatis episcopum divina misericordia fecerit. Quod tamen ad hoc legentibus ut valeat exopto, quatenus qui corpus suum continentiae dedicant, habitare cum feminis non praesumant; ne ruina menti tanto repentina subripiat, quanto ad hoc quod male concupiscitur etiam praesentia concupitae formae famulatur. Nec res est dubia quam narro, quia pene tanti in ea testes sunt, quanti et ejusdem loci habitatores existunt. Hic namque venerabilis vir cum vitam multis plenam virtutibus duceret, seque sub sacerdotali custodia in continentiae arce custodiret, quamdam sanctimonialem feminam, quam secum prius habuerat, noluit ab episcopii sui cura repellere, sed certus de sua ejusque continentia, secum hanc permisit habitare. Ex qua re actum est ut antiquus hostis apud ejus animum aditum tentationis exquireret. Nam coepit speciem illius oculis mentis ejus imprimere, ut illectus nefanda cogitaret. Quadam vero die Judaeus quidam ex Campaniae partibus Romam veniens, Appiae carpebat iter: qui ad Fundanum clivum perveniens, cum jam diem vesperascere cerneret, et quo declinare posset minime reperiret, juxta Apollinis templum fuit, ibique se ad manendum contulit. Qui ipsum loci illius sacrilegium pertimescens, quamvis fidem crucis minime haberet, signo tamen se crucis munire curavit. Nocte autem media, ipso solitudinis pavore turbatus, pervigil jacebat, et repente conspiciens vidit malignorum spirituum turbam quasi in obsequium cujusdam potestatis praeire, eum vero qui caeteris praeerat, in ejusdem gremio loci consedisse: qui coepit singulorum spirituum obsequentium sibi causas actusque discutere, quatenus unusquisque quantum nequitiae egisset inveniret. Cumque singuli spiritus ad inquisitionem ejus exponerent quid operati contra bonos fuissent, unus in medium prosiliit, qui in Andreae episcopi animum per speciem sanctimonialis feminae, quae in episcopio ejus habitabat, quantam tentationem carnis commovisset aperuit. Cum vero hoc malignus qui praeerat spiritus inhianter audiret, et tanto sibi factum lucrum grande crederet, quanto sanctioris viri animum ad lapsum perditionis iclinaret, ille spiritus, qui haec eadem fatebatur, adjunxit quia usque ad hoc quoque, die praeterito, vespertina hora, ejus mentem traxerit, ut in terga ejusdem sanctimonialis feminae blandiens alapam daret. Tunc malignus spiritus atque humani generis antiquus inimicus exhortatus hunc blande est, ut perficeret quod coepisset; quatenus ruinae illius singularem inter caeteros palmam teneret. Cumque Judaeus qui advenerat hoc vigilans cerneret, et magnae formidinis anxietate palpitaret, ab eodem spiritu qui cunctis illic obsequentibus praeerat jussum est ut requirerent quisnam esset ille qui jacere in templo eodem praesumpsisset. Quem maligni spiritus pergentes, et subtilius intuentes, crucis mysterio signatum viderunt, mirantesque dixerunt: Vae, vae, vas vacuum et signatum. Quibus hoc renuntiantibus, cuncta illa malignorum spirituum turba disparuit. Judaeus vero qui haec viderat, illco surrexit, atque ad episcopum sub festinatione pervenit. Quem in Ecclesia sua reperiens, seorsum tulit, qua tentatione urgeretur inquisivit. Cui confiteri episcopus tentationem suam verecundatus noluit. Cum vero ille diceret quod in illa tali Dei famula pravi amoris oculos injecisset, atque adhuc episcopus negaret, adjunxit, dicens: Quare negas quod inquireris, qui ad hoc usque vespere hesterno perductus es, ut posteriora illius alapa ferires? Ad quae nimirum verba deprehensum se episcopus intuens, humiliter confessus est quod prius pertinaciter negavit. Cujus ruinae et verecundiae idem Judaeus consulens, qualiter hoc cognovisset, vel quae in conventu malignorum spirituum de eo audivisset, indicavit. Quod ille agnoscens, se ad terram protinus in orationem dedit. Moxque de suo habitaculo non solum eamdem Dei famulam, sed omnem quoque feminam, quae in ejus illic obsequio habitabat, expulit. In eodem vero templo Apollinis, beati Andreae apostoli repente oratorium fecit, atque omni illa tentatione carnis funditus caruit. Judaeum vero, cujus visione atque increpatione salvatus est, ad aeternam salutem traxit. Nam sacramentis fidei imbutum, atque aqua baptismatis emundatum, ad sanctae Ecclesiae gremium perduxit. Sicque factum est ut Hebraeus idem, dum saluti alienae consuluit, perveniret ad suam, et omnipotens Deus inde alterum ad bonam vitam perduceret, unde in bona vita alterum custodisset. PETRUS: Res haec gesta quam audivi, et metum mihi praebet et spem. GREGORIUS: Utique sic oportet et de Dei nos semper miseratione confidere, et de nostra infirmitate formidare. Ecce enim paradisi cedrum concussam audivimus, sed non evulsam, quatenus infirmis nobis et de ejus concussione nascatur timor, et de ejus stabilitate fiducia.

CAPUT VIII. De Constantio Aquinae civitatis episcopo.

Vir quoque venerabilis vitae Constantius Aquinae civitatis episcopus fuit, qui nuper praedecessoris mei tempore beatae memoriae Joannis papae defunctus est. Hunc prophetiae habuisse spiritum multi testantur, qui eum familiariter scire potuerunt. Cujus inter multa hoc ferunt religiosi veracesque viri qui praesentes fuerunt, quod in die obitus sui cum a circumstantibus civibus utpote discessurus Pater tam amabilis amarissime plangeretur, eum flendo requisierunt, dicentes: Quem post te, Pater, habebimus? Quibus ipse Pater per prophetiae spiritum respondit, dicens: Post Constantium, mulionem; post mulionem, fullonem. O te, Aquine, et hoc habes. Quibus prophetiae verbis editis, vitae spiritum exhalavit extremum. Quo defuncto, ejus Ecclesiae pastoralem suscepit curam Andreas diaconus illius, qui quondam in stabulis itinerum cursum servaverat equorum. Atque hoc ex hac vita subducto, ad episcopatus ordinem Jovinus accersitus est, qui in eadem urbe fullo fuerat. Quo adhuc superstite, ita cuncti inhabitatores civitatis illius et barbarorum gladiis et pestilentiae immanitate vastati sunt, ut post mortem illius nec quis episcopus fieret, nec quibus fieret inveniri potuisset. Sic itaque completa est viri Dei sententia, quatenus post decessum duorum se sequentium ejus Ecclesia pastorem minime haberet.

CAPUT IX. De Frigdiano Lucensis civitatis episcopo.

Sed neque hoc sileam, quod narrante viro venerabili Venantio Lunensi episcopo me ante biduum contigit agnovisse. Lucanae namque Ecclesiae, sibimet propinquae, fuisse mirae virtutis virum Frigdianum nomine narravit episcopum: cujus hoc opinatissimum a cunctis illic habitantibus testatur memorari miraculum, quod Auseris fluvius, qui juxta illius urbis muros influebat, saepe inundatione facta cursus sui alveum egressus per agros diffundi consueverat, ut quaeque sata et plantata reperiret everteret. Cumque hoc crebro fieret, et magna ejusdem loci incolas necessitas urgeret, dato studio operis, eum per loca alia derivare conati sunt. Sed quamvis diutius laboratum fuisset, a proprio alveo deflecti non potuit. Tunc vir Domini Frigdianus rastrum sibi parvulum fecit, ad alveum fluminis accessit, et solus orationi incubuit; atque eidem flumini praecipiens ut se sequeretur, per loca quaeque ei visa sunt rastrum per terram traxit. Quem relicto alveo proprio tota fluminis aqua secuta est, ita ut funditus locum consueti cursus desereret, et ibi sibi alveum, ubi tracto per terram rastro vir Domini signum fecerat, vindicaret, et quaeque essent alimentis hominum profutura sata vel plantata ultra non laederet.

CAPUT X. De Sabino episcopo Placentino, qui Padum flumen per litteras suas compescuit.

Hujus quoque venerabilis viri Venantii episcopi aliud miraculum relatione cognovi, quod in Placentina urbe perhibet gestum; quod vir quoque veracissimus Joannes in hac modo Romana civitate locum praefectorum servans, qui in eadem Placentina urbe est ortus et nutritus, ita ut episcopus memorat, quia gestum fuerit attestatur. In ea namque civitate Sabinum nomine fuisse asserunt mirae virtutis episcopum. Cui dum die quadam suus diaconus nuntiasset quod cursus sui Padus alveum egressus Ecclesiae agros occupasset, totaque illic loca nutriendis hominibus profutura aqua ejusdem fluminis teneret, venerabilis vitae Sabinus episcopus respondit, dicens: Vade, et dic ei: Mandat tibi episcopus ut te compescas, et ad proprium alveum redeas. Quod diaconus ejus audiens, despexit et irrisit. Tunc vir Dei, accersito notario, dictavit, dicens: Sabinus Domini Jesu Christi servus, commonitorium Pado: Praecipio tibi in nomine Jesu Christi Domini nostri ut de alveo tuo in locis istis ulterius non exeas, nec terras Ecclesiae laedere praesumas. Atque eidem notario subjunxit, dicens: Vade, hoc scribe, et in aquam ejusdem fluminis projice. Quo facto, sancti viri praeceptum suscipiens, statim se a terris Ecclesiae fluminis aqua compescuit, atque ad proprium alveum reversa, exire ulterius in loca eadem non praesumpsit. Qua in re, Petre, quid aliud quam inobedientium hominum duritia confunditur, quando in virtute Jesu et elementum irrationabile sancti viri praeceptis obedivit?

CAPUT XI. De Cerbonio Populonii episcopo.

Vir quoque vitae venerabilis Cerbonius Populonii episcopus, magnam diebus nostris sanctitatis suae probationem dedit. Nam cum hospitalitatis studio valde esset intentus, die quadam transeuntes milites hospitio suscepit, quos Gothis supervenientibus abscondit, eorumque vitam ab illorum nequitia abscondendo servavit. Quod dum Gothorum regi perfido Totilae nuntiatum fuisset, crudelitatis immanissimae vaesania succensus, hunc ad locum qui ab octavo hujus urbis milliario Merulis dicitur, ubi tunc ipse cum exercitu sedebat, jussit deduci, cumque in spectaculo populi ursis ad devorandum projici. Cumque idem rex perfidus in ipso quoque spectaculo consedisset ad inspiciendam mortem episcopi, magna populi turba confluxit. Tunc episcopus deductus in medium est, atque ad ejus mortem immanissimus ursus exquisitus, qui dum humana membra crudeliter carperet, saevi regis animum satiaret. Dimissus itaque ursus ex cavea est: qui accensus et concitus episcopum petiit, sed subito suae feritatis oblitus, deflexa cervice, submissoque humiliter capite, lambere episcopi pedes coepit, ut patenter omnibus daretur intelligi quia erga illum virum Dei et ferina corda essent hominum, et quasi humana bestiarum. Tunc populus qui ad spectaculum venerat mortis, magno clamore versus est in admirationem venerationis. Tunc ad ejus reverentiam colendam rex ipse permotus est, quippe cum quo superno judicio actum erat, ut qui Deum sequi prius in custodienda vita episcopi noluit, saltem ad mansuetudinem bestiam sequeretur. Cui rei hi qui tunc praesentes fuerunt adhuc nonnulli supersunt, eamque cum omni illic populo se vidisse testantur. De quo etiam viro aliud quoque miraculum Venantio Lunensi episcopo narrante cognovi. In ea namque Populonii ecclesia cui praeerat sepulcrum sibi praeparavit. Sed cum Langobardorum gens in Italiam veniens cuncta vastasset, ad Ilvam insulam recessit. Qui ingruente aegritudine ad mortem veniens, clericis suis sibique obsequentibus praecepit, dicens: In sepulcro meo quod mihi praeparavi Populonii me ponite. Cui illi cum dicerent: Corpus tuum illuc qualiter reducere possumus, qui a Langobardis teneri loca eadem, et ubique eos illic discurrere scimus? Ipse respondit: Reducite me securi, nolite metuere, sed festine sepelire me curate; mox autem ut sepultum fuerit corpus meum, ex eodem loco sub omni festinatione recedite. Defuncti igitur corpus imposuerunt navi; cumque Populonium tenderent, collecto in nubibus aere, immensa nimis pluvia erupit. Sed ut patesceret omnibus cujus viri corpus navis illa portaret, per illud maris spatium quod ab Ilva insula usque Populonium duodecim millibus distat, circa utraque navis latera procellosa valde pluvia descendit, et in navem eamdem una pluviae gutta non cecidit. Pervenerunt itaque ad locum clerici, et sepulturae tradiderunt corpus sacerdotis sui. Cujus praecepta servantes, ad navem sub festinatione reversi sunt. Quam mox ut intrare potuerunt, in eumdem locum ubi vir Domini sepultus fuerat, Langobardorum dux crudelissimus Gummarith advenit. Ex cujus adventu virum Dei habuisse spiritum prophetiae claruit, qui ministros suos a sepulturae suae loco sub festinatione discedere praecepit.

CAPUT XII. De Fulgentio Utriculanae civitatis episcopo.

Hoc vero quod de divisa pluvia factum narravi miraculum, etiam in alterius episcopi veneratione monstratum est. Nam quidam clericus senex, qui adhuc superest, eidem rei praesto se fuisse testatur, dicens: Fulgentius episcopus qui Utriculensi Ecclesiae praeerat, regem crudelissimum Totilam infensum omnimodo habebat. Cumque ad easdem partes cum exercitu propinquasset, curae fuit episcopo per clericos suos xenia ei transmittere, ejusque furoris insaniam, si posset, muneribus mitigare. Quae ille ut vidit, protinus sprevit, atque iratus suis hominibus jussit ut eumdem episcopum sub omni asperitate constringerent, eumque ejus examini servarent. Quem dum feroces Gothi, ministri scilicet crudelitatis illius, tenuissent, circumdantes eum uno in loco stare praeceperunt, eique in terra circulum designaverunt, extra quem pedem tendere nullo modo auderet. Cumque vir Dei in sole nimio aestuaret, ab eisdem Gothis circumdatus, et designatione circuli inclusus, repente coruscationes et tonitrua, et tanta vis pluviae erupit, ut hi qui eum custodiendum acceperant, immensitatem pluviae ferre non possent. Et dum magna nimis inundatio fieret, intra eamdem designationem circuli in qua vir Domini Fulgentius stetit, ne una quidem pluviae gutta descendit. Quod dum regi crudelissimo nuntiatum esset, illa mens effera ad magnam ejus reverentiam versa est, cujus poenam prius insatiabili furore sitiebat. Sic omnipotens Deus contra elatas carnalium mentes, potentiae suae miracula per despectos operatur; ut qui superbe contra praecepta veritatis se elevant, eorum cervicem veritas per humiles premat.

CAPUT XIII. De Herculano Perusinae civitatis episcopo.

Nuper quoque Floridus venerabilis vitae episcopus narravit quoddam memorabile valde miraculum, dicens: Vir sanctissimus Herculanus nutritor meus, Perusinae civitatis episcopus fuit, ex conversatione monasterii ad sacerdotalis ordinis gratiam deductus. Totilae autem perfidi regis temporibus, eamdem urbem annis septem continuis Gothorum exercitus obsedit, ex qua multi civium fugerunt, qui famis periculum ferre non poterant. Anno vero septimo nondum finito, obsessam urbem Gothorum exercitus intravit. Tunc comes qui eidem exercitui praeerat, ad regem Totilam nuntios misit, exquirens quid de episcopo vel populo fieri juberet. Cui ille praecepit, dicens: Episcopo prius a vertice usque ad calcaneum corrigiam tolle, et tunc caput ejus amputa; omnem vero populum qui illic inventus est, gladio exstingue. Tunc idem comes venerabilem virum Herculanum episcopum super urbis murum deductum capite truncavit, ejusque cutem jam mortui a vertice usque ad calcaneum incidit, ut ex ejus corpore corrigia sublata videretur. Moxque corpus illius extra murum projecit. Tunc quidam, humanitatis pietate compulsi, abscissum caput cervici apponentes, cum uno parvulo infante, qui illic exstinctus inventus est juxta murum, corpus episcopi sepulturae tradiderunt. Cumque post eamdem caedem die quadragesimo rex Totila jussisset ut cives urbis illius qui quolibet dispersi essent ad eam sine aliqua trepidatione remearent, hi qui prius famem fugerant, vivendi licentia accepta reversi sunt. Sed, cujus vitae eorum episcopus fuerat memores, ubi sepultum esset corpus illius quaesierunt, ut hoc juxta honorem debitum in Ecclesia beati Petri apostoli humarent. Cumque itum esset ad sepulcrum, effossa terra, invenerunt corpus pueri pariter humati, utpote jam die quadragesimo, tabe corruptum, et vermibus plenum; corpus vero episcopi ac si die eodem esset sepultum. Et quod est adhuc magna admiratione venerandum, quia ita caput ejus unitum fuerat corpori, ac si nequaquam fuisset abscissum, sic videlicet, ut nulla vestigia sectionis apparerent. Cumque hoc et in terga verterent, exquirentes si quod signum vel de alia monstrari incisione potuisset, ita sanum atque intemeratum omne corpus inventum est, ac si nulla hoc incisio ferri tetigisset. PETRUS: Quis non obstupescat talia signa mortuorum, quae fiunt pro exercitatione viventium?

CAPUT XIV. De Isaac servo Dei.

Prioribus quoque Gothorum temporibus fuit juxta Spoletanam urbem vir vitae venerabilis Isaac nomine, qui usque ad extrema pene Gothorum tempora pervenit, quem nostrorum multi noverunt, et maxime sacra virgo Gregoria, quae nunc in hac Romana urbe juxta Ecclesiam beatae Mariae semper virginis habitat. Quae dum adolescentiae suae tempore constitutis jam nuptiis in ecclesiam fugisset, et sanctimonialis vitae conversationem quaereret, ab eodem viro defensa, atque ad eum quem desiderabat habitum, Domino protegente, perducta est. Quae quia sponsum fugit in terra, habere sponsum meruit in coelo. Multa autem de eodem viro, narrante venerabili Patre Eleutherio, agnovi, qui et hunc familiariter noverat, et ejus verbis vita fidem praebebat. Hic itaque venerabilis Isaac ortus ex Italia non fuit, sed ea illius norro miracula quae conversatus in Italia fecit. Cum primum de Syriae partibus ad Spoletanam urbem venisset, ingressus ecclesiam a custodibus petiit ut sibi quantum vellet licentia concederetur orandi, eumque horis secretioribus egredi non urgerent. Qui mox ad orandum stetit, diemque totum peregit in oratione, cui sequentem continuavit et noctem. Secundo etiam die, cum nocte subsequenti indefessus in precibus perstitit, diem quoque tertium in oratione conjunxit. Cumque hoc unus ex custodibus superbiae spiritu inflatus cerneret, unde proficere debuit, inde ad defectus damna pervenit. Nam hunc simulatorem dicere, et verbo rustico coepit impostorem clamare, qui se tribus diebus et noctibus orare ante oculos hominum demonstraret. Qui protinus currens, virum Dei alapa percussit, ut, quasi religiosae vitae simulator, de ecclesia cum contumelia exiret. Sed hunc repente ultor spiritus invasit, et ad viri Dei vestigia stravit, ac per os illius clamare coepit: Isaac me ejicit. Vir quippe peregrinus quo censeretur nomine nesciebatur, sed ejus nomen ille spiritus prodidit, qui se ab illo posse ejici clamavit. Mox autem super vexati corpus vir Dei incubuit, et malignus spiritus qui eum invaserat abscessit. In tota urbe tunc statim quid in ecclesia factum fuisset innotuit. Currere viri et feminae nobiles atque ignobiles pariter coeperunt, certatimque eum in suis rapere domibus conabantur. Alii ad construendum monasterium praedia, alii pecunias, alii subsidia quaeque poterant, offerre viro Dei suppliciter volebant. Sed servus omnipotentis Domini horum nihil accipiens, egressus urbem non longe desertum locum reperit, ibique sibi humile habitaculum construxit. Ad quem dum multi pergunt, exemplo illius aeternae vitae accendi desiderio coeperunt, atque sub ejus magisterio in omnipotentis se Domini servitium dederunt. Cumque ei crebro discipuli humiliter imminerent, ut pro usu monasterii possessiones quae offerebantur acciperet, ille sollicitus suae paupertatis custos fortem sententiam tenebat, dicens: Monachus qui in terra possessionem quaerit monachus non est. Sic quippe metuebat paupertatis suae securitatem perdere, sicut avari divites solent perituras divitias custodire. Ibi itaque prophetiae spiritu magnisque miraculis cunctis longe lateque habitantibus vita ejus inclaruit. Nam die quadam ad vesperum in hortum monasterii fecit jactari ferramenta, quae usitato nos nomine vangas vocamus. Dixit itaque discipulis suis: Tot vangas in hortum projicite, et citius redite. Nocte vero eadem dum ex more cum fratribus ad exhibendas laudes Domino surrexisset, praecepit, dicens: Ite et operariis nostris pulmentum coquite, ut mane primo paratum sit. Facto autem mane, fecit deferri pulmentum quod parari jusserat, atque hortum cum fratribus ingressus, quot vangas jactari praeceperat, tot in eo laborantes operarios invenit. Ingressi quippe fures fuerant, sed mutata mente per spiritum apprehenderunt vangas quas invenerunt, et ab ea hora qua ingressi sunt, quousque vir Domini ad eos veniret, cuncta horti illius spatia quae inculta fuerant coluerunt. Quibus vir Domini mox ut ingressus est, ait: Gaudete, fratres, multum laborastis, jam quiescite. Quibus illico alimenta quae detulerat praebuit, eosque post tanti laboris fatigationem refecit. Sufficienter autem refectis ait: Nolite malum facere, sed quoties de horto aliquid vultis, ad horti aditum venite, tranquille petite, cum benedictione percipite, et a furti pravitate cessate. Quos statim collectis oleribus onustari fecit. Actumque est ut qui ad hortum nocituri venerant cum laboris sui praemio et repleti ab eo et innocui redirent. Alio quoque tempore accesserunt ad eum peregrini quidam misericordiam postulantes, scissis vestibus, pannis obsiti, ita ut pene nudi viderentur. Cumque hunc vestimenta peterent, eorum verba vir Domini tacitus audivit; qui unum ex discipulis suis protinus silenter vocavit, eique praecepit, dicens: Vade, atque in illa silva in loco tali cavam arborem require; et vestimenta quae in ea inveneris defer. Cumque discipulus abiisset, arborem sicut fuerat jussum requisivit, vestimenta reperit, et latenter detulit magistro. Quae vir Dei suscipiens, peregrinis nudis atque petentibus ostendit et praebuit, dicens: Venite, quia nudi estis, ecce tollite, et vestite vos. Haec illi intuentes, recognoverunt quae posuerant, magnoque pudore consternati sunt; et qui fraudulenter vestimenta quaerebant aliena, confusi receperunt sua. Alio quoque tempore quidam se ejus orationibus commendans, sportas duas plenas alimentis ei per puerum transmisit, quarum unam idem puer subripuit, atque in itinere abscondit: unam vero ad Dei hominem detulit, et petitionem illius qui se ei per xenium commendaverat enarravit. Quam vir Domini benigne suscipiens, eumdem puerum admonuit, dicens: Gratias agimus, sed vide, sportam quam in itinere posuisti ne incaute tangere praesumas, quia in eam serpens ingressus est. Esto ergo sollicitus, ne si tollere incaute volueris, a serpente feriaris. Quibus verbis puer valde confusus, exsultavit quidem quod mortem evaserit, sed tristis ad modicum factus est, quia quamvis salubrem poenam, tamen pertulit verecundiam suam. Qui reversus ad sportam, caute ac sollicite attendit, sed eam jam, sicut vir Dei praedixerat, serpens tenebat. Hic itaque cum virtute abstinentiae, contemptu rerum transeuntium, prophetiae spiritu, orationis intentione esset incomparabiliter praeditus, unum erat quod in eo reprehensibile esse videbatur, quod nonnunquam tanta ei laetitia inerat, ut illis tot virtutibus nisi sciretur esse plenus, nullo modo crederetur. PETRUS: Quidnam, quaeso te, hoc esse dicimus? Sponte sibi laetitiae frena laxabat, an tot virtutibus pollens, aliquando ad praesens gaudium etiam renitens ejus animus trahebatur? GREGORIUS: Magna est, Petre, omnipotentis Dei dispensatio, et plerumque contingit ut quibus majora bona praestat, quaedam minora non tribuat, ut semper eorum animus habeat unde se ipse reprehendat; quatenus dum appetunt perfecti esse, nec possunt, et laborant in hoc quod non acceperunt, nec tamen laborando praevalent, in his quae accepta habent se minime extollant, sed discant quia ex semetipsis majora bona non habent, qui in semetipsis vincere parva vitia atque extrema non possunt. Hinc est enim quod perducto Dominus ad terram repromissionis populo, cunctos fortes atque praepotentes adversarios ejus exstinguens, Philisthaeos atque Chananaeos diutius reservavit, ut, sicut scriptum est, in eis experiretur Israel; quia nonnunquam, ut dictum est, eis etiam quibus magna dona tribuit, parva quaedam reprehensibilia relinquit, ut semper habeant contra quod bellum gerant, et devictis magnis hostibus mentem non erigant, quando eos adhuc adversarii etiam minimi fatigant. Fit itaque ut miro modo una eademque mens et virtute polleat, et ex infirmitate lassescat, quatenus et ex parte constructa sit, et ex parte se conspiciat esse destructam, ut per bonum quod quaerit, et habere non valet, illud servet humiliter quod habet. Sed quid mirum quod hoc de homine dicimus, quando illa superna regio in civibus suis ex parte damna pertulit, et ex parte fortiter stetit, ut electi angelorum spiritus dum alios per superbiam cecidisse conspicerent, ipsi tanto robustius quanto humilius starent? Illi ergo regioni sua etiam detrimenta profecerunt, quae ad aeternitatis statum ex parte suae destructionis est solidius instructa. Sic ergo et in unaquaque anima agitur, ut in humilitatis custodiam aliquando ad lucra maxima ex minimo damno servetur. PETRUS: Placet quod dicis.

CAPUT XV. De Eutychio et Florentio servis Dei.

GREGORIUS: Neque hoc sileam quod ex regione eadem venerabilis viri Sanctuli presbyteri narratione cognovi; de cujus verbis ipse non dubitas, quia ejus vitam fidemque minime ignoras. Eodem quoque tempore in Nursiae provinciae partibus duo viri in vita atque habitu sanctae conversationis habitabant, quorum unus Eutychius, alter vero Florentius dicebatur. Sed idem Eutychius in spirituali zelo atque in fervore virtutis excreverat, multorumque animas ad Deum perducere exhortando satagebat; Florentius vero simplicitati atque orationi deditam ducebat vitam. Non longe autem erat monasterium, quod rectoris sui morte erat destitutum, ex quo sibi monachi eumdem Eutychium praeesse voluerunt. Qui eorum precibus acquiescens, multis annis monasterium rexit, discipulorumque animas in studio sanctae conversationis exercuit. Ac ne oratorium in quo prius habitaverat solum remanere potuisset, illic venerabilem virum

Florentium reliquit. In quo dum solus habitaret, die quadam sese in orationem prostravit, atque ab omnipotenti Domino petiit ut ei illic ad habitandum aliquod solatium donare dignaretur. Qui mox ut implevit orationem, oratorium egressus, ante fores ursum reperit stantem. Qui dum ad terram caput deprimeret, nihilque feritatis in suis motibus demonstraret, aperte dabat intelligi quod ad viri Dei obsequium venisset, quod vir quoque Domini protinus agnovit. Et quia in eadem cella quatuor vel quinque pecudes remanserant, quas omnino deerat qui pasceret et custodiret, eidem urso praecepit, dicens: Vade, atque oves has ad pastum ejice, ad horam vero sextam revertere. Coepit itaque hoc indesinenter agere. Injungebatur urso cura pastoralis, et quas manducare consueverat, pascebat oves bestia jejuna. Cum vir Domini jejunare voluisset, ad nonam horam praecipiebat urso cum ovibus reverti; cum vero noluisset, ad sextam. Atque ita in omnibus mandato viri Dei obtemperabat ursus, ut neque ad sextam jussus, rediret ad nonam, neque ad nonam jussus, rediret ad sextam. Cumque diu hoc ageretur, coepit in loco eodem tantae virtutis fama longe lateque crebrescere. Sed quia antiquus hostis unde bonos cernit enitescere ad gloriam, inde perversos per invidiam rapit ad poenam, quatuor viri ex discipulis venerabilis Eutychii vehementer invidentes quod eorum magister signa non faceret, et is qui solus ab eo relictus fuerat, tanto hoc miraculo clarus appareret, eumdem ursum insidiantes occiderunt. Cumque hora qua jussus fuerat non rediret, vir Dei Florentius suspectus est redditus, quem usque ad horam vesperi exspectans, affligi coepit, quod is quem ex simplicitate multa fratrem vocare consueverat ursus minime reverteretur. Die vero altera perrexit ad agrum, ursum pariter ovesque quaesiturus; quem occisum reperit. Sed sollicite inquirens, citius a quibus fuerat occisus invenit. Tunc sese in lamentis dedit, Fratrum malitiam magis quam ursi mortem deplorans. Quem venerandus vir Eutychius ad se deductum consolari studuit; sed idem vir Domini, coram eo doloris magni stimulis accensus, imprecatus est, dicens: Spero in omnipotenti Deo, quia in hac vita ante oculos omnium ex sua malitia vindictam recipiant qui nihil se laedentem ursum meum occiderunt. Cujus vocem protinus ultio divina secuta est. Nam quatuor monachi qui eumdem ursum occiderant statim elephantino morbo percussi sunt, ut membris putrescentibus interirent. Quod factum vir Dei Florentius vehementer expavit, seque ita fratribus maledixisse pertimuit. Omni enim vitae suae tempore flebat quia exauditus fuerat, se crudelem, se in eorum morte clamabat homicidam. Quod idcirco omnipotentem Dominum fecisse credimus, ne vir mirae simplicitatis, quantolibet dolore commotus, intorquere ultra praesumeret jaculum maledictionis. PETRUS: Nunquidnam valde grave esse credimus, si fortasse cuilibet exagitanti iracundia maledicamus? GREGORIUS: De hoc peccato cur me percunctaris an grave sit, cum Paulus dicat: Neque maledici regnum Dei possidebunt? Pensa itaque quam gravis culpa est, quae separat a regno vitae. PETRUS: Quid si homo non fortasse ex malitia, sed ex linguae incuria, maledictionis verbum jaculatur in proximum? GREGORIUS: Si apud districtum judicem, Petre, otiosus sermo reprehenditur, quanto magis et noxius? Pensa ergo quantum sit damnabilis, qui a malitia non vacat, si et ille sermo poenalis est, qui a bonitate utilitatis vacat. PETRUS: Assentio. GREGORIUS: Idem vir Dei egit aliud, quod sileri non debeat. Cum enim magna ejus opinio longe lateque crebresceret, quidam diaconus longe positus ad eum pergere studuit, ut ejus se orationibus commendaret. Qui ad ejus cellulam veniens, omnem locum per circuitum invenit innumeris serpentibus plenum. Cumque vehementer expavisset, clamavit, dicens: Serve Dei, ora. Erat autem tunc mira serenitas. Egressus vero Florentius, ad coelum oculos et palmas tetendit, ut illam pestem, sicut sciret Dominus, auferret. Ad cujus vocem subito coelum intonuit, atque idem tonitrus omnes illos, qui eumdem locum occupaverant, serpentes interemit. Quos cum vir Dei Florentius interemptos aspiceret, dixit: Ecce illos occidisti, Domine, quis eos hinc levat? Moxque ad ejus vocem tantae aves venerunt, quanti serpentes occisi fuerant: quae asportantes singulos, et longius projicientes, locum habitationis illius mundum a serpentibus omnimodo reddiderunt. PETRUS: Quid virtutis, quid fuisse meriti dicimus, quod ejus ori tantum factus est proximus omnipotens Deus? GREGORIUS: Apud omnipotentis Dei singularem munditiam, atque ejus simplicem naturam multum, Petre, humani cordis munditia atque simplicitas valet. Hoc ipsum namque quod ejus famuli a terrenis actionibus segregati, otiosa loqui nesciunt, et mentem per verba spargere atque inquinare devitant, auctoris sui prae caeteris exauditionem impetrant. Cui in quantum est possibile, ipsa puritate ac simplicitate cogitationis, quasi ex quadam jam similitudine concordant. Nos autem turbis popularibus admisti, dum frequenter otiosa, nonnunquam vero etiam graviter noxia loquimur, os nostrum omnipotenti Deo tanto longinquum fit, quanto huic mundo proximum. Multum quippe deorsum ducimur, dum locutione continua saecularibus admiscemur. Quod bene Isaias postquam regem Dominum exercituum vidit, in semetipso reprehendit, et poenituit, dicens: Vae mihi, quia tacui, quia vir pollutus labiis ego sum. Qui cur polluta labia haberet, aperuit, cum subjunxit: In medio populi polluta labia habentis ego habito. Pollutionem namque labiorum habere se doluit; sed unde hanc contraxerit, indicavit, cum in medio populi polluta labia habentis se habitare perhibuit. Valde enim difficile est ut lingua saecularium mentem non inquinet quam tangit, quia dum plerumque eis ad quaedam loquenda condescendimus, paulisper assueti, hanc ipsam locutionem quae nobis indigna est etiam delectabiliter tenemus, ut ex ea jam redire non libeat, ad quam velut ex condescensione ducti venimus inviti. Sicque fit ut ab otiosis ad noxia, a levibus ad graviora verba veniamus; et os nostrum ab omnipotenti Domino tanto jam minus exaudiatur in prece, quanto amplius inquinatur stulta locutione, quia sicut scriptum est: Qui avertit aurem suam ne audiat legem, oratio ejus erit exsecrabilis. Quid ergo mirum si postulantes tarde a Domino audimur, qui praecipientem Dominum aut tarde aut nullo modo audimus? Et quid mirum si Florentius in prece sua citius est auditus, qui in praeceptis suis Dominum citius audivit? PETRUS: Nihil est quod responderi valeat apertae rationi. GREGORIUS: Eutychius vero, qui praedicti Florentii in via Domino socius fuerat, magnus post mortem claruit in virtute signorum. Nam cum multa cives urbis illius de eo soleant narrare miracula, illud tamen est praecipuum, quod usque ad haec Langobardorum tempora omnipotens Deus per vestimentum illius assidue dignabatur operari. Nam quoties pluvia deerat, et aestu nimio terram longa siccitas exurebat, collecti in unum cives urbis illius, ejus tunicam levare atque in conspectu Domini cum precibus offerre consueverant. Cum qua, dum per agros pergerent exorantes, repente pluvia tribuebatur, quae plene terram satiare potuisset. Ex qua re patuit, ejus anima quid virtutis intus, quid meriti haberet, cujus foris ostensa vestis iram Conditoris averteret.

CAPUT XVI. De Martino monacho de monte Marsico.

Nuper quoque in parte Campaniae vir valde venerabilis Martinus nomine in monte Marsico solitariam vitam duxit, multisque annis in specu angustissimo inclusus fuit, quem multi ex nostris noverunt, ejusque actibus praesentes exstiterunt. De quo multa ipse et beatae memoriae papa Pelagio decessore meo, et aliis religiosissimis viris narrantibus agnovi. Cujus hoc miraculum primum fuit, quod mox ut se in praedicti montis foramine contulit, ex petra eadem, quae in semetipsa concava angustum specum fecerat, aquae stilla prorupit, quae Martino Dei famulo in usu quotidiano sufficeret, et nec plus adesset, nec necessitati deesset. Qua in re ostendit omnipotens Deus quantam sui famuli curam gereret, cui vetusto miraculo potum in solitudine ex petrae duritia ministraret. Sed antiquus hostis humani generis, ejus viribus invidens, hunc usitata arte pellere ex eo specu molitus est. Nam amicam sibi bestiam, serpentem scilicet, ingressus, hunc ab eadem habitatione ejicere facto terrore conatus est. Coepit etenim serpens in speluncam venire solus cum solo, eoque orante se ante illum sternere, et cum cubante pariter cubare. Sed vir sanctus omnino imperterritus, ejus ori manum vel pedem extendebat, dicens: Si licentiam accepisti ut ferias, ego non prohibeo. Cumque hoc continue per triennium gereretur, die quadam antiquus hostis tanta hac ejus fortitudine victus infremuit, seque per devexum montis latus in praecipitium serpens dedit, omniaque arbusta loci illius flamma ex se exeunte concremavit. Qui in eo quod montis latus omne combussit, cogente omnipotente Deo, monstrare compulsus est, quantae virtutis fuerat, per quem victus abscedebat. Perpende, quaeso, iste vir Domini in quo mentis vertice stetit, qui cum serpente per triennium jacuit securus. PETRUS: Auditu paveo. GREGORIUS: Vir iste vitae venerabilis, inclusionis suae tempore primo, decreverat ut ultra mulierem non videret, non quia aspernabatur sexum, sed ex contemplata specie tentationis incurrere metuebat vitium. Quod quaedam mulier audiens, audacter ascendit montem, atque ad ejus specum impudenter prorupit. At ille paulo longius intuens, et venientis ad se muliebria indumenta conspiciens, sese in orationem dedit, in terram faciem depressit, et eo usque prostratus jacuit, quo impudens mulier a fenestra cellulae illius fatigata recederet. Quae die eodem, mox ut de monte descendit, vitam finivit, ut ex mortis ejus sententia daretur intelligi quia valde omnipotenti Deo displicuit, quod ejus famulum ausu improbo contristavit. Alio quoque tempore dum multi ad hunc religiosa devotione concurrerent, atque arcta esset semita quae in devexo montis latere ad ejus cellulam properantes ducebat, puer parvulus, incaute gradiens, ex eodem monte cecidit, et usque ad vallem corruit, quae, sub monte eodem sita, quasi in profundo conspicitur. In loco quippe eodem tanta mons ipse altitudine excrevit, ut arbusta ingentia, quae ex eadem valle prodeunt, ex monte aspicientibus quasi fruteta esse videantur. Perturbati itaque sunt cuncti qui veniebant, summaque cura quaesitum est sicubi corpus elapsi pueri potuisset inveniri. Quis enim aliud nisi exstinctum crederet? quis vel corpus ad terram integrum pervenisse suspicaretur, dum interpositis ubique scopulis in partes discerpi potuisset? Sed requisitus puer in valle inventus est non solum vivus, sed etiam incolumis. Tunc cunctis patenter innotuit quod ideo laedi non potuit, quia hunc in casu suo Martini oratio portavit. In specu vero illius magna desuper rupes eminebat, quae cum ex parte exigua monti videretur affixa, Martini cellae prominens, casum suum quotidie, et illius interitum ruitura minabatur. Ad hanc Mascator illustris viri Armentarii nepos, cum magna rusticorum multitudine veniens, precabatur ut vir Dei de specu eodem dignaretur exire, quatenus ipse ruituram rupem ex monte potuisset evellere, atque in specu suo Dei famulus jam securus habitaret. Cumque hoc vir Dei nequaquam acquiesceret, ei quod posset ut faceret praecepit, et ipse in cellae suae remotiori se parte contulit. Si tamen ingens moles rueret, dubium non erat quod simul et specum destrueret, et Martinum necaret. Itaque dum ea quae venerat multitudo conaretur, si posset, sine periculo viri Dei, ingens illud, quod desuper incubuerat, saxum levare, cunctis videntibus, repente res valde admirabilis contigit, quia moles ipsa quam conabantur evellere, subito ab eisdem laborantibus evulsa, ne speluncae Martini tectum tangeret, saltum dedit, et quasi servi Dei laesionem fugiens, longius cecidit. Quod ad jussum omnipotentis Dei angelico ministerio actum intelligit, qui divina providentia disponi omnia fideliter credit. Hic cum primum se in eumdem montem contulit, necdum clauso specu habitans, catena sibi ferrea pedem ligavit, eamque saxo ex parte altera affixit, ne ei ultra liceret progredi, quam catenae ejusdem quantitas tendebatur. Quod vir vitae venerabilis Benedictus audiens, cujus superius memoriam feci, ei per discipulum suum mandare curavit: Si servus Dei es, non teneat te catena ferri, sed catena Christi. Ad quam vocem Martinus protinus eamdem compedem solvit, sed nunquam postmodum solutum tetendit pedem ultra locum quo ligatum hunc tendere consueverat, atque in tanto se spatio sine catena coercuit, in quanto et antea ligatis mansit. Qui dum se postmodum in ejusdem loci specu conclusisset, coepit etiam discipulos habere, qui ab ejus specu seorsum habitantes, ad usum vitae aquam de puteo haurire consueverant. Sed funis in quo ad hauriendum aquam situla dependebat crebro rumpebatur. Unde factum est ut eamdem catenam quam ex pede suo vir Domini solverat ejus discipuli peterent, eamque funi adjungerent, atque in illa situlam ligarent. Ex quo jam tempore contigit ut idem funis et quotidie tingeretur aqua, et nullo modo rumperetur. Quia enim catenam viri Dei funis ille contigit, ipse quoque ad tolerandam aquam, ferri in se fortitudinem traxit. PETRUS: Facta haec placent, quia mira; et multum, quia recentia.

CAPUT XVII. De monacho ex monte Argentario, qui mortuum suscitavit.

GREGORIUS: Nostris modo temporibus quidam vir, Quadragesimus nomine, Buxentinae Ecclesiae subdiaconus fuit qui ovium suarum gregem pascere in ejusdem Aureliae partibus solebat. Cujus valde veracis viri narratione res mira innotuit, quae secreto fuerat gesta. Is namque, ut praediximus, dum gregis sui in Aurelia curam gereret, in diebus ejusdem vir fuit e monte, qui Argentarius vocatur, venerabilis vitae, qui habitum monachi, quem praetendebat specie, moribus explebat. Hic itaque ad Ecclesiam beati Petri apostolorum principis ab eodem monte Argentario annis singulis venire consueverat, atque ad hunc, quem praedixi, Quadragesimum subdiaconum, sicut ipse narravit, hospitalitatis gratia declinabat. Quadam vero die, dum ejus hospitium, quod non longe ab Ecclesia aberat, intrasset, cujusdam pauperculae mulieris maritus juxta defunctus est: quem ex more lotum, vestimentis indutum, et sabano constrictum, superveniente vespere, sepelire nequiverunt. Igitur juxta defuncti corpus viduata mulier sedit, quae in magnis fletibus noctem ducens, continuis lamentorum vocibus satisfaciebat dolori. Cumque hoc diutius fieret et flere mulier nullo modo cessaret, vir Dei, qui receptus hospitio fuerat, Quadragesimo subdiacono compunctus ait: Dolori hujus mulieris anima mea compatitur; rogo, surge, et oremus. Perrexerunt igitur utrique ad vicinam ecclesiam, seseque pariter in orationem dederunt. Cumque diutius orassent, complere orationem Quadragesimum subdiaconum servus Dei petiit. Qua completa ab altaris crepidine pulverem collegit, atque cum eodem Quadragesimo ad defuncti corpus accessit, seseque ibidem in orationem dedit. Cumque diutius orasset, jam non, sicut prius fecerat, orationem compleri per subdiaconum voluit, sed ipse benedictionem dedit, statimque surrexit. Et quia manu dextera collectum pulverem gestabat, sinistra pallium quo facies defuncti velabatur abstulit. Quod cum mulier fieri cerneret, contradicere vehementer coepit et mirari quid vellet facere. Ablato itaque pallio, diu eo quem collegerat pulvere defuncti faciem fricavit. Qui cum diutius fricaretur, recepit animam, oscitavit, oculos aperuit, seseque elevans resedit, quid erga se ageretur miratus est, ac si de gravissimo somno fuisset excitatus. Quod cum mulier lamentis fatigata conspiceret, coepit ex gaudio magis flere, et voces amplius edere. Quam vir Domini modesta prohibitione compescuit, dicens. Tace, tace; sed si quis vos requisiverit qualiter factum sit, hoc solummodo dicite: quia Dominus Jesus Christus opera sua fecit. Dixit hoc, atque ab ejus hospitio exivit, Quadragesimum subdiaconum protinus reliquit, et in loco eodem ultra non apparuit. Temporalem namque honorem fugiens, egit ut ab his a quibus visus in tanta virtute fuerat nunquam jam in hac vita videretur. PETRUS: Quid alii sentiant ignoro: ego autem cunctis miraculis hoc potius existimo esse miraculum, quod ad vitam mortui redeunt, eorumque animae ad carnem ex occulto revocantur. GREGORIUS: Si visibilia attendimus, ita necesse est ut credamus; si vero invisibilia pensamus, nimirum constat, quia majus est miraculum praedicationis verbo atque orationis solatio peccatorem convertere, quam carne mortuum resuscitare. In isto enim resuscitatur caro iterum moritura, in illo vero anima in aeternum victura. Cum enim propono duos, in quo horum existimas majori factum virtute miraculum? Lazarum quippe, quem jam fidelem credimus fuisse, carne Dominus suscitavit; Saulum vero resuscitavit in mente. Et quidem post resurrectionem carnis de Lazari virtutibus tacetur. Nam post resurrectionem animae, capere nostra infirmitas non valet quanta in sacro eloquio de Pauli virtutibus dicuntur: quod illius praedicatione crudelissimae cogitationes ad pietatis mollia conversae sunt viscera; quod mori cupit pro fratribus, in quorum prius morte gaudebat; quod, plenus omnis scripturae scientia, nil se scire judicat, nisi Christum Jesum, et hunc crucifixum; quod pro Christo virgis libenter caeditur, quem gladiis insequebatur; quod Apostolatus honore sublimis est, sed tamen sponte fit parvulus in medio discipulorum; quod ad coeli tertii secreta ducitur, et tamen mentis oculum per compassionem reflectit ad disponendum cubile conjugatorum, dicens: Uxori vir debitum reddat, similiter et uxor viro, quod admiscetur in contemplatione coetibus angelorum, et tamen non aspernatur cogitare atque disponere facta carnalium; quod gaudet in infirmitatibus, sibique in contumeliis placet; quod ei vivere Christus est, et mori lucrum; quod totum jam extra carnem est, hoc ipsum quod vivit in carne. Ecce qualiter vivit, qui ab inferno mentis ad vitam pietatis rediit. Minus est ergo quempiam in carne suscitari, nisi forte per vivificationem carnis ad vitam reducatur mentis; ut ei hoc agatur per exterius miraculum, quatenus conversus interius vivificetur. PETRUS: Valde infra credidi hoc, quod modo quam sit incomparabiliter superius agnovi. Sed, quaeso, coepta prosequere, ut dum tempus vacat, sine aedificatione hora non transeat.

CAPUT XVIII. De Benedicto monacho.

GREGORIUS: Frater quidam mecum est in monasterio conversatus, in Scriptura sacra studiosissimus, qui me aetate praeibat, et ex multis quae nesciebam, me aedificare consueverat. Hujus itaque narratione didici quod fuit quidam in Campaniae partibus intra quadragesimum Romanae urbis miliarium nomine Benedictus; et quidem aetate juvenis, sed moribus grandaevus, et in sanctae conversationis regula se fortiter stringens. Quem Totilae regis tempore cum Gothi reperissent, hunc incendere cum sua cella moliti sunt. Ignem namque supposuerunt, sed in circuitu arserunt omnia, cella vero illius igne comburi non potuit. Quod videntes Gothi, magisque saevientes, atque hunc ex suo habitaculo trahentes, non longe aspexerunt succensum clibanum, qui coquendis panibus parabatur, eumque in illo projecerunt, clibanumque clauserunt. Sed die altero ita illaesus inventus est, ut non solum ejus caro ab ignibus, sed neque extrema ullo modo vestimenta cremarentur. PETRUS: Antiquum trium puerorum miraculum audio, qui projecti in ignibus laesi non sunt. GREGORIUS: Illud, ut opinor, miraculum ex parte aliqua dissimiliter gestum est. Tunc quippe tres pueri ligatis pedibus ac manibus in ignem projecti sunt, quos die altera rex requirens, in camino illaesis vestibus deambulantes reperit. Ex qua re colligitur quia ignis in quo jactati fuerant, qui eorum vestimenta non contigit, eorum vincula consumpsit, ut uno eodemque tempore in obsequio justorum et haberet flamma virtutem suam ad solatium, et non haberet ad tormentum.

CAPUT XIX. De Ecclesia beati Zenonis martyris Veronae, in qua aquae ultra portam apertam inundantes minime intraverunt.

Huic tam antiquo miraculo, diebus nostris res similis e contrario evenit elemento. Nam nuper Joannes tribunus relatione sua me docuit, quod Pronulphus comes, cum illic adesset, se cum rege Autharico eo tempore in loco eodem ubi mira res contigit adfuisse, eamque se cognovisse testatus

est. Praedictus etenim tribunus narravit, dicens: quia ante hoc fere quinquennium, quando apud hanc Romanam urbem alveum suum Tiberis egressus est, tantum crescens, ut ejus unda super muros urbis influeret, atque inde in ea jam maximas regiones occuparet, apud Veronensem urbem fluvius Athesis excrescens, ad beati Zenonis martyris atque pontificis ecclesiam venit. Cujus ecclesiae dum essent januae apertae, aqua in eam minime intravit. Quae paulisper crescens, usque ad fenestras ecclesiae, quae erant tectis proximae, pervenit; sicque stans aqua ecclesiae januam clausit, ac si illud elementum liquidum in soliditatem parietis fuisset mutatum. Cumque essent multi inventi interius, sed et aquarum multitudine omni ecclesia circumdata, qua possent egredi non haberent, ibique se siti ac fame deficere formidarent, ad ecclesiae januam veniebant, ad bibendum hauriebant aquam, quae, ut praedixi, usque ad fenestras excreverat, et tamen intra ecclesiam nullo modo diffluebat. Hauriri itaque ut aqua poterat, sed diffluere ut aqua non poterat. Stans autem ante januam ad ostendendum cunctis meritum martyris ut aqua erat ad adjutorium, et quasi aqua non erat ad invadendum locum. Quod ego antiquo antedicti ignis miraculo vere praedixi non fuisse dissimile, qui trium puerorum et vestimenta non contigit, et vincula incendit. PETRUS: Mira sunt valde sanctorum facta quae narras, et praesenti infirmitati hominum vehementer stupenda. Sed quia tantos nuper in Italia fuisse audio admirandae virtutis viros, nosse velim si nullas eos contigit antiqui hostis insidias pertulisse, an ex insidiis profecisse. GREGORIUS: Sine labore certaminis non est palma victoriae. Unde ergo victores sunt, nisi quod contra antiqui hostis insidias decertaverunt? Malignus quippe spiritus cogitationi, locutioni, atque operi nostro semper insistit, si fortasse quid inveniat unde apud examen aeterni judicis accusator existat. Vis etenim nosse quomodo ad decipiendum semper assistat?

CAPUT XX. De Stephano presbytero provinciae Valeriae, cui diabolus caligas e tibiis traxit.

Quidam qui nunc nobiscum sunt rem quam narro testantur. Vir vitae venerabilis, Stephanus nomine, Valeriae provinciae presbyter fuit, hujus nostri Bonifacii diaconi atque dispensatoris Ecclesiae agnatione proximus. Qui quadam die de itinere domum regressus, mancipio suo negligenter loquens praecepit, dicens: Veni, diabole, discalcea me. Ad cujus vocem mox coeperunt se caligarum corrigiae in summa velocitate dissolvere, ut aperte constaret quod ei ipse qui nominatus fuerat ad extrahendas diabolus caligas obedisset. Quod mox ut presbyter vidit, vehementer expavit, magnisque vocibus clamare coepit, dicens: Recede, miser, recede; non enim tibi, sed mancipio meo locutus sum. Ad cujus vocem protinus recessit, et ita ut inventae sunt, magna jam ex parte dissolutae, corrigiae remanserunt. Qua in re colligi potest, antiquus hostis, qui jam praesto est factis corporalibus, quam nimiis insidiis nostris cogitationibus insistat. PETRUS: Laboriosum est valde atque terribile contra inimici insidias semper intendere, et continue quasi in acie stare. GREGORIUS: Laboriosum non erit, si custodiam nostram non nobis, sed gratiae supernae tribuimus; ita tamen, ut et ipsi, quantum possumus, sub ejus protectione vigitemus. Si autem antiquus hostis a mente coeperit expelli, ex divina largitate plerumque agitur, ut non solum jam timeri non debeat, sed ipse etiam bene viventium virtute terreatur.

Rei namque quam narro, vir sanctissimus Eleutherius senex Pater, cujus memoriam superius feci, testis exstitit, mihique hoc intimare curavit: quod in Spoletana urbe puella quaedam jam nubilis cujusdam primarii filia, coelestis vitae desiderio exarsit, eique pater ad viam vitae resistere conatus est; sed contempto patre, conversationis sanctae habitum suscepit. Qua ex re factum est ut eam Pater suae substantiae exhaeredem faceret, nihilque ei aliud nisi sex uncias unius possessiunculae largiretur. Ejus vero exemplo provocatae coeperunt apud eam multae nobilioris generis puellae converti, atque omnipotenti Domino dedicata virginitate servire. Quadam vero die idem Eleutherius abbas, vir vitae venerabilis, ad eam gratia exhortationis atque aedificationis accesserat, et cum ea de verbo Dei colloquens sedebat; cum repente ex eodem fundo, quem in sex unciis a patre perceperat cum xenio rusticus venit. Qui dum ante eos assisteret, maligno spiritu correptus cecidit, fatigatique nimiis stridoribus atque balatibus coepit. Tunc sanctimonialis femina surrexit, atque irato vultu magnis clamoribus imperavit, dicens: Exi ab eo, miser, exi ab eo, miser. Ad cujus vocem mox per os vexati diabolus respondit, dicens: Et si de isto exeo, in quem intrabo? Casu autem juxta porcus parvulus pascebatur. Tunc sanctimonialis femina praecepit, dicens: Exi ab eo, et in hunc porcum ingredere. Qui statim de homine exivit, porcum quem jussus fuerat invasit, occidit, et recessit. PETRUS: Velim nosse si saltem porcum concedere spiritui immundo debuit. GREGORIUS: Propositae regulae nostrae actioni sunt facta Veritatis. Ipsi etenim Redemptori nostro a legione, quae hominem tenebat, dictum est: Si ejicis nos, mitte nos in gregem porcorum. Qui hanc et ab homine expulit, et in porcos ire, eosque in abyssum mittere concessit. Ex qua re etiam hoc colligitur, quod absque concessione omnipotentis Dei nullam malignus spiritus contra hominem potestatem habeat, qui in porcos intrare non potuit nisi permissus. Illi ergo nos necesse est sponte subdi, cui et adversa omnia subjiciuntur invita, ut tanto nostris hostibus potentiores simus, quanto eum auctore omnium unum efficimur per humilitatem. Quid autem mirum, si electi quique in carne positi multa facere mirabiliter possunt, quorum ipsa quoque ossa mortua plerumque in multis miraculi vivunt?

CAPUT XXII. De presbytero provinciae Valeriae, qui furem ad sepulcrum suum tenuit.

In Valeria namque provincia res est haec gesta quam narro, mihique beatae memoriae abbatis mei Valentionis relatione cognita. Ibi etenim quidam venerabilis sacerdos erat, qui cum clericis suis, Dei laudibus bonisque operibus intentus, sanctae conversationis vitam ducebat. Superveniente autem vocationis suae die defunctus est, atque ante ecclesiam sepultus. Eidem vero ecclesiae caulae inhaerebant ovium, atque idem locus in quo sepultus est ad easdem oves tendentibus pervius erat. Quadam autem nocte cum, clericis intra ecclesiam psallentibus, fur venisset, ut ingressus caulas furtum faceret, vervecem tulit, et concitus exiit. Cum vero pervenisset ad locum ubi vir Domini sepultus erat, repente haesit, et gressum movere non potuit. Vervecem quidem de collo deposuit, eumque dimittere voluit, sed manum laxare non valuit. Coepit igitur stare miser cum praeda sua reus et ligatus. Volebat vervecem dimittere, nec valebat; volebat egredi cum vervece, nec poterat. Miro itaque modo fur, qui a vivis videri timuerat, hunc mortuus tenebat. Cumque ita gressus manusque illius fuissent obstricta, immobilis perstitit. Facto autem mane expletisque laudibus Dei, ab Ecclesia egressi sunt clerici, et invenerunt ignotum hominem vervecem tenentem manu. Res venit in dubium, utrum vervecem tolleret, an offerret, sed culpae reus citius indicavit poenam. Mirati omnes quia ingressus fur viri Dei merito ad praedam suam stabat ligatus. Qui se pro eo protinus in orationem dederunt, suisque precibus vix obtinere valuerunt ut qui res eorum venerat rapere saltem vacuus exire mereretur. Itaque fur, qui diu steterat cum praeda captivus, quandoque exiit vacuus et liber. PETRUS: Apparet quantae sit super nos dulcedinis omnipotens Deus, cujus erga nos fiunt tam jucunda miracula.

CAPUT XXIII. De abbate Praenestini montis, ejusque presbytero.

GREGORIUS: Praenestinae urbi mons praeeminet, in quo beati Petri Apostoli monasterium situm est virorum Dei: quorum relatione adhuc in monasterio positus audisse me contigit magnum hoc quod narro miraculum, quod ejusdem monasterii monachi nosse se testabantur. In eo namque monasterio fuit Pater vitae venerabilis, qui quemdam monachum nutriens, usque ad reverendos provexit mores. Cumque eum in timore Domini videret excrevisse, in eodem sibi monasterio tunc presbyterum fecit ordinari. Cui post ordinationem suam, quia non longe abesset ejus exitus, revelatione indicatum est. A praedicto autem Patre monasterii petiit quatenus ei concederet, ut sibi sepulcrum pararet. Cui ille respondit: Ante te quidem ego moriturus sum, sed tamen vade, et, sicut vis, praepara sepulcrum tuum. Recessit igitur, et praeparavit. Cum non post multos dies senex pater febre praeventus ad extrema pervenit, atque assistenti presbytero jussit, dicens: In tuo sepulcro pone me. Cumque ille diceret: Scis quia ego modo te secuturus sum, utrosque capere non potest, abbas protinus respondit, dicens: Ita fac ut dixi, quia sepulcrum tuum ambos nos capit. Defunctus itaque est, atque in sepulcro eodem quod sibi presbyter paraverat positus. Mox quoque et presbyterum corporis languor secutus est, quo languore crescente citius presbyter vitam finivit. Cumque ad sepulcrum quod sibi ipsi paraverat corpus illius fuisset a fratribus deportatum, aperto eodem sepulcro viderunt omnes qui aderant locum non esse ubi poni potuisset, quia corpus patris monasterii, quod illic ante positum fuerat, omne illud sepulcrum tenebat. Cumque fratres qui presbyteri corpus detulerant, factam sibi sepeliendi difficultatem viderent, unus eorum exclamavit, dicens: O Pater, ubi est quod dixisti, quia sepulcrum istud ambos nos caperet? Ad cujus vocem subito, cunctis videntibus abbatis corpus, quod illic ante positum fuerat, et supinum jacebat, sese vertit in latere, et vacantem sepulcri locum ad sepeliendum presbyteri corpus praebuit; et quia utrosque ille locus caperet, sicut vivus promiserat, mortuus implevit. Sed quia hoc quod praedixi apud Praenestinam urbem in beati Petri apostoli monasterio gestum est, visne aliquid etiam in hac urbe de ejus ecclesiae custodibus, ubi sacratissimum corpus illius est positum, audire? PETRUS: Volo, atque id ut fiat magnopore deprecor.

CAPUT XXIV. De Theodoro mansionario ecclesiae beati Petri apostoli urbis Romae.

GREGORIUS: Adhuc supersunt aliqui qui Theodorum ejus ecclesiae custodem noverunt, cujus narratione innotuit res quae ei contigit, valde memorabilis: quod quadam nocte dum citius ad melioranda juxta januam luminaria surrexisset, ex more in ligneis gradibus sub lampade positis stabat, et lampadis refovebat lumen. Tunc repente beatus Petrus apostolus in stola candida deorsum in pavimento constitit, eique dixit: Conliberte, quare tam citius surrexisti? Quo dicto, ab oculis aspicientis evanuit. Sed tantus in eum pavor irruit, ut tota in illo corporis virtus deficeret, et per dies multos de stratu suo surgere non valeret. Qua in re quid idem beatus apostolus servientibus sibi voluit, nisi praesentiam sui respectus ostendere, quia quidquid pro ejus veneratione agerent, ipse hoc pro mercede retributionis sine intermissione semper videret? PETRUS: Mihi hoc non tam apparet mirum quia visus est; sed quia is qui eum vidit, cum sanus esset, aegrotavit. GREGORIUS: Quid super hac re miraris, Petre? Nunquidnam menti excidit, quia cum Daniel propheta magnam illam ac terribilem visionem vidit, ex qua etiam visione contremuit, protinus adjunxit: Et ego elangui, et aegrotavi per dies plurimos ? Caro enim ea quae sunt spiritus capere non valet; et idcirco nonnunquam cum mens humana ultra se ad videndum ducitur, necesse est ut hoc carneum vasculum, quod ferre talenti pondus non valet, infirmetur. PETRUS: Scrupulum cogitationis meae aperta ratio dissolvit.

CAPUT XXV. De Acontio mansionario ejusdem ecclesiae beati Petri.

GREGORIUS: Alius illic non ante longa tempora, sicut nostri seniores referunt, custos ecclesiae Acontius dictus est, magnae humilitatis atque gravitatis vir, ita omnipotenti Deo fideliter serviens, ut idem beatus Petrus apostolus signis ostenderet quam de illo haberet aestimationem. Nam cum quaedam puella paralytica, in ejus ecclesia permanens, manibus reperet, et dissolutis renibus corpus per terram traheret, diuque ab eodem beato Petro apostolo peteret ut sanari mereretur, nocte quadam ei per visionem astitit, et dixit: Vade ad Acontium mansionarium, et roga illum, et ipse te saluti restituet. Cumque illa de tanta visione certa esset, sed quis esset Acontius ignoraret, coepit huc illucque per ecclesiae loca se trahere, ut quis esset Acontius investigaret. Cui repente ipse factus est obvius, quem quaerebat, eique dixit: Rogo te, Pater, indica mihi quis est Acontius custos? Cui ille respondit: Ego sum: At illa inquit: Pastor et nutritor noster beatus Petrus apostolus ad te me misit, ut ab infirmitate ista liberare me debeas. Cui ille respondit: Si ab ipso missa es, surge. Manumque ejus tenuit, et eam in statum suum protinus erexit. Sicque ex illa hora omnes in ejus corpore nervi ac membra solidata sunt, ut solutionis illius signa ulterius nulla remanerent. Sed si cuncta quae in ejus ecclesia gesta cognovimus, evolvere conamur, ab omnium jam proculdubio narratione conticescimus. Unde necesse est ut ad modernos Patres, quorum vita per Italiae provincias claruit, narratio se nostra retorqueat.

CAPUT XXVI. De Mena monacho solitario.

Nuper in Samnii provincia quidam venerabilis vir, Menas nomine, solitariam vitam ducebat, qui nostrorum multis cognitus, ante hoc fere decennium defunctus est. De cujus operis narratione unum auctorem non infero, quia pene tot mihi in ejus vita testes sunt, quot Samnii provinciam noverunt. Hic itaque nihil ad usum suum aliud, nisi pauca apum vascula possidebat. Huic cum Langobardus quidam in eisdem apibus rapinam voluisset ingerere, prius ab eodem viro verbo correptus est, et mox per malignum spiritum ante ejus vestigia vexatus. Qua ex re factum est ut sicut apud omnes incolas, ita etiam apud eamdem barbaram gentem ejus celebre nomen haberetur, nullusque ultra praesumeret ejus cellulam nisi humilis intrare. Saepe vero ex vicina silva venientes ursi, apes ejus comedere conabantur: quos ille deprehensos, ferula, quam portare manu consueverat, caedebat. Ante cujus verbera immanissimae bestiae rugiebant, et fugiebant; et quae gladios formidare vix poterant, ex ejus manu ictus ferulae pertimescebant. Hujus studium fuit nihil in hoc mundo habere, nihil quaerere; omnes qui ad se charitatis causa veniebant, ad aeternae vitae desideria accendere. Si quando autem quorumlibet culpas agnosceret, nunquam ab increpatione parcere, sed, amoris igne succensus, studebat in eis vehementer per linguam saevire. Consuetudinem vero vicini vel longe positi ejusdem loci accolae fecerant ut diebus singulis per hebdomadam unusquisque ei oblationes suas transmitteret, ut esset quod ipse ad se venientibus offerre potuisset. Quodam vero tempore possessor quidam, Carterius nomine, immundo desiderio devictus, quamdam sanctimonialem feminam rapuit, sibique illicito matrimonio conjunxit. Quod mox ut vir Domini cognovit, ei per quos potuit quae fuerat dignus audire mandavit. Cumque ille sceleris sui conscius timeret, atque ad virum Dei nequaquam accedere praesumeret, ne forte hunc aspere, ut delinquentes solebat, increparet, fecit oblationes suas, easque inter oblationes aliorum misit, ut ejus munera saltem nesciendo susciperet. Sed cum coram eo fuissent oblationes omnium deportatae, vir Dei tacitus sedit, sigillatim omnes considerare studuit, et omnes alias eligens atque seorsum ponens, oblationes quas idem Carterius transmiserat cognovit per spiritum, sprevit atque abjecit, dicens: Ite et dicite ei: Oblationem suam omnipotenti Domino abstulisti, et mihi tuas oblationes transmittis? Ego oblationem tuam non accipio, quia suam abstulisti Deo. Qua ex re factum est ut praesentes quosque magnus timor invaderet, cum vir Domini tam scienter de absentibus judicaret. PETRUS: Multos horum suspicor martyrium subire potuisse, si eos tempus persecutionis invenisset. GREGORIUS: Duo sunt, Petre, martyrii genera, unum in occulto, alterum in publico. Nam etsi persecutio desit exterius, martyrii meritum in occulto est, cum virtus ad passionem prompta flagrat in animo. Quia enim esse possit et sine aperta passione martyrium, testatur in Evangelio Dominus, qui Zebedaei filiis adhuc prae infirmitate mentis majora sesionis loca quaerentibus dicit: Potestis bibere calicem quem ego bibiturus sum? Cui videlicet cum responderent: Possumus; ait utrisque: Calicem quidem meum bibetis; sedere autem ad dexteram meam vel sinistram, non est meum dare vobis. Quid autem calicis nomen, nisi passionis poculum signat? Et cum nimirum constet quia Jacobus in passione occubuit, Joannes vero in pace Ecclesiae quievit, incunctanter colligitur, esse et sine aperta passione martyrium, quando et ille calicem Domini bibere dictus est, qui ex persecutione mortuus non est. De his autem talibus tantisque viris, quorum superius memoriam feci, cur dicamus quia si persecutionis tempus exstitisset, martyres esse potuissent, qui occulti hostis insidias tolerantes, suosque in hoc mundo adversarios diligentes, cunctis carnalibus desideriis resistentes, per hoc quod se omnipotenti Deo in corde mactaverunt, etiam pacis tempore martyres fuerunt, dum nostris modo temporibus viles quoque et saecularis vitae personas, de quibus nil coelestis gloriae praesumi posse videbatur, oborta occasione, contigit ad martyrii coronas pervenisse?

CAPUT XXVII. De quadraginta rusticis, qui pro eo quod carnes comedere immolatitias noluerunt, a Langobardis occisi sunt.

Nam ante hos ferme annos quindecim, sicut hi testantur qui interesse potuerunt, quadraginta rustici a Langobardis capti, carnes immolatitias comedere compellebantur. Qui cum valde resisterent, et contingere cibum sacrilegum nollent, coepere Langobardi qui eos tenuerant, nisi immolata comederent, mortem eis minari. At illi aeternam potius vitam quam praesentem ac transitoriam diligentes, fideliter perstiterunt, atque in sua constantia simul omnes occisi sunt. Quid itaque isti, nisi veritatis martyres fuerunt, qui, ne vetitum comedendo, Conditorem suum offenderent, elegerunt gladiis vitam finire?

Eodem quoque tempore, dum fere quadringentos captivos alios Langobardi tenuissent, more suo immolaverunt caput caprae diabolo, hoc ei per circuitum currentes et carmine nefando dedicantes. Cumque illud ipsi prius submissis cervicibus adorarent, eos quoque quos ceperant hoc adorare pariter compellebant. Sed ex eisdem captivis maxima multitudo magis eligens moriendo ad vitam immortalem tendere quam adorando vitam mortalem tenere, obtemperare jussis sacrilegis noluerunt, et cervicem quam semper Creatori flexerant creaturae inclinare contempserunt. Unde factum est ut hostes qui eos ceperant, gravi iracundia accensi, cunctos gladiis interficerent, quos in errore suo participes non haberent. Quid ergo mirum si, erumpente persecutionis tempore, illi martyres esse potuissent, qui in ipsa quoque pace Ecclesiae semetipsos semper affligendo angustam martyrii tenuerant viam, quando, irruente persecutionis articulo, hi etiam meruerunt martyrii palmas accipere, qui in pace Ecclesiae latas hujus saeculi vias sequi videbantur? Nec tamen hoc, quod de eisdem electis dicimus viris, de cunctis jam quasi in regulam tenemus. Nam cum persecutionis apertae tempus irruit, sicut plerique martyrium subire possunt, qui esse in pace Ecclesiae despicabiles videntur; ita nonnunquam in debilitatis formidinem corruunt, qui in pace prius Ecclesiae fortiter stare credebantur. Sed eos de quibus praediximus, fieri martyres potuisse fidenter fatemur, quia hoc jam ex eorum fine colligimus. Cadere enim nec in aperta persecutione poterant hi de quibus constat quia et usque ad finem vitae in occulta animi virtute perstiterunt. PETRUS: Ut asseris ita est, sed super indignos nos divinae misericordiae dispensationem miror, qui Langobardorum saevitiam ita moderatur, ut eorum sacerdotes sacrilegos, qui esse fidelium quasi victores videntur, orthodoxorum fidem persequi minime permittat.

CAPUT XXIX. De Ariano episcopo caecato.

GREGORIUS: Hoc, Petre, facere plerumque conati sunt, sed eorum saevitiae miracula superna restiterunt. Unde unum miraculum narro quod per Bonifacium monasterii mei monachum, qui usque ante quadriennium cum Langobardis fuit, adhuc ante triduum agnovi. Cum ad Spoletanam urbem Langobardorum episcopus, scilicet Arianus, venisset, et locum illic ubi solemnia sua ageret non haberet, coepit ab ejus civitatis episcopo Ecclesiam petere, quam suo errori dedicaret. Quod dum valde episcopus negaret, idem qui venerat Arianus, beati Pauli apostoli Ecclesiam illic cominus sitam se die altero violenter intraturum esse professus est. Quod ejusdem ecclesiae custos audiens, festinus cucurrit, ecclesiam clausit, seris munivit; facto autem vespere, lampades omnes exstinxit, seque in interioribus abscondit. In ipso autem subsequentis lucis crepusculo Arianus episcopus collecta multitudine advenit, clausas ecclesiae januas effringere paratus. Sed repente cunctae simul portae divinitus concussae, abjectis longius seris, apertae sunt, atque cum magno sonitu omnia ecclesiae claustra patuerunt; effuso desuper lumine, omnes quae exstinctae fuerant lampades accensae sunt. Arianus vero episcopus, qui vim facturus advenerat, subita caecitate percussus est, atque alienis jam manibus ad suum habitaculum reductus. Quod dum Langobardi in eadem regione positi omnes agnoscerent, nequaquam ulterius praesumpserunt catholica loca temerare. Miro enim modo res gesta est, ut quia ejusdem Ariani causa lampades in ecclesia beati Pauli fuerant exstinctae, uno eodemque tempore et ipse lumen perderet, et in ecclesiam lumen rediret.

CAPUT XXX. De Arianorum ecclesia, quae in Romana urbe catholica consecratione dedicata est.

Sed neque hoc sileam, quod ad ejusdem Arianae haereseos damnationem in hac quoque urbe ante biennium pietas superna monstravit. Ex his quippe quae narro alia populus agnovit, alia autem sacerdos et custodes Ecclesiae se audisse et vidisse testantur. Arianorum ecclesia in regione urbis hujus quae Subura dicitur, cum clausa usque ante biennium remansisset, placuit ut in fide catholica, introductis illic beati Sebastiani et sanctae Agathae martyrum reliquiis, dedicari debuisset; quod factum est. Nam cum magna populi multitudine venientes, atque omnipotenti Domino laudes canentes, eamdem Ecclesiam ingressi sumus. Cumque in ea jam missarum solemnia celebrarentur, et prae ejusdem loci angustia populi se turba comprimeret, quidam ex his qui extra sacrarium stabant porcum subito intra suos pedes huc illucque discurrere senserunt. Quem dum unusquisque sentiret, et juxta se stantibus indicaret, idem porcus ecclesiae januas petiit, et omnes per quos transiit in admirationem commovit; sed videri a nullo potuit, quamvis sentiri potuisset. Quod idcirco divina pietas ostendit, ut cunctis patesceret quia de loco eodem immundus habitator exiret. Peracta igitur celebratione missarum recessimus; sed adhuc nocte eadem magnus in ejusdem Ecclesiae tectis strepitus factus est, ac si in eis aliquis errando discurreret. Sequenti autem nocte gravior sonitus excrevit, cum subito tanto terrore insonuit, ac si omnis illa ecclesia a fundamentis fuisset eversa; et protinus recessit, et nulla illic ulterius inquietudo antiqui hostis apparuit; sed per terroris sonitum quem fecit, innotuit a loco quem diu tenuerat quam coactus exibat. Post paucos vero dies, in magna serenitate aeris super altare ejusdem Ecclesiae nubes coelitus descendit, suoque illud velamine operuit, omnemque Ecclesiam tanto terrore ac suavitate odoris replevit, ut patentibus janauis nullus illic praesumeret intrare. Sacerdos quoque et custodes, vel hi qui ad celebranda missarum solemnia venerant, rem videbant, ingredi minime poterant, et suavitatem mirifici odoris trahebant. Die vero alio, cum in ea lampades sine lumine dependerent, emisso divinitus lumine sunt accensae. Post paucos iterum dies, cum, expletis missarum solemniis, exstinctis lampadibus custos ex eadem ecclesia egressus fuisset, post paululum intravit, et lampades quas exstinxerat lucentes reperit. Quas negligenter exstinxisse se credidit, eas jam sollicitius exstinxit, et exiens atque ecclesiam sollicitius clausit. Sed post horarum trium spatium regressus, lucentes lampades quas exstinxerat invenit, ut videlicet ex ipso lumine aperte claresceret quia locus ille a tenebris ad lucem venisset. Petr. Etsi in magnis sumus tribulationibus positi, quia tamen a conditore nostro non sumus omnino despecti, testantur ea quae audio ejus stupenda miracula. Gregor. Quamvis sola quae in Italia gesta sunt narrare decreveram, visne tamen ut, pro ostendenda ejusdem Arianae haereseos damnatione, transeamus verbo ad Hispanias, atque inde per Africam ad Italiam redeamus? PETRUS: Perge quo libet; nam laetus ducor, laetus reducor.

CAPUT XXXI. De Herminigildo rege Liuvigildi Visigothorum regis filio, pro fide catholica ab eodem patre suo occiso.

GREGORIUS: Sicut multorum qui ab Hispaniarum partibus veniunt relatione cognovimus, nuper Herminigildus rex Leuvigildi regis Visigothorum filius, ab Ariana haeresi ad fidem catholicam, viro reverentissimo Leandro Hispalitano episcopo, dudum mihi in amicitiis familiariter juncto, praedicante conversus est. Quem pater Arianus, ut ad eamdem haeresim rediret, et praemiis suadere, et minis terrere conatus est. Cumque ille constantissime responderet nunquam se veram fidem posse relinquere, quam semel agnovisset, iratus pater eum privavit regno, rebusque exspoliavit omnibus. Cumque nec sic virtutem mentis illius emollire valuisset, in arcta illum custodia concludens, collum manusque illius ferro ligavit. Coepit itaque idem Herminigildus rex juvenis terrenum regnum despicere, et forti desiderio coeleste quaerens, in ciliciis vinculatus jacere, omnipotenti Deo ad confortandum se preces effundere, tantoque sublimius gloriam transeuntis mundi despicere, quanto et religatus agnoverat nil fuisse quod potuerit auferri. Superveniente autem paschalis festivitatis die, intempestae noctis silentio ad eum perfidus pater Arianum episcopum misit, ut ex ejus manu sacrilegae consecrationis communionem perciperet, atque per hoc ad patris gratiam redire mereretur. Sed vir Deo deditus Ariano episcopo venienti exprobravit ut debuit, ejusque a se perfidiam dignis increpationibus repulit; quia etsi exterius jacebat ligatus, apud se tamen in magno mentis culmine stabat securus. Ad se itaque reverso episcopo, Arianus pater infremuit, statimque suos apparitores misit, qui constantissimum confessorem Dei illic ubi jacebat occiderent; quod et factum est. Nam mox ut ingressi sunt, securem cerebro ejus infigentes, vitam corporis abstulerunt; hocque in eo valuerunt perimere, quod ipse quoque qui peremptus est, in se constituerat despexisse. Sed pro ostendenda vera ejus gloria, superna quoque non defuere miracula. Nam coepit in nocturno silentio psalmodiae cantus ad corpus ejusdem regis et martyris audiri; atque ideo veraciter regis, quia et martyris. Quidam etiam ferunt quod illic nocturno tempore accensae lampades apparebant; unde et factum est quatenus corpus illius, ut videlicet martyris, jure a cunctis fidelibus venerari debuisset. Pater vero perfidus et parricida commotus poenitentia, hoc fecisse se doluit, nec tamen usque ad obtinendam salutem. Nam quia vera esset catholica fides agnovit, sed gentis suae timore perterritus, ad hanc pervenire non meruit. Qui oborta aegritudine ad extrema perductus, Leandro episcopo, quem prius vehementer afflixerat, Recharedum regem filium, quem in sua haeresi relinquebat, commendare curavit, ut in ipso quoque talia faceret, qualia et in fratre illius suis cohortationibus fecisset. Qua commendatione expleta defunctus est. Post cujus mortem Recharedus rex non patrem perfidum, sed fratrem martyrem sequens, ab Arianae haereseos pravitate conversus est, totamque Visigothorum gentem ita ad veram perduxit fidem, ut nullum in suo regno militare permitteret, qui regno Dei hostis existere per haereticam perfidiam non timeret. Nec mirum quod verae fidei praedicator factus est, qui frater est martyris, cujus hunc quoque merita adjuvant, ut ad omnipotentis Dei gremium tam multos reducat. Qua in re considerandum nobis est, quia totum hoc agi nequaquam posset, si Herminigildus rex pro veritate mortuus non fuisset. Nam sicut scriptum est: Nisi granum frumenti cadens in terram mortuum fuerit, ipsum solum manet; si autem mortuum fuerit, multum fructum affert. Hoc fieri videmus in membris, quod factum scimus in capite. In Visigothorum etenim gente unus mortuus est, ut multi viverent; et dum unum granum fideliter cecidit ad obtinendam vitam animarum, seges multa surrexit. PETRUS: Res mira, et nostris stupenda temporibus.

CAPUT XXXII. De episcopis Africanis qui pro defensione catholicae fidei abscissa ab Arianis Vandalis lingua nullum locutionis solitae sustinuere dispendium.

GREGORIUS: Justiniani quoque Augusti temporibus, dum contra catholicorum fidem exorta a Vandalis persecutio Ariana in Africa vehementer insaniret, quidam in defensione veritatis episcopi fortiter persistentes, ad medium sunt deducti. Quos Vandalorum rex verbis ac muneribus ad perfidiam flectere non valens, tormentis frangere posse se credidit. Nam cum eis in ipsa defensione veritatis silentium indiceret, nec tamen ipsi contra perfidiam tacerent, ne tacendo forsitan consensisse viderentur, raptus in furorem, eorum linguas abscidi radicitus fecit. Res mira et multis nota senioribus, quia ita post pro defensione veritatis etiam sine lingua loquebantur, sicut prius loqui per linguam consueverant. PETRUS: Mirandum valde et vehementer stupendum. GREGORIUS: Scriptum, Petre, est de Unigenito summi Patris: In principio erat Verbum, et Verbum erat apud Deum, et Deus erat Verbum. De cujus etiam virtute subjungitur: Omnia per ipsum facta sunt. Quid igitur miramur, si verba edere sine lingua potuit Verbum quod fecit linguam? PETRUS: Placet quod dicis. GREGORIUS: Hi itaque, eo tempore profugi, ad Constantantinopolitanam urbem venerunt. Eo quoque tempore quo pro explendis responsis Ecclesiae ad principem ipse transmissus sum, seniorem quemdam episcopum reperi qui se adhuc eorum ora sine linguis loquentia vidisse testabatur, ita ut apertis oribus clamarent: Ecce videte, quia linguas non habemus et loquimur. Videbatur enim a respicientibus, ut ferebat, quia abscissis radicitus linguis, quasi quoddam barathrum patebat in gutture, et tamen ore vacuo plena ad integrum verba formabantur. Quorum illic unus in luxuriam lapsus, mox privatus est dono miraculi; recto videlicet omnipotentis Dei judicio, ut qui carnis continentiam servare neglexerat, sine lingua carnea non haberet verba virtutis. Sed haec nos pro Arianae haereseos damnatione dixisse sufficiat, nunc ad ea quae nuper in Italia gesta sunt signa redeamus.

CAPUT XXXIII. De Eleutherio servo Dei.

GREGORIUS: Is autem, cujus superius memoriam feci, Eleutherius Pater monasterii beati evangelistae Marci, quod in Spoletanae urbis pomeriis situm est, diu mecum est in hac urbe in meo monasterio conversatus, ibique defunctus est. Quem sui discipuli referebant orando mortuum suscitasse. Vir autem tantae simplicitatis erat et compunctionis, ut dubium non esset quod illae lacrymae ex tam humili simplicique mente editae apud omnipotentem Deum multa obtinere potuissent. Hujus ergo aliquod miraculum narro, quod inquisitus mihi simpliciter et ipse fatebatur. Quadam namque die dum iter carperet, facto vespere cum ad secedendum locus deesset, in monasterium virginum devenit, in quo quidam puer parvulus erat, quem malignus spiritus omni nocte vexare consueverat. Sed sanctimoniales feminae ut virum Dei susceperunt eum rogaverunt, dicentes: Tecum, Pater, hac nocte puer iste maneat. Quem ipse benigne suscepit, secumque eum nocte eadem jacere permisit. Facto autem mane coeperunt sanctimoniales feminae eumdem Patrem vigilanter inquirere, si quid ei puer quem dederant nocte eadem fecisset. Qui miratus cur ita requirerent, respondit: Nihil. Tunc illae ejusdem pueri innotuerunt causam, et quod malignus spiritus nulla ab eo nocte recederet indicaverunt, summopere postulantes ut hunc secum ad monasterium tolleret, quia jam vexationem illius videre ipsae non possent. Consensit senex, puerum ad monasterium duxit. Qui cum multo tempore in monasterio fuisset, atque ad hunc antiquus hostis accedere minime praesumpsisset, ejusdem senis animus de salute pueri immoderatius per laetitiam tactus est. Nam coram positis fratribus dixit: Fratres, diabolus ibi cum illis sororibus jocabatur; at vero ubi ad servos Dei ventum est, ad hunc puerum accedere non praesumpsit. Post quam vocem, hora eadem ac momento, idem puer coram cunctis fratribus diabolo se invadente vexatus est; quo viso senex, se protinus in lamentum dedit. Quem dum lugentem diu fratres consolari voluissent, respondit, dicens: Credite mihi, quia in nullius vestrum ore hodie panis ingreditur, nisi puer iste a daemonio fuerit ereptus.

Tunc se in orationem cum cunctis fratribus stravit, et eo usque oratum est, quousque puer a vexatione sanaretur, Qui tam perfecte sanatus est, ut ad hunc malignus spiritus accedendi ausum ulterius non haberet. PETRUS: Credo quod ei elatio parva subrepserat, et ideo ejus discipulos omnipotens Deus facti illius esse voluit adjutores. GREGORIUS: Ita est; nam quia pondus miraculi solus portare non potuit, divisit hoc cum fratribus, et portavit. Hujus viri oratio quantae virtutis esset, in memetipso expertus sum. Nam cum quodam tempore in monasterio positus incisionem vitalium paterer, crebrisque angustiis per horarum momenta ad exitum propinquarem (quam medici molestiam Graeco eloquio syncopin vocant), et nisi me frequenter fratres cibo reficerent, vitalis mihi spiritus funditus intercidi videretur, paschalis supervenit dies. Et cum sacratissimo Sabbato, in quo omnes et parvuli pueri jejunant, ego jejunare non possem, coepi plus moerore quam infirmitate deficere. Sed tristis animus consilium citius invenit, ut eumdem virum Dei secreto in oratorium ducerem, eumque peterem quatenus mihi ut die illo virtus ad jejunandum daretur, suis apud omnipotentem Dominum precibus obtineret; quod et factum est. Nam mox ut oratorium ingressi sumus, a me humiliter postulatus, sese cum lacrymis in orationem dedit, et post paululum completa oratione exiit. Sed ad vocem benedictionis illius, virtutem tantam meus stomachus accepit, ut mihi funditus a memoria tolleretur cibus et aegritudo. Coepi mirari quis essem, quis fuerim, quia et cum ad animum redibat infirmitas, nihil in me ex his quae memineram recognoscebam. Cumque in dispositione monasterii occupata mens esset, obliviscebar funditus aegritudinis meae. Si vero, ut praedixi, rediret aegritudo ad memoriam, cum tam fortem me esse sentirem, mirabar si non comedissem. Qui ad vesperam veniens, tantae me fortitudinis inveni, ut si voluissem, jejunium usque ad diem alterum transferre potuissem. Sicque factum est ut in me probarem ea etiam de illo vera esse quibus ipse minime interfuissem. PETRUS: Quia eumdem virum

CAPUT XXXIV. Quot sunt compunctionis genera.

GREGORIUS: In multas species, compunctio dividitur, quando singulae quaeque a poenitentibus culpae planguntur. Unde ex voce quoque poenitentium Jeremias ait: Divisiones aquarum deduxit oculus meus. Principaliter vero compunctionis genera duo sunt, quia Deum sitiens anima prius timore compungitur, post amore. Prius enim sese in lacrymis afficit, quia dum malorum suorum recolit, pro his perpeti aeterna supplicia pertimescit. At vero cum longa moeroris anxietudine fuerit formido consumpta, quaedam jam de praesumptione veniae securitas nascitur, et in amore coelestium gaudiorum animus inflammatur; et qui prius flebat ne duceretur ad supplicium, postmodum amarissime flere incipit, quia differtur a regno. Contemplatur etenim mens qui sint illi angelorum chori, quae ipsa societas beatorum spirituum, quae majestas aeternae visionis Dei; et amplius plangit quia a bonis perennibus deest, quam flevit prius cum mala aeterna metuebat. Sicque fit ut perfecta compunctio formidinis, trahat animum compunctioni dilectionis. Quod bene in sacra veracique historia figurata narratione describitur, quae ait quod Axa filia Caleb sedens super asinum suspiravit. Cui dixit pater suus: Quid habes? At illa respondit: Da mihi benedictionem; terram Australem et arentem dedisti mihi, junge et irriguam. Deditque ei pater suus irriguum superius et irriguum inferius. Axa quippe super asinum sedet, cum irrationabilibus carnis suae motibus anima praesidet. Quae suspirans a patre terram irriguam petit, quia a Creatore nostro cum magno gemitu quaerenda est lacrymarum gratia. Sunt namque nonnulli qui jam in dono perceperunt libere pro justitia loqui, oppressos tueri, indigentibus possessa tribuere, ardorem fidei habere; sed adhuc gratiam lacrymarum non habent. Hi nimirum terram Australem et arentem habent, sed adhuc irrigua indigent, quia in bonis operibus positi, in quibus magni atque ferventes sunt, oportet, oportet nimis, ut aut timore supplicii, aut amore regni coelestis mala etiam quae antea perpetraverunt deplorent. Sed quia, ut dixi, duo sunt compunctionis genera, dedit ei pater suus irriguum superius et irriguum inferius. Irriguum quippe superius accipit anima, cum sese in lacrymis coelestis regni desiderio affligit. Irriguum vero inferius accipit, cum inferni supplicia flendo pertimescit. Et quidem prius inferius, ac post irriguum superius datur. Sed quia compunctio amoris dignitate praeeminet, necesse fuit ut prius irriguum superius, et post irriguum inferius commemorari debuisset. PETRUS: Placet quod dicis. Sed postquam hunc venerandae vitae Eleutherium hujus meriti fuisse dixisti, libet inquirere si nunc in mundo esse credendum est aliquos tales.

CAPUT XXXV. De Amantio presbytero provinciae Tusciae.

GREGORIUS: Floridus Tiburtinae Ecclesiae episcopus, cujus veritatis atque sanctitatis est dilectioni tuae incognitum non est. Hic mihi esse apud se presbyterum quemdam Amantium nomine praecipuae simplicitatis narravit virum; quem hoc habere virtutis perhibet, ut apostolorum more manum super aegros ponat, et saluti restituat, et quantumlibet vehemens aegritudo sit, ad tactum illius abscedat. Quem hoc etiam habere miraculi adjunxit, quia in quolibet loco quamvis immanissimae asperitatis serpentem repererit, mox ut eum signo crucis signaverit, exstinguit, ita ut virtute crucis quam vir Dei digito ediderit, diruptis visceribus moriatur. Quem si quando serpens in foramine fugerit, signo crucis os foraminis benedicit, statimque ex foramine serpens jam mortuus trahitur. Quem tantae virtutis virum ipse etiam videre curavi, eumque ad me deductum in infirmorum domo paucis diebus manere volui, ubi, si qua adesset curationis gratia, citius probari potuisset. Ibi autem quidam inter aegros alios mente captus jacebat, quem medici Graeco vocabulo phreneticum appellant. Qui nocte quadam cum magnas voces, scilicet ut insanus, ederet, cunctosque aegros immensis clamoribus perturbaret, ita ut nulli illic capere somnum liceret, fiebat res valde miserabilis, quia unde unus male, inde omnes deterius habebant. Sed sicut et prius a reverentissimo viro Florido episcopo, qui tunc cum praedicto presbytero illic pariter manebat, et post a puero qui nocte eadem aegrotantibus serviebat, subtiliter agnovi, idem venerabilis presbyter de proprio stratu surgens, ad lectum phrenetici silenter accessit, et super eum positis manibus oravit. Moxque illum melius habentem tulit, atque in superiora domus secum ad oratorium duxit, ubi pro eo liberius orationi incubuit, et statim eum sanum ad lectum proprium reduxit, ita ut nullas ulterius voces ederet, nec jam aegrotorum quempiam aliquo clamore perturbaret; nec jam aegritudinem auxit alienam, qui perfecte receperat mentem suam. Ex quo ejus uno facto didicimus ut de eo illa omnia audita crederemus. PETRUS: Magna vitae aedificatio est, videre viros tam mira facientes, atque in civibus suis Jerusalem coelestem in terra conspicere.

CAPUT XXXVI. De Maximiano Syracusanae civitatis episcopo.

GREGORIUS: Neque hoc silendum puto, quod omnipotens Deus super Maximianum famulum suum, nunc Syracusanum episcopum, tunc autem mei monasterii Patrem, dignatus est monstrare miraculum. Nam dum jussione pontificis mei in Constantinopolitanae urbis palatio responsis ecclesiasticis deservirem, illuc ad me idem venerabilis Maximianus charitate exigente cum fratribus venit. Qui cum ad monasterium meum Romam rediret, in mari Adriatico nimia tempestate deprehensus, inaestimabili ordine atque inusitato miraculo erga se cunctosque qui cum eo aderant, omnipotentis Dei et iram cognovit, et gratiam. Nam cum in eorum morte ventorum nimietatibus elevati fluctus saevirent, ex navi clavi perditi, arbor abscissa est, vela in undis projecta, totumque vas navis quassatum nimiis fluctibus, ab omni fuerat sua compage dissolutum. Rimis itaque patentibus intravit mare, atque usque ad superiores tabulas implevit navem, ita ut non tam navis intra undas quam undae jam intra navem esse viderentur. Tunc in eadem navi residentes non jam ex morte vicina, sed ex ipsa ejus praesentia ac visione turbati omnes, sibimet pacem dederunt, corpus et sanguinem Redemptoris acceperunt, Deo se singuli commendantes, ut eorum animas benigne susciperet, quorum corpora in tam pavenda morte tradiderat. Sed omnipotens Deus, qui eorum mentes mirabiliter terruit, eorum quoque vitam mirabilius servavit. Nam diebus octo navis eadem usque ad superiores tabulas aquis plena, iter proprium peragens enatavit; nono autem die in Cotronensis castri portum deducta est. Ex qua exierunt omnes incolumes, qui cum praedicto venerabili viro Maximiano navigabant. Cumque post eos ipse quoque fuisset egressus, mox in ejusdem portus profundum navis demersa est, ac si illis egredientibus pro pondere sublevatione caruisset; et quae plena hominibus in pelago aquas portaverat, atque nataverat, Maximiano cum suis fratribus recedente, aquas sine hominibus in portu non valuit portare; ut hinc omnipotens Deus ostenderet quia hanc onustam sua manu tenuerat, quae ab hominibus vacua et derelicta super aquas non potuit manere.

CAPUT XXXVII. De Sanctulo presbytero provinciae Nursiae.

GREGORIUS: Ante dies quoque fere quadraginta vidisti apud me eum, cujus superius memoriam feci, venerabilis vitae presbyterum Sanctulum nomine, qui ad me ex Nursiae provincia annis singulis venire consuevit. Sed ex eadem provincia quidam monachus ante triduum venit, qui gravis nuntii moerore me perculit, quia eumdem virum obiisse nuntiavit. Hujus ergo viri, etsi non sine gemitu dulcedinis recolo, jam tamen sine formidine virtutes narro, quas a vicinis ejus sacerdotibus mira veritate et simplicitate praeditis agnovi. Et sicut inter amantes se animos magnum charitatis familiaritas ausum praebet, a me plerumque ex dulcedine exactus, ipse quoque de his quae egerat extrema quaedam fateri cogebatur. Hic namque quodam tempore cum in prelo Langobardi olivas premerent, ut in oleum liquari debuissent, sicut jocundi erat et vultus et animi, utrem vacuum ad prelum detulit, laborantesque Langobardos laeto vultu salutavit, utrem protulit, et jubendo potius quam petendo eum impleri sibi dixit. Sed gentiles viri, qui tota jam die frustra laboraverant, atque ab olivis exigere oleum torquendo non poterant, verba illius moleste susceperunt, eumque injuriis insectati sunt. Quibus vir Domini laetiori adhuc vultu respondit, dicens: Sic pro me oretis, istum utrem Sanctulo impleatis, et sic a vobis revertetur. Cumque illi ex olivis oleum defluere non cernerent, et virum Dei ad implendum utrem sibi insistere viderent, vehementer accensi, majoribus hunc verborum contumeliis detestari coeperunt. Vir autem Dei videns quod ex prelo oleum nullo modo exiret, aquam sibi dari petiit, quam cunctis videntibus benedixit, atque in prelum suis manibus jactavit. Ex qua protinus benedictione tanta ubertas olei erupit, ut Langobardi, qui prius diu incassum laboraverant, non solum sua vascula omnia, sed utrem quoque quem vir Dei detulerat implerent, et gratias agerent, quia is qui oleum petere venerat, benedicendo dedit quod postulabat. Alio quoque tempore vehemens ubique fames incubuerat, et beati Laurentii martyris ecclesia fuerat a Langobardis incensa. Quam vir Dei restaurare cupiens, artifices multos, ac plures subministrantes operarios adhibuit, quibus necesse erat ut quotidiani sumptus laborantibus sine dilatione praeberentur. Sed exigente ejusdem famis necessitate, panis defuit; coeperuntque laborantes instanter victum quaerere, quia vires ad laborem per inopiam non haberent. Quod vir Dei audiens, eos verbis consolabatur foris, promittendo quod deerat; sed ipse graviter anxiabatur intus, exhibere cibum non valens quem promittebat. Cum vero huc illucque anxius pergeret, devenit ad clibanum, in quo vicinae mulieres pridie panes coxerant, ibique incurvatus aspexit, ne forte panis a coquentibus remansisset. Tunc repente panem mirae magnitudinis, atque insoliti candoris invenit: quem quidem tulit, sed deferre artificibus noluit, ne fortasse alienus esset, et culpam velut ex pietate perpetraret. Per vicinas itaque hunc mulieres detulit, eumque omnibus ostendit, ac ne cui earum remansisset inquisivit. Omnes autem quae pridie panem coxerant, suum hunc esse negaverunt, atque panes suos numero integro se a clibano retulisse professae sunt. Tunc laetus vir Domini perrexit ad multos artifices cum uno pane; ut omnipotenti Deo gratias agerent admonuit; et quia eis annonam praebuerat, indicavit; eisque ad refectionem protinus invitatis inventum panem apposuit. Quibus sufficienter pleneque satiatis, plura ex eo quam ipse panis fuerat, fragmenta collegit. Quae die quoque altero eis ad refectionem intulit; sed id quod ex fragmentis supererat, ipsa quoque, quae apposita fuerant, fragmenta superabat. Factumque est ut per dies decem omnes illi artifices atque operarii ex illo uno pane satiati, hunc et quotidie ederent, et ex eo quotidie quod edi posset in crastinum superesset, ac si fragmenta panis illius per esum crescerent, et cibum comedentium ora repararent. PETRUS: Mira res, atque in exemplum Dominici operis vehementer omnibus stupenda. GREGORIUS: Ipse, Petre, multos de uno pane pavit per servum, qui ex quinque panibus quinque millia hominum satiavit per semetipsum, qui pauca seminis grana in innumera segetum frumenta multiplicat, qui ipsa quoque semina produxit ex terra et simul omnia creavit ex nihilo. Sed ne diutius mireris quid in virtute Domini venerandus vir Sanctulus exterius fecerit, audi ex virtute Domini qualis interius fuit. Die etenim quadam a Langobardis captus quidam diaconus tenebatur ligatus, eumque ipsi qui tenuerant, interficere cogitabant. Advesperascente autem die, vir Dei Sanctulus ab eisdem Langobardis petiit ut relaxari eique vita concedi debuisset, quod posse se facere omnino negaverunt. Cumque mortem illius deliberasse eos cerneret, petiit ut sibi ad custodiam tradi debuisset. Cui protinus responderunt: Tibi quidem eum ad custodiendum damus, sed ea conditione interposita, ut si iste fugerit, pro eo ipse moriaris. Quod vir Domini libenter accipiens, praedictum diaconum in suam suscepit fidem; quem nocte media cum Langobardos omnes somno gravi depressos aspiceret, excitavit et ait: Surge, et concitus fuge, liberet te omnipotens Deus. Sed idem diaconus promissionis ejus non immemor, respondit dicens: Fugere, Pater, non possum, quia si ego fugero, pro me sine dubio ipse morieris. Quem vir Domini Sanctulus ad fugiendum compulit, dicens: Surge, et vade, te omnipotens Deus eripiat; nam ego in manu ejus sum, tantum in me possunt facere, quantum ipse permiserit. Fugit itaque diaconus, et quasi deceptus in medio fidejussor remansit. Facto igitur mane Langobardi, qui diaconum ad custodiendum dederant, venerunt, quem dederant petierunt; sed hunc venerandus presbyter fugisse respondit. Tunc illi inquiunt: Scis ipse melius quid convenit. Servus autem Domini constanter ait: Scio. Cui dixerunt: Bonus homo es, nolumus te per varios cruciatus mori, elige tibi mortem quam vis. Quibus vir Domini respondit, dicens: In manu Dei sum, ea morte me occidite qua me occidi ipse permiserit. Tunc omnibus qui illic aderant Langobardis placuit ut eum capite truncare debuissent, quatenus sine gravi cruciatu vitam ejus compendiosa morte terminarent. Cognito itaque quod Sanctulus qui inter eos pro sanctitatis reverentia magni honoris habebatur occidendus esset, omnes qui in eodem loco inventi sunt Langobardi convenerunt (sicut sunt nimiae crudelitatis) laeti ad spectaculum mortis. Circumsteterunt itaque acies. Vir autem Domini deductus in medium est, atque ex omnibus viris fortibus electus est unus, de quo dubium non esset quin uno ictu caput ejus abscinderet. Venerandus igitur vir inter armatos deductus, ad sua arma statim cucurrit; nam petiit ut sibi paululum orandi licentia daretur. Cui dum concessum fuisset, in terram se stravit et oravit. Qui dum paulo diutius oraret, hunc electus interfector calce pulsavit ut surgeret, dicens: Surge, et flexo genu tende cervicem. Surrexit autem vir Domini, genuflexit, cervicem tetendit, sed tenso collo eductam contra se spatham intuens, hoc unum publice fertur dixisse: Sancte Joannes, suscipe illam. Tunc electus carnifex evaginatum gladium tenens, nisu forti in altum brachium percussurus levavit, sed deponere nullo modo potuit, nam repente diriguit, et erecto in coelum gladio brachium inflexibile remansit. Tunc omnis Langobardorum turba quae ad illud mortis spectaculum aderat, in laudis favorem conversa, mirari coepit, virumque Dei cum timore venerari, quia profecto claruerat cujus sanctitatis esset, qui carnificis sui brachium in aere ligasset. Itaque postulatus ut surgeret, surrexit; postulatus ut brachium sui carnificis sanaret, negavit, dicens: Ego pro eo nullo modo orabo, nisi mihi ante juramentum dederit quia cum ista manu Christianum hominem non occidat. Sed Langobardus idem, qui, ut ita dicam, brachium contra Deum tendendo perdiderat, poena sua exigente, compulsus est jurare se Christianum hominem nunquam occidere. Tunc vir Domini praecepit, dicens: Depone manum deorsum. Qui statim deposuit. Atque illico adjunxit: Remitte gladium in vaginam. Et statim remisit. Omnes ergo tantae virtutis hominem cognoscentes, boves et jumenta quae depraedati fuerant, certatim ei offerre in munere volebant; sed vir Domini tale munus suscipere renuit, munus autem bonae mercedis quaesivit, dicens: Si mihi aliquid vultis concedere, omnes captivos quos habetis mihi tribuite, ut habeam unde pro vobis debeam orare. Factumque est; et omnes captivi cum eo dimissi sunt, atque, superna gratia disponente, cum se unus pro uno morti obtulit, multos a morte liberavit. PETRUS: Mira res, et quamvis hanc ab aliis et ipse cognoverim, vere tamen fateor quia mihi quoties narratur innovatur. GREGORIUS: Nihil in hac re in Sanctulo mireris, sed pensa, si potes, quis ille spiritus fuerit, qui ejus tam simplicem mentem tenuit, atque in tanto virtutis culmine erexit. Ubi enim ejus animus fuit, quando mori pro proximo tam constanter decrevit, et pro temporali vita fratris unius suam despexit, atque sub gladio cervicem tetendit? Quae ergo vis amoris illud cor tenuit, quod mortem suam pro unius salute proximi non expavit? Scimus certe quia idem venerabilis vir Sanctulus ipsa quoque elementa litterarum bene non noverat. Legis praecepta nesciebat; sed quia plenitudo legis est charitas, legem totam in Dei ac proximi dilectione servavit; et quod foris in cognitione non noverat, intus vivebat in amore. Et qui nunquam fortasse legerat quod de Redemptore Joannes Apostolus dixit: Quoniam sicut ille pro nobis animan suam posuit, sic et nos debemus pro fratribus animas ponere, tam sublime apostol cum praeceptum faciendo magis quam sciendo noverat. Comparemus, si placet, cum hac nostra indocta scientia illius doctam ignorantiam. Ubi haec nostra jacet, ibi illius disciplina eminet. Nos de virtutibus vacui loquimur, et quasi inter fructifera arbusta positi, odoramus poma, nec manducamus; ille virtutum fructus carpere noverat, quamvis hos in verbis odorare nesciebat. PETRUS: Quidnam, quaeso te, esse existimas, quod boni quique subtrahuntur; et qui vivere ad aedificationem multorum poterant, aut penitus inveniri nequeunt, aut certe jam omnimodo rarescunt? GREGORIUS: Malitia remanentium meretur, ut hi qui prodesse poterant festine subtrahantur: et cum mundi finis appropinquat, electi tolluntur, ne deteriora videant. Hinc enim proheta ait: Justus perit, et nemo est qui recogitet in corde suo; et viri misericordiae colliguntur, quia non est qui intelligat. Hinc rursus scriptum est: Aperite, ut exeant qui conculcent eam, tollite de via lapides. Hinc Salomon ait: Tempus mittendi lapides, et tempus colligendi. Quo igitur finis mundi urget, eo necesse est ut vivi lapides ad aedificium coeleste colligantur, quatenus Jerusalem nostra in mensuram suae constructionis excrescat. Nec tamen ita omnes electos subtrahi credimus, ut soli in mundo perversi remaneant, quia nunquam peccatores ad lamentum poenitentiae redirent, si nulla essent bonorum exempla, quae eorum mentem traherent. PETRUS: Incassum subtrahi bonos queror, qui perire catervatim et malos video.

CAPUT XXXVIII. De visione Redempti Ferentinae civitatis episcopi.

GREGORIUS: Hac de re nihil, Petre, mireris; nam Redemptum Ferentinae civitatis episcopum, vitae venerabilis virum, qui ante hos fere annos septem ex hoc mundo migravit, tua dilectio cognitum habuit. Hic sicut mihi adhuc in monasterio posito valde familiariter jungebatur, hoc quod Joannis junioris praedecessoris mei tempore de mundi fine cognoverat, sicut longe lateque claruerat, a me requisitus mihi ipse narrabat. Aiebat namque quia quadam die dum parochias suas ex more circuiret, pervenit ad Ecclesiam beati Eutychii martyris. Advesperascente autem die stratum fieri sibi juxta sepulcrum martyris voluit, atque ibi post laborem quievit, cum nocte media, ut asserebat, nec dormiebat, nec perfecte vigilare poterat; sed depressus, ut solet, somno, gravabatur quodam pondere vigilans animus, atque ante eum idem beatus martyr Eutychius astitit, dicens: Redempte, vigilas? Cui respondit: Vigilo. Qui ait: Finis venit universae carnis, finis venit universae carnis, finis venit universae carnis. Post quam trinam vocem visio martyris, quae mentis ejus oculis apparebat, evanuit. Tunc vir Dei surrexit, seque in orationis lamentum dedit. Mox enim illa terribilia in coelo signa secuta sunt, ut hastae atque acies igneae ab Aquilonis parte viderentur. Mox effera Langobardorum gens de vagina suae habitationis educta, in nostram cervicem grassata est atque humanum genus, quod in hac terra prae nimia multitudine quasi spissae segetis more surrexerat, succisum aruit. Nam depopulatae urbes, eversa castra, concrematae ecclesiae, destructa sunt monasteria virorum ac feminarum, desolata ab hominibus praedia, atque ab omni cultore destituta, in solitutudine vacat terra, nullus hanc possessor inhabitat, occupaverunt bestiae loca quae prius multitudo hominum tenebat. Et quid in aliis mundi partibus agatur, ignoro. Nam in hac terra, in qua nos vivimus, finem suum mundus jam non nuntiat, sed ostendit. Tanto ergo nos necesse est instantius aeterna quaerere, quanto a nobis cognoscimus velociter temporalia fugisse. Despiciendus a nobis hic mundus fuerat, etiam si blandiretur, si rebus prosperis demulceret animum; at postquam tot flagellis premitur, tanta adversitate fatigatur, tot nobis quotidie dolores ingeminat, quid nobis aliud quam ne diligatur clamat? Multa autem fuerant quae adhuc de electorum factis narrari debuissent, sed haec silentio supprimo, quia ad alia festino. PETRUS: Quia multos intra sanctae Ecclesiae gremium constitutos de vita animae post mortem carnis perpendo dubitare, quaeso ut debeas, vel quae ex ratione suppetunt, vel si qua animarum exempla animo occurrunt, pro multorum aedificatione dicere, ut hi qui suspicantur, discant cum carne animam non finiri. GREGORIUS: Laboriosum valde hoc opus est, et maxime occupato animo atque ad alia tendenti. Sed si sunt quibus prodesse valeat, voluntatem meam procul dubio postpono utilitati proximorum, et, in quantum Deo largiente valuero, quod anima post carnem vivat subsequenti hoc quarto volumine demonstrabo.

Liber IV

CAPUT I. Quod aeterna ac spiritalia ideo a carnalibus minus credantur, quia ea quae audiunt per experimentum minime noverunt.

GREGORIUS: Postquam de paradisi gaudiis, culpa exigente, expulsus est primus humani generis parens, in hujus caecitatis atque exsilii quam patimur venit aerumnam, quia peccando extra semetipsum fusus, jam illa coelestis patriae gaudia, quae prius contemplabatur, videre non potuit. In paradiso quippe assueverat homo verbis Dei perfrui, beatorum angelorum spiritibus cordis munditia et celsitudine visionis interesse; sed postquam huc cecidit, ab illo quo implebatur mentis lumine recessit. Ex cujus videlicet carne nos in hujus exsilii caecitate nati, audivimus quidem coelestem esse patriam, audivimus ejus cives angelos Dei, audivimus eorumdem angelorum socios spiritus justorum et perfectorum. Sed carnales quique, quia illa invisibilia scire non valent per experimentum, dubitant utrumne sit quod corporalibus oculis non vident. Quae nimirum dubietas in primo parente nostro esse non potuit, quia exclusus a paradisi gaudiis, hoc quod amiserat, quia viderat recolebat. Hi autem sentire vel recolere audita non possunt, quia eorum nullum, sicut ille, saltem de praeterito, experimentum tenent. Ac si enim praegnans mulier mittatur in carcerem, ibique pariat puerum, qui natus puer in carcere nutriatur et crescat; cui si fortasse mater quae hunc genuit, solem, lunam, stellas, montes et campos, volantes aves, currentes equos nominet, ille vero qui est in carcere natus et nutritus nihil aliud quam tenebras carceris sciat, et haec quidem esse audiat, sed quia ea per experimentum non novit, veraciter esse diffidat; ita in hac exsilii sui caecitate nati homines, dum esse summa et invisibilia audiunt, diffidunt an vera sint, quia sola haec infima in quibus nati sunt visibilia noverunt. Unde factum est ut ipse invisibilium et visibilium Creator ad humani generis redemptionem Unigenitus Patris veniret, et sanctum Spiritum ad corda nostra mitteret, quatenus per eum vivificati crederemus, quae adhuc scire per experimentum non possumus. Quotquot ergo hunc spiritum haereditatis nostrae pignus accepimus, de vita invisibilium non dubitamus. Quisquis autem in hac credulitate adhuc solidus non est, debet procul dubio majorum dictis fidem praebere, eisque jam per Spiritum sanctum invisibilium experimentum habentibus credere, quia et stultus est puer si matrem ideo aestimet de luce mentiri, quia ipse nihil aliud quam tenebras carceris agnovit. PETRUS: Placet valde quod dicis. Sed qui esse invisibilia non credit, profecto infidelis est; qui vero infidelis est, in eo quod dubitat, fidem non quaerit, sed rationem.

CAPUT II. Quod sine fide neque infidelis vivat.

GREGORIUS Audenter dico, quia sine fide neque infidelis vivit. Nam si eumdem infidelem percunctari voluero, quem patrem vel quam matrem habuerit, protinus respondebit, illum atque illam. Quem si statim requiram utrumne noverit quando conceptus sit, vel viderit quando natus, nihil horum se vel nosse, vel vidisse fatebitur, et tamen quod non vidit, credit. Nam illum patrem illamque se habuisse matrem absque dubitatione testatur. PETRUS: Fateor quia nunc usque nescivi quod infidelis haberet fidem. GREGORIUS: Habent etiam infideles fidem, sed utinam in Deum. Quam si utique haberent, infideles non essent. Sed hinc in sua perfidia redarguendi sunt, hinc ad fidei gratiam provocandi, quia si de ipso suo visibili corpore credunt quod minime viderunt, cur invisibilia non credunt, quae corporaliter videri non possunt;

CAPUT III. Quod tres vitales spiritus sunt creati.

Nam quia post mortem carnis vivat anima, patet ratio, sed fidei admista. Tres quippe vitales spiritus creavit omnipotens Deus: unum qui carne non tegitur; alium qui carne tegitur, sed non cum carne moritur; tertium qui carne tegitur, et cum carne moritur. Spiritus namque est qui carne non tegitur, angelorum; spiritus qui carne tegitur, sed cum carne non moritur, hominum; spiritus qui carne tegitur, et cum carne moritur, jumentorum omniumque brutorum animalium. Homo itaque sicut in medio creatus est, ut esset inferior angelo, superior jumento, ita aliquid habet commune cum summo, aliquid commune cum infimo: immortalitatem scilicet spiritus cum angelo, mortalitatem vero carnis cum jumento; quousque et ipsam mortalitatem carnis gloria resurrectionis absorbeat, et inhaerendo spiritui caro servetur in perpetuum, quia et ipse spiritus inhaerendo carni servatur in Deum. Quae tamen caro nec in reprobis inter supplicia perfecte deficit, quia semper deficiendo subsistit; ut qui spiritu et carne peccaverunt, semper essentialiter viventes, et carne et spiritu sine fine moriantur. PETRUS: Rationi fidelium placent cuncta quae dicis. Sed quaeso te, dum spiritus hominum atque jumentorum tanta distinctione discernas, quid est quod Salomon ait: Dixi in corde meo de filiis hominum, ut probaret eos Deus, et ostenderet similes esse bestiis; idcirco unus interitus est hominis et jumentorum, et aequa utriusque conditio ? Qui adhuc eamdem suam sententiam subtiliter exsequens, adjungit: Sicut moritur homo, sic et illa moriuntur, similiter spirant omnia, et nihil habet homo jumentis amplius. Quibus adhuc verbis generalem definitionem subinfert dicens: Cuncta subjacent vanitati, et omnia pergunt ad unum locum; de terra facta sunt, et in terram pariter revertuntur.

GREGORIUS: Salomonis liber in quo haec scripta sunt, Ecclesiastes appellatus est. Ecclesiastes autem proprie concionator dicitur. In concione vero sententia promitur, per quam tumultuosae turbae seditio comprimatur.

Et cum multi diversa sentiunt, per concionantis rationem ad unam sententiam perducuntur. Hic igitur liber idcirco concionator dicitur, quia Salomon in eo quasi tumultuantis turbae suscepit sensum, ut ea per inquisitionem dicat, quae fortasse per tentationem imperita mens sentiat. Nam quot sententias quasi per inquisitionem movet, quasi tot in se personas diversorum suscipit. Sed concionator verax velut extensa manu omnium tumultus sedat, eosque ad unam sententiam revocat, cum in ejusdem libri termino ait: Finem loquendi omnes pariter audiamus: Deum time, et mandata ejus observa; hoc est enim omnis homo. Si enim in libro eodem per locutionem suam multorum personas non susceperat, cur ad audiendum loquendi finem secum pariter omnes admonebat? Qui igitur in fine libri dicit: Omnes pariter audiamus, ipse sibi testis est quia in se multorum personas suscipiens, quasi solus locutus non est. Unde et alia sunt quae in libro eodem per inquisitionem moventur, atque alia quae per rationem satisfaciunt; alia quae ex tentati profert animo, atque adhuc hujus mundi delectationibus dediti; alia vero in quibus ea quae rationis sunt disserit, ut animum a delectatione compescat. Ibi namque ait: Hoc itaque mihi visum est bonum, ut comedat quis et bibat, et fruatur laetitia ex labore suo. Et longe inferius subjungit: Melius est ire ad domum luctus, quam ad domum convivii. Si enim bonum est manducare et bibere, melius fuisse videbatur ad domum convivii pergere quam ad domum luctus. Ex qua re ostenditur quia illud ex infirmantium persona intulit, hoc vero ex rationis definitione subjunxit. Nam ipsas protinus rationis causas edisserit, et de domo luctus quae sit utilitas ostendit, dicens: In illa enim finis cunctorum admonetur hominum, et vivens cogitat quid futurus sit . Rursum illic scriptum est: Laetare, juvenis, in adolescentia tua. Et paulo post subditur: Adolescentia enim et voluptas vana sunt. Qui dum hoc postmodum vanum esse redarguit, quod prius admonuisse videbatur, patenter indicat, quia illa quasi ex desiderio carnali verba intulit, haec vero ex judicii veritate subjunxit. Sicut ergo delectationem prius carnalium exprimens, curis postpositis, denuntiat bonum esse manducare et bibere, quod tamen postmodum ex judicii ratione reprehendit, cum esse melius dicit ire ad domum luctus quam ad domum convivii; et sicut laetari debere juvenem in adolescentia sua, quasi ex deliberatione carnalium proponit, et tamen postmodum per definitionem sententiae adolescentiam et voluptatem vana esse redarguit; ita etiam concionator noster, velut ex mente infirmantium humanae suspicionis sententiam proponit, dum dicit: Unus interitus est hominis et jumentorum, et aequa utriusque conditio. Sicut moritur homo, sic et illa moriuntur; similiter spirant omnia, et nihil habet homo jumentis amplius. Qui tamen ex definitione rationis suam postmodum sententiam profert, dicens: Quid habet amplius sapiens a stulto, et quid pauper, nisi ut pergat illuc ubi est vita? Qui igitur dixit: Nihil habet homo jumentis amplius, ipse rursum definivit, quia habet aliquid sapiens non solum amplius a jumento, sed etiam ab homine stulto, videlicet ut pergat illuc ubi est vita. Quibus verbis primum indicat quia hic hominum vita non est, quam esse alibi testatur. Habet ergo homo hoc amplius jumentis, quia illa post mortem non vivunt, hic vero tunc vivere inchoat, cum per mortem carnis hanc visibilem vitam consummat. Qui etiam longe inferius dicit: Quodcunque potest manus tua facere, instanter operare, quia nec opus, nec ratio, nec scientia, nec sapientia erit apud inferos, quo tu properas. Quomodo ergo unus interitus est hominis et jumenti, et aequa utriusque conditio? Aut quomodo nihil habet homo jumentis amplius, cum jumenta post mortem carnis non vivunt; hominum vero spiritus pro malis suis operibus post mortem carnis ad inferos deducti, nec in ipsa morte moriuntur? Sed in utraque tam dispari sententia demonstratur quia concionator verax et illud ex tentatione carnali intulit, et hoc postmodum ex spiritali veritate definivit. PETRUS: Libet nescisse quod requisivi, dum me in tanta subtilitate contigit discere quod nescivi. Sed quaeso te, ut me aequanimiter feras, si ipse quoque apud te more Ecclesiastis nostri, infirmantium in me personam suscepero, ut eisdem infirmantibus prodesse propinquius quasi per eorum inquisitionem possim. GREGORIUS: Cur condescendentem te infirmitati proximorum aequanimiter non feram, cum Paulus dicat: Omnibus omnia factus sum, ut omnes facerem salvos? Quod ipse quoque dum ex condescensione charitatis egeris, in hac re amplius venerari debes, in qua morem egregii praedicatoris imitaris.

CAPUT V. De quaestione animae invisibiliter exeuntis, an sit quae videri non potest.

PETRUS: Quodam fratre moriente praesentem me fuisse contigit. Qui repente dum loqueretur, vitalem emisit flatum; et quem prius mecum loquentem videbam, subito extinctum vidi. Sed ejus anima utrum egressa sit, an non, non vidi; et valde durum videtur ut credatur res esse, quam nullus valeat videre. GREGORIUS: Quid mirum, Petre, si egredientem animam non vidisti, quam et manentem in corpore non vides? Nunquidnam modo cum mecum loqueris quia videre in me non vales animam meam, idcirco me esse exanimem credis? Natura quippe animae invisibilis est, atque ita ex corpore invisibiliter egreditur, sicut in corpore invisibiliter manet.

CAPUT VI. Quod vita animae manentis in corpore sicut deprehenditur ex motu membrorum, sic vita animae post corpus in sanctis pensanda est ex virtute miraculorum.

PETRUS: Sed vitam animae in corpore manentis pensare possum ex ipsis motibus corporis, quia nisi corpori anima adesset, ejusdem membra corporis moveri non possent; vitam vero animae post carnem in quibus motibus quibusve operibus video, ut ex rebus visis esse colligam quod videre non possum? GREGORIUS: Non quidem similiter, sed dissimiliter dico, quia sicut vis animae vivificat et movet corpus, sic vis divina implet quae creavit omnia; et alia inspirando vivificat, aliis tribuit ut vivant, aliis vero hoc solummodo praestat ut sint. Quia vero esse non dubitas creantem et regentem, implentem et circumplectentem, transcendentem et sustinentem, incircumscriptum atque invisibilem Deum, ita dubitare non debes hunc invisibilia obsequia habere. Debent quippe ea quae ministrant ad ejus similitudinem tendere cui ministrant, ut quae invisibili serviunt, esse invisibilia non dubitentur. Haec autem quae esse credimus, nisi sanctos angelos, et spiritus justorum? Sicut ergo motum considerans corporis, vitam animae in corpore manentis perpendis ab imo, ita vitam animae exeuntis a corpore perpendere debes a summo, quia potest invisibiliter vivere, quam oportet in obsequio invisibilis Conditoris manere. PETRUS: Recte totum dicitur, sed mens refugit credere, quod corporeis oculis non valet videre. GREGORIUS: Cum Paulus dicat: Est enim fides sperandarum substantia rerum, argumentum non apparentium, hoc veraciter dicitur credi, quod non valet videri. Nam credi jam non potest quod videri potest. Ut tamen te breviter reducam ad te, nulla visibilia nisi per invisibilia videntur. Ecce enim cuncta corporea oculus tui corporis aspicit, nec tamen ipse corporeus oculus aliquid corporeum videret, nisi hunc res incorporea ad videndum acueret. Nam tolle mentem quae non videtur, et incassum patet oculus qui videbat. Subtrahe animam corpori, remanent procul dubio oculi in corpore aperti. Si igitur per se videbant, cur discedente anima nihil vident? Hinc ergo collige quia ipsa quoque visibilia non nisi per invisibilia videntur. Ponamus quoque ante oculos mentis aedificari domum, immensas moles levari, pendere magnas in machinis columnas; quis, quaeso te, hoc opus operatur, corpus visibile quod illas moles manibus trahit, an invisibilis anima quae vivificat corpus? Tolle enim quod non videtur in corpore, et mox immobilia remanent cuncta quae moveri videbantur, visibilia corpora metallorum. Qua ex re pensandum est quia in hoc quoque mundo visibili nihil nisi per creaturam invisibilem disponi potest. Nam sicut omnipotens Deus aspirando vel implendo ea quae ratione subsistunt, et vivificat, et movet invisibilia; ita ipsa quoque invisibilia implendo movent atque vivificant carnalia corpora quae videntur. PETRUS: Istis, fateor, allegationibus libenter victus, prope nulla jam esse haec visibilia existimare compellor, qui prius in me infirmantium personam suscipiens, de invisibilibus dubitabam. Itaque placent cuncta quae dicis; sed tamen sicut vitam animae in corpore manentis ex motu corporis agnosco, ita vitam animae post corpus, apertis quibusdam rebus attestantibus, cognoscere cupio. GREGORIUS: Hac in re si cor paratum tuae dilectionis invenio, in allegatione minime laboro. Nunquidnam sancti apostoli et martyres Christi praesentem vitam despicerent, et in mortem carnis animas ponerent, nisi certiorem animarum vitam subsequi scirent? Tu vero ipse inquies quia vitam animae in corpore manentis ex motibus corporis agnoscis; et ecce hi qui animas in mortem posuerunt, atque animarum vitam post mortem carnis esse crediderunt, quotidianis miraculis coruscant. Ad exstincta namque eorum corpora viventes aegri veniunt, et sanantur; perjuri veniunt, et daemonio vexantur, daemoniaci veniunt, et liberantur; leprosi veniunt, et mundantur; deferuntur mortui, et suscitantur. Pensa itaque eorum animae qualiter vivunt illic ubi vivunt, quorum hic mortua corpora in tot miraculis vivunt. Si igitur vitam animae manentis in corpore deprehendis ex motu membrorum, cur non perpendis vitam animae post corpus, etiam per ossa mortua in virtute miraculorum? PETRUS: Nulla, ut opinor, huic allegationi ratio obsistit, in qua ex rebus visibilibus cogimur credere quod non videmus.

CAPUT VII. De egressibus animarum.

GREGORIUS: Paulo superius questus es, morientis cujusdam egredientem animam te non vidisse; sed hoc ipsum jam culpae fuit, quod corporeis oculis rem videre invisibilem quaesisti. Nam multi nostrorum mentis oculum fide pura et ubere oratione mundantes, egredientes e carne animas frequenter viderunt. Unde nunc mihi necesse est vel qualiter egredientes animae visae sint, vel quanta ipsae dum egrederentur viderint enarrare, quatenus fluctuanti animo, quod plene ratio non valet, exempla suadeant. In secundo namque hujus operis libro jam praefatus sum quod vir venerabilis Benedictus, sicut a fidelibus ejus discipulis agnovi, longe a Capuana urbe positus, Germani ejusdem urbis episcopi animam nocte media in globo igneo ad coelum ferri ab angelis aspexit. Qui eamdem quoque ascendentem animam intuens, mentis laxato sinu quasi sub uno solis radio cunctum in suis oculis collectum mundum vidit.

CAPUT VIII. De egressu animae Speciosi monachi.

Eisdem quoque discipulis illius narrantibus didici, quia duo nobiles viri, atque exterioribus studiis eruditi germani fratres, quorum unus Speciosus, alter vero Gregorius dicebatur, ejus se regulae in sancta conversatione tradiderunt. Quos idem Pater venerabilis in monasterio, quod juxta Terracinensem urbem construxerat, fecit habitare. Qui multas quidem pecunias in hoc mundo possederant, sed cuncta pauperibus pro animarum suarum redemptione largiti sunt, et in eodem monasterio permanserunt. Quorum unus, scilicet Speciosus, dum pro utilitate monasterii juxta Capuanam urbem missus fuisset, die quadam frater ejus Gregorius cum fratribus ad mensam sedens atque convescens, per spiritum sublevatus aspexit, et vidit Speciosi germani sui animam tam longe a se positi de corpore exire; quod mox fratribus indicavit, atque festinans cucurrit, jamque eumdem fratrem suum sepultum reperit, quem tamen hora ea qua viderat exisse de corpore invenit.

Quidam religiosus atque fidelissimus vir adhuc mihi in monasterio posito narravit quod aliqui de Siciliae partibus navigio Romam petentes, in mari medio positi, cujusdam servi Dei qui in Samnio fuerat inclusus, ad coelum ferri animam viderunt. Qui descendentes ad terram, causamque an ita esset acta perscrutantes, illo die invenerunt obiisse Dei famulum, quo eum ad coelestia regna ascendisse cognoverunt.

CAPUT X. De egressu animae Spei abbatis.

Adhuc in monasterio meo positus cujusdam valde venerabilis viri relatione cognovi quod dico. Aiebat enim quia venerabilis Pater nomine Spes, monasterium construxit in loco cui vocabulum Cample est, qui sexti ferme milliarii interjacente spatio a vetusta Nursiae urbe disjungitur. Hunc omnipotens et misericors Deus ab aeterno verbere flagellando protexit, eique dispensationis suae maximam severitatem servavit et gratiam; quantumque eum prius flagellando diligeret, postmodum perfecte sanando monstravit. Ejus namque oculos per quadraginta annorum spatium continuae caecitatis tenebris pressit, nullum ei lumen vel extremae visionis aperiens. Sed quia nemo in verbere illius gratia se destituente subsistit, et nisi idem misericors Pater qui poenam irrogat patientiam praestet, mox per impatientiam peccatum nobis ipsa auget correptio peccatorum, fitque modo miserabili ut culpa nostra unde sperare debuit terminum, inde sumat augmentum; idcirco nostra Deus infirma conspiciens, flagellis suis custodiam permiscet, atque in percussione sua electis filiis nunc misericorditer justus est, ut sint quibus postea debeat juste misereri. Unde venerabilem senem dum exterioribus tenebris premeret, interna nunquam luce destituit. Qui cum flagello fatigaretur corporis, habebat per sancti Spiritus custodiam, consolationem cordis. Cum vero jam anni quadragesimi fuisset in caecitate tempus expletum, ei Dominus lumen reddidit, et vicinum suum obitum denuntiavit, atque ut monasteriis circumquaque constructis verbum vitae praedicaret admonuit, quatenus corporis recepto lumine, visitatis in circuitu fratribus, cordis lumen aperiret. Qui statim jussis obtemperans, fratrum coenobia circuivit, mandata vitae quae agendo didicerat praedicavit. Quinto decimo igitur die ad monasterium suum peracta praedicatione reversus est, ibique fratribus convocatis astans in medio, sacramentum dominici corporis et sanguinis sumpsit, moxque cum eis mysticos psalmorum cantus exorsus est. Qui illis psallentibus orationi intentus animam reddidit. Omnes vero fratres qui aderant ex ore ejus exisse columbam viderunt, quae mox, aperto tecto oratorii egressa, aspicientibus fratribus, penetravit coelum. Cujus idcirco animam in columbae specie apparuisse credendum est, ut omnipotens Deus ex hac ipsa specie ostenderet quam simplici corde ei vir ille servisset.

CAPUT XI. De egressu animae Nursini presbyteri.

Sed neque hoc sileam quod vir venerabilis abbas Stephanus, qui non longe ante hoc tempus in hac urbe defunctus est, quem ipse etiam bene nosti, in eadem provincia Nursiae contigisse referebat. Aiebat enim quod illic presbyter quidam commissam sibi cum magno timore Domini regebat Ecclesiam. Qui ex tempore ordinationis acceptae presbyteram suam ut sororem diligens, sed quasi hostem cavens, ad se propius accedere nunquam sinebat, eamque sibimet propinquare nulla occasione permittens, ab ea sibi communionem funditus familiaritatis absciderat. Habent quippe sancti viri hoc proprium; nam ut semper ab illicitis longe sint, a se plerumque etiam licita abscindunt. Unde idem vir, ne in aliquam per eam incurreret culpam, sibi etiam per illam ministrari recusabat necessaria. Hic ergo venerabilis presbyter cum longam vitae implesset aetatem, anno quadragesimo ordinationis suae inardescente graviter febre correptus, ad extrema deductus est. Sed cum eum presbytera sua conspiceret solutis jam membris, quasi in morte distentum, si quod adhuc ei vitale spiramen inesset, naribus ejus apposita curavit aure dignoscere. Quod ille sentiens, cui tenuissimus inerat flatus, quantulo adnisu valuit, ut loqui potuisset, infervescente spiritu collegit vocem atque erupit, dicens: Recede a me, mulier, adhuc igniculus vivit, paleam tolle. Illa igitur recedente, crescente virtute corporis, cum magna coepit laetitia clamare, dicens: Bene veniant domini mei; bene veniant domini mei; quid ad tantillum servulum vestrum estis dignati convenire? venio, venio, gratias ago, gratias ago. Cumque hoc iterata crebro voce repeteret, quibus hoc diceret noti sui, qui illum circumsteterant, requirebant. Quibus ille admirando respondit, dicens: Nunquid hic convenisse sanctos apostolos non videtis? beatum Petrum et Paulum primos apostolorum non aspicitis? Ad quos iterum conversus, dicebat: Ecce venio, ecce venio; atque inter haec verba animam reddidit. Et quia veraciter sanctos apostolos viderit, eos etiam sequendo testatus est. Quod plerumque contingit justis, ut in morte sua sanctorum praecedentium visiones aspiciant, ne ipsam mortis suae poenalem sententiam pertimescant, sed dum eorum menti internorum civium societas ostenditur, a carnis suae copula sine doloris et formidinis fatigatione solvantur.

CAPUT XII. De anima Probi Reatinae civitatis episcopi.

Qua de re neque hoc sileam, quod Probus omnipotentis Dei famulus, qui nunc in hac urbe monasterio praeest, quod appellatur Renati, de Probo patruo suo Reatinae civitatis episcopo mihi narrare consuevit, dicens quia, appropinquante vitae ejus termino, eum gravissima depressit aegritudo. Cujus pater nomine Maximus, pueris circumquaque transmissis colligere medicos studuit, si fortasse ejus molestiae subvenire potuisset. Sed congregati ex vicinis locis undique medici, ad tactum venae denuntiaverunt ejus exitum citius adfuturum. Sed cum jam tempus refectionis incumberet, atque diei hora tardior excrevisset, venerandus episcopus de illorum potius quam de sua salute sollicitus, eos qui aderant admonuit cum suo patre in superioris episcopii sui partes ascendere, seque post laborem reficiendo reparare. Omnes igitur ascenderunt domum, unus ei tantummodo parvulus relictus est puer, quem nunc quoque praedictus Probus asserit superesse. Qui dum lecto jacentis assisteret, subito aspexit intrantes ad virum Dei quosdam viros stolis candidis amictos, qui eumdem quoque candorem vestium, vultuum suorum luce vincebant. Qua splendoris etiam claritate perculsus, quinam illi essent, emissa coepit voce clamare. Qua voce etiam Probus episcopus commotus, intrantes eos aspexit et agnovit, atque eumdem stridentem vagientemque puerum consolari coepit, dicens: Noli timere, fili, quia ad me sanctus Juvenalis et sanctus Eleutherius martyres venerunt. Ille autem tantae visionis novitatem non ferens, cursu concito extra fores fugit, atque eos quos viderat patri ac medicis nuntiavit. Qui concite descenderunt; sed aegrum quem reliquerant jam defunctum invenerunt, quia illi eum secum tulerant, quorum visionem puer ferre non potuit, qui hic remansit.

CAPUT XIII. De transitu Gallae ancillae Dei.

Interea neque hoc silendum arbitror quod mihi personarum gravium atque fidelium est relatione compertum. Gothorum namque temporibus Galla hujus urbis nobilissima puella Symmachi consulis ac patricii filia, intra adolescentiae tempora marito tradita, in unius anni spatio ejus est morte viduata. Quam dum, fervente mundi copia, ad iterandum thalamum et opes et aetas vocarent, elegit magis spiritalibus nuptiis copulari Deo, in quibus a luctu incipitur, sed ad gaudia aeterna pervenitur, quam carnalibus nuptiis subjici, quae a laetitia semper incipiunt, et ad finem cum luctu tendunt. Huic autem cum valde ignea conspersio corporis inesset, coeperunt medici dicere, quia nisi ad amplexus viriles rediret, calore nimio contra naturam barbas esset habitura, quod ita quoque post factum est. Sed sancta mulier nihil exterioris deformitatis timuit, quae interioris sponsi speciem amavit, nec verita est si hoc in illa foedaretur, quod a coelesti sponso in ea non amaretur. Mox ergo ut ejus maritus defunctus est, abjecto saeculari habitu, ad omnipotentis Dei servitium sese apud beati Petri apostoli ecclesiam monasterio tradidit, ibique multis annis simplicitati cordis atque orationi dedita, larga indigentibus eleemosynarum opera impendit. Cumque omnipotens Deus perennem jam mercedem reddere ejus laboribus decrevisset, cancri ulcere in mamilla percussa est. Nocturno autem tempore ante lectum ejus duo candelabra lucere consueverant, quia videlicet amica lucis, non solum spiritales, sed etiam corporales tenebras odio habebat. Quae dum nocte quadam ex hac eadem jaceret infirmitate fatigata, vidit beatum Petrum apostolum inter utraque candelabra ante suum lectum consistentem; nec perterrita timuit, sed ex amore sumens audaciam exsultavit, eique dixit: Quid est, Domine mi, dimissa sunt mihi peccata mea? Cui ille benignissimi ut est vultus, inclinato capite annuit, dicens: Dimissa; veni. Sed quia quamdam sanctimonialem feminam in eodem monasterio prae caeteris diligebat, illico Galla subjunxit: Rogo ut soror Benedicta mecum veniat. Cui ille respondit: Non, sed illa talis veniat tecum; haec vero quam petis, die erit trigesimo secutura. His itaque expletis, visio apostoli assistentis et colloquentis ei ablata est. At illa protinus cunctae congregationis accivit Matrem, eique quid viderit, quidve audierit, indicavit. Tertio autem die cum ea quae jussa fuerat sorore defuncta est; illa vero quam ipsa poposcerat die est trigesimo subsecuta. Quod factum nunc usque in eodem monasterio manet memorabile, sicque hoc a praecedentibus Matribus traditum narrare illic solent subtiliter juniores quae nunc sunt sanctimoniales virgines, ac si illo in tempore huic tam grandi miraculo et ipsae adfuissent.

CAPUT XIV. De transitu Servuli paralytici.

Sed inter haec sciendum est quia saepe animabus exeuntibus electorum, dulcedo solet laudis coelestis erumpere, ut dum illam libenter audiunt, dissolutionem carnis ab anima sentire minime permittantur. Unde in Homiliis quoque Evangelii jam narrasse me memini quod in ea porticu quae euntibus ad ecclesiam beati Clementis est pervia, fuit quidam, Servulus nomine, cujus te quoque non ambigo meminisse, qui quidem pauper rebus, sed meritis dives erat, quem longa aegritudo dissolverat. Nam ex quo illum scire potuimus, usque ad finem vitae paralyticus jacebat. Quid dicam quia stare non poterat, qui nunquam in lecto surgere vel ad sedendum valebat, nunquam manum suam ad os ducere, nunquam se potuit ad latus aliud declinare? Huic ad serviendum mater cum fratre aderat, et quidquid ex eleemosyna potuisset accipere, hoc eorum manibus pauperibus erogabat. Nequaquam litteras noverat, sed Scripturae sacrae sibimet Codices emerat, et religiosos quosque in hospitalitatem suscipiens, hos coram se studiose legere faciebat. Factumque est ut juxta modum suum plene sacram Scripturam disceret, cum, sicut dixi, litteras funditus ignoraret. Studebat semper in dolore gratias agere, hymnis Deo et laudibus diebus ac noctibus vacare. Sed cum jam tempus esset ut tanta ejus patientia remunerari debuisset, membrorum dolor ad vitalia rediit. Cumque jam se morti proximum agnovisset, peregrinos viros, atque in hospitalitatem susceptos, admonuit ut surgerent, et cum eo psalmos pro exspectatione sui exitus decantarent. Cumque cum eis et ipse moriens psalleret, voces psallentium repente compescuit cum terrore magni clamoris, dicens: Tacete; nunquid non auditis quantae resonent laudes in coelo? Et dum ad easdem laudes quas intus audierat, aurem cordis intenderet, sancta illa anima carne soluta est. Qua scilicet exeunte, tanta illic fragrantia odoris aspersa est, ut omnes qui illic aderant inaestimabili suavitate replerentur, ita ut per hoc patenter cognoscerent quod eam laudes in coelo suscepissent. Cui rei monachus noster interfuit, qui nunc usque vivit, et cum magno fletu attestari solet, quia quousque corpus ejus sepulturae traderent, ab eorum naribus odoris illius fragrantia non recessit.

CAPUT XV. De transitu Romulae ancillae Dei.

In eisdem quoque Homiliis rem narrasse me recolo, quam Speciosus compresbyter meus, qui hanc noverat, me narrante attestatus est. Eo namque tempore quo monasterium petii, anus quaedam Redempta nomine, in sanctimoniali habitu constituta in urbe hac juxta beatae Mariae semper virginis ecclesiam manebat. Haec illius Herundinis discipula fuerat, quae magnis virtutibus pollens, super Praenestinos montes vitam eremiticam duxisse ferebatur. Huic autem Redemptae duae in eodem habitu discipulae aderant, una nomine Romula, et altera, quae nunc adhuc superest, quam quidem facie scio, sed nomine nescio. Tres itaque hae in uno habitaculo commanentes, morum quidem divitiis plenam, sed tamen rebus pauperem vitam ducebant. Haec autem quam praefatus sum Romula aliam quam praedixi condiscipulam suam magnis vitae meritis anteibat. Erat quippe mirae patientiae, summae obedientiae, custos oris sui ad silentium, studiosa valde ad continuae orationis usum. Sed quia plerumque hi, quos jam homines perfectos aestimant, adhuc in oculis summi opificis aliquid imperfectionis habent, sicut saepe imperiti homines necdum perfecte sculpta sigilla conspicimus, et jam quasi perfecta laudamus, quae tamen adhuc artifex considerat et limat, laudari jam audit, et tamen ea tundere meliorando non desinit; haec quam praediximus Romula ea quam Graeco vocabulo medici paralysin vocant molestia corporali percussa est, multisque annis in lectulo decubans, pene omni jacebat membrorum officio destituta, nec tamen haec eadem ejus mentem ad impatientiam flagella perduxerant. Nam ipsa ei detrimenta membrorum facta fuerant incrementa virtutum, quia tanto sollicitius ad usum orationis excreverat, quanto et aliud quodlibet agere nequaquam valebat. Nocte igitur quadam eamdem Redemptam quam praefatus sum, quae utrasque discipulas suas filiarum loco nutriebat, vocavit, dicens: Mater, veni, mater, veni. Quae mox cum alia ejus condiscipula surrexit, sicut utrisque referentibus et multis eadem res claruit, et ego quoque eodem tempore agnovi. Cumque noctis medio lectulo jacentis assisterent, subito coelitus lux emissa omne illius cellulae spatium implevit, et splendor tantae claritatis emicuit, ut corda assistentium inaestimabili pavore perstringeret, atque, ut post ipsae referebant, omne in eis corpus obrigesceret, et in subito stupore remanerent. Coepit namque quasi cujusdam magnae multitudinis ingredientis sonitus audiri, ostiumque cellulae concuti, ac si ingredientium turba premeretur; atque, ut dicebant, intrantium multitudinem sentiebant, sed nimietate timoris et luminis videre non poterant, quia earum oculos et pavor depresserat, et ipsa tanti luminis claritas reverberabat. Quam lucem protinus est miri odoris fragrantia subsecuta, ita ut earum animum quem lux emissa terruerat odoris suavitas refoveret. Sed cum vim claritatis illius ferre non possent, coepit eadem Romula assistentem et trementem Redemptam suorum morum magistram blanda voce consolari, dicens: Noli timere, mater, non morior modo. Cumque hoc crebro diceret, paulatim lux quae fuerat emissa subtracta est, sed is qui subsecutus est odor remansit. Sicque dies secundus et tertius transiit, ut aspersa odoris fragrantia remaneret. Nocte igitur quarta eamdem magistram suam iterum vocavit; qua veniente, viaticum petiit, et accepit. Necdum vero eadem Redempta, vel illa alia ejus discipula a lectulo jacentis abscesserant, et ecce subito in platea ante ejusdem cellulae ostium duo chori psallentium constiterunt, et sicut se dicebant sexus ex vocibus discrevisse, psalmodiae cantus dicebant viri, et feminae respondebant. Cumque ante fores cellulae exhiberentur coelestes exsequiae, sancta illa anima carne soluta est. Qua ad coelum ducta, quanto chori psallentium altius ascendebant, tanto coepit psalmodia lenius audiri, quousque et ejusdem psalmodiae sonitus, et odoris suavitas elongata finiretur.

CAPUT XVI. De transitu Tharsillae sacrae virginis.

Nonnunquam vero in consolatione egredientis animae ipse apparere solet auctor ac retributor vitae. Unde et hoc quod de Tharsilla amita mea in Homiliis Evangelii dixisse me recolo replicabo; quae inter duas alias sorores suas virtute continuae orationis, gravitate vitae, singularitate abstinentiae, ad culmen sanctitatis excreverat. Huic per visionem Felix atavus meus hujus Romanae Ecclesiae antistes apparuit, eique mansionem perpetuae claritatis ostendit, dicens: Veni, quia in hac te lucis mansione suscipio. Quae subsequenti mox febre correpta, ad diem pervenit extremum. Et sicut nobilibus feminis virisque morientibus, multi conveniunt qui eorum proximos consolentur, eadem hora exitus ipsius multi viri ac feminae ejus lectulum circumsteterunt. Cum subito illa sursum respiciens, Jesum venientem vidit, et cum magna animadversione coepit circumstantibus clamare, dicens: Recedite, recedite, Jesus venit. Cumque in eum intenderet quem videbat, sancta illa anima e corpore est egressa. Tantaque subito fragrantia miri odoris aspersa est, ut ipsa quoque suavitas cunctis ostenderet illic auctorem suavitatis venisse. Cumque corpus ejus ex more mortuorum ad lavandum esset nudatum, longo orationis usu in cubitis ejus et genibus camelorum more inventa est obdurata cutis excrevisse; et quid vivens ejus spiritus semper egerit, caro mortua testabatur.

CAPUT XVII. De transitu Musae puellae.

Sed neque hoc sileo quod praedictus Probus Dei famulus de sorore sua, nomine Musa, puella parva, narrare consuevit, dicens, quod quadam nocte ei per visionem sancta Dei genitrix semper virgo Maria apparuit, atque coaevas ei in albis vestibus puellas ostendit. Quibus illa cum admisceri appeteret, sed se eis jungere non auderet, beatae Mariae virginis voce requisita est an velit cum eis esse atque in ejus obsequio vivere. Cui cum puella eadem diceret, Volo, ab ea protinus mandatum accepit, ut nihil ultra leve et puellare ageret, et a risu et jocis abstineret, sciens per omnia quod inter easdem virgines quas viderat, ad ejus obsequium die trigesimo veniret. Quibus visis, in cunctis suis moribus puella mutata est, omnemque a se levitatem puellaris vitae magnae gravitatis detersit manu. Cumque eam parentes ejus mutatam esse mirarentur, requisita rem retulit, quid sibi Dei Genitrix jusserit, vel qua die itura esset ad obsequium ejus indicavit. Tunc post vigesimum quintum diem febre correpta est. Die autem trigesimo cum hora ejus exitus propinquasset, eamdem beatam Genitricem Dei cum puellis quas per visionem viderat, ad se venire conspexit. Cui se etiam vocanti respondere coepit, et depressis reverenter oculis aperta voce clamare: Ecce, Domina, venio, ecce, Domina, venio. In qua etiam voce spiritum reddidit, et ex virgineo corpore, habitatura cum sanctis virginibus exivit. PETRUS: Cum humanum genus multis atque innumeris vitiis sit subjectum, Jerusalem coelestis maximam partem ex parvulis vel infantibus arbitror posse compleri.

CAPUT XVIII. Quod quibusdam parvulis regni coelestis aditus a parentibus clauditur, cum ab eis male nutriuntur; et de puero blasphemo.

GREGORIUS: Etsi omnes baptizatos infantes, atque in eadem infantia morientes ingredi regnum coeleste credendum est, omnes tamen parvulos qui scilicet jam loqui possunt, regna coelestia ingredi credendum non est, quia nonnullis parvulis ejusdem regni coelestis aditus a parentibus clauditur, si male nutriantur. Nam quidam vir cunctis in hac urbe notissimus, ante triennium filium habuit annorum, sicut arbitror, quinque; quem nimis carnaliter diligens remisse nutriebat. Atque idem parvulus (quod dictu grave est) mox ut ejus animo aliquid obstitisset, majestatem Dei blasphemare consueverat: qui in hac urbe ante triennium mortalitate percussus, venit ad mortem. Cumque eum suus pater in sinu teneret, sicut hi testati sunt qui praesentes fuerunt, malignos ad se venisse spiritus trementibus oculis puer aspiciens, coepit clamare: Obsta, pater, obsta, pater. Qui clamans declinabat faciem, ut se ab eis in sinu patris absconderet. Quem cum ille trementem requireret quid videret, puer adjunxit, dicens: Mauri homines venerunt, qui me tollere volunt. Qui cum hoc dixisset, majestatis nomen protinus blasphemavit, et animam reddidit. Ut enim omnipotens Deus ostenderet pro quo reatu talibus fuisset traditus exsecutoribus, unde viventem pater suus noluit corrigere, hoc morientem permisit iterare; ut qui diu per Divinitatis patientiam blasphemus vixerat, quandoque per Divinitatis judicium blasphemaret, et moreretur; quatenus reatum suum pater ejus agnosceret, qui parvuli filii animam negligens, non parvulum peccatorem gehennae ignibus nutrisset. Sed interim hoc triste seponentes, ad ea quae narrare coeperamus laeta redeamus.

CAPUT XIX. De Transitu Stephani viri Dei.

Praedicto etenim Probo aliisque religiosis narrantibus viris agnovi ea quae indicare audientibus de venerabili Patre Stephano in Homiliis Evangelii curavi. Fuit enim vir, sicut idem Probus et multi alii testantur, nihil in hoc mundo possidens, nihil requirens; solam cum Deo paupertatem diligens, inter adversa semper patientiam amplectens, conventus saecularium fugiens, vacare semper orationi concupiscens. De quo unum bonum virtutis refero, ut ex hoc uno valeant ejus multa pensari. Is namque cum quadam die messem quam sua manu severat decisam ad aream deduxisset, nihilque aliud cum discipulis suis ad totius anni stipendium haberet, quidam perversae voluntatis vir, antiqui hostis stimulis instigatus, eamdem messem, igne supposito, ita ut erat in area, incendit. Quod factum dum alter conspiceret, eidem Dei famulo cucurrit et nuntiavit. Quod postquam indicavit, adjunxit, dicens: Vae, vae, pater Stephane, quid tibi contigit? Cui statim vultu ac mente placida ille respondit: Vae illi contigit qui hoc fecit; nam mihi quid contigit? In quibus ejus verbis ostenditur in quo virtutis culmine sedebat, qui unum quod in sumptus mundi habuerat tam secura perdebat mente, magisque illi condolebat qui peccatum commiserat, quam sibi qui peccati illius damna tolerabat; nec pensabat quid ipse exterius, sed culpae reus quantum perdebat intus. Hunc itaque cum dies mortis egredi de corpore urgeret, convenerunt multi, ut tam sanctae animae de hoc mundo recedenti suas animas commendarent. Cumque lecto illius hi qui convenerant omnes assisterent, alii ingredientes angelos viderunt, sed dicere aliquid nullo modo potuerunt, alii omnino nil viderunt; sed omnes qui aderant, ita vehementissimus timor perculit, ut nullus, egrediente illa sancta anima, illic stare potuisset. Et hi ergo qui viderant, et hi qui omnino nihil viderant, uno omnes timore perculsi et territi fugerunt, ut palam daretur intelligi quae et quanta vis esset quae illam egredientem animam susciperet, cujus egressum nemo mortalium ferre potuisset.

CAPUT XX. Quod aliquando animae meritum non in ipso egressu, sed post mortem verius declaratur.

Sed inter haec sciendum est quia aliquando animae meritum non in ipso suo egressu ostenditur, post mortem vero certius declaratur. Unde et sancti martyres ab infidelibus crudelia multa perpessi sunt, qui tamen, ut praediximus, ad ossa sua mortua signis quotidie et miraculis clarescunt.

CAPUT XXI. De duobus monachis Valentionis abbatis.

Vitae namque venerabilis Valentio, qui post in hac Romana urbe mihi, sicut nosti, meoque monasterio praefuit, prius in Valeriae provincia suum monasterium rexit. In quo dum Langobardi saevientes venissent, sicut ejus narratione didici, duos ejus monachos in ramis unius arboris suspenderunt, qui suspensi eodem die defuncti sunt. Facto autem vespere utrorumque eorum spiritus claris illic apertisque vocibus psallere coeperunt, ita ut ipsi quoque qui eos occiderant, cum voces psallentium audirent, nimium mirati terrerentur. Quas videlicet voces captivi quoque omnes qui illic aderant audierunt, atque eorum psalmodiae postmodum testes exstiterunt. Sed has voces spirituum omnipotens Deus idcirco pertingere voluit ad aures corporum, ut viventes quique in carne discerent, quia si Deo servire studeant, post carnis mortem verius vivant.

CAPUT XXII. De transitu Surani abbatis.

Quibusdam religiosis quoque viris attestantibus, adhuc in monasterio positus agnovi quod hoc Langobardorum tempore, juxta in hac provincia quae Sura nominatur, quidam monasterii Pater vitae venerabilis, Suranus nomine, fuerit, qui captivis advenientibus, atque a Langobardorum depraedatione fugientibus, cuncta quae in monasterio videbatur habere, largitus est. Cumque in eleemosynis vestimenta sua ac fratrum omnia, et cellarium consumpsisset, quidquid habere in horto potuit, expendit. Expensis vero rebus omnibus, Langobardi ad eum subito venerunt, eumque tenuerunt, et aurum petere coeperunt. Quibus cum ille diceret se omnino nihil habere, in vicino monte ab eis ductus est, in quo silva immensae magnitudinis stabat. Ibi captivus quidam fugiens in cava arbore latebat, ubi unus ex Langobardis educto gladio praedictum venerabilem occidit virum. Cujus corpore in terram cadente, mons omnis protinus et silva concussa est, ac si se ferre non posse pondus sanctitatis ejus diceret terra, quae tremuisset.

CAPUT XXIII. De transitu diaconi Ecclesiae Marsorum.

Alius quoque in Marsorum provincia vitae valde venerabilis diaconus fuit; quem inventum Langobardi tenuerunt, quorum unus educto gladio caput ejus amputavit. Sed cum corpus ejus in terram caderet, ipse qui hunc capite truncaverat, immundo spiritu correptus, ad pedes corruit, et quod amicum

Dei occiderit, inimico Dei traditus ostendit. PETRUS: Quid est hoc, quaeso te, quod omnipotens Deus sic permittit mori, quos tamen post mortem cujus sanctitatis fuerint, non patitur celari?

CAPUT XXIV. De morte viri Dei, qui missus Bethel fuerat.

GREGORIUS: Cum scriptum sit: Justus quacunque morte praeventus fuerit, justitia ejus non auferetur ab eo, electi, qui procul dubio ad perpetuam vitam tendunt, quid eis obest si ad modicum dure moriuntur? Et est fortasse nonnunquam eorum culpa, licet minima, quae in eadem debeat morte resecari. Unde fit ut reprobi potestatem quidem contra viventes accipiant, sed illis morientibus hoc in eis gravius vindicetur, quod contra bonos potestatem suae crudelitatis acceperunt, sicut idem carnifex qui eumdem venerabilem diaconum viventem ferire permissus est, gaudere super mortuum permissus non est. Quod sacra quoque testantur eloquia. Nam vir Dei contra Samariam missus, quia per inobedientiam in itinere comedit, hunc leo in eodem itinere occidit. Sed statim illic scriptum est: Quia stetit leo juxta asinum, et non comedit de cadavere. Ex qua re ostenditur quod peccatum inobedientiae in ipsa fuerit morte laxatum, quia idem leo, quem viventem praesumpsit occidere, contingere non praesumpsit occisum. Qui enim occidendi ausum habuit, de occisi cadavere comedendi licentiam non accepit, quia is qui culpabilis in vita fuerat, punita inobedientia, erat jam justus ex morte. Leo ergo qui prius peccatoris vitam necaverat, custodivit postmodum cadaver justi. PETRUS: Placet quod dicis; sed nosse velim si nunc ante restitutionem corporum in coelo recipi valeant animae justorum.

CAPUT XXV. Si ante restitutionem corporis recipiantur in coelo animae justorum.

GREGORIUS: Hoc neque de omnibus justis fateri possumus, neque de omnibus negare. Nam sunt quorumdam justorum animae quae a coelesti regno quibusdam adhuc mansionibus differuntur. In quo dilationis damno quid aliud innuitur, nisi quod de perfecta justitia aliquid minus habuerunt? Et tamen luce clarius constat quia perfectorum justorum animae, mox ut hujus carnis claustra exeunt, in coelestibus sedibus recipiuntur, quod et ipsa per se Veritas attestatur, dicens: Ubicunque fuerit corpus, illuc congregabuntur et aquilae; quia ubi ipse Redemptor noster est corpore, illuc procul dubio colliguntur justorum animae. Et Paulus dissolvi desiderat, et esse cum Christo. Qui ergo Christum in coelo esse non dubitat, nec Pauli animam esse in coelo negant. Qui etiam de dissolutione sui corporis, atque de inhabitatione coelestis patriae, dicit: Scimus quoniam si terrestris domus nostra hujus habitationis dissolvatur, quod aedificationem habemus ex Deo, domum non manufactam, sed aeternam in caelis. PETRUS: Si igitur nunc sunt in coelo animae justorum, quid est quod in die judicii pro justitiae suae retributione recipiant? GREGORIUS: Hoc eis nimirum crescit in judicio, quod nunc animarum sola, postmodum vero etiam corporum beatitudine perfruuntur, ut in ipsa quoque carne gaudeant, in qua dolores pro Domino cruciatusque pertulerunt. Pro hac quippe germinata eorum gloria scriptum est: In terra sua duplicia possidebunt. Hinc etiam ante resurrectionis diem de sanctorum animabus scriptum est: Datae sunt illis singulae stolae albae, et dictum est illis ut requiescerent tempus adhuc modicum, donec impleatur numerus conservorum et fratrum eorum. Qui itaque nunc singulas acceperunt, binas in judicio stolas habituri sunt, quia modo animarum tantummodo, tunc autem animarum simul et corporum gloria laetabuntur. PETRUS: Assentio; sed velim scire, quonammodo agitur quod plerumque morientes multa praedicunt?

CAPUT XXVI. Quibus modis morientes aliqua praedicunt; et de quodam advocato, de Gerontio ac Mellito monachis, et Armentario puero.

GREGORIUS: Ipsa aliquando animarum vis subtilitate sua aliquid praevidet. Aliquando autem exiturae de corpore animae, per revelationem ventura cognoscunt. Aliquando vero dum jam juxta sit ut corpus deserant, divinitus afflatae in secreta coelestia incorporeum mentis oculum mittunt. Nam quod vis animae aliquando subtilitate sua ea quae sunt ventura cognoscit patet ex eo quod quidam advocatus qui in hac urbe ante biduum lateris dolore defunctus est, paululum antequam moreretur, vocavit puerum suum, pararique sibi vestimenta ad procedendum jussit. Quem dum puer quasi insanire cerneret, ejusque praeceptis minime obediret, surrexit, vestimento se induit, et per viam Appiam ad beati Xysti Ecclesiam se esse processurum dixit. Cumque post modicum, ingravescente molestia, esset defunctus, deliberatum fuerat ut apud beatum Januarium martyrem Praenestina via ejus corpus poni debuisset. Sed quia longum hoc his qui funus ejus curaverant visum est, repente orto consilio exeuntes cum ejus funere per viam Appiam, nescientesque quid ille dixerat, in ipsa eum ecclesia quam praedixerat posuerunt. Et cum eumdem virum curis saecularibus obligatum lucrisque terrenis inhiantem fuisse noverimus, unde hoc praedicere potuit, nisi quia id quod futurum erat ejus corpori ipsa vis animae ac subtilitas praevidebat? Quod autem saepe etiam revelationibus agitur ut a morituris futura praesciantur, ex his colligere possumus quae apud nos gesta in monasteriis scimus. In monasterio etenim meo quidam frater ante decennium Gerontius dicebatur. Qui cum gravi molestia corporis fuisset depressus, in visione nocturna albatos viros, et clari omnimodo habitus in hoc ipsum monasterium descendere de superioribus aspexit. Qui dum coram lecto jacentis assisterent, unus eorum dixit: Ad hoc venimus, ut de monasterio Gregorii quosdam fratres in militiam mittamus; atque alteri praecipiens adjunxit: Scribe Marcellum, Valentinianum, Agnellum, atque alios quorum nunc minime recordor. Quibus expletis addidit, dicens: Scribe et hunc ipsum qui nos aspicit. Ex qua visione certus redditus praedictus frater, facto mane innotuit fratribus, qui et qui essent in brevi ex eadem cella morituri, quos se etiam denuntiavit esse secuturum, cum die alio praedicti fratres mori coeperunt, atque sub eodem ordine se in morte secuti sunt quo fuerant in descriptione nominati. Ad extremum vero et ipse obiit, qui eosdem fratres morituros praevidit. In ea quoque mortalitate quae ante triennium hanc urbem vehementissima clade vastavit, in Portuensis civitatis monasterio, Mellitus dictus est monachus, adhuc in annis juvenilibus constitutus, sed mirae simplicitatis atque humilitatis vir: qui, appropinquante vocationis die, eadem clade percussus ad extrema deductus est. Quod vir vitae venerabilis Felix ejusdem civitatis episcopus audiens, cujus et haec relatione cognovi, ad eum accedere studuit, et ne mortem timere debuisset, verbis hunc persuasoriis confortare, cui etiam adhuc de divina misericordia longiora vitae spatia polliceri coepit. Sed ad haec ille respondit, cursus sui tempora esse completa, dicens apparuisse sibi juvenem, atque epistolas detulisse, dicentem: Aperi, et lege. Quibus apertis, asseruit quia se et omnes qui eodem tempore a praedicto episcopo in Paschali festivitate fuerant baptizati scriptos in eisdem epistolis litteris aureis invenisset. Primum quidem, ut dicebat, suum nomen reperit, ac inde omnium illo in tempore baptizatorum. Qua de re certum tenuit, et se et illos de hac vita esse sub celeritate migraturos. Factumque est ut die eadem ipse moreretur, atque post eum cuncti illi qui baptizati fuerant ita secuti sunt, ut intra paucos dies nullus eorum in hac vita remaneret. De quibus nimirum constat quod eos praedictus Dei famulus idcirco auro scriptos viderat, quia eorum nomina apud se fixa aeterna claritas habebat. Sicut itaque hi revelationibus potuerunt ventura cognoscere, ita nonnunquam egressurae animae possunt etiam mysteria coelestia non per somnium, sed vigilando praelibare. Ammonium namque monasterii mei monachum bene nosti, qui dum esset in saeculari habitu constitutus, Valeriani hujus urbis advocati naturalem filiam in conjugio sortitus, ejus obsequiis sedule atque incessanter adhaerebat, et quaeque in ejusdem domo agebantur noverat. Qui mihi jam in monasterio positus narravit quod in ea mortalitate quae patricii Narsae temporibus hanc urbem vehementer afflixit, in domo praedicti Valeriani puer Armentarius fuit praecipuae simplicitatis et humilitatis. Cum vero ejusdem advocati domus eadem clade vastaretur, idem puer percussus est, et usque ad extremum deductus. Qui subito sublatus a praesentibus, postmodum rediit, sibique dominum suum vocari fecit. Cui ait: Ego in coelo fui, et qui de hac domo morituri sunt agnovi. Ille, ille, atque ille morituri sunt; tu vero ne timeas, quia in hoc tempore moriturus non es. Ut vero scias quod me in coelo fuisse verum fateor, ecce accepi illic ut linguis omnibus loquar. Nunquid tibi incognitum fuit Graecam me linguam omnino non nosse? et tamen Graece loquere ut cognoscas an verum sit quod me omnes linguas accepisse testificor. Cui tunc Graece dominus suus locutus est, atque ita ille in eadem lingua respondit, ut cuncti qui aderant, mirarentur. In ea quoque domo praedicti Narsae spatharius Bulgar manebat: qui festine ad aegrum deductus, ei Bulgarica lingua locutus est; sed ita puer ille in Italia natus et nutritus, in eadem barbara locutione respondit ac si ex eadem fuisset gente generatus. Mirati sunt omnes qui audiebant, atque ex duarum linguarum experimento quas eum antea nescisse noverant, crediderunt de omnibus quas probare minime valebant. Tunc per biduum mors ejus dilata est, sed die tertio, quo occulto judicio nescitur, manus ac brachia lacertosque suos dentibus labiavit, atque ita de corpore exivit. Quo mortuo, omnes illi quos praedixerat ex hac protinus luce subtracti sunt, nullusque in illa domo eadem tempestate defunctus est qui voce illius denuntiatus non est. PETRUS: Valde terribile est, ut qui tale donum percipere meruit, tali etiam post hoc poena plecteretur. GREGORIUS: Quis occulta Dei judicia sciat? Ea quae in divino examine comprehendere non possumus, timere magis quam discutere debemus.

CAPUT XXVII. De morte Theophanii comitis.

Ut autem de egredientibus animabus, quae multa praenoscunt, ea quae coepimus exsequamur, neque hoc silendum est quod de Theophanio, Centumcellensis urbis comite, in eadem urbe positus, multis attestantibus agnovi. Fuit namque vir misericordiae actibus deditus, bonis operibus intentus, hospitalitati praecipue studens. Exercendis quidem comitatus curis occupatus, agebat terrena et temporalia, sed, ut post in fine claruit, magis ex debito quam ex intentione. Nam dum appropinquante mortis ejus tempore gravissima aeris tempestas obsisteret, ne ad sepeliendum duci potuisset, eumque uxor sua cum fletu vehementissimo inquireret, dicens: Quid faciam? quomodo te ad sepeliendum ejicio, quae ostium domus hujus egredi prae nimia tempestate non possum? tunc ille respondit: Noli, mulier, flere, quia mox ut ego defunctus fuero, eadem hora aeris serenitas redibit. Cujus protinus vocem mors, et mortem serenitas secuta est. Quod signum etiam alia signa sunt comitata. Nam manus ejus et pedes podagrae humore tumescentes versi in vulneribus fuerant, et profluente sanie patebant. Sed dum corpus ejus ex more ad lavandum fuisset nudatum, ita manus pedesque ejus sani inventi sunt ac si nunquam vulneris aliquid habuissent. Ductus itaque ac sepultus est, ejusque conjugi visum est ut quarto die in sepulcro illius marmor quod superpositum fuerat mutari debuisset. Quod videlicet marmor corpori ejus superpositum dum fuisset ablatum, tanta ex corpore ipsius fragrantia odoris emanavit, ac si ex putrescente carne illius pro vermibus aromata ferbuissent. Quod factum dum, narrante me in homiliis, infirmis quibusdam venisset in dubium, die quadam, sedente me in conventu nobilium, ipsi artifices qui in sepulcro illius marmor mutaverant adfuerunt, aliquid me de propria causa rogaturi. Quos ego de eodem miraculo coram clero, nobilibus ac plebe requisivi, qui et eadem odoris fragrantia miro modo se repletos fuisse testati sunt, et quaedam alia in augmento miraculi, quae nunc narrare longum aestimo, de eodem sepulcro ejus addiderunt. PETRUS: Inquisitioni meae sufficienter jam video satisfactum, sed hoc est adhuc quod quaestione animum pulsat: quia cum superius dictum sit esse jam sanctorum animas in coelo, restat procul dubio ut iniquorum quoque animae esse non nisi in inferno credantur. Et quid hac de re veritas habeat ignoro. Nam humana aestimatio non habet peccatorum animas ante judicium posse cruciari.

CAPUT XXVIII. Quod sicut perfectorum animae in coelo, ita post dissolutionem corporis iniquorum animae in inferno esse credendae sunt.

GREGORIUS: Si esse sanctorum animas in coelo sacri eloquii satisfactione credidisti, oportet ut per omnia esse credas et iniquorum animas in inferno, quia ex retributione aeternae justitiae, ex qua justi jam gloriantur, necesse est per omnia ut et injusti crucientur. Nam sicut electos beatitudo laetificat, ita credi necesse est quod a die exitus sui ignis reprobos exurat. PETRUS: Et qua ratione credendum est quia rem incorpoream tenere ignis corporeus possit?

CAPUT XXIX. Qua ratione credendum sit ut incorporeos spiritus tenere ignis corporeus possit.

GREGORIUS: Si viventis hominis incorporeus spiritus tenetur in corpore, cur non post mortem, cum incorporeus sit spiritus, etiam corporeo igne teneatur? PETRUS: In vivente quolibet idcirco incorporeus spiritus tenetur in corpore, quia vivificat corpus. GREGORIUS: Si incorporeus spiritus, Petre, in hoc teneri potest quod vivificat, quare non poenaliter et ibi teneatur ubi mortificatur? Teneri autem spiritum per ignem dicimus, ut in tormento ignis sit videndo atque sentiendo. Ignem namque eo ipso patitur, quo videt; et quia concremari se aspicit, concrematur. Sicque fit ut res corporea incorpoream exurat, dum ex igne visibili ardor ac dolor invisibilis trahitur, ut per ignem corporeum mens incorporea etiam incorporea flamma crucietur. Quamvis colligere ex dictis evangelicis possumus quia incendium anima non solum videndo, sed etiam experiendo patiatur. Veritatis etenim voce dives mortuus in inferno dicitur sepultus. Cujus anima quia in igne teneatur insinuat vox ejusdem divitis qui S. Abraham deprecatur, dicens: Mitte Lazarum ut intingat extremum digiti sui in aquam, et refrigeret linguam meam, quia crucior in hac flamma . Dum ergo peccatorem divitem damnatum Veritas in ignem perhibet, quisnam sapiens reproborum animas teneri ignibus neget? PETRUS: Ecce ratione ac testimonio ad credulitatem flectitur animus, sed dimissus iterum ad rigorem redit. Quomodo enim res incorporea a re corporea teneri atque affligi possit ignoro. GREGORIUS: Dic, quaeso te, apostatas spiritus a coelesti gloria dejectos, esse corporeos, an incorporeos suspicaris? PETRUS: Quis sanum sapiens ess spiritus corporeos dixerit? GREGORIUS: Gehennae ignem esse incorporeum, an corporeum fateris? PETRUS: Ignem gehennae corporeum esse non ambigo, in quo certum est corpora cruciari. GREGORIUS: Certe reprobis Veritas in fine dictura est: Ite in ignem aeternum, qui paratus est diabolo et angelis ejus. Si igitur diabolus ejusque angeli, cum sint incorporei, corporeo sunt igne cruciandi, quid mirum si animae et antequam recipiant corpora, possint corporea sentire tormenta? PETRUS: Patet ratio, nec debet animus de hac ulterius quaestione dubitare.

CAPUT XXX. De morte Theodorici regis Ariani.

GREGORIUS: Postquam laboriose credidisti, operae pretium credo, si ea quae mihi a viris fidelibus sunt digesta narravero. Julianus namque hujus Romanae Ecclesiae, cui Deo auctore deservio, secundus defensor, qui ante septem ferme annos defunctus est, ad me adhuc in monasterio positum crebro veniebat, et mecum colloqui de animae utilitate consueverat. Hic itaque mihi quadam die narravit, dicens: Theodorici regis temporibus pater soceri mei in Sicilia exactionem canonis egerat, atque jam ad Italiam redibat. Cujus navis appulsa est ad insulam quae Liparis appellatur. Et quia illic vir quidam solitarius magnae virtutis habitabat, dum nautae navis armamenta repararent, visum est praedicto patri soceri mei ad eumdem virum Dei pergere, seque ejus orationibus commendare. Quos vir Domini cum vidisset, eis inter alia colloquens, dixit: Scitis quia rex Theodoricus mortuus est? Cui illi protinus responderunt: Absit, nos eum viventem dimisimus, et nihil tale ad nos de eo nuncusque perlatum est. Quibus Dei famulus addidit, dicens: Etiam mortuus est: nam hesterno die hora nona inter Joannem papam et Symmachum patricium discinctus atque discalceatus et vinctis manibus deductus, in hanc vicinam Vulcani ollam jactatus est. Quod illi audientes, sollicite conscripserunt diem, atque in Italiam reversi, eo die Theodoricum regem invenerunt fuisse mortuum quo ejus exitus atque supplicium Dei famulo fuerat ostensum. Et quia Joannem papam affligendo in custodia occidit, Symmachum quoque patricium ferro trucidavit, ab illis juste in ignem missus apparuit, quos in hac vita injuste judicavit.

CAPUT XXXI. De morte Reparati.

Eo quoque tempore quo primum remotae vitae desideriis anhelabam, quidam honestus senex, Deusdedit nomine, valde hujus urbis nobilibus amicus, mihi quoque in amicitiis sedule jungebatur, qui mihi narrabat, dicens: Gothorum tempore quidam spectabilis vir, Reparatus nomine, venit ad mortem. Qui dum diu jam mutus ac rigidus jaceret, visum est quod ab eo funditus flatus vitalis exisset, atque exanime remansisset corpus. Cumque et multi qui convenerant, et eum jam mortuum familia lugeret, subito rediit, et cunctorum plangentium in stuporem versae sunt lacrymae. Qui reversus ait: Citius ad Ecclesiam beati Laurentii martyris, quae ex nomine conditoris Damasi vocatur, puerum mittite, et quid de Tiburtio presbytero agatur videat et renuntiare festinet. Qui videlicet tunc Tiburtius carnalibus desideriis subjacere ferebatur: cujus adhuc vitae morumque bene quoque Florentius ejus nunc Ecclesiae presbyter meminit. Cum vero puer pergeret, narravit idem Reparatus, qui ad se reversus fuerat, quid de illo ubi ductus fuerat agnovit, dicens: Paratus fuerat rogus ingens, deductus autem Tiburtius presbyter in eo est superpositus, atque supposito igne concrematus. Alius autem parabatur rogus, cujus a terra in coelum cacumen tendi videbatur. Cui emissa voce clamatum est cujus esset. His igitur dictis statim Reparatus defunctus est: puer vero qui transmissus fuerat ad Tiburtium, jam eum mortuum invenit. Qui videlicet Reparatus ductus ad loca poenarum, dum vidit, rediit, narravit, et obiit, aperte monstratur quia nobis illa, non sibi viderit, quibus dum adhuc concessum est vivere, licet etiam a malis operibus emendare. Rogum vero construi Reparatus vidit, non quod apud infernum ligna ardeant ut ignis fiat; sed narraturus haec viventibus, illa de incendio pravorum vidit, ex quibus nutriri apud viventes corporeus ignis solet, ut per haec assueta audientes discerent quid de insuetis timere debuissent.

CAPUT XXXII. De morte Curialis, cujus sepultura incensa est.

Terribile etiam quiddam in Valeriae provincia contigisse vir vitae venerabilis Maximianus, Syracusanus episcopus, qui diu in hac urbe meo monasterio praefuit, narrare consuevit, dicens: Quidam Curialis illic sacratissimo paschali Sabbato juvenculam cujusdam filiam in baptismate suscepit. Qui post jejunium domum reversus, multoque vino inebriatus, eamdem filiam suam secum manere petiit, eamque nocte illa (quod dictu nefas est) perdidit. Cumque mane facto surrexisset, reus cogitare coepit ut ad balneum pergeret, ac si aqua balnei lavaret maculam peccati. Perrexit igitur, lavit, coepitque trepidare ecclesiam ingredi. Sed si tanto die non iret ad ecclesiam, erubescebat homines; si vero iret, pertimescebat judicium Dei. Vicit itaque humana verecundia, perrexit ad ecclesiam: sed tremebundus ac pavens stare coepit, atque per singula momenta suspectus qua hora immundo spiritui traderetur, et coram omni populo vexaretur. Cumque vehementer timeret, ei in illa missarum celebritate quasi adversi nihil contigit. Qui laetus exiit, et die altero ecclesiam jam securus intravit. Factumque est ut per sex continuos dies laetus ac securus procederet, aestimans quod ejus scelus Dominus aut non vidisset, aut misericorditer dimisisset. Die autem septimo subita morte defunctus est. Cumque sepulturae traditus fuisset, per longum tempus cunctis videntibus de sepulcro illius flamma exiit, et tandiu ossa ejus concremavit, quousque omne sepulcrum consumeret, et terra quae in tumulum collecta fuerat defossa videretur. Quod videlicet omnipotens Deus faciens ostendit quid ejus anima in occulto pertulit, cujus etiam corpus ante humanos oculos flamma consumpsit. Qua in re nobis quoque haec audientibus exemplum formidinis dare dignatus est, quatenus ex hac consideratione colligamus, quid anima vivens ac sentiens pro reatu suo patiatur, si tanto ignis supplicio etiam insensibilia ossa concremantur. PETRUS: Nosse velim si vel boni bonos in regno, vel mali malos in supplicio agnoscant.

CAPUT XXXIII. Si boni bonos in regno, et mali malos in supplicio agnoscunt.

GREGORIUS: Hujus rei sententia in verbis est dominicis, quae jam superius protulimus, luce clarius demonstrata. In quibus cum dictum esset: Homo quidam erat dives, qui induebatur purpura et bysso, et epulabatur quotidie splendide; et erat quidam mendicus nomine Lazarus, qui jacebat ad januam ejus ulceribus plenus, cupiens saturari de micis quae cadebant de mensa divitis, et nemo illi dabat; sed et canes veniebant, et lingebant ulcera ejus. Subjunctum est quod mortuus Lazarus portatus est ab angelis in sinum Abrahae, et mortuus dives sepultus est in inferno. Qui elevans oculos suos cum esset in tormentis, vidit Abraham a longe, et Lazarum in sinu ejus, et ipse clamavit, dicens: Pater Abraham, miserere mei, et mitte Lazarum, ut intingat extremum digiti sui in aquam, et refrigeret linguam meam, quia crucior in hac flamma. Cui Abraham dixit: Fili, recordare quia recepisti bona in vita tua, et Lazarus similiter mala. Dives autem jam spem salutis de seipso non habens, ad promerendam suorum salutem convertitur, dicens: Rogo te, pater, ut mittas eum in domum patris mei; habeo enim quinque fratres, ut testetur illis, ne et ipsi veniant in locum hunc tormentorum. Quibus verbis aperte declaratur quia et boni bonos, et mali malos cognoscunt. Si enim Abraham Lazarum minime recognovisset, nequaquam ad divitem in tormentis positum de transacta ejus contritione loqueretur, dicens quod mala receperit in vita sua. Et si mali malos non recognoscerent, nequaquam dives in tormentis positus fratrum suorum etiam absentium meminisset. Quomodo enim praesentes non posset agnoscere, qui etiam pro absentium memoria curavit exorare? Qua in re illud quoque ostenditur, quod nequaquam ipse requisisti, quia et boni malos, et mali cognoscunt bonos. Nam et dives ab Abraham cognoscitur, cui dictum est: Recepisti bona in vita tua; et electus Lazarus a reprobo est divite cognitus, quem mitti precatur ex nomine, dicens: Mitte Lazarum, ut intingat extremum digiti sui in aquam, et refrigeret linguam meam. In qua videlicet cognitione utriusque partis cumulus retributionis excrescit: ut et boni amplius gaudeant, qui secum eos laetari conspiciunt quos amaverunt, et mali, dum cum eis torquentur quos in hoc mundo, despecto Deo, dilexerunt, eos non solum sua, sed etiam eorum poena consumat. Fit autem in electis quiddam mirabilius, quia non solum eos agnoscunt quos in hoc mundo noverant, sed velut visos ac cognitos recognoscunt bonos quos nunquam viderunt. Nam cum antiquos Patres in illa aeterna haereditate viderint, eis incogniti per visionem non erunt, quos in opere semper noverunt. Quia enim illic omnes communi claritate Deum conspiciunt, quid est quod ibi nesciant, ubi scientem omnia sciunt?

CAPUT XXXIV. De quodam religioso, qui prophetas moriens vidit.

Nam quidam noster religiosus, vir vitae valde laudabilis, cum ante hoc quadriennium moreretur, sicut religiosi alii qui praesentes fuerunt testati sunt, in hora exitus sui S. Jonam prophetam, S. Ezechielem quoque et S. Danielem coepit aspicere, eosque dominos suos ex nomine clamare. Quos dum ad se venisse diceret, et depressis luminibus eis reverentiae obsequium praeberet, ex carne eductus est. Qua in re aperte datur intelligi quae erit in illa incorruptibili vita notitia, si vir iste adhuc in carne corruptibili positus prophetas sanctos, quos nimirum nunquam viderat, agnovit.

CAPUT XXXV. Quod se etiam ignotae animae nonnunquam in exitu recognoscunt, quae vel pro culpis tormenta, vel pro bonis actibus similia sunt praemia recepturae; et de morte Joannis et Ursi, Eumorphii, et Stephani.

Solet autem plerumque contingere ut egressura anima eos etiam recognoscat cum quibus pro aequalitate culparum, vel etiam praemiorum, in una est mansione deputanda. Nam vir vitae venerabilis Eleutherius senex, de quo praecedente libro multa narravi, in monasterio suo germanum fratrem nomine Joannem se habuisse perhibuit, qui ante dies quatuordecim suum fratribus exitum praedixit. Cumque decrescentes quotidie computaret dies, ante triduum quam vocaretur ex corpore, febre correptus est. Ad horam vero mortis veniens, mysterium Dominici corporis, et sanguinis accepit. Vocatisque fratribus, coram se psallere praecepit, quibus tamen antiphonam ipse per semetipsum imposuit, dicens: Aperite mihi portas justitiae, et ingressus in eas confitebor Domino: haec porta Domini, justi intrabunt per eam. Cumque coram eo assistentes fratres psallerent, emissa subito et producta voce clamavit dicens: Urse, veni. Quod mox ut dixit, eductus e corpore mortalem vitam finivit. Mirati sunt fratres: quia hoc quod moriens frater clamaverat, ignorabant. Quo defuncto, in monasterio facta est magna tristitia. Quarto autem die quiddam fratribus necessarium fuit, ut ad monasterium aliud longe positum transmitterent. Illuc ergo euntes fratres, omnes ejusdem monasterii monachos tristes vehementer invenerunt. Quibus cum dicerent: Quid habetis, quod vos in tanto moerore deprimitis? responderunt, dicentes: Loci hujus desolationem gemimus, quia unus Frater, cujus nos vita in hoc monasterio continebat, hodie quartus est dies quod ex hac luce subtractus est. Cumque fratres qui venerant, studiose inquirerent qualiter dictus fuisset, responderunt: Ursus. Qui vocationis ejus horam subtiliter inquirentes, ipso eum momento cognoverunt exisse de corpore, quo per Joannem, qui apud eos defunctus est, fuerat vocatus. Qua ex re colligitur, quia utrorumque par fuerat meritum, eisque datum est, ut in una mansione socialiter viverent, quibus e corpore contigit socialiter exire. Sed neque hoc sileam, quod dum adhuc laicus viverem, atque in domo mea, quae mihi in hac urbe ex jure patris obvenerat, manerem, de quibusdam vicinis meis me contigit agnovisse. Quaedam namque juxta me vidua, Galla dicebatur. Haec Eumorphium nomine juvenem filium habebat, a quo non longe quidam Stephanus, qui in numero Optio fuit, habitabat. Sed idem Eumorphius ad extrema vitae veniens, vocavit puerum suum, eique praecepit, dicens: Vade citius, et dic Stephano Optioni, ut concitus veniat, quia ecce navis parata est ut ad Siciliam duci debeamus. Cumque hunc puer insanire crederet, et obedire recusaret, coepit ille vehementer imminere, dicens: Vade et nuntia illi quod dico, quia non insanio. Egressus est itaque puer ut ad Stephanum pergeret. Cumque in medium iter venisset, ei alius quidam obvius factus est, qui hunc requisivit, dicens: Quo vadis? Cui ille respondit: Ad Stephanum Optionem a domino meo missus sum. Atque ille protinus dixit: Ab eo venio, sed ante me hac hora defunctus est. Reversus vero est puer ad Eumorphium dominum suum, sed jam eum mortuum invenit. Sicque factum est, ut dum alter obviam venit, et ex medio itinere puer reversus est, ex mensura spatii potuisset colligi, quia uno momento utrique fuerant vocati. PETRUS: Terribile est valde, quod dicitur: sed quaeso te, cur egredienti animae navis apparuit, vel cur se ad Siciliam duci moriturus praedixit? GREGORIUS: Anima vehiculo non eget: sed mirum non est, si adhuc homini in corpore posito illud apparuit, quod per corpus assueverat videre, ut per hoc intelligi daretur quo ejus anima spiritualiter duci potuisset. Quod vero se ad Siciliam duci testatus est, quid sentiri aliud potest, nisi quod prae ceteris locis in ejus terrae insulis eructante igne tormentorum ollae patuerunt? Quae, ut solent narrare qui noverunt, laxatis quotidie sinibus excrescunt, ut mundi termino appropinquante, quanto certum est illuc amplius exurendos colligi, tanto et eadem tormentorum loca amplius videantur aperiri. Quod omnipotens Deus ad correptionem viventium in hoc mundo voluit ostendi; ut mentes infidelium, quae inferni tormenta esse non credunt, tormentorum loca videant, quae audita credere recusant. Quod vero sive electi, sive reprobi, quorum communis causa in opere fuerit, ad loca etiam communia deducantur, Veritatis nobis verba satisfacerent, etiamsi exempla deessent. Ipsa quippe propter electos in Evangelio dicit: In domo Patris mei mansiones multae sunt. Si enim dispar retributio in illa aeterna beatitudine non esset, una potius mansio quam multae essent. Multae ergo mansiones sunt, in quibus distincti bonorum ordines, et propter meritorum consortia communiter laetantur, et tamen unum denarium omnes laborantes accipiunt. Qui multis mansionibus distinguuntur; quia et una est beatitudo quam illic percipiunt, et dispar retributionis qualitas, quam per opera diversa consequuntur. Quae nimirum Veritas judicii sui diem denuntians, ait: Tunc dicam messoribus: Colligite zizania, et ligate ea in fasciculos ad comburendum. Messores quippe angeli zizania ad comburendum in fasciculos ligant, cum pares paribus in tormentis similibus sociant, ut superbi cum superbis, luxuriosi cum luxuriosis, avari cum avaris, fallaces cum fallacibus, invidi cum invidis, infideles cum infidelibus ardeant. Cum ergo similes in culpa ad tormenta similia deducuntur, quia eos in locis poenalibus angeli deputant, quasi zizaniorum fasciculos ad comburendum ligant. PETRUS: Ad inquisitionem meam responsionis satisfactione patuit causa rationis. Sed quidnam est, quaeso te, quod nonnulli quasi per errorem extrahuntur e corpore, ita ut facti exanimes redeant, et eorum quisque audisse se dicat, quia ipse non fuerit qui erat jussus deduci?

CAPUT XXXVI. De his qui quasi per errorem educi videntur e corpore, et de vocatione et revocatione Petri monachi, et de morte et resuscitatione Stephani, ac de visione cujusdam militis.

GREGORIUS: Hoc cum fit, Petre, si bene perpenditur, non error, sed admonitio est. Superna enim pietas ex magna misericordiae suae largitate disponit, ut nonnulli etiam post exitum repente ad corpus redeant, et tormenta inferni, quae audita non crediderant, saltem visa pertimescant. Nam quidam Illiricianus monachus, qui in hac urbe in monasterio mecum vivebat, mihi narrare consueverat, quia quodam tempore cum adhuc in eremo moraretur, agnoverit quod Petrus quidam monachus ex regione ortus Iberiae, qui ei in loco vastae solitudinis, cui Evasa nomen est, inhaerebat, sicut ipso narrante didicerat, priusquam eremum peteret, molestia corporis interveniente defunctus est: sed protinus corpori restitutus, inferni supplicia atque innumera loca flammarum se vidisse testabatur. Qui etiam quosdam hujus saeculi potentes in eisdem flammis suspensos se vidisse narrabat. Qui cum jam ductus esset ut in illas et ipse mergeretur, subito angelum corusci habitus apparuisse fatebatur, qui eum in ignem mergi prohiberet. Cui etiam dixit: Egredere, et qualiter tibi posthac vivendum sit, cautissime attende. Post quam vocem paulatim recalescentibus membris, ab aeternae mortis somno evigilans, cuncta quae circa illum fuerant gesta narravit. Tantisque se postmodum jejuniis vigiliisque constrinxit, ut inferni eum vidisse et pertimuisse tormenta, etiamsi taceret lingua, conversatio loqueretur: quippe cui omnipotentis Dei mira largitate in morte actum est ne mori debuisset. Sed quia humanum cor gravis valde duritiae est, ipsa quoque poenarum ostensio non aeque omnibus utilis est. Nam illustris vir Stephanus, quem bene nosti, de semetipso mihi narrare consueverat, quia in Constantinopolitana urbe pro quadam causa demoratus, molestia corporis superveniente defunctus est. Cumque medicus atque pigmentarius ad aperiendum eum atque condiendum esset quaesitus, et die eodem minime inventus, subsequente nocte corpus jacuit inhumatum. Qui ductus ad inferni loca, vidit multa quae prius audita non credidit. Sed cum praesidenti illic judici praesentatus fuisset, ab eo receptus non est, ita ut diceret: Non hunc deduci, sed Stephanum ferrarium jussi. Qui statim reductus in corpore est, et Stephanus ferrarius qui juxta eum habitabat, eadem hora defunctus est. Sicque probatum est vera fuisse verba quae audierat, dum haec effectus mortis Stephani demonstravit. Ante triennium quoque in hac pestilentia quae hanc urbem clade vehementissima depopulavit, in qua etiam corporali visu sagittae coelitus venire, et singulos quosque ferire videbantur, sicut nosti, Stephanus idem defunctus est. Quidam vero miles in hac eadem urbe nostra percussus, ad extrema pervenit. Qui eductus in corpore exanimis jacuit, sed citius rediit, et quae cum eo fuerant gesta narravit. Aiebat enim, sicut tunc res eadem etiam multis innotuit, quia pons erat, sub quo niger atque caliginosus foetoris intolerabilis nebulam exhalans fluvius decurrebat. Transacto autem ponte, amoena erant prata atque virentia, odoriferis herbarum floribus exornata, in quibus albatorum hominum conventicula esse videbantur. Tantusque in eodem loco odor suavitatis inerat, ut ipsa suavitatis fragrantia illic deambulantes habitantesque satiaret. Ibi mansiones diversorum singulae, magnitudine lucis plenae. Ibi quaedam mirae potentiae aedificabatur domus, quae aureis videbatur laterculis construi, sed cujus esset, non potuit agnosci. Erant vero super ripam praedicti fluminis nonnulla habitacula, sed alia exurgentis foetoris nebula tangebantur, alia autem exurgens foetor e flumine minime tangebat. Haec vero erat in praedicto ponte probatio ut quisquis per eum vellet injustorum transire, in tenebrosum foetentemque fluvium laberetur: justi vero quibus culpa non obsisteret, securo per eum gressu ac libero ad loca amoena pervenirent. Ibi se etiam Petrum ecclesiasticae familiae majorem qui ante quadriennium est defunctus, deorsum positum, in locis teterrimis magno ferri pondere religatum ac depressum vidisse confessus est. Qui dum requireret cur ita esset, ea se dixit audisse, quae nos qui eum in hac ecclesiastica domo novimus, scientes ejus acta recolimus. Dictum namque est: Haec idcirco patitur, quia si quid ei pro facienda ultione jubebatur, ad inferendas plagas plus ex crudelitatis desiderio, quam ex obedientia serviebat. Quod sic fuisse, nullus qui illum novit, ignorat. Ibi se etiam quemdam peregrinum presbyterum vidisse fatebatur, qui ad praedictum pontem veniens, tanta per eum auctoritate transiit, quanta et hic sinceritate vixit. In eodem quoque ponte hunc quem praediximus Stephanum se recognovisse testatus est. Qui dum transire voluisset, ejus pes lapsus est, et ex medio corpore jam extra pontem dejectus, a quibusdam teterrimis viris ex flumine surgentibus, per coxas deorsum, atque a quibusdam albatis et speciosissimis viris coepit per brachia sursum trahi. Cumque hoc luctamen esset, ut hunc boni spiritus sursum, mali deorsum traherent, ipse qui haec videbat, ad corpus reversus est, et quid de eo plenius gestum sit, minime cognovit. Qua in re de ejusdem Stephani vita datur intelligi, quia in eo mala carnis cum eleemosynarum operatione certabant. Qui enim per coxas deorsum, per brachia trahebatur sursum, patet nimirum, quia et eleemosynas amaverat, et carnis vitiis perfecte non restiterat, quae eum deorsum trahebant. Sed in illo occulti arbitri examine quid in eo vicerit, et nos, et eum qui vidit et revocatus est, latet. Constat tamen, quia idem Stephanus postquam, sicut superius narravi, et inferni loca vidit, et ad corpus rediit, perfecte vitam minime correxit, qui post multos annos de corpore adhuc ad certamen vitae et mortis exiit. Qua de re colligitur, quia ipsa quoque inferni supplicia cum demonstrantur, aliis hoc ad adjutorium, aliis vero ad testimonium fiat: ut isti videant mala quae caveant, illi vero eo amplius puniantur, quod inferni supplicia nec visa, et cognita vitare noluerunt. PETRUS: Quid est hoc, quaeso te, quod in amoenis locis cujusdam domus laterculis aureis aedificari videbatur? Ridiculum est valde, si credimus quod in illa vita adhuc metallis talibus egeamus.

CAPUT XXXVII. Quid sibi vult in amoenis locis domus constructio: et de Deusdedit, cujus domus sabbato videbatur aedificari: et de poena Sodomorum.

GREGORIUS: Quis hoc, si sanum sapit, intelligat? Sed per hoc quod illic ostensum est, quisquis ille est cui mansio ista construitur, aperte datur intelligi quid est quod hic operatur. Nam qui praemium aeternae lucis eleemosynarum largitate promerebitur, nimirum constat, quia auro aedificat mansionem suam. Quod enim superius memoriam fugit ut dicerem, idem miles, qui haec viderat, narrabat quod eosdem laterculos aureos ad aedificationem domus, senes ac juvenes, puellae et pueri ferebant. Qua ex re colligitur, quia hi quibus hic pietas facta est, ipsi illic operatores esse videbantur. Hic etiam quidam juxta nos, Deusdedit nomine, religiosus, habitabat, qui calceamenta solebat operari, de quo alter per revelationem vidit quod ejus domus aedificabatur, sed in ea constructores sui solo die sabbati videbantur operari. Qui ejusdem viri postmodum subtiliter vitam requirens, invenit quia ex his quae diebus singulis laborabat, quidquid ex victu atque vestitu superesse potuisset, die sabbato ad beati Petri Ecclesiam deferre consueverat, atque indigentibus erogare. Qua ex re perpende, quia non immerito domus ipsius fabrica sabbato crescebat. PETRUS: Hac de re mihi idonee video satisfactum: sed quaeso te, quid esse dicimus, quod quorumdam habitacula foetoris nebula tangebantur, quorumdam vero tangi non poterant: vel quid quod pontem, quid est quod fluvium vidit? GREGORIUS: Ex rerum, Petre, imaginibus pensamus merita causarum. Per pontem quippe ad amoena loca transire justos aspexit: Quia angusta valde est semita quae ducit ad vitam. Et foetentem fluvium decurrentem vidit, quia ad ima defluit quotidie carnalium hic putredo vitiorum. Et quorumdam habitacula fetoris nebula tangebat, quorumdam vero ab ea tangi non poterant: quia sunt plerique qui multa jam bona opera faciunt, sed tamen adhuc carnalibus vitiis in cogitationis delectatione tanguntur. Et justum valde est, ut illic nebula fetoris obsideat, quos hic adhuc carnis fetor delectat. Unde et eamdem delectationem carnis esse beatus Job in fetore conspiciens, de luxurioso ac lubrico sententiam protulit, dicens: Dulcedo illius vermes. Qui autem perfecte cor ab omni delectatio e carnis excutiunt, constat nimirum quia eorum habitacula fetoris nebula non tanguntur. Et notandum quod idem fetor esse et nebula visa sit, quia nimirum carnalis delectatio mentem quam inficit obscurat, ut veri luminis claritatem non videat, sed unde delectatur inferius, inde caliginem ad superna patiatur. PETRUS: Putamusne hoc auctoritate sacri eloquii posse monstrari, ut culpae carnalium fetoris poena puniantur? GREGORIUS: Potest; nam libro Geneseos attestante didicimus, quia super Sodomitas Dominus ignem et sulphur pluit, ut eos et ignis incenderet, et fetor sulphuris necaret. Quia enim amore illicito corruptibilis carnis exarserant, simul incendio et fetore perierunt, quatenus in poena sua cognoscerent quia aeternae mortis fetoris sui se delectatione tradidissent. PETRUS: De his in quibus dubius fui, nihil mihi, fateor, quaestionis remansit.

CAPUT XXXVIII. Quod quorumdam animae adhuc in corpore positae poenale aliquid de spiritalibus vident; et de Theodoro puero; ac de morte Chrysaorii, et monachi cujusdam Iconii.

GREGORIUS: Sciendum quoque est quia nonnunquam animae adhuc in suis corporibus positae poenale aliquid de spiritalibus vident, quod tamen quibusdam ad aedificationem suam, quibusdam vero contingere ad aedificationem audientium solet. Nam is de quo in Homiliis coram populo me narrasse jam memini, inquietus valde. Theodorus nomine, puer fuit, qui in monasterium meum, fratrem suum necessitate magis quam voluntate secutus est. Cui nimirum grave erat si quis ei pro salute sua aliquid loqueretur. Bona enim non solum facere, sed etiam audire non poterat. Nunquam se ad sanctae conversationis habitum venire, jurando, irascendo, deridendo testabatur. In hac autem pestilentia quae nuper hujus urbis populum magna ex parte consumpsit, percussus in inguine, perductus est ad mortem. Cumque extremum spiritum ageret, convenerunt fratres, ut egressum illius orando protegerent. Jam corpus ejus ab extrema parte fuerat praemortuum, in solo tantummodo pectore vitalis adhuc calor anhelabat. Cuncti autem fratres tanto pro eo coeperunt enixius orare, quanto eum jam videbant sub celeritate discedere. Cum repente coepit eisdem fratribus assistentibus clamare, atque cum magnis vocibus orationes eorum interrumpere, dicens: Recedite, recedite, ecce draconi ad devorandum datus sum, qui propter vestram praesentiam devorare me non potest. Caput meum jam in suo ore absorbuit, date locum ut me amplius non cruciet, sed faciat quod facturus est. Si ei ad devorandum datus sum, quare propter vos moras patior? Tunc fratres coeperunt ei dicere: Quid est quod loqueris, frater? Signum tibi sanctae crucis imprime. Respondebat ille cum magnis clamoribus, dicens: Volo me signare, sed non possum, quia squamis hujus draconis premor. Cumque hoc fratres audirent, prostrati in terra cum lacrymis coeperunt pro ereptione illius vehementius orare. Et ecce subito melioratus aeger coepit cum magnis vocibus clamare, dicens: Gratias Deo, ecce draco qui me ad devorandum acceperat fugit, orationibus vestris expulsus stare non potuit. Pro peccatis meis modo intercedite, quia converti paratus sum, et saecularem vitam funditus relinquere. Homo ergo qui, sicut jam dictum est, ab extrema corporis parte fuerat praemortuus, reservatus ad vitam, toto corde ad Deum conversus est. Et postquam, mutatus mente, diu est flagellis attritus, tunc ejus anima carne soluta est. At contra Chrysaorius, sicut Probus propinquus illius, cujus jam superius memoriam feci, narrare consuevit, vir in hoc mundo valde idoneus fuit, sed tantum plenus vitiis, quantum rebus, superbia tumidus, carnis suae voluptatibus subditus in acquirendis rebus avaritiae facibus accensus. Sed cum tot malis Dominus finem ponere decrevisset, corporali hunc molestia percussit. Qui ad extremum veniens, eadem hora qua jam de corpore erat exiturus, apertis oculis vidit tetros et nigerrimos spiritus coram se assistere, et vehementer imminere, ut ad inferni claustra eum raperent. Coepit tremere, pallescere, sudare, et magnis vocibus inducias petere, filiumque suum nomine Maximum, quem ipse jam monachus monachum vidi, nimiis et turbatis clamoribus vocare, dicens: Maxime, curre, nunquam tibi mali aliquid feci, in fide tua me suscipe. Turbatus mox Maximus adfuit, lugens ac perstrepens familia convenit. Eos autem quos ille insistentes sibi graviter tolerabat, ipsi malignos spiritus videre non poterant, sed eorum praesentiam, in confusione, et pallore, ac tremore illius qui trahebatur videbant. Pavore autem tetrae eorum imaginis huc illucque vertebatur in lectulo; jacebat in sinistro latere, aspectum eorum ferre non poterat; vertebatur ad parietem, ibi aderant. Cumque constrictus nimis relaxari se jam posse desperaret, coepit magnis vocibus clamare: Inducias vel usque mane, inducias vel usque mane. Sed cum haec clamaret, in ipsis vocibus de habitaculo suae carnis evulsus est. De quo nimirum constat quia pro nobis ista, non pro se, viderit, ut ejus visio nobis proficiat, quos adhuc divina patientia longanimiter exspectat. Nam illi tetros spiritus ante mortem vidisse et inducias petiisse quid profuit, qui easdem inducias quas petiit non accepit? Est etiam nunc apud nos Athanasius Isauriae presbyter, qui in diebus suis Iconii rem terribilem narrat evenisse. Ibi namque, ut ait, quoddam monasterium dicitur, in quo quidam monachus magnae aestimationis habebatur. Bonis quippe cernebatur moribus, atque in omni sua actione compositus; sed sicut ex fine res patuit, longe aliter quam apparebat fuit. Nam cum jejunare se cum fratribus demonstraret, occulte manducare consueverat, quod ejus vitium fratres omnino nesciebant. Sed corporis superveniente molestia, ad vitae extrema perductus est. Qui cum jam esset in fine, fratres ad se omnes qui monasterio aderant congregari fecit. At illi tali, ut putabant, viro moriente, magnum quid ac delectabile se ab eo audire crediderant. Quibus ipse afflictus et tremens compulsus est prodere cui hosti traditus cogebatur exire. Nam dixit: Quando me vobiscum credebatis jejunare, occulte comedebam, et ecce nunc ad devorandum draconi traditus sum, qui cauda sua mea genua pedesque colligavit, caput vero suum intra meum os mittens, spiritum meum ebibens extrahit. Quibus dictis statim defunctus est, atque ut poenitendo liberari potuisset, a dracone quem viderat exspectatus non est. Quod nimirum constat quia ad solam utilitatem audientium viderit, qui eum hostem cui traditus fuerat et innotuit et non evasit. PETRUS: Doceri vellem si post mortem purgatorius ignis esse credendus est.

CAPUT XXXIX. An post mortem purgatorius ignis sit.

GREGORIUS: In Evangelio dicit Dominus: Ambulate dum lucem habetis. Per Prophetam quoque ait: Tempore accepto exaudivi te, et in die salutis adjuvi te. Quod Paulus apostolus exponens, dicit: Ecce nunc tempus acceptabile, ecce nunc dies salutis. Salomon quoque ait: Quodcumque potest manus tua facere, instanter operare, quia nec opus, nec ratio, nec scientia, nec sapientia erit apud inferos, quo tu properas. David quoque ait: Quoniam in saeculum misericordia ejus. Ex quibus nimirum sententiis constat quia qualis hinc quisque egreditur, talis in judicio praesentatur. Sed tamen de quibusdam levibus culpis esse ante judicium purgatorius ignis credendus est, pro eo quod Veritas dicit, quia si quis in sancto Spiritu blasphemiam dixerit, neque in hoc saeculo remittetur ei, neque in futuro. In qua sententia datur intelligi quasdam culpas in hoc saeculo, quasdam vero in futuro posse laxari. Quod enim de uno negatur, consequens intellectus patet, quia de quibusdam conceditur. Sed tamen, ut praedixi, hoc de parvis minimisque peccatis fieri posse credendum est, sicut est assiduus otiosus sermo, immoderatus risus, vel peccatum curae rei familiaris, quae vix sine culpa vel ab ipsis agitur, qui culpam qualiter declinare debeant sciunt; aut in non gravibus rebus error ignorantiae, quae cuncta etiam post mortem gravant, si adhuc in hac vita positis minime fuerint relaxata. Nam cum Paulus dicat Christum esse fundamentum, atque subjungat: Si quis superaedificaverit super hoc fundamentum, aurum, argentum, lapides pretiosos, ligna, fenum, stipulam; uniuscujusque opus quale sit, ignis probabit; si cujus opus manserit quod superaedificavit, mercedem accipiet; si cujus opus arserit, detrimentum patietur; ipse autem salvus erit, sic tamen quasi per ignem. Quamvis hoc de igne tribulationis in hac nobis vita adhibito possit intelligi, tamen si quis hoc de igne futurae purgationis accipiat, pensandum sollicite est quia illum per ignem dixit posse salvari, non qui super hoc fundamentum, ferrum, aes, vel plumbum aedificat, id est peccata majora, et idcirco duriora, atque tunc jam insolubilia; sed ligna, fenum, stipulam, id est peccata minima atque levissima, quae ignis facile consumat. Hoc tamen sciendum est, quia illic saltem de minimis nihil quisque purgationis obtinebit, nisi bonis hoc actibus in hac adhuc vita positus, ut illic obtineat, promereatur.

CAPUT XL. De anima Paschasii diaconi.

Nam cum adhuc essem juvenculus, atque in laico habitu constitutus, narrari a majoribus atque scientibus audivi, quod Paschasius hujus apostolicae sedis diaconus, cujus apud nos rectissimi et luculenti de sancto Spiritu libri

exstant, mirae sanctitatis vir fuerit, eleemosynarum maxime operibus vacans, cultor pauperum, et contemptor sui. Sed hic in ea contentione quae inardescente zelo fidelium inter Symmachum atque Laurentium facta est ad pontificatus ordinem Laurentium elegit; et omnium post unanimitate superatus, in sua tamen sententia usque ad diem sui exitus perstitit, illum amando atque praeferendo, quem episcoporum judicio praeesse sibi Ecclesia refutavit. Hic itaque cum temporibus Symmachi apostolicae sedis Praesulis esset defunctus, ejus dalmaticam feretro superpositam daemoniacus tetigit, statimque salvatus est. Post multum vero temporis Germano Capuano episcopo, cujus superius memoriam feci medici pro corporis salute dictaverant, ut in Angulanis thermis lavari debuisset. Qui ingressus easdem thermas, praedictum Paschasium diaconum stantem et obsequentem in caloribus invenit. Quo viso vehementer extimuit, et quid illic tantus vir faceret inquisivit. Cui ille respondit: Pro nulla alia causa in hoc poenali loco deputatus sum, nisi quia in parte Laurentii contra Symmachum sensi. Sed quaeso te, pro me Dominum deprecare, atque in hoc cognosces quod exauditus sis, si huc rediens me non inveneris. Qua de re vir Domini Germanus se in precibus constrinxit, et post paucos dies rediit, sed jam dictum Paschasium in loco eodem minime invenit. Quia enim non malitia, sed ignorantiae errore peccaverat, purgari post mortem a peccato potuit. Quod tamen credendum est, quia ex illa eleemosynarum suarum largitate hoc obtinuit, ut tunc potuisset promereri veniam, cum jam nihil posset operari. PETRUS: Quid hoc est, quaeso, quod in his extremis temporibus tam multa de animabus clarescunt, quae ante latuerunt; ita ut apertis revelationibus atque ostensionibus venturum saeculum inferre se nobis atque aperire videatur?

CAPUT XLI. Cur in extremis temporibus, tam multa de animabus clarescunt, quae antea latuerunt.

GREGORIUS: Ita est; nam quantum praesens saeculum propinquat ad finem, tantum futurum saeculum ipsa jam quasi propinquitate tangitur, et signis manifestioribus aperitur. Quia enim in hoc saeculo cogitationes nostras vicissim minime videmus, in illo autem nostra in alterutrum corda conspicimus, quid hoc saeculum nisi noctem, et quid venturum nisi diem dixerim? Sed quemadmodum cum nox finiri et dies incipit oriri, ante solis ortum, simul aliquo modo tenebrae cum luce commistae sunt, quousque discedentis noctis reliquiae in lucem diei subsequentis perfecte vertantur, ita hujus mundi finis jam cum futuri saeculi exordio permiscetur, atque ipsae reliquiarum ejus tenebrae quadam jam rerum spiritalium permistione translucent. Et quae illius mundi sunt, multa jam cernimus, sed necdum perfecte cognoscimus, quia quasi in quodam mentis crepusculo haec velut ante solem videmus. PETRUS: Placet quod dicis. Sed de tanto viro Paschasio hoc animum ad quaestionem movet, quod post mortem ad poenalem locum ductus est, cujus feretri vestis tanti potuit ut malignus spiritus ab obsesso homine fugaretur. GREGORIUS: Hac in re magna debet omnipotentis Dei dispensatio et quam sit multiplex agnosci. Cujus judicio actum est ut idem vir Paschasius et ipse intus ad aliquantum temporis reciperet quod peccasset, et tamen ante humanos oculos mira per corpus suum post mortem faceret, qui ante mortem eis quoque cognoscentibus pia opera fecisset; ut neque hi qui bona ejus viderant, de eleemosynarum illius aestimatione fallerentur, neque ipsi sine ultione laxaretur culpa, quam nec esse culpam credidit, et idcirco hanc fletibus non exstinxit. PETRUS: Perpendo quae dicis, verumtamen hac ratione constrictus, non solum quae intelligo sed etiam ipsa quae non intelligo in me cogor jam peccata formidare. Sed quaeso, quia paulo superius sermo de locis poenalibus inferni versabatur, ubinam esse infernum putamus? super hanc terram, an sub terra esse credendus est?

CAPUT XLII. Ubi e se infernus credendus sit.

GREGORIUS: Hac de re temere definire nil audeo. Nonnulli namque in quadam terrarum parte infernum esse putaverunt: alii vero hunc sub terra esse aestimant. Sed tamen hoc animum pulsat, quia si idcirco infernum dicimus quia inferius jacet, quod terra ad coelum est, hoc esse infernus debet ad terram. Unde et fortasse per Psalmistam dicitur: Liberasti animam meam ex inferno inferiori; ut infernus superior in terra, infernus vero inferior sub terra esse videatur. Et Joannis vox in aestimatione ista concordat, qui cum signatum septem sigillis librum vidisse se diceret, quia nemo inventus est dignus neque in coelo, neque in terra, neque subtus terram aperire librum, et solvere signacula ejus, adjunxit: Et ego flebam multum. Quem tamen librum postea per leonem de tribu Juda dicit aperiri. Quo videlicet in libro quid aliud quam sacra Scriptura signatur? Quam solus Redemptor noster aperuit, qui homo factus, moriendo, resurgendo, ascendendo, cuncta mysteria quae in eo fuerant clausa patefecit. Et nullus in coelo, quia neque angelus; nullus in terra, quia neque homo vivens in corpore; nullus subtus terram dignus inventus est, quia neque animae corpore exutae aperire nobis praeter Dominum sacri eloquii secreta potuerunt. Cum ergo ad solvendum librum nullus sub terra inventus dignus dicitur, quid obstet non video ut sub terra infernus esse credatur. PETRUS: Quaeso te, unus esse gehennae ignis credendus est; an quanta peccatorum diversitas fuerit, tanta quoque aestimanda sunt et ipsa incendia esse praeparata?

GREGORIUS: Unus quidem est gehennae ignis, sed non uno modo omnes cruciat peccatores. Uniuscujusque etenim quantum exigit culpa, tanta illic sentitur poena. Nam sicut in hoc mundo sub uno sole multi consistunt, nec tamen ejusdem solis ardorem aequaliter sentiunt, quia alius plus aestuat, atque alius minus; ita illic in uno igne non unus est modus incendii; quia quod hic diversitas corporum, hoc illic agit diversitas peccatorum, ut et ignem non dissimilem habeant, et tamen eosdem singulos dissimiliter exurat. PETRUS: Nunquidnam, quaeso te, dicimus eos qui semel illic mersi fuerint, semper arsuros?

CAPUT XLIV. Si semper ardeant qui gehennae incendiis deputantur.

GREGORIUS: Constat nimis, et incunctanter verum est quia sicut finis non est gaudio bonorum, ita finis non erit tormento malorum. Nam cum Veritas dicat: Ibunt impii in supplicium aeternum, justi autem in vitam aeternam, quia verum est quod promisit, falsum procul dubio non erit quod minatus est Deus. PETRUS: Quid si quis dicat: Idcirco peccantibus aeternam poenam minatus est, ut eos a peccatorum perpetratione compesceret? GREGORIUS: Si falsum est quod minatus est ut ab injustitia corrigeret, etiam falsum est pollicitus ut ad justitiam provocaret. Sed quis hoc dicere vel insanus praesumat? Et si minatus est quod non erat impleturus, dum asserere eum misericordem volumus, fallacem (quod dici nefas est) praedicare compellimur. PETRUS: Scire velim quomodo justum sit ut culpa quae cum fine perpetrata est sine fine puniatur. GREGORIUS: Hoc recte diceretur, si districtus judex non corda hominum, sed facta pensaret. Iniqui enim ideo cum fine deliquerunt, quia cum fine vixerunt. Nam voluissent utique, si potuissent, sine fine vivere, ut potuissent sine fine peccare. Ostendunt enim quia in peccato semper vivere cupiunt, qui nunquam desinunt peccare dum vivunt. Ad magnam ergo justitiam judicantis pertinet ut nunquam careant supplicio, qui in hac vita nunquam voluerunt carere peccato. PETRUS: Sed nullus justus crudelitate pascitur, et delinquens servus a justo domino idcirco caedi praecipitur, ut a nequitia corrigatur; ad hoc ergo vapulat, ut emendari debeat. Iniqui autem gehennae ignibus traditi, si ad correctionem non perveniunt, quo fine semper ardebunt? GREGORIUS: Omnipotens Deus, quia pius est, miserorum cruciatu non pascitur; quia vero justus est, ab iniquorum ultione in perpetuum non sedatur. Sed iniqui omnes aeterno supplicio deputati, sua quidem iniquitate puniuntur, et tamen ad aliquid ardebunt, scilicet ut justi omnes et in Deo videant gaudia quae percipiunt, et in illis respiciant supplicia quae evaserunt, quatenus tanto magis in aeternum gratiae divinae debitores se esse cognoscant, quanto in aeternum mala puniri conspiciunt quae ejus adjutorio vicerunt. PETRUS: Et ubi est quod sancti sint, si pro inimicis suis quos tunc ardere viderint non orabunt, quibus utique dictum est: Pro inimicis vestris orate? GREGORIUS: Pro inimicis suis orant eo tempore quo possunt ad fructuosam poenitentiam eorum corda convertere, atque ipsa conversione salvare. Quid enim aliud pro inimicis orandum est, nisi hoc quod Apostolus ait: Ut det illis Deus poenitentiam ad cognoscendam veritatem, et resipiscant a diaboli laqueis, a quo captivi tenentur ad ipsius voluntatem? Et quomodo pro illis tunc orabunt, qui jam nullatenus possunt ad justitiae opera ab iniquitate commutari? Eadem itaque causa est cur non oretur tunc pro hominibus igni aeterno damnatis, quae nunc etiam causa est ut non oretur pro diabolo angelisque ejus aeterno supplicio deputatis. Quae nunc etiam causa est ut non orent sancti homines pro hominibus infidelibus impiisque defunctis, nisi quia pro eis utique quos aeterno deputatos supplicio jam noverunt, ante illum judicis justi conspectum orationis suae meritum cassari refugiunt. Quod si nunc quoque viventes justi mortuis et damnatis injustis minime compatiuntur, quando adhuc aliquid judicabile de sua carne sese perpeti etiam ipsi noverunt; quanto districtius tunc iniquorum tormenta respiciunt, quando, ab omni vitio corruptionis exuti, ipsi jam justitiae vicinius atque arctius inhaerebunt? Sic quippe eorum mentes per hoc quod justissimo judici inhaerent vis districtionis absorbet, ut omnino eis non libeat quidquid ab illius aeternae regulae subtilitate discordat. PETRUS: Non est jam quod responderi debeat apertae rationi. Sed haec nunc quaestio mentem movet, quomodo anima immortalis dicitur, dum constet quod in perpetuo igne moriatur.

CAPUT XLV. Quomodo anima immortalis dicitur, si constat quod mortis damnatione puniatur.

GREGORIUS: Quia duobus modis vita dicitur, duobus etiam modis mors debet intelligi. Aliud namque est quod in Deo vivimus, aliud vero quod in hoc quod conditi vel creati sumus; id est, aliud beate vivere, atque aliud est essentialiter. Anima itaque et mortalis esse intelligitur, et immortalis. Mortalis quippe, quia beate vivere amittit; immortalis autem, quia essentialiter vivere nunquam desinit, et naturae suae vitam perdere non valet, nec cum in perpetua fuerit morte damnata. Illic enim posita beata esse perdit, et esse non perdit. Qua ex re cogitur semper, ut et mortem sine morte, et defectum, sine defectu, et finem sine fine patiatur; quatenus ei mors immortalis sit, et defectus indeficiens, et finis infinitus. PETRUS: Quis hanc tam inexplicabilem damnationis sententiam, cujuslibet sit operis, ad exitum veniens non pertimescat, quando etsi jam novit quod egit, adhuc tamen facta illius quam subtiliter judicentur ignorat?

CAPUT XLVI. De quodam sancto viro qui ad mortem veniens expavit.

GREGORIUS: Ut asseris ita est, Petre. Sed plerumque de culpis minimis ipse solus pavor egredientes justorum animas purgat, sicut narrari de quodam sancto viro mecum frequenter audisti. Qui ad mortem veniens vehementer timuit, sed post mortem discipulis in stola alba apparuit, et quam praeclare sit susceptus indicavit.

CAPUT XLVII. Quod quidam ne in morte timeant, revelatione roborantur; et de Antonio, et Merulo, et Joanne monachis.

Nonnunquam vero omnipotens Deus trepidantium mentes quibusdam prius revelationibus roborat, ut in morte minime pertimescant. Nam quidam mecum in monasterio frater Antonius nomine, vivebat, qui multis quotidianisque lacrymis ad gaudia patriae coelestis anhelabat. Cumque studiosissime, et cum magno fervore desiderii sacra eloquia meditaretur, non in eis verba scientiae, sed fletum compunctionis inquirebat, quatenus per haec excitata mens ejus inardesceret, et ima deserens, ad regionem coelestis patriae per contemplationem volaret. Huic per visionem nocturnam dictum est: Paratus esto, et quia Dominus jussit, migra. Cumque ille non habere se sumptus ad migrandum diceret, responsum protinus audivit, dicens: Si de peccatis tuis agitur, dimissa sunt. Quod cum semel audisset, et magno adhuc metu trepidaret, nocte quoque alia eisdem verbis est admonitus. Tunc post quinque dies febre correptus, cunctis fratribus orantibus flentibusque, defunctus est. Alius etiam frater in eodem monasterio Merulus dicebatur, vehementer lacrymis atque orationibus intentus: psalmodia vero ex ore illius pene nullo tempore cessare consueverat, excepto cum aut alimentum corpori, aut membra dedisset sopori. Huic nocturna visione apparuit quod ex albis floribus corona de coelo in caput illius descendebat. Qui mox molestia corporis occupatus, cum magna securitate animi atque hilaritate defunctus est. Ad cujus sepulcrum dum Petrus, qui nunc monasterio praeest, sibi sepulturam facere post annos quatuordecim voluisset, tanta, ut asserit, de eodem sepulcro illius fragrantia suavitatis emanavit, ac si illic florum omnium fuissent odoramenta congregata. Qua ex re manifeste patuit quam verum fuit quod per nocturnam visionem vidit. In eodem quoque monasterio alius quidam Joannes dictus est, magnae indolis adolescens, qui aetatem suam intellectu et humilitate, dulcedine et gravitate transibat. Huic aegrotanti atque ad extremum deducto, per nocturnam visionem quidam senex apparuit, et hunc virga tetigit, eique dixit: Surge, ex hac enim molestia modo minime morieris, sed paratus esto, quia longum tempus hic facturus non eris. Qui dum jam esset a medicis desperatus, repente sanatus est, atque convaluit. Rem quam viderat narravit; seque per biennium in Dei servitio, sicut praedixi, ultra aetatis suae annos exhibuit. Ante hoc autem triennium, cum quidam frater fuisset mortuus, atque in ejusdem monasterii coemeterio a nobis sepultus, cunctis nobis ab eodem coemeterio exeuntibus, idem Joannes, sicut postmodum pallens et tremens indicavit, illic nobis discedentibus inventus, ab eodem fratre qui mortuus fuerat de sepulcro vocatus est. Quod mox etiam subsequens finis edocuit. Nam post dies decem, invasus febribus carne solutus est. PETRUS: Doceri velim si hoc quod per nocturnas visiones ostenditur debeat observari.

CAPUT XLVIII. An observanda sint somnia, et quot sint modi somniorum.

GREGORIUS: In hoc, Petre, sciendum est quia sex modis tangunt animum imagines somniorum. Aliquando namque somnia ventris plenitudine vel inanitate, aliquando vero illusione, aliquando cogitatione simul et illusione, aliquando revelatione, aliquando autem cogitatione simul et revelatione generantur. Sed duo quae prima diximus, omnes experimento cognoscimus; subjuncta autem quatuor, in sacrae Scripturae paginis invenimus. Somnia etenim, nisi plerumque ab occulto hoste per illusionem fierent, nequaquam hoc vir sapiens indicaret, dicens: Multos enim errare fecerunt somnia, et exciderunt sperantes in illis. Vel certe, Non augurabimini, nec observabitis somnia. Quibus profecto verbis cujus sint detestationis ostenditur, quae auguriis conjunguntur. Rursum nisi aliquando ex cogitatione simul et illusione procedederent, vir sapiens minime dixisset: Multas curas sequuntur somnia. Et nisi aliquando somni ex mysterio revelationis orirentur, nec Joseph praeferendum se fratribus somnio videret; nec sponsum Mariae, ut ablato puero in Aegyptum fugeret, per somnium

Angelus admoneret. Rursum nisi aliquando ex cogitatione simul et revelatione procederent, nequaquam Daniel propheta, Nabuchodonosor visionem disserens, a radice cogitationis inchoasset, dicens: Tu rex coepisti cogitare in stratu tuo quid esset futurum post haec, et qui revelat mysteria ostendit tibi quae ventura sunt. Et paulo post: Videbas, et ecce quasi statua una grandis, statua illa magna, et statura sublimis stabat contra te, etc. Daniel itaque dum somnium et implendum reverenter insinuat. et ex qua ortum sit cogitatione manifestat, patenter ostenditur, quia hoc plerumque ex cogitatione simul et revelatione generetur. Sed nimirum cum somnia tot rerum qualitatibus alternent, tanto eis credi difficilius debet, quanto et ex quo impulsu veniant, facilius non elucet. Sancti autem viri inter illusiones atque revelationes ipsas visionum voces aut imagines quodam intimo sapore discernunt, ut sciant vel quid a bono spiritu percipiant, vel quid ab illusione patiantur. Nam si erga haec mens cauta non fuerit, per deceptorem spiritum multis se vanitatibus immergit, qui nonnunquam solet multa vera praedicere, ut ad extremum valeat animam ex aliqua falsitate laqueare.

CAPUT XLIX. De quodam viro cui per somnium longa vitae spatia promissa sunt, et in brevi tempore morte resecata.

Sicut cuidam nostrum nuper certum est contigisse, qui dum somnia vehementer attenderet, ei per somnium longa spatia hujus vitae promissa sunt. Cumque multas pecunias pro longioris vitae stipendiis collegisset, ita repente defunctus est, ut intactas omnes relinqueret, et ipse secum nihil ex bono opere portaret.

CAPUT L. An prosit animabus, si mortuorum corpora in ecclesia fuerint sepulta.

PETRUS: Quis ille sit memini: sed, quaeso te, ea quae coepimus, exsequamur. Putamusne animabus aliquid prodesse si mortuorum corpora fuerint in Ecclesiis sepulta? GREGORIUS: Quos gravia peccata non deprimunt, hoc prodest mortuis si in ecclesia sepeliantur, quod eorum proximi quoties ad eadem sacra loca conveniunt, suorum quorum sepulcra conspiciunt, recordantur, et pro eis Domino preces fundunt. Nam quos peccata gravia deprimunt, non ad absolutionem potius quam ad majorem damnationis cumulum eorum corpora in ecclesiis ponuntur. Quod melius ostendimus, si ea quae diebus nostris gesta sunt, breviter enarremus.

CAPUT LI. De quadam sanctimoniali femina in Ecclesia sancti Laurentii sepulta, quae dimidia apparuit incensa.

Vir namque vitae venerabilis Felix, Portuensis episcopus, in Sabinensi provincia ortus atque nutritus est. Qui quamdam sanctimonialem feminam in loco eodem fuisse testatur, quae carnis quidem continentiam habuit, sed linguae procacitatem atque stultiloquium non declinavit. Haec igitur defuncta, atque in ecclesia sepulta est. Eadem autem nocte custos ejusdem ecclesiae per revelationem vidit quia deducta ante sacrum altare per medium secabatur, et pars una illius igne cremabatur, et pars altera intacta remanebat. Cumque hoc surgens mane fratribus narrasset, et locum vellet ostendere in quo fuerat igne consumpta, ipsa flammae combustio ita ante altare in marmoribus apparuit, ac si illic eadem femina igne corporeo fuisset concremata. Qua ex re aperte datur intelligi quia hi quibus peccata dimissa non fuerint, ad evitandum judicium sacris locis post mortem non valeant adjuvari.

CAPUT LII. De Valeriani patricii sepultura.

Joannes quoque vir magnificus, in hac urbe locum praefectorum servans, cujus gravitatis atque veritatis sit novimus: qui mihi testatus est Valerianum patricium in civitate quae Brixa dicitur fuisse defunctum. Cui ejusdem civitatis episcopus, accepto pretio, locum in ecclesia praebuit, in quo sepeliri debuisset. Qui videlicet Valerianus usque ad aetatem decrepitam levis ac lubricus exstitit, modumque suis pravitatibus ponere contempsit. Eadem vero nocte qua sepultus est, beatus Faustinus martyr, in cujus Ecclesia corpus illius fuerat humatum, custodi suo apparuit, dicens. Vade, et dic episcopo ut projiciat hinc has fetentes carnes quas hic posuit; quod si non fecerit, die trigesimo ipse morietur. Quam visionem custos episcopo timuit confiteri, et rursus admonitus declinavit. Die autem trigesimo ejusdem civitatis episcopus, cum vespertina hora sanus atque incolumis ad lectum redisset, subita et inopinata morte defunctus est.

CAPUT LIII. De corpore Valentini ab ecclesia post mortem projecto.

Adest quoque in praesenti venerabilis frater Venantius Lunensis episcopus, et magnificus Liberius vir nobilissimus atque veracissimus, qui se scire, suosque homines interfuisse testantur ei rei quam narrant nuper in Genuensi urbe contigisse. Ibi namque, ut dicunt, Valentinus nomine, ecclesiae Mediolanensis defensor, defunctus est, vir valde lubricus, et cunctis levitatibus occupatus, cujus corpus in ecclesia beati martyris Syri sepultum est. Nocte autem media in eadem ecclesia factae sunt voces, ac si quis violenter ex ea expelleretur atque traheretur foras. Ad quas nimirum voces cucurrerunt custodes, et viderunt duos quosdam teterrimos spiritus, qui ejusdem Valentini pedes quadam ligatura strinxerant, et eum ab ecclesia clamantem ac nimium vociferantem foras trahebant, qui videlicet exterriti ad sua strata reversi sunt. Mane autem facto aperientes sepulcrum in quo idem Valentinus positus fuerat, ejus corpus non invenerunt. Cumque extra ecclesiam quaererent ubi projectum esset, invenerunt hoc in sepulcro alio positum, ligatis adhuc pedibus, sicut ab ecclesia fuerat abstractum. Ex qua re, Petre, collige quia hi quos peccata gravia deprimunt, si in sacro loco sepeliri se faciant, restat ut etiam de sua praesumptione judicentur, quatenus eos sacra loca non liberent, sed etiam culpa temeritatis accuset.

CAPUT LIV. De tinctoris corpore in Ecclesia sepulto, et postmodum non invento.

Nam quid quoque in hac urbe contigerit, tinctorum, qui hic habitant, plurimi testantur, quod quidam artis eorum primus, cum defunctus fuisset, in Ecclesia beati Januarii martyris juxta portam sancti Laurentii a conjuge sua sepultus est. Sequenti autem nocte ex eadem sepultura, audiente custode, ejus spiritus coepit clamare: Ardeo, ardeo. Cum vero diu has voces emisisset, custos hoc ejus nuntiavit uxori. Uxor vero illius eos qui diligenter inspicerent artis ejusdem viros transmisit ad ecclesiam, volens cognoscere qualiter ejus corpus esset in sepulcro, de quo talia clamaret. Qui aperientes sepulcrum, vestimenta quidem intacta repererunt, quae nunc usque in eadem ecclesia pro ejusdem causae testimonio servantur, corpus vero illius omnino non invenerunt, ac si in sepulcro eodem positum non fuisset. Qua ex re colligendum est qua ultione anima ejus damnata sit, cujus et caro est ab ecclesia projecta. Quid igitur sacra loca sepultis prosunt, quando hi qui indigni sunt ab eisdem sacris locis divinitus projiciuntur?

CAPUT LV. Quid sit quod post mortem valeat ad absolutionem animas adjuvare; et de Centumcellensi presbytero; ac de anima Justi monachi.

PETRUS: Quidnam ergo esse poterit, quod mortuorum valeat animabus prodesse? GREGORIUS: Si culpae post mortem insolubiles non sunt, multum solet animas etiam post mortem sacra oblatio hostiae salutaris adjuvare; ita ut hanc nonnunquam ipsae defunctorum animae expetere videantur. Nam praedictus Felix episcopus a quodam vitae venerabilis presbytero, qui usque ante biennium vixit, et in dioecesi Centumcellensis urbis habitabat, atque ecclesiae beati Joannis, quae in loco qui Taurania dicitur sita est, praeerat, cognovisse se asserit quod idem presbyter in eodem loco in quo aquae calidae vapores nimios faciunt, quoties corporis necessitas exigebat, lavari consueverat. Ubi dum die quadam fuisset ingressus, invenit quemdam incognitum virum ad suum obsequium praeparatum, qui sibi de pedibus calceamenta abstraheret, vestimenta susciperet, et exeunti de caloribus sabana praeberet, atque omne ministerium cum magno famulatu perageret. Cumque hoc saepius fieret, idem presbyter die quadam ad balnea iturus, intra semetipsum cogitans, dixit: Viro illi qui mihi solet tam devotissime ad lavandum obsequi ingratus apparere non debeo, sed aliquid me necesse est ei pro munere portare. Tunc duas secum oblationum coronas detulit. Qui mox ut pervenit ad locum, hominem invenit, atque ex more ejus obsequio in omnibus usus est. Lavit itaque, et cum jam vestitus voluisset egredi, hoc quod secum detulerat, obsequenti sibi viro pro benedictione obtulit, petens ut benigne susciperet quod ei gratia charitatis offerret. Cui ille moerens afflictusque respondit: Mihi ista quare das, Pater? Iste panis sanctus est, ego hunc manducare non possum. Ego etenim quem vides, hujus loci dominus aliquando fui, sed pro culpis meis hic post mortem deputatus sum. Si autem mihi praestare vis, omnipotenti Deo pro me offer hunc panem, ut pro peccatis meis intervenias. Et tunc exauditum te esse cognosce, cum huc ad lavandum veneris, et me minime repereris. In quibus verbis disparuit, et is qui homo esse videbatur, evanescendo innotuit quia spiritus fuit. Idem vero presbyter hebdomada continua se pro eo in lacrymis afflixit, salutarem hostiam quotidie obtulit, et reversus post ad balneum, eum jam minime invenit. Qua ex re quantum prosit animabus immolatio sacrae oblationis ostenditur, quando hanc et ipsi mortuorum spiritus a viventibus petunt, et signa indicant quibus per eam absoluti videantur. Sed neque hoc silendum existimo quod actum in meo monasterio ante hoc triennium reminiscor. Quidam namque monachus, Justus nomine, medicinali arte fuerat imbutus, qui mihi in eodem monasterio constituto sedule obsequi, atque in assiduis aegritudinibus meis excubare consueverat. Hic itaque languore corporis praeventus, ad extremum deductus est. Cui in ipsa sua molestia frater germanus, nomine Copiosus, serviebat, qui ipse quoque nunc in hac Urbe per eamdem medicinae artem temporalis vitae stipendia sectatur. Sed praedictus Justus cum jam se ad extremum pervenisse cognovisset, eidem Copioso fratri suo quia occultos tres aureos haberet innotuit. Quod nimirum fratribus non potuit celari, sed subtiliter indagantes, atque illius omnia medicamenta perscrutantes, eosdem tres aureos invenerunt absconsos in medicamine. Quod mox ut mihi nuntiatum est, tantum malum de fratre qui nobiscum communiter vixerat aequanimiter ferre non valui, quippe quia ejusdem nostri monasterii semper regula fuerat ut cuncti fratres ita communiter viverent, quatenus eis singulis nulla habere propria liceret. Tunc nimio moerore perculsus cogitare coepi vel quid ad purgationem morientis facerem, vel quid ad exemplum viventibus fratribus providerem. Pretioso igitur, ejusdem monasterii praeposito, ad me accersito, dixi: Vade, et nullus ex fratribus se ad eum morientem jungat, nec sermonem consolationis ex cujuslibet eorum ore percipiat; sed cum in morte constitutus fratres exquisierit, ei suus carnalis frater dicat, quia pro solidis quos occulte habuit a cunctis fratribus abominatus sit, ut saltem in morte de culpa sua mentem ipsius amaritudo transverberet, atque a peccato quod perpetravit, purget. Cum vero mortuus fuerit, corpus illius cum fratrum corporibus non ponatur, sed quolibet in sterquilinio fossam facite, in ea corpus ejus projicite, ibique super eum tres aureos, quos reliquit, jactate, omnes simul clamantes: Pecunia tua tecum sit in perditionem; et sic eum terra operite. In quibus utrisque rebus, unam morienti, alteram vero volui prodesse fratribus viventibus, ut et illum amaritudo mortis a culpa solubilem faceret, et istos avaritiae tanta damnatio misceri in culpa prohiberet, quod ita factum est. Nam cum idem monachus pervenisset ad mortem, atque anxie se quaereret commendare fratribus, et nullus e fratribus ei applicari et loqui dignaretur, ei carnalis frater cur ab omnibus esset abominatus indicavit. Qui protinus de reatu suo vehementer ingemuit, atque in ipsa sua tristitia e corpore exivit, qui ita est sepultus ut dixeram. Sed fratres omnes eadem ejus sententia conturbati, coeperunt singuli extrema quaeque et vilia, et quae eis habere regulariter semper licuerat, ad medium proferre, vehementerque formidare ne quid apud se esset unde reprehendi potuissent. Cum vero post mortem ejus triginta jam essent dies evoluti, coepit animus meus defuncto fratri compati, ejusque cum dolore gravi supplicia pensare, et si quod esset ereptionis ejus remedium quaerere. Tunc evocato ad me eodem Pretioso monasterii nostri praeposito, tristis dixi: Diu est quod frater ille qui defunctus est in igne cruciatur, debemus ei aliquid charitatis impendere, et eum in quantum possumus, ut eripiatur, adjuvare. Vade itaque, et ab hodierna die diebus triginta continuis offerre pro eo sacrificium stude, ut nullus omnino praetermittatur dies quo pro absolutione illius hostia salutaris non immoletur. Qui protinus abscessit, et dictis paruit. Nobis autem alia curantibus, atque dies evolutos non numerantibus, idem frater qui defunctus fuerat, nocte quadam fratri suo germano Copioso per visionem apparuit. Quem ille cum vidisset, inquisivit, dicens: Quid est, frater, quomodo es? Cui respondit: Nunc usque male fui, sed jam modo bene sum, quia hodie communionem recepi. Quod idem Copiosus pergens protinus indicavit fratribus in monasterio. Fratres vero sollicite computaverunt dies, et ipse dies exstiterat quo pro eo tricesima oblatio fuerat impleta. Cumque Copiosus nesciret quid pro eo fratres agerent, et fratres ignorassent quid de illo Copiosus vidisset, uno eodemque tempore dum cognoscit ille quid isti egerant, atque isti cognoscunt quid ille viderat, concordante simul visione et sacrificio, res aperte claruit quia frater qui defunctus fuerat per salutarem hostiam evasit supplicium.

CAPUT LVI. De vita et transitu Cassii Narniensis episcopi.

PETRUS: Mira sunt valde quae audio, et non mediocriter laeta. GREGORIUS: Ne nobis in dubium veniant verba mortuorum, confirmant haec facta viventium. Nam vir vitae venerabilis Cassius Narniensis episcopus, qui quotidianum offerre consueverat Deo sacrificium, seque in lacrymis inter ipsa sacrificiorum arcana mactabat; mandatum Domini per cujusdam sui presbyteri visionem suscepit, dicens: Age quod agis, operare quod operaris, non cesset pes tuus, non cesset manus tua, natali Apostolorum venies ad me, et retribuam tibi mercedem tuam. Qui post annos septem ipso natalitio apostolorum die cum missarum solemnia peregisset, et mysteria sacrae communionis accepisset, e corpore exivit.

CAPUT LVII. De quodam ab hostibus capto, cujus vincula oblationis hora solvebantur; et de Baraca nauta per salutarem hostiam a naufragio liberato.

Hoc quoque audivimus, quemdam apud hostes in captivitate positum, et in vinculis religatum fuisse, pro quo sua conjux diebus certis sacrificium offerre consueverat: qui longo post tempore ad conjugem reversus, quibus diebus ejus vincula solverentur innotuit, ejusque conjux illos fuisse dies in quibus pro eo sacrificium offerebat recognovit, et ex alia nobis re quae ante annos septem gesta est certissime confirmatur. Agatho enim Panormitanus episcopus, sicut fideles mihi ac religiosi viri multi testati sunt atque testantur, cum beatae memoriae antecessoris mei tempore jussus esset ut Romam veniret, vim nimiae tempestatis pertulit, ita ut se ex tanto undarum periculo evadere posse diffideret. Nauta vero illius, Baraca nomine, qui nunc ejusdem Ecclesiae clericatus officio fungitur, post navem carabum regebat, ruptoque fune cum eodem carabo quem regebat inter undarum cumulos repente disparuit. Navis autem cui episcopus praeerat, tandem post multa pericula ad Usticam insulam fluctibus quassata pervenit. Cumque die tertio episcopus nautam qui ab eo abreptus in carabo fuerat in nulla maris parte videret apparere, vehementer afflictus mortuum credidit, sed, per obsequium charitatis, unum quod mortuo debebat impendit, ut omnipotenti Deo pro absolutione ejus animae offerre sacrificium victimae salutaris juberet. Quo oblato, restaurata nave, perrexit ad Italiam. Cumque ad Romanum portum venisset, illic nautam reperit quem mortuum putabat. Tunc inopinata exsultatione gavisus est, et eum qualiter tot diebus in illo tanto maris periculo vivere potuisset inquisivit. Qui videlicet indicavit quoties in illius tempestatis fluctibus cum eodem quem regebat fuisset carabo versatus, qualiter cum illo undis pleno nataverat, et quoties eo a superiori parte deorsum verso ipse carinae ejus supersederat; adjungens cum diebus ac noctibus hoc incessanter faceret, jamque ejus virtus funditus ex fame simul et labore cecidisset, quo eum ordine divina misericordia servaverit, indicavit. Etenim quod etiam nunc usque testatur, dicens: Laborans in fluctibus atque deficiens, subito mentis pondere sum gravatus, ita ut neque vigilare me crederem, neque depressus somno essem; et ecce in eodem medio mari me posito, quidam apparuit, qui mihi panem ad refectionem detulit. Quem mox ut comedi, vires recepi, nec longe post navis transiens adfuit, quae me ab illo undarum periculo suscepit, atque ad terram deduxit. Quod scilicet episcopus audiens requisivit diem atque illum fuisse diem reperit quo pro eo presbyter in Usticula insula Deo omnipotenti hostiam sacrae oblationis immolavit. PETRUS: Ea quae narras, ipse quoque in Sicilia positus agnovi. GREGORIUS: Idcirco credo, quia hoc tam aperte cum viventibus ac nescientibus agitur, ut cunctis haec agentibus ac nescientibus ostendatur quia si insolubilos culpae non fuerint, ad absolutionem prodesse etiam mortuis victima sacrae oblationis possit. Sed sciendum est quia illis sacrae victimae mortuis prosint, qui hic vivendo obtinuerunt ut eos etiam post mortem bona adjuvent, quae hic pro ipsis ab aliis fiunt.

CAPUT LVIII. De virtute ac mysterio victimae salutaris.

Inter haec autem pensandum est quod tutior sit via ut bonum quod quisque post mortem suam sperat agi per alios, agat ipse dum vivit per se. Beatius quippe est liberum exire, quam post vincula libertatem quaerere. Debemus itaque praesens saeculum vel quia jam conspicimus defluxisse, tota mente contemnere, quotidiana Deo lacrymarum sacrificia, quotidianas carnis ejus et sanguinis hostias immolare. Haec namque singulariter victima ab aeterno interitu animam salvat, quae illam nobis mortem Unigeniti per mysterium reparat, qui licet resurgens a mortuis jam non moritur, et mors ei ultra non dominabitur, tamen in semetipso immortaliter atque incorruptibiliter vivens, pro nobis iterum in hoc mysterio sacrae oblationis immolatur. Ejus quippe ibi corpus sumitur, ejus caro in populi salutem partitur; ejus sanguis non jam in manus infidelium, sed in ora fidelium funditur. Hinc ergo pensemus quale sit pro nobis hoc sacrificium, quod pro absolutione nostra passionem unigeniti Filii semper imitatur. Quis enim fidelium habere dubium possit, in ipsa immolationis hora ad sacerdotis vocem coelos aperiri, in illo Jesu Christi mysterio angelorum choros adesse, summis ima sociari, terrena coelestibus jungi, unumque ex visibilibus atque invisibilibus fieri?

Sed necesse est ut cum haec agimus, nosmetipsos Deo in cordis contritione mactemus, quia qui passionis dominicae mysteria celebramus, debemus imitari quod agimus. Tunc ergo vere pro nobis hostia erit Deo, cum nos ipsos hostiam fecerimus. Sed studendum nobis est ut etiam post orationis tempora, in quantum Deo largiente possumus, in ipso animam suo pondere et vigore servemus; ne post cogitatio fluxa dissolvat, ne vana menti laetitia subrepat, et lucrum compunctionis anima per incuriam fluxae cogitationis perdat. Sic quippe quod proposcerat Anna obtinere meruit, quia post lacrymas in eodem mentis vigore permansit. De qua nimirum scriptum est:

Vultusque ejus non sunt amplius in diversa mutati. Quae igitur non est oblita quod petiit, non est privata munere quod poposcit.

CAPUT LX De relaxandis culpis alienis, ut nostrae nobis relaxentur.

Sed inter haec sciendum est quia ille recte sui delicti veniam postulat, qui prius hoc quod in ipso delinquitur relaxat. Munus enim non accipitur, nisi ante discordia ab animo repellatur, dicente Veritate: Si offers munus tuum ante altare, et ibi recordatus fueris quia frater tuus habet aliquid adversum te, relinque munus tuum ante altare, et vade prius reconciliari fratri tuo, et tunc veniens offeres munus tuum. Qua in re pensandum est, cum omnis culpa munere solvatur, quam gravis est culpa discordiae, pro qua nec munus accipitur. Debemus itaque ad proximum quamvis longe positum, longeque disjunctum, mente ire, eique animum subdere, humilitate illum ac benevolentia placare, ut scilicet Conditor noster dum tale placitum nostrae mentis aspexerit, a peccato nos solvat, qui munus pro culpa sumit. Veritatis autem voce attestante, didicimus quia servus qui decem millia talenta debebat, cum poenitentiam ageret, absolutionem debiti a Domino accepit; sed quia conservo suo centum sibi denarios debenti debitum non dimisit, et hoc est jussus exigi quod ei fuerat jam dimissum. Ex quibus videlicet dictis constat, quia si hoc quod in nos delinquitur, ex corde non dimittimus, et illud rursus a nobis exigitur quod nobis jam per poenitentiam dimissum fuisse gaudebamus. Igitur dum per indulti temporis spatium licet, dum judex sustinet, dum conversionem nostram is qui culpas examinat exspectat, conflemus in lacrymis duritiam mentis, formemus in proximis gratiam benignitatis. Et fidenter dico quia salutari hostia post mortem non indigebimus, si ante mortem Deo ipsi hostia fuerimus.

Regulae Pastoralis Liber

PRIMA PARS. AD JOANNEM EPISCOPUM CIVITATIS RAVENNAE

Reverentissimo et sanctissimo fratri Joanni coepiscopo, Gregorius. Pastoralis curae me pondera fugere delitescendo voluisse, benigna, frater carissime, atque humili intentione reprehendis; quae ne quibusdam levia esse videantur, praesentis libri stylo exprimo de eorum gravedine omne quod penso, ut et haec qui vacat, incaute non expetat; et qui incaute expetiit, adeptum se esse pertimescat. Quadripartita vero disputatione liber iste distinguitur, ut ad lectoris sui animum ordinatis allegationibus quasi quibusdam pastibus gradiatur. Nam cum rerum necessitas exposcit, pensandum valde est ad culmen quisque regiminis qualiter veniat; atque ad hoc rite perveniens, qualiter vivat; et bene vivens, qualiter doceat; et recte docens, infirmitatem suam quotidie quanta consideratione cognoscat, ne aut humilitas accessum fugiat, aut perventioni vita contradicat; aut vitam doctrina destituat; aut doctrinam praesumptio extollat. Prius ergo appetitum timor temperet: post autem magisterium quod a non quaerente suscipitur, vita commendet; ac deinde necesse est ut pastoris bonum quod vivendo ostenditur, etiam loquendo propagetur. Ad extremum vero superest ut perfecta quaeque opera consideratio propriae infirmitatis deprimat, ne haec ante occulti arbitrii oculos tumor elationis exstinguat. Sed quia sunt plerique mihi imperitia similes, qui dum metiri se nesciunt, quae non didicerint docere concupiscunt; qui pondus magisterii tanto levius aestimant, quanto vim magnitudinis illius ignorant; ab ipso libri hujus reprehendantur exordio; ut quia indocti ac praecipites doctrinae arcem tenere appetunt, a praecipitationis suae ausibus in ipsa locutionis nostrae janua repellantur.

Nulla ars doceri praesumitur, nisi intenta prius meditatione discatur. Ab imperitis ergo pastorale magisterium qua temeritate suscipitur, quando ars est artium regimen animarum. Quis autem cogitationum vulnera occultiora esse nesciat vulneribus viscerum? Et tamen saepe qui nequaquam spiritalia praecepta cognoverunt, cordis se medicos profiteri non metuunt: dum qui pigmentorum vim nesciunt, videri medici carnis erubescunt. Sed quia auctore Deo ad religionis reverentiam omne jam praesentis saeculi culmen inclinatur, sunt nonnulli qui intra sanctam Ecclesiam per speciem regiminis gloriam affectant honoris; videri doctores appetunt, transcendere caeteros concupiscunt, atque attestante Veritate, primas salutationes in foro, primos in coenis recubitus, primas in conventibus cathedras quaerunt (Matth. XXIII, 6, 7); qui susceptum curae pastoralis officium ministrare digne tanto magis nequeunt, quanto ad humilitatis magisterium ex sola elatione pervenerunt. Ipsa quippe in magisterio lingua confunditur, quando aliud discitur, et aliud docetur. Quos contra Dominus per prophetam queritur, dicens: Ipsi regnaverunt, et non ex me; principes exstiterunt, et ego ignoravi (Osee VIII, 4). Ex se namque, et non ex arbitrio summi Rectoris regnant, qui nullis fulti virtutibus nequaquam divinitus vocati, sed sua cupidine accensi, culmen regiminis rapiunt potius quam assequuntur. Quos tamen internus judex et provehit, et nescit, quia quos permittendo tolerat, profecto per judicium reprobationis ignorat. Unde ad se quibusdam et post miracula venientibus dicit: Recedite a me operarii iniquitatis, nescio qui estis (Luc. XIII, 27). Pastorum imperitia voce Veritatis increpatur, cum per Prophetam dicitur: Ipsi pastores ignoraverunt intelligentiam (Isai. LVI, 11). Quos rursum Dominus detestatur, dicens: Et tenentes legem nescierunt me (Jer. II, 8). Et nesciri ergo se ab eis Veritas queritur, et nescire se principatum nescientium protestatur, quia profecto hi qui ea quae sunt Domini nesciunt, a Domino nesciuntur, Paulo attestante qui ait: Si quis autem ignorat, ignorabitur (I Cor. XIV, 38). Quae nimirum Pastorum saepe imperitia meritis congruit subjectorum, quia quamvis lumen scientiae sua culpa exigente non habeant, districto tamen judicio agitur, ut per eorum ignorantiam hi etiam qui sequuntur offendant. Hinc namque in Evangelio per semetipsam Veritas dicit: Si caecus caeco ducatum praebeat, ambo in foveam cadunt (Matth. XV, 14). Hinc Psalmista non optantis animo, sed prophetantis ministerio denuntiat, dicens: Obscurentur oculi eorum ne videant, et dorsum illorum semper incurva (Psal. LXVIII, 24). Oculi quippe sunt, qui in ipsa honoris summi facie positi, providendi itineris officium susceperunt: quibus hi nimirum qui subsequenter inhaerent; dorsa nominantur. Obscuratis ergo oculis dorsum flectitur, quia cum lumen scientiae perdunt qui praeeunt, profecto ad portanda peccatorum curvantur onera qui sequuntur.

CAPUT II

Ne locum regiminis subeant, qui vivendo non perficiunt quae meditando didicerunt.

Et sunt nonnulli qui solerti cura spiritalia praecepta perscrutantur, sed quae intelligendo penetrant, vivendo conculcant; repente docent quae non opere, sed meditatione didicerunt; et quod verbis praedicant, moribus impugnant. Unde fit ut cum Pastor per abrupta graditur, ad praecipitium grex sequatur. Hinc namque per prophetam Dominus contra contemptibilem Pastorum scientiam queritur, dicens: Cum ipsi limpidissimam aquam biberetis, reliquam pedibus vestris turbabatis; et oves meae quae conculcata pedibus vestris fuerant, pascebantur; et quae pedes vestri turbaverant, haec bibebant (Ezech. XXXIV, 18, 19). Aquam quippe limpidissimam Pastores bibunt, cum fluenta veritatis recte intelligentes hauriunt. Sed eamdem aquam pedibus perturbare, est sanctae meditationis studia male vivendo corrumpere. Aquam scilicet eorum turbatam pedibus oves bibunt, cum subjecti quique non sectantur verba quae audiunt, sed sola quae conspiciunt exempla pravitatis imitantur. Qui cum dicta sitiunt, quia per opera pervertuntur, quasi corruptis fontibus in potibus lutum sumunt. Hinc quoque scriptum est per prophetam: Laqueus ruinae populi mei, sacerdotes mali (Osee. V, 1; IX, 8). Hinc rursum de sacerdotibus Dominus per prophetam dicit: Facti sunt domui Israel in offendiculum iniquitatis. Nemo quippe amplius in Ecclesia nocet, quam qui perverse agens, nomen vel ordinem sanctitatis habet. Delinquentem namque hunc redarguere nullus praesumit; et in exemplum culpa vehementer extenditur, quando pro reverentia ordinis peccator honoratur. Indigni autem quique tanti reatus pondera fugerent, si veritatis sententiam sollicita cordis aure pensarent, quae ait: Qui scandalizaverit unum de pusillis istis qui in me credunt, expedit ei ut suspendatur mola asinaria in collo ejus, et demergatur in profundum maris (Matth. XVIII, 6). Per molam quippe asinariam, secularis vitae circuitus ac labor exprimitur, et per profundum maris extrema damnatio designatur. Qui ergo ad sanctitatis speciem deductus, vel verbo caeteros destruit, vel exemplo; melius profecto fuerat, ut hunc ad mortem sub exteriori habitu terrena acta constringerent, quam sacra officia in culpa caeteris imitabilem demonstrarent, quia nimirum si solus caderet, utcumque hunc tolerabilior inferni poena cruciaret.

CAPUT III

De pondere regiminis; et quod adversa quaeque despicienda sunt, et prospera formidanda.

Haec itaque breviter diximus, ut quantum sit pondus regiminis monstraremus, ne temerare sacra regimina quisquis his impar est audeat, et per concupiscentiam culminis, ducatum suscipiat perditionis. Hinc enim pie Jacobus prohibet, dicens: Nolite plures magistri fieri, fratres mei (Jac. III,

1). Hinc ipse Dei hominumque Mediator regnum percipere vitavit in terris, qui supernorum quoque spirituum scientiam sensumque transcendens, ante saecula regnat in coelis. Scriptum quippe est: Jesus ergo cum cognovisset quia venturi essent ut raperent eum, et facerent eum regem, fugit iterum in montem ipse solus (Joan. VI, 15). Quis enim principari hominibus tam sine culpa potuisset, quam is qui hos nimirum regeret, quos ipse creaverat? Sed quia idcirco in carne venerat, ut non solum nos per passionem redimeret, verum etiam per conversationem doceret, exemplum se sequentibus praebens, rex fieri noluit, ad crucis vero patibulum sponte convenit; oblatam gloriam culminis fugit, poenam probrosae mortis appetiit; ut membra ejus videlicet discerent favores mundi fugere, terrores minime timere, pro veritate adversa diligere, prospera formidando declinare, quia et ista saepe per tumorem cor inquinant, et illa per dolorem purgant. In istis se animus erigit, in illis autem etiamsi quando se erexerit, sternit. In istis sese homo obliviscitur, in illis vero ad sui memoriam nolens etiam coactusque revocatur. In istis saepe et anteacta bona depereunt, in illis autem longi quoque temporis admissa terguntur. Nam plerumque adversitatis magisterio sub disciplina cor premitur: quod si ad regiminis culmen eruperit, in elationem protinus usu gloriae permutatur. Sic Saul, qui indignum se prius considerans fugerat, mox ut regni gubernacula suscepit, intumuit (I Reg. X, 22; XV, 17, 30); honorari namque coram populo cupiens, dum reprehendi publice noluit, ipsum qui in regnum se unxerat, scidit (Act. XIII, 22). Sic David auctoris judicio pene in cunctis actibus placens, mox ut pressurae pondere caruit, in tumorem vulneris erupit (II Reg. XI, 3, seq.), factusque est in morte viri crudeliter rigidus, qui in appetitu feminae fuit enerviter fluxus; et qui malis ante noverat pie parcere, in bonorum quoque necem post didicit sine obstaculo retractationis anhelare (Ibid., 15). Prius quippe ferire deprehensum persecutorem noluit, et post cum damno desudantis exercitus etiam devotum militem exstinxit. Quem profecto ab electorum numero culpa longius raperet, nisi hunc ad veniam flagella revocassent.

CAPUT IV

Quod plerumque occupatio regiminis soliditatem dissipet mentis.

Saepe suscepta cura regiminis cor per diversa diverberat, et impar quisque invenitur ad singula, dum confusa mente dividitur ad multa. Unde quidam sapiens provide prohibet, dicens: Fili, ne in multis sint actus tui (Eccli. XI, 10), quia videlicet nequaquam plene in uniuscujusque operis ratione colligitur, dum mens per diversa partitur. Cumque foras per insolentem curam trahitur, a timoris intimi soliditate vacuatur: fit in exteriorum dispositione sollicita, et sui solummodo ignara, scit multa cogitare, se nesciens. Nam cum plus quam necesse est se exterioribus implicat, quasi occupata in itinere obliviscitur quo tendebat; ita ut ab studio suae inquisitionis aliena, ne ipsa quidem quae patitur damna consideret, et per quanta delinquat ignoret. Neque enim peccare se Ezechias credidit (IV Reg. XX, 13), cum venientibus ad se alienigenis aromatum cellas ostendit; sed in damnationem secuturae prolis ex eo iram judicis pertulit, quod se facere licenter aestimavit (Isai. XXXIX, 4). Saepe dum multa suppetunt, dumque agi possunt, quae subjecti quia acta sunt admirentur, in cogitatione se animus elevat, et plene in se iram judicis provocat, quamvis per iniqua foras opera non erumpat. Intus quippe est qui judicat, intus quod judicatur. Cum ergo in corde delinquimus, latet homines quod apud nos agimus, sed tamen ipso judice teste peccamus. Neque enim rex Babyloniae tunc reus de elatione exstitit (Dan. IV, 16, seq.), cum ad elationis verba pervenit; quippe qui ore prophetico et ante cum ab elatione tacuit, sententiam reprobationis audivit. Culpam namque perpetratae superbiae jam ante deterserat, qui omnipotentem Deum quem se offendisse reperit, cunctis sub se gentibus praedicavit. Sed post haec successu suae potestatis elevatus, dum magna se fecisse gauderet, cunctis prius in cogitatione se praetulit, et post adhuc tumidus dixit: Nonne haec est Babylon magna, quam ego aedificavi in domum regni, et in robore fortitudinis meae, et in gloria decoris mei? (Ibid., IV, 27.) Quae videlicet vox illius irae vindictam aperte pertulit, quam occulta elatio accendit. Nam districtus judex prius invisibiliter vidit quod postea publice feriendo reprehendit. Unde et in irrationale animal hunc vertit, ab humana societate separavit, agri bestiis mutata mente conjunxit, ut districto videlicet justoque judicio homo quoque esse perderet, qui magnum se ultra homines aestimasset. Haec itaque proferentes, non potestatem reprehendimus, sed ab appetitu illius cordis infirmitatem munimus, ne imperfecti quique culmen arripere regiminis audeant, et qui in planis stantes titubant, in praecipiti pedem ponant.

CAPUT V

Nam sunt nonnulli, qui eximia virtutum dona percipiunt, et pro exercitatione caeterorum magnis muneribus exaltantur, qui studio castitatis mundi, abstinentiae robore validi, doctrinae dapibus referti, patientiae longanimitate humiles, auctoritatis fortitudine erecti, pietatis gratia benigni, justitiae severitate districti sunt. Qui nimirum culmen regiminum si vocati suscipere renuunt, ipsa sibi plerumque dona adimunt, quae non pro se tantummodo, sed etiam pro aliis acceperunt. Cumque sua et non aliorum lucra cogitant, ipsis se, quae privata habere appetunt, bonis privant. Hinc namque ad discipulos Veritas dicit: Non potest civitas abscondi super montem posita; neque accendunt lucernam, et ponunt eam sub modio, sed super candelabrum, ut luceat omnibus qui in domo sunt (Matth. V, 15). Hinc

Petro ait: Simon Joannis, amas me? (Joan. XV, 16, 17.) Qui cum se amare protinus respondisset, audivit: Si diligis me, pasce oves meas. Si ergo dilectionis est testimonium cura pastionis, quisquis virtutibus pollens gregem Dei renuit pascere, pastorem summum convincitur non amare. Hinc Paulus dicit: Si Christus pro omnibus mortuus est, ergo omnes mortui sunt. Et si pro omnibus mortuus est, superest ut qui vivunt, jam non sibi vivant, sed ei qui pro ipsis mortuus est, et resurrexit (II Cor. V, 15). Hinc Moyses ait (Deuteron. XXV, 5), ut uxorem fratris sine filiis defuncti, superstes frater accipiat, atque ad nomen fratris filios gignat: quam si accipere forte renuerit, huic in faciem mulier exspuat, unumque ei pedem propinquus discalciet, ejusque habitaculum domum discalceati vocet. Frater quippe defunctus ille est, qui post resurrectionis gloriam apparens, dixit: Ite, dicite fratribus meis (Matth. XXVIII, 10). Qui quasi sine filiis obiit, quia adhuc electorum suorum numerum non implevit. Hujus scilicet uxorem superstes frater sortiri praecipitur, quia dignum profecto est, ut cura sanctae Ecclesiae ei qui hanc bene regere praevalet imponatur. Cui nolenti in faciem mulier exspuit, quia quisquis ex muneribus quae perceperit prodesse aliis non curat, bonis quoque ejus sancta Ecclesia exprobrans, ei quasi in faciem salivam jactat. Cui ex uno pede calceamentum tollitur, ut discalceati domus vocetur. Scriptum quippe est: Calceati pedes in praeparatione Evangelii pacis (Ephes. VI, 15). Si ergo ut nostram, sic curam proximi gerimus, utrumque pedem per calceamentum munimus. Qui vero suam cogitans utilitatem, proximorum negligit, quasi unius pedis calceamentum cum dedecore amittit. Sunt itaque nonnulli qui magnis, ut diximus, muneribus ditati, dum solius contemplationis studiis inardescunt, parere utilitati proximorum in praedicatione refugiunt, secretum quietis diligunt, secessum speculationis appetunt. De quo si districte judicentur, ex tantis proculdubio rei sunt, quantis venientes ad publicum prodesse potuerunt. Qua enim mente is qui proximis profuturus enitesceret, utilitati caeterorum secretum praeponit suum, quando ipse summi Patris unigenitus, ut multis prodesset, de sinu Patris egressus est ad publicum nostrum?

CAPUT VI

Quod hi qui pondus regiminis per humilitatem fugiunt, tunc vere sunt humiles, cum divinis judiciis non reluctantur.

Et sunt nonnulli qui ex sola humilitate refugiunt, ne eis quibus se impares aestimant praeferantur. Quorum profecto humilitas, si caeteris quoque virtutibus cingitur, tunc ante Dei oculos vera est, cum ad respuendum hoc quod utiliter subire praecipitur pertinax non est. Neque enim vere humilis est, qui superni nutus arbitrium ut debeat praeesse intelligit, et tamen praeesse contemnit. Sed divinis dispositionibus subditus, atque a vitio obstinationis alienus, cum sibi regiminis culmen imperatur, si jam donis praeventus est, quibus et aliis prosit, et ex corde debet fugere, et invitus obedire.

CAPUT VII

Quod nonnunquam praedicationis officium et nonnulli laudabiliter appetunt, et ad hoc nonnulli laudabiliter coacti pertrahuntur.

Quamvis nonnunquam praedicationis officium et nonnulli laudabiliter appetunt, et ad hoc nonnulli laudabiliter coacti pertrahuntur: quod liquido cognoscimus, si duorum prophetantium facta pensamus, quorum unus ut ad praedicandum mitti debuisset sponte se praebuit, quo tamen alter pergere cum pavore recusavit. Isaias quippe Domino quaerenti quem mitteret, ultro se obtulit, dicens: Ecce ego, mitte me (Isai. VI, 8). Jeremias autem mittitur, et tamen ne mitti debeat humiliter reluctatur, dicens: A, a, a, Domine Deus, ecce nescio loqui, quia puer ego sum (Jerem. I, 6). En ab utrisque exterius diversa vox prodiit, sed non a diverso fonte dilectionis emanavit. Duo quippe sunt praecepta charitatis, Dei videlicet amor et proximi. Per activam igitur vitam prodesse proximis cupiens Isaias officium praedicationis appetit; per contemplativam vero Jeremias amori conditoris sedulo inhaerere desiderans, ne mitti ad praedicandum debeat contradicit. Quod ergo laudabiliter alter appetiit, hoc laudabiliter alter expavit: iste ne tacitae contemplationis lucra loquendo perderet, ille ne damna studiosi operis tacendo sentiret. Sed hoc in utrisque est subtiliter intuendum, quia et is qui recusavit, plene non restitit; et is qui mitti voluit, ante per altaris calculum se purgatum vidit; ne aut non purgatus adire quisque sacra ministeria audeat, aut quem superna gratia elegit, sub humilitatis specie superbe contradicat. Quia igitur valde difficile est purgatum se quemlibet posse cognoscere, praedicationis officium tutius declinatur; nec tamen declinari, ut diximus, pertinaciter debet, cum ad suscipiendum hoc superna voluntas agnoscitur. Quod Moyses utrumque miro opere explevit, qui praeesse tantae multitudini et noluit et obedivit. Superbus enim fortasse esset, si ducatum plebis innumerae sine trepidatione susciperet; et rursum superbus existeret, si auctoris imperio obedire recusaret. Utrobique ergo humilis, utrobique subjectus, et praeesse populis semetipsum metiendo noluit, et tamen de imperantis viribus praesumendo consensit. Hinc ergo, hinc quique praecipites colligant cum quanta culpa ex appetitu proprio caeteris praeferri non metuunt, si sancti viri plebium ducatum suscipere Deo etiam jubente timuerunt. Moyses suadente Domino trepidat, et infirmus quisque ut honoris onus percipiat anhelat; et qui ad casum valde urgetur ex propriis, humerum libenter opprimendus ponderibus submittit alienis; quae egit ferre non valet, et auget quod portet.

CAPUT VIII

De his qui praeesse concupiscunt, et ad usum suae libidinis instrumentum Apostolici sermonis arripiunt.

Plerumque vero qui praeesse concupiscunt, ad usum suae libidinis instrumentum Apostolici sermonis arripiunt, quo ait: Si quis episcopatum desiderat, bonum opus desiderat (I Tim. III, 1); qui tamen laudans desiderium, in pavorem vertit protinus quod laudavit, cum repente subjungit: Oportet autem episcopum irreprehensibilem esse (Ibid., 2). Cumque virtutum necessaria subsequenter enumerat, quae sit irreprehensibilitas ipsa manifestat. Et favet ergo ex desiderio, et terret ex praecepto, ac si aperte dicat: Laudo quod quaeritis, sed prius discite quid quaeratis; ne dum vosmetipsos metiri negligitis, tanto foedior vestra reprehensibilitas appareat, quanto et a cunctis conspici in honoris arce festinat. Magnus enim regendi artifex favoribus impellit, terroribus retrahit, ut auditores suos et descripto irreprehensibilitatis culmine restringat a superbia, et officium laudando quod quaeritur, componat ad vitam. Quamvis notandum quod illo in tempore hoc dicitur, quo quisquis plebibus praeerat, primus ad martyrii tormenta ducebatur. Tunc ergo laudabile fuit episcopatum quaerere, quando per hunc quemque dubium non erat ad supplicia graviora pervenire. Unde ipsum quoque episcopatus officium boni operis expressione definitur, cum dicitur: Si quis episcopatum desiderat, bonum opus desiderat (I Tim. III, 1). Ipse ergo sibi testis est quia episcopatum non appetit, qui non per hunc boni operis ministerium, sed honoris gloriam quaerit. Sacrum quippe officium non solum non diligit omnino, sed nescit, qui ad culmen regiminis anhelans, in occulta meditatione cogitationis caeterorum subjectione pascitur, laude propria laetatur, ad honorem cor elevat, rerum affluentium abundantia exsultat. Mundi ergo lucrum quaeritur sub ejus honoris specie quo mundi destrui lucra debuerunt. Cumque mens humilitatis culmen arripere ad elationem cogitat, quod foris appetit, intus immutat.

CAPUT IX

Sed plerumque hi qui subire magisterium pastorale cupiunt, nonnulla quoque bona opera animo proponunt; et quamvis hoc elationis intentione appetant, operaturos tamen se magna pertractant; fitque ut aliud in imis intentio supprimat, aliud tractantis animo superficies cogitationis ostendat. Nam saepe sibi de se mens ipsa mentitur, et fingit se de bono opere amare quod non amat, de mundi autem gloria non amare quod amat: quae principari appetens, fit ad hoc pavida cum quaerit, audax cum pervenerit. Tendens enim, ne non perveniat trepidat; sed repente perveniens, jure sibi hoc debitum ad quod pervenerit putat. Cumque percepti principatus officio perfrui saeculariter coeperit, libenter obliviscitur quidquid religiose cogitavit. Unde necesse est ut cum cogitatio extra usum ducitur, protinus mentis oculus ad opera transacta revocetur; ac penset quisque quid subjectus egerit, et repente cognoscit si praelatus bona agere quae proposuerit possit, quia nequaquam valet in culmine humilitatem discere, qui in imis positus non desiit superbire. Nescit laudem cum suppetit fugere, qui ad hanc didicit cum deesset anhelare. Nequaquam vincere avaritiam potest, quando ad multorum sustentationem tenditur is cui sufficere propria nec soli potuerunt. Ex anteacta ergo vita se quisque inveniat, ne in appetitu se culminis imago cogitationis illudat. Quamvis plerumque in occupatione regiminis ipse quoque boni operis usus perditur, qui in tranquillitate tenebatur, quia quieto mari recte navem et imperitus dirigit; turbato autem tempestatis fluctibus, etiam peritus se nauta confundit. Quid namque est potestas culminis, nisi tempestas mentis? In qua semper cogitationum procellis navis cordis quatitur, huc illucque incessanter impellitur, ut per repentinos excessus oris et operis quasi per obviantia saxa frangatur. Inter haec itaque quid sequendum est, quid tenendum, nisi ut virtutibus pollens coactus ad regimen veniat, virtutibus vacuus nec coactus accedat? Ille si omnino renititur, caveat ne acceptam pecuniam in sudarium ligans, de ejus occultatione judicetur (Matth. XXV, 18). Pecuniam quippe in sudario ligare, est percepta dona sub otio lenti torporis abscondere. At contra, iste cum regimen appetit, attendat ne per exemplum pravi operis, Pharisaeorum more, ad ingressum regni tendentibus obstaculum fiat: qui juxta Magistri vocem (Matth. XXIII, 13) nec ipsi intrant, nec alios intrare permittunt. Cui considerandum quoque est, quia cum causam populi electus praesul suscipit, quasi ad aegrum medicus accedit. Si ergo adhuc in ejus opere passiones vivunt, qua praesumptione percussum mederi properat, qui in facie vulnus portat?

Ille igitur, ille modis omnibus debet ad exemplum vivendi pertrahi, qui cunctis carnis passionibus moriens jam spiritaliter vivit, qui prospera mundi postposuit, qui nulla adversa pertimescit, qui sola interna desiderat. Cujus intentioni bene congruens, nec omnino per imbecillitatem corpus, nec valde per contumeliam repugnat spiritus. Qui ad aliena cupienda non ducitur, sed propria largitur. Qui per pietatis viscera citius ad ignoscendum flectitur, sed nunquam plus quam deceat ignoscens, ab arce rectitudinis inclinatur. Qui nulla illicita perpetrat, sed perpetrata ab aliis ut propria deplorat. Qui ex affectu cordis alienae infirmitati compatitur, sicque in bonis proximi sicut in suis provectibus laetatur. Qui ita se imitabilem caeteris in cunctis quae agit insinuat, ut inter eos non habeat quod saltem de transactis erubescat. Qui sic studet vivere, ut proximorum quoque corda arentia doctrinae valeat fluentis irrigare. Qui orationis usu et experimento jam didicit, quod obtinere a Domino quae poposcerit, possit, cui per effectus vocem jam quasi specialiter dicitur: Adhuc loquente te, dicam, Ecce adsum (Isai. LVIII, 9). Si enim fortasse quis veniat, ut pro se ad intercedendum nos apud potentem quempiam virum, qui sibi iratus, nobis vero est incognitus, ducat, protinus respondemus: Ad intercedendum venire non possumus, quia familiaritatis ejus notitiam non habemus. Si ergo homo apud hominem de quo minime praesumit fieri intercessor erubescit, qua mente apud Deum intercessionis locum pro populo arripit, qui familiarem se ejus gratiae esse per vitae meritum nescit? Aut ab eo quomodo aliis veniam postulat, qui utrum sibi sit placatus ignorat? Qua in re adhuc aliud est sollicitius formidandum, ne qui placare posse iram creditur, hanc ipse ex proprio reatu mereatur. Cuncti enim liquido novimus, quia cum is qui displicet ad intercedendum mittitur, irati animus ad deteriora provocatur. Qui ergo adhuc desideriis terrenis astringitur, caveat ne districti iram judicis gravius accendens, dum loco delectatur gloriae, fiat subditis auctor ruinae.

CAPUT XI

Solerter ergo se quisque metiatur ne locum regiminis assumere audeat, si adhuc in se vitium damnabiliter regnat, ne is quem crimen depravat proprium, intercessor fieri appetat pro culpis aliorum. Hinc etenim superna voce ad Moysen dicitur: Loquere ad Aaron: Homo de semine tuo per familias qui habuerit maculam, non offeret panes Domino Deo suo, nec accedet ad ministerium ejus (Lev. XXI, 17). Ubi et repente subjungitur: Si caecus fuerit, si claudus, si vel parvo, vel grandi et torto naso, si fracto pede, si manu, si gibbus, si lippus, si albuginem habens in oculo, si jugem scabiem, si impetiginem in corpore, vel ponderosus (Ibid., 18). Caecus quippe est, qui supernae contemplationis lumen ignorat; qui praesentis vitae tenebris pressus, dum venturam lucem nequaquam diligendo conspicit, quo gressus operis porrigat nescit. Hinc etenim prophetante Anna dicitur, Pedes sanctorum suorum servabit, et impii in tenebris conticescent (I Reg. II, 9). Claudus vero est qui quidem quo pergere debeat aspicit, sed per infirmitatem mentis, vitae viam perfecte non valet tenere quam videt, quia ad virtutis statum dum fluxa consuetudo non erigitur, quo desiderium innititur, illuc gressus operis efficaciter non sequuntur. Hinc enim Paulus dicit: Remissas manus et dissoluta genua erigite, et gressus rectos facite pedibus vestris, ut non claudicans quis erret, magis autem sanetur (Heb. XII, 12, 13). Parvo autem naso est, qui ad tenendam mensuram discretionis idoneus non est. Naso quippe odores fetoresque discernimus. Recte ergo per nasum discretio exprimitur, per quam virtutes eligimus, delicta reprobamus. Unde et in laude sponsae dicitur: Nasus tuus sicut turris quae est in Libano (Cant. VII, 4), quia nimirum sancta Ecclesia quae ex causis singulis tentamenta prodeant, per discretionem conspicit, et ventura vitiorum bella ex alto deprehendit. Sed sunt nonnulli qui dum aestimari hebetes nolunt, saepe se in quibusdam inquisitionibus plus quam necesse est exercentes, ex nimia subtilitate falluntur. Unde hic quoque subditur: Vel grandi et torto naso. Nasus enim grandis et tortus est discretionis subtilitas immoderata, quae dum plus quam decet excreverit, actionis suae rectitudinem ipsa confundit. Fracto autem pede vel manu est, qui viam Dei pergere omnino non valet, atque a bonis actibus funditur exsors vacat, quatenus haec non ut claudus saltem cum infirmitate teneat, sed ab his omnimodo alienus existat. Gibbus vero est quem terrenae sollicitudinis pondus deprimit, ne unquam ad superna respiciat, sed solis his quae in infimis calcantur intendat. Qui et si quando aliquid ex bono patriae coelestis audierit, ad hoc nimirum perversae consuetudinis pondere praegravatus, cordis faciem non attollit, quia cogitationis statum erigere non valet, quem terrenae usus sollicitudinis curvum tenet. Ex horum quippe specie Psalmista dicit: Incurvatus sum et humiliatus sum usquequaque (Psal. XXXVIII, 8, sec. LXX). Quorum culpam quoque per semetipsam Veritas reprobans, ait: Semen autem quod in spinis cecidit, hi sunt qui audierunt verbum, et a sollicitudinibus et divitiis et voluptatibus vitae euntes suffocantur, et non referunt fructum (Luc. VIII, 14). Lippus vero est, cujus quidem ingenium ad cognitionem veritatis emicat, sed tamen hoc carnalia opera obscurant. In lippis quippe oculis pupillae sanae sunt, sed humore defluente infirmatae palpebrae grossescunt; quorum, quia infusione crebro atteruntur, etiam acies pupillae vitiatur. Et sunt nonnulli quorum sensum carnalis vitae operatio sauciat, qui videre recta subtiliter per ingenium poterant, sed usu pravorum actuum caligant. Lippus itaque est, cujus sensum natura exacuit; sed conversationis pravitas confundit. Cui bene per angelum dicitur: Collyrio inunge oculos tuos ut videas (Apoc. III, 18). Collyrio quippe oculos ut videamus inungimus, cum ad cognoscendam veri luminis claritatem intellectus nostri aciem medicamine bonae operationis adjuvamus. Albuginem vero habet in oculo, qui veritatis lucem videre non sinitur, quia arrogantia sapientiae seu justitiae caecatur. Pupilla namque oculi nigra videt, albuginem tolerans nil videt, quia videlicet sensus humanae cogitationis si stultum se peccatoremque intelligit, cognitionem intimae claritatis apprehendit. Si autem candorem sibi justitiae seu sapientiae tribuit, a luce se supernae cognitionis excludit; et eo claritatem veri luminis nequaquam penetrat, quo se apud se per arrogantiam exaltat; sicut de quibusdam dicitur: Dicentes enim se esse sapientes, stulti facti sunt (Rom. I, 22). Jugem vero habet scabiem, cui carnis petulantia sine cessatione dominatur. In scabie etenim fervor viscerum ad cutem trahitur, per quam recte luxuria designatur, quia si cordis tentatio usque ad operationem prosilit, nimirum fervor intimus usque ad cutis scabiem prorumpit; et foris jam corpus sauciat, quia dum in cogitatione voluptas non reprimitur, etiam in actione dominatur. Quasi enim cutis pruriginem Paulus curabat abstergere, cum dicebat: Tentatio vos non apprehendat, nisi humana (I Cor. X, 13); ac si aperte diceret: Humanum quidem est tentationem in corde perpeti, daemoniacum vero est in tentationis certamine et in operatione superari. Impetiginem quoque habet in corpore, quisquis avaritia vastatur in mente: quae si in parvis non compescitur, nimirum sine mensura dilatatur. Impetigo quippe sine dolore corpus occupat, et absque occupati taedio excrescens membrorum decorem foedat, quia et avaritia capti animum dum quasi delectat, exulcerat; dum adipiscenda quaeque cogitationi objicit, ad inimicitias accendit, et dolorem in vulnere non facit, quia aestuanti animo ex culpa abundantiam promittit. Sed decor membrorum perditur, quia aliarum quoque virtutum per hanc pulchritudo depravatur; et quasi totum corpus exasperat, quia per universa vitia animum supplantat, Paulo attestante qui ait: Radix omnium malorum est cupiditas (I Tim. VI, 10). Ponderosus vero est, qui turpitudinem non exercet opere, sed tamen ab hac cogitatione continua sine moderamine gravatur in mente; qui nequaquam quidem usque ad opus nefarium rapitur, sed ejus animus voluptate luxuriae sine ullo repugnationis stimulo delectatur. Vitium quippe est ponderis, cum humor viscerum ad virilia labitur, quae profecto cum molestia dedecoris intumescunt. Ponderosus ergo est, qui totis cogitationibus ad lasciviam defluens, pondus turpitudinis gestat in corde; et quamvis prava non exerceat opere, ab his tamen non evellitur mente. Nec ad usum boni operis in aperto valet assurgere, quia gravat hunc in abditis pondus turpe. Quisquis ergo quolibet horum vitio subigitur, panes Domino offerre prohibetur, ne profecto diluere aliena delicta non valeat is quem adhuc propria devastant. Quia igitur paucis ad pastorale magisterium dignus qualiter veniat, atque hoc indignus qualiter pertimescat ostendimus, nunc is qui ad illud digne pervenerit, in eo qualiter vivere debeat demonstremus.

SECUNDA PARS. DE VITA PASTORIS

CAPUT PRIMUM

Is qui ad regimen ordinate pervenerit, qualem se in ipso regimine debeat exhibere.

Tantum debet actionem populi actio transcendere praesulis, quantum distare solet a grege vita pastoris. Oportet namque ut metiri sollicite studeat quanta tenendae rectitudinis necessitate constringitur, sub cujus aestimatione populus grex vocatur. Sit ergo necesse est cogitatione mundus, actione praecipuus, discretus in silentio, utilis in verbo, singulis compassione proximus, prae cunctis contemplatione suspensus, bene agentibus per humilitatem socius, contra delinquentium vitia per zelum justitiae erectus, internorum curam in exteriorum occupatione non minuens, exteriorum providentiam in internorum sollicutidine non relinquens. Sed haec quae breviter enumerando perstrinximus, paulo latius replicando disseramus.

Rector semper cogitatione sit mundus, quatenus nulla hunc immunditia polluat, qui hoc suscepit officii, ut in alienis quoque cordibus pollutionis maculas tergat, quia necesse est ut esse munda studeat manus, quae diluere sordes curat: ne tacta quaeque deterius inquinet, si sordida insequens lutum tenet. Hinc namque per prophetam dicitur: Mundamini qui fertis vasa Domini (Isai. LII, 11). Domini etenim vasa ferunt, qui proximorum animas ad aeterna sacraria perducendas in suae conversationis fide suscipiunt. Apud semetipsos ergo quantum debeant mundari conspiciant, qui ad aeternitatis templum vasa viventia in sinu propriae sponsionis portant. Hinc divina voce praecipitur (Exod. XXVIII, 15), ut in Aaron pectore rationale judicii vittis ligantibus imprimatur, quatenus sacerdotale cor nequaquam cogitationes fluxae possideant, sed ratio sola constringat; nec indiscretum quid vel inutile cogitet, qui ad exemplum aliis constitutus, ex gravitate vitae semper debet ostendere quantam in pectore rationem portet. In quo etiam rationali vigilanter adjungitur, ut duodecim patriarcharum nomina describantur. Ascriptos etenim patres semper in pectore ferre, est antiquorum vitam sine intermissione cogitare. Nam tunc sacerdos irreprehensibiliter graditur, cum exempla patrum praecedentium indesinenter intuetur, cum Sanctorum vestigia sine cessatione considerat, et cogitationes illicitas deprimit, ne extra ordinis limitem operis pedem tendat. Quod bene etiam rationale judicii vocatur, quia debet rector subtili semper examine bona malaque discernere, et quae vel quibus, quando vel qualiter congruant, studiose cogitare; nihilque proprium quaerere, sed sua commoda propinquorum bona deputare. Unde illic scriptum est: Pones autem in rationali judicii doctrinam et veritatem, quae erunt in pectore Aaron quando ingredietur coram Domino, et gestabit judicium filiorum Israel in pectore suo in conspectu Domini semper (Ibid., 30). Sacerdoti quippe judicium filiorum Israel in pectore coram Domini conspectu gestare, est subjectorum causas pro sola interni judicis intentione discutere, ut nihil se ei humanitatis admisceat in hoc quod divina positus vice dispensat, ne correptionis studia privatus dolor exasperet. Cumque contra aliena vitia aemulator ostenditur, quae sua sunt exsequatur, ne tranquillitatem judicii aut latens invidia maculet, aut praeceps ira perturbet. Sed dum consideratur terror ejus qui super omnia praesidet, videlicet judicis intimi, non sine magno regantur timore subjecti. Qui nimirum timor dum mentem rectoris humiliat, purgat; ne hanc aut praesumptio spiritus levet, aut carnis delectatio inquinet, aut per terrenarum rerum cupidinem importunitas pulvereae cogitationis obscuret: quae tamen non pulsare rectoris animum nequeunt, sed festinare necesse est, ut repugnatione vincantur, ne vitium quod per suggestionem tentat, mollitie delectationis subigat, cumque haec ab animo tarde repellitur, mucrone consensus occidat.

CAPUT III

Ut rector semper sit operatione praecipuus.

Sit rector operatione praecipuus, ut vitae viam subditis vivendo denuntiet, et grex qui pastoris vocem moresque sequitur, per exempla melius quam per verba gradiatur. Qui enim loci sui necessitate exigitur summa dicere, hac eadem necessitate compellitur summa monstrare. Illa namque vox libentius auditorum cor penetrat, quam dicentis vita commendat, quia quod loquendo imperat, ostendendo adjuvat ut fiat. Hinc enim per prophetam dicitur: Super montem excelsum ascende tu qui evangelizas Sion (Isai. XL, 9). Ut videlicet qui coelesti praedicatione utitur, ima jam terrenorum operum deserens, in rerum culmine stare videatur; tantoque facilius subditos ad meliora pertrahat, quanto per vitae meritum de supernis clamat. Hinc divina lege armum sacerdos in sacrificium et dextrum accipit et separatum (Exod. XXIX, 22), ut non solum sit ejus operatio utilis, sed etiam singularis; nec inter malos tantummodo quae recta sunt faciat, sed bene quoque operantes subditos, sicut honore ordinis superat, ita etiam morum virtute transcendat. Cui in esu quoque pectusculum cum armo tribuitur, ut quod de sacrificio praecipitur sumere, hoc de semetipso auctori discat immolare. Et non solum pectore quae recta sunt cogitet, sed spectatores suos ad sublimia arma operis invitet: nulla prospera praesentis vitae appetat, nulla adversa pertimescat; blandimenta mundi respecto intimo terrore despiciat, terrores autem considerato internae dulcedinis blandimento contemnat. Unde supernae quoque vocis imperio (Exod. XXIX, 5) in utroque humero sacerdos velamine superhumeralis astringitur, ut contra adversa ac prospera virtutum semper ornamento muniatur; quatenus, juxta vocem Pauli (II Cor. VI, 7), per arma justitiae a dextris sinistrisque gradiens, cum ad sola quae interiora sunt nititur, in nullo delectationis infimae latere flectatur. Non hunc prospera elevent, non adversa perturbent, non blanda usque ad voluntatem demulceant, non aspera ad desperationem premant; ut dum nullis passionibus intentionem mentis humiliat, quanta in utroque humero superhumeralis pulchritudine tegatur ostendat. Quod recte etiam superhumerale ex auro, hyacintho, purpura, bis tincto cocco, et torta fieri bysso praecipitur (Exod. XXVIII, 8), ut quanta sacerdos clarescere virtutum diversitate debeat demonstretur. In sacerdotis quippe habitu ante omnia aurum fulget, ut in eo intellectus sapientiae principaliter emicet. Cui hyacinthus, qui aereo colore resplendet adjungitur, ut per omne quod intelligendo penetrat, non ad favores infimos, sed ad amorem coelestium surgat; ne dum suis incautus laudibus capitur, ipso etiam veritatis intellectu vacuetur. Auro quoque et hyacintho purpura permiscetur; ut videlicet sacerdotale cor, cum summa quae praedicat sperat, in semetipso etiam suggestiones vitiorum reprimat, eisque velut ex regia potestate contradicat, quatenus nobilitatem semper intimae regenerationis aspiciat, et coelestis regni sibi habitum moribus defendat. De hac quippe nobilitate spiritus per Petrum dicitur: Vos autem genus electum, regale sacerdotium (I Petr. II, 9). De hac etiam potestate, quia vitia subigimus, Joannis voce roboramur, qui ait: Quotquot autem receperunt eum, dedit eis potestatem filios Dei fieri (Joan. I, 12). Hanc dignitatem fortitudinis Psalmista considerat, dicens: Mihi autem nimis honorificati sunt amici tui, Deus, nimis confortatus est principatus eorum (Psal. CXXXVIII, 17). Quia nimirum sanctorum mens principaliter in summis erigitur, cum exterius perpeti abjecta cernuntur. Auro autem, hyacintho ac purpurae bis tinctus coccus adjungitur, ut ante interni judicis oculos omnia virtutum bona ex charitate decorentur; et cuncta quae coram hominibus rutilant, haec in conspectu occulti arbitri flamma intimi amoris accendat. Quae scilicet charitas, quia Deum simul ac proximum diligit, quasi ex duplici tinctura fulgescit. Qui igitur sic ad auctoris speciem anhelat, ut proximorum curam negligat, vel sic proximorum curam exsequitur, ut a divino amore torpescat, quia unum horum quodlibet negligit, in superhumeralis ornamento habere coccum his tinctum nescit. Sed cum mens ad praecepta charitatis tenditur, restat procul dubio ut per abstinentiam caro maceretur. Unde et his tincto cocco torta byssus adjungitur. De terra etenim byssus nitenti specie oritur. Et quid per byssum, nisi candens decore munditiae corporalis castitas designatur? Quae videlicet torta, pulchritudini superhumeralis innectitur; quia tunc castimonia ad perfectum munditiae candorem ducitur, cum per abstinentiam caro fatigatur. Cumque inter virtutes caeteras etiam afflictae carnis meritum proficit, quasi in diversa superhumeralis specie byssus torta candescit.

CAPUT IV

Ut sit rector discretus in silentio, utilis in verbo.

Sit rector discretus in silentio, utilis in verbo, ne aut tacenda proferat, aut proferenda reticescat. Nam sicut incauta locutio in errorem pertrahit, ita indiscretum silentium hos qui erudiri poterant, in errore derelinquit. Saepe namque rectores improvidi humanam amittere gratiam formidantes, loqui libere recta pertimescunt; et juxta Veritatis vocem (Joan. X, 12), nequaquam jam gregis costodiae Pastorum studio, sed mercenariorum vice deserviunt, quia veniente lupo fugiunt, dum se sub silentio abscondunt. Hinc namque eos per prophetam Dominus increpat, dicens: Canes muti non valentes latrare (Isai. LVI, 10). Hinc rursum queritur, dicens: Non ascendistis ex adverso, nec opposuistis murum pro domo Israel, ut staretis in praelio in die Domini (Ezech. XIII, 5). Ex adverso quippe ascendere, est pro defensione gregis voce libera hujus mundi potestatibus contraire. Et in die Domini in praelio stare, est pravis decertantibus ex justitiae amore resistere. Pastori enim recta timuisse dicere, quid est aliud quam tacendo terga praebuisse? qui nimirum si pro grege se objicit, murum pro domo Israel hostibus opponit. Hinc rursum delinquenti populo dicitur: Prophetae tui viderunt tibi falsa et stulta, nec aperiebant iniquitatem tuam; ut te ad poenitentiam provocarent (Thren. II, 14). Prophetae quippe in sacro eloquio nonnunquam doctores vocantur; qui dum fugitiva esse praesentia indicant, quae sunt ventura manifestant. Quos divinus sermo falsa videre redarguit, quia dum corripere culpas metuunt, incassum delinguentibus promissa securitate blandiuntur; qui iniquitatem peccantium nequaquam aperiunt, quia ab increpationis voce conticescunt. Clavis quippe apertionis est sermo correptionis, quia increpando culpam detegit, quam saepe nescit ipse etiam qui perpetravit. Hinc Paulus ait: Ut potens sit exhortari in doctrina sana, et eos qui contradicunt arguere (Tit. I, 9). Hinc per Malachiam dicitur: Labia sacerdotis custodiunt scientiam, et legem requirent ex ore ejus, quia angelus Domini exercituum est (Malac. II, 7). Hinc per Isaiam Dominus admonet, dicens: Clama, ne cesses, quasi tuba exalta vocem tuam (Isaiae. LVIII, 1). Praeconis quippe officium suscipit, quisquis ad sacerdotium accedit, ut ante adventum judicis qui terribiliter sequitur, ipse scilicet clamando gradiatur. Sacerdos ergo si praedicationis est nescius, quam clamoris vocem daturus est praeco mutus? Hinc est enim quod super Pastores primos in linguarum specie Spiritus sanctus insedit (Act. II, 3); quia nimirum quos repleverit, de se protinus loquentes facit. Hinc Moysi praecipitur ut tabernaculum sacerdos ingrediens, tintinnabulis ambiatur (Exod. XXVIII, 33), ut videlicet voces praedicationis habeat, ne superni spectatoris judicium ex silentio offendat. Scriptum quippe est: Ut audiatur sonitus quando ingreditur et egreditur sanctuarium in conspectu Domini, et non moriatur (Ibid., 35). Sacerdos namque ingrediens vel egrediens moritur, si de eo sonitus non auditur, quia iram contra se occulti judicis exigit, si sine praedicationis sonitu incedit. Apte autem tintinnabula vestimentis illius describuntur inserta. Vestimenta etenim sacerdotis quid aliud quam recta opera debemus accipere? Propheta attestante qui ait: Sacerdotes tui induantur justitiam (Psalm. CXXXI, 9). Vestimentis itaque illius tintinnabula inhaerent, ut vitae viam cum linguae sonitu ipsa quoque sacerdotis opera clament. Sed cum rector se ad loquendum praeparat, sub quanto cautelae studio loquatur attendat, ne si inordinate ad loquendum rapitur, erroris vulnere audientium corda feriantur, et cum fortasse sapiens videri desiderat, unitatis compagem insipienter abscidat. Hinc namque Veritas dicit: Habete sal in vobis, et pacem habete inter vos (Marc. IX, 49). Per sal quippe, verbi sapientia designatur. Qui igitur loqui sapienter nititur, magnopere metuat ne ejus eloquio audientium unitas confundatur. Hinc Paulus ait: Non plus sapere quam oportet sapere, sed sapere ad sobrietatem (Rom. XII, 3). Hinc in sacerdotis veste juxta divinam vocem tintinnabulis mala punica conjunguntur (Exod. XXVIII, 34). Quid enim per mala punica, nisi fidei unitas designatur? Nam sicut in malo punico, uno exterius cortice multa interius grana muniuntur; sic innumeros sanctae Ecclesiae populos unitas fidei contegit, quos intus diversitas meritorum tenet. Ne igitur rector incautus ad loquendum proruat, hoc quod jam praemisimus, per semetipsam Veritas discipulis clamat: Habete sal in vobis, et pacem habete inter vos (Marc. IX, 49). Ac si figurate per habitum sacerdotis dicat: Mala punica tintinnabulis jungite, ut per omne quod dicitis, unitatem fidei cauta observatione teneatis. Providendum quoque est sollicita intentione rectoribus ut ab eis non solum prava nullo modo, sed ne recta quidem nimie et inordinate proferantur; quia saepe dictorum virtus perditur, cum apud corda audientium loquacitatis incauta importunitate levigatur; et auctorem suum haec eadem loquacitas inquinat, quae servire auditoribus ad usum profectus ignorat. Unde bene per Moysen dicitur: Vir qui fluxum seminis patitur, immundus erit (Levit. XV, 2). In mente quippe audientium semen secuturae cogitationis est auditae qualitas locutionis, quia dum per aurem sermo coneipitur, cogitatio in mente generatur. Unde et ab hujus mundi sapientibus praedicator egregius seminiverbius est vocatus (Act. XVII, 18). Qui ergo fluxum seminis sustinet, immundus asseritur, quia multiloquio subditus, ex eo se inquinat, quod si ordinate promeret, prolem rectae cogitationis edere in audientium corda potuisset; dumque incautus per loquacitatem diffluit, non ad usum generis, sed ad immunditiam semen effundit. Unde Paulus quoque cum discipulum de instantia praedicationis admoneret, dicens: Testificor coram Deo et Christo Jesu, qui judicaturus est vivos et mortuos, per adventum ipsius et regnum ejus, praedica verbum, insta opportune, importune (II Tim. IV, 1); dicturus importune, praemisit opportune, quia scilicet apud auditoris mentem ipsa sua vilitate se destruit, si habere importunitas opportunitatem nescit.

CAPUT V

Ut sit rector singulis compassione proximus, prae cunctis contemplatione supsensus.

Sit rector singulis compassione proximus, prae cunctis contemplatione suspensus, ut et per pietatis viscera in se infirmitatem caeterorum transferat, et per speculationis altitudinem semetipsum quoque invisibilia appetendo transcendat, ne aut alta petens, proximorum infirma despiciat, aut infirmis proximorum congruens, appetere alta derelinquat (II Cor. XII, 3). Hinc est namque quod Paulus in paradisum ducitur, coelique tertii secreta rimatur, et tamen illa invisibilium contemplatione suspensus, ad cubile carnalium aciem mentis revocat, atque in occultis suis qualiter debeant conversari dispensat, dicens: Propter fornicationem autem unusquisque suam uxorem habeat, et unaquaeque suum virum habeat. Uxori vir debitum reddat; similiter autem et uxor viro (I Cor. VII, 2). Et paulo post (Ibid., 5): Nolite fraudare invicem, nisi forte ex consensu ad tempus, ut vacetis orationi; et iterum revertimini in idipsum, ne tentet vos Satanas. Ecce jam coelestibus secretis inseritur, et tamen per condescensionis viscera carnalium cubile perscrutatur; et quem sublevatus ad invisibilia erigit, hunc miseratus ad secreta infirmantium oculum cordis flectit. Coelum contemplatione transcendit, nec tamen stratum carnalium sollicitudine deserit, quia compage charitatis summis simul, et infimis junctus, et in semetipso virtute spiritus ad alta valenter rapitur, et pietate in aliis aequanimiter infirmatur. Hinc etenim dicit: Quis infirmatur, et ego non infirmor? quis scandalizatur, et ego non uror (II Cor., XI, 29)? Hinc rursus ait: Factus sum Judaeis tanquam Judaeus (I Cor. IX, 20). Quod videlicet exhibebat non amittendo fidem, sed extendendo pietatem, ut in se personam infidelium transfigurans, ex semetipso disceret qualiter aliis misereri debuisset, quatenus hoc illis impenderet, quod sibi ipse, si ita esset, impendi recte voluisset. Hinc iterum dicit: Sive mente excedimus, Deo; sive sobrii sumus, vobis (II Cor. V, 13); quia et semetipsum noverat contemplando transcendere, et eumdem se auditoribus condescendendo temperare.

Hinc Jacob Domino desuper innitente, et uncto deorsum lapide, ascendentes ac descendentes angelos vidit (Gen. XXVIII, 12); quia scilicet praedicatores recti non solum sursum sanctum caput Ecclesiae, videlicet Dominum, contemplando appetunt, sed deorsum quoque ad membra illius miserando descendunt. Hinc Moyses crebro tabernaculum intrat et exit; et qui intus in contemplationem rapitur, foris infirmantium negotiis urgetur. Intus Dei arcana considerat, foris onera carnalium portat. Qui de rebus quoque dubiis semper ad tabernaculum recurrit, coram testamenti arca Dominum consulit: exemplum proculdubio rectoribus praebens, ut cum foris ambigunt quid disponant, ad mentem semper quasi ad tabernaculum redeant; et velut coram testamenti arca Dominum consulant, si de his in quibus dubitant apud semetipsos intus sacri eloquii paginas requirant. Hinc ipsa Veritas per susceptionem nostrae humanitatis nobis ostensa, in monte orationi inhaeret, miracula in urbibus exercet (Luc. VI, 12); imitationis videlicet viam bonis rectoribus sternens; ut etsi jam summa contemplando appetunt, necessitatibus tamen infirmantium compatiendo misceantur, quia tunc ad alta charitas mirabiliter surgit, cum ad ima proximorum se misericorditer attrahit; et quo benigne descendit ad infirma, valenter recurrit ad summa. Tales autem sese qui praesunt exhibeant, quibus subjecti occulta quoque sua prodere non erubescant; ut cum tentationum fluctus parvuli tolerant, ad Pastoris mentem quasi ad matris sinum recurrant; et hoc quod se inquinari pulsantis culpae sordibus praevident, exhortationis ejus solatio, ac lacrymis orationis lavent. Unde et ante fores templi ad abluendas ingredientium manus mare aeneum, id est luterem, duodecim boves portant (III Reg. VII, 23, seq.): qui quidem facie exterius eminent, sed ex posterioribus latent. Quid namque duodecim bobus, nisi universus pastorum ordo designatur? De quibus Paulo disserente lex dicit: Non obturabis os bovi trituranti (I Cor. IX, 9; ex Deuteron. XXV, 4). Quorum quidem nos aperta opera cernimus, sed apud districtum judicem quae illos posterius maneant in occulta retributione nescimus. Qui tamen cum condescensionis suae patientiam diluendis proximorum confessionibus praeparant, velut ante fores templi luterem portant; ut quisquis intrare aeternitatis januam nititur, tentationes suas menti pastoris indicet, et quasi in boum lutere cogitationis vel operis manus lavet. Et fit plerumque ut dum rectoris animus aliena tentamenta condescendendo cognoscit, auditis tentationibus etiam ipse pulsetur, quia et haec eadem per quam populi multitudo diluitur, aqua proculdubio luteris inquinatur. Nam dum sordes diluentium suscipit, quasi suae munditiae serenitatem perdit. Sed haec nequaquam pastori timenda sunt, quia Deo subtiliter cuncta pensante, tanto facilius a sua eripitur, quanto misericordius ex aliena tentatione fatigatur.

CAPUT VI

Ut sit rector bene agentibus per humilitatem socius, contra delinquentium vitia per zelum justitiae erectus.

Sit rector bene agentibus per humilitatem socius, contra delinquentium vitia per zelum justitiae erectus; ut et bonis in nullo se praeferat, et cum pravorum culpa exigit, potestatem protinus sui prioratus agnoscat, quatenus et honore suppresso aequalem se subditis bene viventibus deputet, et erga perversos jura rectitudinis exercere non formidet. Nam sicut in libris Moralibus dixi se me memini (Lib. XXI, Moral., ca, nunc n. 22), liquet quod omnes homines natura aequales genuit, sed variante meritorum ordine alios aliis culpa postponit. Ipsa autem diversitas quae accessit ex vitio, divino judicio dispensatur; ut quia omnis homo aeque stare non valet, alter regatur ab altero. Unde cuncti qui praesunt, non in se potestatem debent ordinis, sed aequalitatem pensare conditionis; nec praeesse se hominibus gaudeant, sed prodesse. Antiqui etenim patres nostri non reges hominum, sed pastores pecorum fuisse memorantur. Et cum Noe Dominus filiisque ejus diceret: Crescite et multiplicamini, et replete terram (Gen. IX, 21), protinus adjunxit: Et terror vester ac tremor sit super cuncta animalia terrae. Quorum videlicet terror ac tremor, quia esse super animalia terrae praecipitur, profecto esse super homines prohibetur. Homo quippe brutis animalibus, non autem hominibus caeteris natura praelatus est; et idcirco ei dicitur ut ab animalibus et non ab hominibus timeatur, quia contra naturam superbire est ab aequali velle timeri. Et tamen necesse est ut rectores a subditis timeantur, quando ab eis Deum minime timeri deprehendunt; ut humana saltem formidine peccare metuant, qui divina judicia non formidant. Nequaquam namque praepositi ex hoc quaesito timore superbiunt, in quo non suam gloriam, sed subditorum justitiam quaerunt. In eo enim quod metum sibi a perverse viventibus exigunt, quasi non hominibus, sed animalibus dominantur, quia videlicet ex qua parte bestiales sunt subditi, ex ea debent etiam formidini jacere substrati. Sed plerumque rector eo ipso quo caeteris praeeminet, elatione cogitationis intumescit, et dum ad usum cuncta subjacent, dum ad votum velociter jussa complentur, dum omnes subditi, si qua bene gesta sunt, laudibus efferunt, male gestis autem nulla auctoritate contradicunt, dum plerumque laudant etiam quod reprobare debuerant, seductus ab his quae infra suppetunt, super se animus extollitur; et dum foris immenso favore circumdatur, intus veritate vacuatur, atque oblitus sui in voces se spargit alienas, talemque se credit, qualem se foris audit, non qualem intus descernere debuit. Subjectos despicit, eosque aequales sibi naturae ordine non agnoscit; et quos sorte potestatis excesserit, transcendisse se etiam vitae meritis credit. Cunctis se aestimat amplius sapere, qubius se videt amplius posse. In quodam quippe se constituit culmine apud semetipsum, et qui aequa caeteris naturae conditione constringitur, ex aequo respicere caeteros dedignatur; sicque usque ad ejus similitudinem ducitur, de quo scriptum est: Omne sublime videt, et ipse est rex super universos filios superbiae (Job XLI, 25). Qui singulare culmen appetens, et socialem angelorum vitam despiciens, ait: Ponam sedem meam ad Aquilonem, et ero similis Altissimo (Isai. XIV, 13). Miro ergo judicio intus foveam dejectionis invenit, dum foris se in culmine potestatis extollit. Apostatae quippe angelo similis efficitur, dum homo hominibus esse similis dedignatur. Sic Saul post humilitatis meritum in tumorem superbiae culmine potestatis excrevit: per humilitatem quippe praelatus est, per superbiam reprobatus, Domino attestante, qui ait: Nonne cum esses parvulus in oculis tuis, caput te constitui in tribubus Israel? (I Reg. XV, 17.) Parvulum se in suis prius oculis viderat, sed fultus temporali potentia, jam se parvulum non videbat. Caeterorum namque comparationi se praeferens, quia plus cunctis poterat, magnum se prae omnibus aestimabat. Miro autem modo cum apud se parvulus, apud Deum magnus; cum vero apud se magnus apparuit, apud Deum parvulus fuit. Plerumque ergo dum ex subjectorum affluentia animus inflatur, in fluxum superbiae ipso potentiae fastigio lenocinante corrumpitur. Quam videlicet potentiam bene regit, qui et tenere illam noverit et impugnare. Bene hanc regit, qui scit per illam super culpas erigi, et scit cum illa caeteris aequalitate componi. Humana etenim mens plerumque extollitur, etiam cum nulla potestate fulcitur; quanto magis in altum se erigit, cum se ei etiam potestas adjungit? Quam tamen potestatem recte dispensat qui sollicite noverit et sumere ex illa quod adjuvat, et expugnare quod tentat, et aequalem se cum illa caeteris cernere, et tamen se peccantibus zelo ultionis anteferre. Sed hanc discretionem plenius agnoscimus, si Pastoris primi exempla cernamus. Petrus namque auctore Deo sanctae Ecclesiae principatum tenens, a bene agente Cornelio, et sese ei humiliter prosternente, immoderatius venerari recusavit, seque illi similem recognovit, dicens: Surge, ne feceris, et ego ipse homo sum (Act. X, 26). Sed cum Ananiae et Sapphirae culpam reperit (Act. V, 5), mox quanta potentia super caeteros excrevisset ostendit. Verbo namque eorum vitam perculit, quam spiritu perscrutante, deprehendit: et summum se intra Ecclesiam contra peccata recoluit, quod honore sibi vehementer impenso coram bene agentibus fratribus non agnovit. Illic communionem aequalitatis meruit sanctitas actionis, hic zelus ultionis jus aperuit potestatis. Paulus bene agentibus fratribus praelatum se esse nesciebat, cum diceret: Non quia dominamur fidei vestrae, sed adjutores sumus gaudii vestri (II Cor. I, 23). Atque illico adjunxit: Fide enim statis. Ac si id quod protulerat aperiret, dicens: Ideo non dominamur fidei vestrae, quia fide statis; aequales enim vobis sumus in quo vos stare cognoscimus. Quasi praelatum se fratribus esse nesciebat, cum diceret: Facti sumus parvuli in medio vestrum (I Thess. II, 7). Et rursum: Nos autem servos vestros per Christum (II Cor. IV, 5). Sed cum culpam quae corrigi debuisset invenit, illico magistrum se esse recoluit, dicens, Quid vultis? In virga veniam ad vos (I Cor. IV, 21). Summus itaque locus bene regitur, cum is qui praeest, vitiis potius quam fratribus dominatur. Sed cum delinquentes subditos praepositi corrigunt, restat necesse est ut sollicite attendant, quatenus per disciplinae debitum culpas quidem jure potestatis feriant, sed per humilitatis custodiam aequales se ipsis fratribus qui corriguntur, agnoscant: quamvis plerumque etiam dignum est ut eosdem quos corrigimus, tacita nobis cogitatione praeferamus. Illorum namque per nos vitia disciplinae vigore feriuntur, in his vero quae ipsi committimus, ne verbi quidem ab aliquo invectione laceramur. Tanto ergo apud Dominum obligatiores sumus, quanto apud homines inulte peccamus. Disciplina autem nostra subditos divino judicio tanto liberiores reddit, quanto hic eorum culpas sine vindicta non deserit. Servanda itaque est et in corde humilitas, et in opere disciplina. Atque inter haec solerter intuendum est, ne dum immoderatius custoditur virtus humilitatis, solvantur jura regiminis; et dum praelatus quisque plus se quam decet dejicit, subditorum vitam stringere sub disciplinae vinculo non possit. Teneant ergo rectores exterius quod pro aliorum utilitate suscipiunt; servent interius quod de sua aestimatione pertimescunt. Sed tamen quibusdam signis decenter erumpentibus, eos apud se esse humiles etiam subjecti deprehendant, quatenus et in auctoritate eorum quod formident videant, et de humilitate quod imitentur agnoscant. Studeant igitur sine intermissione qui praesunt, ut eorum potentia quanto magna exterius cernitur, tanto apud eos interius deprimatur, ne cogitationem vincat, ne in delectationem sui animum rapiat, ne jam sub se mens eam regere non possit, cui se libidine dominandi supponit. Ne enim praesidentis animus ad elationem potestatis suae delectatione rapiatur, recte per quemdam sapientem dicitur: Ducem te constituerunt, noli extolli, sed esto in illis quasi unus ex illis (Eccli. XXXII, 1). Hinc etiam Petrus ait: Non dominantes in clero, sed forma facti gregis (I Petr. V, 3). Hinc per semetipsam Veritas ad altiora nos virtutum merita provocans, dicit: Scitis quia principes gentium dominantur eorum, et qui majores sunt, potestatem exercent in eos. Non ita erit inter vos, sed quicunque voluerit inter vos major fieri, sit vester minister; et qui voluerit inter vos primus esse, erit vester servus: sicut Filius hominis non venit ministrari, sed ministrare (Matth. XX, 25, seq.). Hinc est quod servum ex suscepto regimine elatum, quae post supplicia maneant, indicat, dicens: Quod si dixerit mallus ille servus in corde suo: Moram facit Dominus meus venire, et coeperit percutere conservos suos, manducet autem et bibat cum ebriis; veniet dominus servi illius, in die qua non sperat, et hora qua ignorat, et dividet eum, partemque ejus ponet cum hypocritis (Matth. XXIV, 48 seq.). Inter hypocritas enim jure deputatur, qui ex simulatione disciplinae ministerium regiminis vertit in usum dominationis; et tamen nonnunquam gravius delinquitur si inter perversos plus aequalitas quam disciplina custoditur. Quia enim falsa pietate superatus ferire Heli delinquentes filios noluit, apud districtum judicem semetipsum cum filiis crudeli damnatione percussit (I Reg. IV, 17, 18). Hinc namque divina ei voce dicitur: Honorasti filios tuos magis quam me (Ibid., II, 29). Hinc pastores increpat per prophetam, dicens: Quod fractum est non alligastis, et quod abjectum est non reduxistis (Ezech. XXXIV, 4). Abjectus enim reducitur cum quisque in culpa lapsus, ad statum justitiae ex pastoralis sollicitudinis vigore revocatur. Fracturam vero ligamen astringit, cum culpam disciplina deprimit, ne plaga usque ad interitum defluat, si hanc districtionis severitas non coarctat.

Sed saepe deterius frangitur, cum fractura incaute colligatur, ita ut gravius scissuram sentiat, si hanc immoderatius ligamenta constringant. Unde necesse est ut cum peccati vulnus in subditis corrigendo restringitur, magna se sollicitudine etiam districtio ipsa moderetur, quatenus sic jura disciplinae contra delinquentes exerceat, ut pietatis viscera non amittat. Curandam quippe est ut rectorem subditis et matrem pietas, et patrem exhibeat disciplina. Atque inter haec sollicita circumspectione providendum, ne aut districtio rigida, aut pietas sit remissa. Nam sicut in libris Moralibus jam diximus (Lib. XX Moral., n. 14, c. 8, et epist. 25, lib. I), disciplina vel misericordia multum destituitur, si una sine altera teneatur. Sed erga subditos suos inesse rectoribus debet et juste consulens misericordia, et pie saeviens disciplina. Hinc namque est quod docente Veritate (Luc. X, 34), per Samaritani studium semivivus in stabulum ducitur, et vinum atque oleum vulneribus ejus adhibetur, ut per vinum scilicet mordeantur vulnera, per oleum foveantur. Necesse quippe est ut quisquis sanandis vulneribus praeest, in vino morsum doloris adhibeat, in oleo mollitiem pietatis, quatenus per vinum mundentur putrida, per oleum foveantur sananda. Miscenda ergo est lenitas cum severitate; faciedum quoddam ex utroque temperamentum, ut neque multa asperitate exulcerentur subditi, neque nimia benignitate solvantur. Quod juxta Pauli vocem (Hebr. IX, 4) bene illa tabernaculi arca significat, in qua cum tabulis virga simul et manna est; quia cum Scripturae sacrae scientia in boni rectoris pectore, si est virga districtionis, sit et manna dulcedinis. Hinc David ait: Virga tua et baculus tuus, ipsa me consolata sunt (Psal. XXII, 4). Virga enim percutimur, baculo sustentamur. Si ergo est districtio virgae quae feriat, sit et consolatio baculi quae sustentet. Sit itaque amor, sed non emolliens; sit vigor, sed non exasperans; sit zelus, sed non immoderate saeviens; sit pietas, sed non plus quam expediat parcens; ut dum se in arce regiminis justitia clementiaque permiscet, is qui praeest corda subditorum et terrendo demulceat, et tamen ad terroris reverentiam demulcendo constringat.

CAPUT VII

Ut sit rector internorum curam in exteriorum occupatione non minuens, exteriorum providentiam in internorum sollicitudine non relinquens.

Sit rector internorum curam in exteriorum occupatione non minuens, exteriorum providentiam in internorum sollicitudine non relinquens; ne aut exterioribus deditus ab intimis corruat, aut solis interioribus occupatus, quae foris debet proximis non impendat. Saepe namque nonnulli velut obliti quod fratribus animarum causa praelati sunt, toto cordis adnisu saecularibus curis inserviunt: has, cum adsunt, se agere exsultant; ad has etiam cum desunt, diebus ac noctibus cogitationis turbidae aestibus anhelant. Cumque ab his, cessante forsitan opportunitate, quieti sunt, ipsa deterius sua quiete fatigantur. Voluptatem namque censent si actionibus deprimuntur, laborem deputant si in terrenis negotiis non laborant. Sicque fit, ut dum se urgeri mundanis tumultibus gaudent, interna quae alios docere debuerant ignorent. Unde subjectorum quoque proculdubio vita torpescit, quia cum proficere spiritaliter appetit, in exemplo ejus qui sibi praelatus est, quasi in obstaculo itineris offendit. Languente enim capite membra incassum vigent, et in exploratione hostium frustra exercitus velociter sequitur, si ab ipso duce itineris erratur. Nulla subditorum mentes exhortatio sublevat, eorumque culpas increpatio nulla castigat; quia dum per animarum praesulem terreni exercetur officium judicis, a gregis custodia vacat cura pastoris; et subjecti veritatis lumen apprehendere nequeunt, quia dum pastoris sensus terrena studia occupant, vento tentationis impulsus Ecclesiae oculos pulvis caecat. Quo contra recte humani generis Redemptor, cum nos a ventris voracitate compesceret, dicens: Attendite autem vobis, ut non graventur corda vestra in crapula et ebrietate (Luc. XXI, 34), illico adjunxit: Aut in curis hujus vitae. Ubi pavorem quoque protinus intente adjiciens: Ne forte, inquit, superveniat in vos repentina dies illa (Ibid.). Cujus adventus etiam qualitatem denuntiat, dicens: Tanquam laqueus enim veniet super omnes qui sedent super faciem omnis terrae (Ibid., 35). Hinc iterum dicit: Nemo potest duobus dominis servire (Luc. XVI, 13). Hinc Paulus religiosorum mentes a mundi consortio contestando, ac potius conveniendo suspendit, dicens: Nemo militans Deo implicat se negotiis saecularibus, ut ei placeat cui se probavit (II Tim. II, 4). Hinc Ecclesiae rectoribus et vacandi studia praecipit, et consulendi remedia ostendit, dicens: Saecularia igitur judicia si habueritis, contemptibiles qui sunt in Ecclesia, illos constituite ad judicandum (I Cor. VI, 14); ut ipsi videlicet dispensationibus terrenis inserviant, quos dona spiritalia non exornant. Ac si apertius dicat: Quia penetrare intima nequeunt, saltem necessaria foris operentur. Hinc Moyses, qui cum Deo loquitur (Exod. XVIII, 17, 18), Jethro alienigenae reprehensione judicatur, quod terrenis populorum negotiis stulto labore deserviat: cui et consilium mox praebetur, ut pro se alios ad jurgia dirimenda constituat, et ipse liberius ad erudiendos populos spiritalium arcana cognoscat.

A subditis ergo inferiora gerenda sunt, a rectoribus summa cogitanda; ut scilicet oculum, qui praevidendis gressibus praeeminet, cura pulveris non obscuret. Caput namque subjectorum sunt cuncti qui praesunt; et ut recta pedes valeant itinera carpere, haec proculdubio caput debet ex alto providere, ne a provectus sui itinere pedes torpeant, cum curvata rectitudine corporis caput sese ad terram declinat. Qua autem mente animarum praesul honore pastorali inter caeteros utitur, si in terrenis negotiis quae reprehendere in aliis debuit, et ipse versatur? Quod videlicet ex ira justae retributionis per prophetam Dominus minatur, dicens: Et erit sicut populus, sic sacerdos (Oseae IV, 9). Sacerdos quippe est ut populus, quando ea agit is qui spiritali officio fungitur, quae illi nimirum faciunt qui adhuc de studiis carnalibus judicantur. Quod cum magno scilicet dolore charitatis Jeremias propheta conspiciens, quasi sub destructione templi deplorat, dicens: Quomodo obscuratum est aurum, mutatus est color optimus, dispersi sunt lapides sanctuarii in capite omnium platearum (Thren. IV, 1)? Quid namque auro, quod metallis caeteris praeeminet, nisi excellentia sanctitatis? Quid colore optimo, nisi cunctis amabilis reverentia religionis exprimitur? Quid sanctuarii lapidibus, nisi sacrorum ordinum personae signantur? Quid platearum nomine, nisi praesentis vitae latitudo figuratur? Quia enim Graeco eloquio “??????” latitudo dicitur, profecto a latitudine plateae sunt vocatae. Per semetipsam vero Veritas dicit: Lata et spatiosa via est quae ducit ad perditionem (Matth. VII, 13). Aurum igitur obscuratur, cum terrenis actibus sanctitatis vita polluitur. Color optimus commutatur, cum quorumdam qui degere religiose credebantur, aestimatio anteacta minuitur. Nam cum quilibet post sanctitatis habitum terrenis se actibus inserit, quasi colore permutato ante humanos oculos ejus reverentia despecta pallescit. Sanctuarii quoque lapides in plateas disperguntur, cum causarum secularium foras lata itinera expetunt hi qui ad ornamentum Ecclesiae internis mysteriis quasi in secretis tabernaculi vacare debuerunt. Ad hoc quippe sanctuarii lapides fiebant, ut intra sancta sanctorum in vestimento summi sacerdotis apparerent. Cum vero ministri religionis a subditis honorem Redemptoris sui ex merito vitae non exigunt, sanctuarii lapides in ornamento pontificis non sunt. Qui nimirum sanctuarii lapides dispersi per plateas jacent, cum personae sacrorum ordinum voluptatum suarum latitudini deditae, terrenis negotiis inhaerent. Et notandum quod non hos dispersos in plateis, sed in capite platearum dicit; quia et cum terrena agunt, summi videri appetunt, ut et lata itinera teneant ex voluptate delectationis, et tamen in platearum sint capite ex honore sanctitatis.

Nil quoque obstat si sanctuarii lapides eosdem ipsos quibus constructum sanctuarium existebat accipimus: qui dispersi in platearum capite jacent. quando sacrorum ordinum viri terrenis actibus ex desiderio inserviunt, ex quorum prius officio sanctitatis gloria stare videbatur. Saecularia itaque negotia aliquando ex compassione toleranda sunt, numquam vero ex amore requirenda; ne cum mentem diligentis aggravant, hanc suo victam pondere ad ima de coelestibus mergant. At contra, nonnulli gregis quidem curam suscipiunt, sed sic sibimet vacare ad spiritalia appetunt, ut rebus exterioribus nullatenus occupentur. Qui cum curare corporalia funditus negligunt, subditorum necessitatibus minime concurrunt. Quorum nimirum praedicatio plerumque despicitur; quia dum delinquentium facta corripiunt, sed tamen eis necessaria praesentis vitae non tribuunt, nequaquam libenter audiuntur. Egentis etenim mentem doctrinae sermo non penetrat, si hunc apud ejus animum manus misericordiae non commendat. Tunc autem verbi semen facile germinat, quando hoc in audientis pectore pietas praedicantis rigat. Unde rectorem necesse est ut interiora possit infundere, cogitatione innoxia etiam exteriora providere. Sic itaque Pastores erga interiora studia subditorum suorum ferveant, quatenus in eis exterioris quoque vitae providentiam non relinquant. Nam quasi jure, ut diximus, a percipienda praedicatione gregis animus frangitur, si cura exterioris subsidii a pastore negligatur. Unde et primus pastor sollicite admonet, dicens: Seniores qui in vobis sunt, obsecro consenior et testis Christi passionum, qui et ejus quae in futuro revelanda est, gloriae communicatur, pascite qui in vobis est gregem Dei (I Pet. V, 1). Qui hoc in loco pastionem cordis an corporis suaderet aperuit, cum protinus adjunxit: Providentes non coacte, sed spontanee secundum Deum, neque turpis lucri gratia, sed voluntarie. Quibus profecto verbis pastoribus pie praecavetur, ne dum subjectorum inopiam satiant, se mucrone ambitionis occidant, ne cum per eos carnis subsidiis reficiuntur proximi, ipsi remaneant a justitiae pane jejuni. Hanc Pastorum sollicitudinem Paulus excitat, dicens: Qui suorum, et maxime domesticorum curam non habet, fidem negavit, et est infideli deterior (I Tim. V, 8). Inter haec itaque metuendum semper est, et vigilanter intuendum, ne dum cura ab eis exterior agitur, ab interna intentione mergantur. Plerumque enim, ut praediximus, corda rectorum dum temporali sollicitudini incaute deserviunt, ab intimo amore frigescunt; et foras fusa oblivisci non metuunt, quia animarum regimina susceperunt. Sollicitudo ergo quae subditis exterius impenditur, sub certa necesse est mensura teneatur. Unde bene ad Ezechielem dicitur: Sacerdotes caput suum non radent, neque comam nutrient, sed tondentes attondeant capita sua (Ezech. XLIV, 20). Sacerdotes namque jure vocati sunt, qui ut sacrum ducatum praebeant, fidelibus praesunt. Capilli vero in capite, exteriores sunt cogitationes in mente: qui dum super cerebrum insensibiliter oriuntur, curas vitae praesentis designant; quae ex sensu negligenti, quia importune aliquando prodeunt, quasi nobis non sentientibus procedunt. Quia igitur cuncti qui praesunt, habere quidem sollicitudines exteriores debent, nec tamen eis vehementer incumbere, sacerdotes recte et caput prohibentur radere, et comam nutrire; ut cogitationes carnis de vita subditorum nec a se funditus amputent, nec rursum ad crescendum nimis relaxent. Ubi et bene dicitur: Tondentes tondeant capita sua (Ibid.); ut videlicet curae temporalis sollicitudinis et quantum necesse est prodeant, et tamen recidantur citius, ne immoderatius excrescant. Dum igitur et per administratam exteriorem providentiam corporum vita protegitur, et rursus per moderatam cordis intentionem non impeditur, capilli in capite sacerdotis et servantur ut cutem cooperiant, et resecantur ne oculos claudant.

Ne placere rector suo studio hominibus appetat, sed tamen ad quod placere debeat, intendat.

Inter haec quoque necesse est ut rector solerter invigilet, ne hunc cupido placendi hominibus pulset; ne cum studiose interiora penetrat, cum provide exteriora subministrat, se magis a subditis diligi quam veritatem quaerat; ne cum, bonis actibus fultus, a mundo videtur alienus, hunc auctori reddat extraneum amor suus. Hostis namque Redemptoris est, qui per recta opera quae facit, ejus vice ab Ecclesia amari concupiscit, quia adulterinae cogitationis reus est, si placere puer sponsae oculis appetit, per quem sponsus dona transmisit. Qui nimirum amor proprius cum rectoris mentem ceperit, aliquando hanc inordinate ad mollitiem, aliquando vero ad asperitatem rapit. Ex amore etenim suo mens rectoris in mollitiem vertitur; quia cum peccantes subditos respicit, ne erga hunc eorum dilectio torpeat, corripere non praesumit; nonnunquam vero errata subditorum quae increpare debuerat, adulationibus demulcet. Unde bene per prophetam dicitur: Vae his qui consuunt pulvillos sub omni cubito manus, et faciunt cervicalia sub capite universae aetatis ad capiendas animas (Ezech. XIII, 18). Pulvillos quippe sub omni cubito manus ponere, est cadentes a sua rectitudine animas, atque in hujus mundi se delectatione reclinantes, blanda adulatione refovere. Quasi enim pulvillo cubitus, vel cervicalibus caput jacentis excipitur, cum correptionis duritia peccanti subtrahitur, eique mollities favoris adhibetur, ut in errore molliter jaceat, quem nulla asperitas contradictionis pulsat. Sed haec rectores, qui semetipsos diligunt, his procul dubio exhibent, a quibus se noceri posse in studio gloriae temporalis timent. Nam quos nil contra se valere conspiciunt, hos nimirum asperitate rigidae semper invectionis premunt, nunquam clementer admonent, sed pastoralis mansuetudinis obliti, jure dominationis terrent. Quos recte per prophetam divina vox increpat, dicens: Vos autem cum austeritate imperabatis eis et cum potentia (Ezech. XXXIV, 4). Plus enim se suo auctore diligentes, jactanter erga subditos se erigunt, nec quid agere debeant, sed quid valeant attendunt; nil de subsequenti judicio metuunt, improbe de temporali potestate gloriantur; libet ut licenter et illicita faciant, et subditorum nemo contradicat. Qui ergo et prava studet agere, et tamen ad haec vult caeteros tacere, ipse sibimet testis est, quia plus veritate se appetit diligi, quam contra se non vult defendi. Nemo quippe est qui ita vivat, ut aliquatenus non delinquat. Ille ergo se ipso amplius veritatem desiderat amari, qui sibi a nullo vult contra veritatem parci. Hinc etenim Petrus increpationem Pauli libenter accepit (Galat. II, 11); hinc David correptionem subditi humiliter audivit (II Reg. XII, 7); quia rectores boni dum privato diligere amore se nesciunt, liberae puritatis verbum a subditis obsequium humilitatis credunt. Sed inter haec necesse est ut cura regiminis tanta moderaminis arte temperetur, quatenus subditorum mens cum quaedam recte sentire potuerit, sic in vocis libertatem prodeat, ut tamen libertas in superbiam non erumpat; ne dum fortasse immoderatius linguae eis libertas conceditur, vitae ab his humilitas amittatur. Sciendum quoque est quod oporteat ut rectores boni placere hominibus appetant, sed ut suae aestimationis dulcedine proximos in affectum veritatis trahant, non ut se amari desiderent, sed ut dilectionem suam quasi quamdam viam faciant, per quam corda audientium ad amorem Conditoris introducant. Difficile quippe est, ut quamlibet recta denuntians praedicator qui non diligitur, libenter audiatur. Debet ergo qui praeest, et studere se diligi, quatenus possit audiri, et tamen amorem suum pro semetipso non quaerere, ne inveniatur ei cui servire per officium cernitur, occulta cogitationis tyrannide resultare. Quod bene Paulus insinuat, cum sui nobis studii occulta manifestat, dicens: Sicut et ego per omnia omnibus placeo (I Cor. X, 33). Qui tamen rursus dicit: Si adhuc hominibus placerem, Christi servus non essem (Galat. I, 10). Placet ergo Paulus, et non placet, quia in eo quod placere appetit, non se, sed per se hominibus placere veritatem quaerit.

CAPUT IX

Quod scire sollicite rector debet, quia plerumque vitia virtutes se esse mentiuntur.

Scire etiam rector debet quod plerumque vitia virtutes se esse mentiuntur. Nam saepe sub parcimoniae nomine se tenacia palliat, contraque se effusio sub appellatione largitatis occultat. Saepe inordinata remissio pietas creditur, et effrenata ira spiritalis zeli virtus aestimatur. Saepe praecipitata actio velocitatis efficacia, atque agendi tarditas gravitatis consilium putatur. Unde necesse est ut rector animarum virtutes ac vitia vigilanti cura discernat, ne aut cor tenacia occupet, et parcum se videri in dispensationibus exsultet; aut cum effuse quid perditur, largum se quasi miserando glorietur; aut remittendo quod ferire debuit, ad aeterna supplicia subditos pertrahat; aut immaniter feriendo quod delinquitur, ipse gravius delinquat; aut hoc quod agi recte ac graviter potuit, immature praeveniens leviget; aut bonae actionis meritum differendo, ad deteriora permutet.

CAPUT X

Quae esse debet rectoris discretio correptionis et dissimulationis, fervoris et mansuetudinis.

Sciendum quoque est quod aliquando subjectorum vitia prudenter dissimulanda sunt, sed quia dissimulantur, indicanda; aliquando et aperte cognita, mature toleranda, aliquando vero subtiliter et occulta perscrutanda; aliquando leniter arguenda, aliquando autem vehementer increpanda. Nonnulla quippe, ut diximus, prudenter dissimulanda sunt, sed quia dissimulantur, indicanda; ut cum delinquens et deprehendi se cognoscit et perpeti, has quas in se tacite tolerari considerat, augere culpas erubescat, seque se judice puniat, quem sibi apud se rectoris patientia clementer excusat. Qua scilicet dissimulatione bene Judaeam Dominus corripit, cum per prophetam dicit: Mentita es, et mei non es recordata, neque cogitasti in corde tuo, quia ego tacens et quasi non videns (Isaiae LVII, 11). Et dissimulavit ergo culpas, et innotuit, quia et contra peccantem tacuit, et hoc ipsum tamen quia tacuerit dixit. Nonnulla autem vel aperte cognita, mature toleranda sunt, cum videlicet rerum minime opportunitas congruit, ut aperte corrigantur. Nam secta immature vulnera deterius infervescunt, et nisi cum tempore medicamenta conveniant, constat procul dubio quod medendi officium amittant. Sed cum tempus subditis ad correptionem quaeritur, sub ipso culparum pendere patientia praesulis exercetur. Unde bene per Psalmistam dicitur: Supra dorsum meum fabricaverunt peccatores (Psal. CXXVIII, 3). In dorso quippe onera sustinemus. Supra dorsum igitur suum fabricasse peccatores queritur, ac si aperte dicat: Quos corrigere nequeo, quasi superimpositum onus porto.

Nonnulla autem occulta subtiliter sunt perscrutanda, ut quibusdam signis erumpentibus, rector in subditorum mente omne quod clausum latet, inveniat, et interveniente correptionis articulo, ex minimis majora cognoscat. Unde recte ad Ezechielem dicitur: Fili hominis, fode parietem (Ezech. VIII, 8). Ubi mox idem propheta subjungit: Et cum fodissem parietem, apparuit ostium unum. Et dixit ad me: Ingredere, et vide abominationes pessimas, quas isti faciunt hic. Et ingressus vidi; et ecce omnis similitudo reptilium, et animalium abominatio, et universa idola domus Israel depicta erant in pariete (Ibid. 9, 10). Per Ezechielem quippe praepositorum persona signatur, per parietem duritia subditorum. Et quid est parietem fodere, nisi acutis inquisitionibus duritiam cordis aperire? Quem cum fodisset, apparuit ostium; quia cum cordis duritia vel studiosis percunctationibus, vel maturis correptionibus scinditur, quasi quaedam janua ostenditur, ex qua omnia in eo qui corripitur cogitationum interiora videantur. Unde et bene illic sequitur: Ingredere et vide abominationes pessimas, quas isti faciunt hic (Ibid.). Quasi ingreditur ut abominationes aspiciat, qui, discussis quibusdam signis exterius apparentibus, ita corda subditorum penetrat, ut cuncta ei quae illicite cogitantur innotescant. Unde et subdidit: Et ingressus vidi; et ecce omnis similitudo reptilium, et animalium abominatio (Ibid.). In reptilibus cogitationes omnino terrenae signantur, in animalibus vero jam quidem aliquantulum a terra suspensae, sed adhuc terrenae mercedis praemia requirentes. Nam reptilia toto ex corpore terrae inhaerent, animalia autem magna parte corporis a terra suspensa sunt, appetitu tamen gulae ad terram semper inclinantur. Reptilia itaque sunt intra parietem, quando cogitationes volvuntur in mente, quae a terrenis desideriis nunquam levantur. Animalia quoque sunt intra parietem, quando et si qua jam justa, si qua honesta cogitantur, appetendis tamen lucris temporalibus honoribusque deserviunt; et per semetipsa quidem jam quasi a terra suspensa sunt, sed adhuc per ambitum quasi per gulae desiderium sese ad ima submittunt. Unde et bene subditur: Et universa idola domus Israel depicta erant in pariete (Ezech. VIII, 10). Scriptum quippe est: Et avaritia, quae est idolorum servitus (Coloss. III, 5). Recte ergo post animalia, idola describuntur, quia etsi honesta actione nonnulli jam quasi a terra se erigunt, ambitione tamen inhonesta semetipsos ad terram deponunt. Bene autem dicitur, Depicta erant; quia dum exteriorum rerum intrinsecus species attrahuntur, quasi in corde depingitur quidquid fictis imaginibus deliberando, cogitatur. Notandum itaque est quia prius foramen in pariete, ac deinde ostium cernitur, et tunc demum occulta abominatio demonstratur; quia nimirum uniuscujusque peccati prius signa forinsecus, deinde janua apertae iniquitatis ostenditur, et tunc demum omne malum quod intus latet aperitur Nonnulla autem sunt leniter arguenda: nam cum non malitia, sed sola ignorantia vel infirmitate delinquitur, profecto necesse est ut magno moderamine ipsa delicti correptio temperetur. Cuncti quippe quousque in hac mortali carne subsistimus, corruptionis nostrae infirmitatibus subjacemus. Ex se ergo debet quisque colligere qualiter alienae hunc oporteat imbecillitati misereri, ne contra infirmitatem proximi si ad increpationis vocem ferventius rapitur, oblitus sui esse videatur. Unde bene Paulus admonet, dicens: Si praeoccupatus fuerit homo in aliquo delicto, vos qui spiritales estis, instruite hujusmodi in spiritu mansuetudinis, considerans teipsum, ne et tu tenteris (Galat. VI, 1). Ac si aperte dicat: Cum displicet ex aliena infirmitate quod conspicis, pensa quod es; ut in increpationis zelo se spiritus temperet, dum sibi quoque quod increpat timet.

Nonnulla autem sunt vehementer increpanda, ut cum culpa ab auctore non cognoscitur, quanti sit ponderis, ab increpantis ore sentiatur. Et cum sibi quis malum quod perpetravit levigat, hoc contra se graviter ex corripientis asperitate pertimescat. Debitum quippe rectoris est supernae patriae gloriam per vocem praedicationis ostendere, quanta in hujus vitae itinere tentamenta antiqui hostis lateant aperire, et subditorum mala quae tolerari leniter non debent, cum magna zeli asperitate corrigere; ne si minus contra culpas accenditur, culparum omnium reus ipse teneatur. Unde bene ad Ezechielem dicitur: Sume tibi laterem, et pones eum coram te, et describes in eo civitatem Jerusalem (Ezech. IV, 1). Statimque subjungitur: Et ordinabis adversus eam obsidionem, et aedificabis munitiones, et comportabis aggerem, et dabis contra eam castra, et pones arietes in gyro. Eique ad munitionem suam protinus subinfertur: Et tu sume tibi sartaginem ferream, et pones eam in murum ferreum inter te et inter civitatem. Cujus enim Ezechiel propheta nisi magistrorum speciem tenet? Cui dicitur: Sume tibi laterem, et pones eum coram te, et describes in eo civitatem Jerusalem.

Sancti quippe doctores sibi laterem sumunt, quando terrenum auditorum cor, ut doceant, apprehendunt. Quem scilicet laterem coram se ponunt, quia tota illud mentis intentione custodiunt. In quo et civitatem Jerusalem jubentur describere; quia praedicando terrenis cordibus curant summopere quae sit supernae pacis visio demonstrare. Sed quia incassum gloria patriae coelestis agnoscitur, nisi et quanta hic irruant hostis callidi tentamenta discantur, apte subjungitur: Et ordinabis adversus eam obsidionem, et aedificabis munitiones. Sancti quippe praedicatores obsidionem circa laterem, in quo Jerusalem civitas descripta est, ordinant, quando terrenae menti, sed jam supernam patriam requirenti, quanta eam in hujus vitae tempore vitiorum impugnet adversitas demonstrant. Nam cum unumquodque peccatum quomodo proficientibus insidietur ostenditur, quasi obsidio circa civitatem Jerusalem voce praedicatoris ordinatur. Sed quia non solum debent innotescere qualiter vitia impugnent, verum etiam quomodo custoditae nos virtutes roborent, recte subjungitur: Et aedificabis munitiones. Munitiones quippe sanctus praedicator aedificat, quando quae virtutes quibus resistant vitiis demonstrat. Et quia, crescente virtute, plerumque bella tentationis augentur, recte adhuc additur: Et comportabis aggerem, et dabis contra eam castra, et pones arietes in gyro. Aggerem namque comportat, quando praedicator quisque molem crescentis tentationis enuntiat. Et contra Jerusalem castra erigit, quando rectae intentioni audientium hostis callidi circumspectas et quasi incomprehensibiles insidias praedicit. Atque arietes in gyro ponit, cum tentationum aculeos in hac vita nos undique circumdantes, et virtutum murum perforantes innotescit. Sed cuncta haec licet subtiliter rector insinuet, nisi contra delicta singulorum aemulationis spiritu ferveat, nullam sibi in perpetuum absolutionem parat. Unde illic adhuc recte subjungitur: Et tu sume tibi sartaginem ferream, et pones eam murum ferreum inter te et inter civitatem. Per sartaginem quippe frixura mentis, per ferrum vero increpationis fortitudo signatur. Quid vero acrius doctoris mentem, quam zelus Dei frigit et excruciat? Unde Paulus hujus sartaginis urebatur frixura, cum diceret: Quis infirmatur, et ego non infirmor? quis scandalizatur, et ego non uror? (II Cor. XI, 29.) Et quia quisquis zelo Dei accenditur, ne damnari ex negligentia debeat, forti in perpetuum custodia munitur, recte dicitur: Pones eam murum ferreum inter te et civitatem. Sartago enim ferrea murus ferreus inter prophetam et civitatem ponitur; quia cum nunc fortem zelum rectores exhibent, eumdem zelum postmodum inter se et auditores suos fortem munitionem tenent; ne tunc ad vindictam destituti sint, si nunc fuerint in correptione dissoluti. Sed inter haec sciendum est quia dum ad increpationem se mens doctoris exasperat, difficile valde est ut non aliquando et ad aliquid quod dicere non debet erumpat. Et plerumque contingit ut dum culpa subditorum cum magna invectione corripitur, magistri lingua usque ad excessus verba pertrahatur. Cumque increpatio immoderate accenditur, corda delinquentium in desperatione deprimuntur. Unde necesse est ut exasperatus rector, cum subditorum mentem plus quam debuit percussisse considerat, apud se semper ad poenitentiam recurrat; ut per lamenta veniam in conspectu veritatis obtineat, ex eo etiam quod per zeli ejus studium peccat. Quod figurate Dominus per Moysen praecipit, dicens: Si quis abierit cum amico suo simpliciter in silvam ad ligna caedenda, et lignum securis fugerit manu, ferrumque lapsum de manubrio amicum ejus percusserit et occiderit, hic ad unam supradictarum urbium fugiet, et vivet; ne forte proximus ejus, cujus effusus est sanguis, doloris stimulo persequatur et apprehendat eum, et percutiat animam ejus (Deut. XIX, 4, 5). Ad silvam quippe cum amico imus, quoties ad intuenda subditorum delicta convertimur. Et simpliciter ligna succidimus, cum delinquentium vitia pia intentione resecamus. Sed securis manu fugit, cum sese increpatio plus quam necesse est in asperitatem pertrahit. Ferrumque de manubrio prosilit, cum de correptione sermo durior excedit. Et amicum percutit et occidit, quia auditorem suum prolata contumelia a spiritu dilectionis interficit. Correpti namque mens repente ad odium proruit, si hanc immoderata increpatio plus quam debuit addicit. Sed is qui incaute ligna percutit et proximum exstinguit, ad tres necesse est urbes fugiat, ut in una earum defensus vivat; quia si ad poenitentiae lamenta conversus, in unitate sacramenti sub spe et charitate absconditur, reus perpetrati homicidii non tenetur. Eumque exstincti proximus et cum invenerit non occidit; quia cum districtus judex venerit, qui sese nobis per naturae nostrae consortium junxit, ab eo proculdubio culpae reatum non expetit, quem sub ejus venia fides, spes, et charitas abscondit.

CAPUT XI

Quantum rector sacrae legis meditationibus esse debeat intentus.

Sed omne hoc rite a rectore agitur, si supernae formidinis et dilectionis spiritu afflatus, studiose quotidie sacri eloquii praecepta meditetur; ut in eo vim sollicitudinis, et erga coelestem vitam providae circumspectionis, quam humanae conversationis usus indesinenter destruit, divinae admonitionis verba restaurent; et qui ad vetustatem vitae per societatem saecularium ducitur, ad amorem semper spiritalis patriae compunctionis aspiratione renovetur. Valde namque inter humana verba cor defluit; cumque indubitanter constet quod externis occupationum tumultibus impulsum a semetipso corruat, studere incessabiliter debet, ut per eruditionis studium resurgat. Hinc est enim quod praelatum gregi discipulum Paulus admonet, dicens: Dum venio attende lectioni (I Tim. IV, 13). Hinc David ait: Quomodo dilexi legem tuam, Domine, tota die meditatio mea est (Ps. CXVIII, 97). Hinc Moysi Dominus de portanda arca praecepit, dicens: Facies quatuor circulos aureos, quos pones per quatuor arcae angulos, faciesque vectes de lignis sethim, et operies auro, inducesque per circulos qui sunt in arcae lateribus, ut portetur in eis qui semper erunt in circulis, nec unquam extrahentur ab eis (Exod. XXV, 12, seq.). Quid per arcam, nisi sancta Ecclesia figuratur? Cui quatuor circuli aurei per quatuor angulos jubentur adjungi, quia in eo quod per quatuor mundi partes dilatata tenditur, procul dubio quatuor sancti Evangelii libris accincta praedicatur. Vectesque de lignis sethim fiunt, qui eisdem ad portandum circulis inseruntur; quia fortes perseverantesque doctores velut imputribilia ligna quaerendi sunt, qui instructioni sacrorum voluminum semper inhaerentes, sanctae Ecclesiae unitatem denuntient, et quasi intromissi circulis arcam portent. Vectibus quippe arcam portare, est bonis doctoribus sanctam Ecclesiam ad rudes infidelium mentes praedicando deducere. Qui auro quoque jubentur operiri, ut dum sermone aliis insonant, ipsi etiam vitae splendore fulgescant. De quibus apte subditur: Qui semper erunt in circulis, nec unquam extrahentur ab eis. Quia nimirum necesse est ut qui ad officium praedicationis excubant, a sacrae lectionis studio non recedant. Ad hoc namque vectes esse in circulis semper jubentur, ut cum portari arcam opportunitas exigit, de intromittendis vectibus portandi tarditas nulla generetur; quia videlicet cum spiritale aliquid a subditis Pastor inquiritur, ignominiosum valde est si tunc quaerat discere, cum quaestionem debet enodare. Sed circulis vectes inhaereant, ut doctores semper in suis cordibus eloquia sacra meditantes, testamenti arcam sine mora elevent, si quidquid necesse est, protinus docent. Unde bene primus pastor Ecclesiae pastores caeteros admonet, dicens: Parati semper ad satisfactionem omni poscenti vos rationem de ea quae in vobis est spe (I Petr. III, 15). Ac si aperte dicat: Ut ad portandam arcam nulla mora praepediat, vectes a circulis nunquam recedant.

TERTIA PARS. QUALITER RECTOR BENE VIVENS DEBEAT DOCERE ET ADMONERE SUBDITOS

Quia igitur qualis esse debeat pastor ostendimus, nunc qualiter doceat demonstremus. Ut enim longe ante nos reverendae memoriae Gregorius Nazianzenus edocuit (Orat. 1), non una eademque cunctis exhortatio congruit, quia nec cunctos par morum qualitas astringit. Saepe namque aliis officiunt, quae aliis prosunt. Quia et plerumque herbae quae haec animalia nutriunt, alia occidunt; et lenis sibilus equos mitigat, catulos instigat. Et medicamentum quod hunc morbum imminuit, alteri vires jungit; et panis qui vitam fortium roborat, parvulorum necat. Pro qualitate igitur audientium formari debet sermo doctorum, ut et ad sua singulis congruat, et tamen a communis aedificationis arte nunquam recedat. Quid enim sunt intentae mentes auditorum, nisi ut ita dixerim, quaedam in cithara tensiones stratae chordarum? quas tangendi artifex, ut non sibimetipsi dissimile canticum faciat, dissimiliter pulsat. Et idcirco chordae consonam modulationem reddunt, quia uno quidem plectro, sed non uno impulsu feriuntur. Unde et doctor quisque, ut in una cunctos virtute charitatis aedificet, ex una doctrina, non una eademque exhortatione tangere corda audientium debet.

Quanta debet esse diversitas in arte praedicationis.

Aliter namque admonendi sunt viri, atque aliter feminae.
Aliter juvenes, aliter senes.

Aliter inopes, aliter locupletes.

Aliter laeti, aliter tristes.

Aliter subditi, aliter praelati.

Aliter servi, aliter domini.

Aliter hujus mundi sapientes, aliter hebetes.

Aliter impudentes, aliter verecundi.

Aliter protervi, aliter pusillanimes.

Aliter impatientes, aliter patientes.

Aliter benevoli, aliter invidi.

Aliter simplices, aliter impuri.

Aliter incolumes, aliter aegri.

Aliter qui flagella metuunt, et propterea innocenter vivunt; aliter qui sic in iniquitate duruerunt, ut neque per flagella corrigantur.

Aliter nimis taciti, aliter multiloquio vacantes.

Aliter pigri, aliter praecipites.

Aliter mansueti, aliter iracundi.

Aliter humiles, aliter elati.

Aliter pertinaces, aliter inconstantes.

Aliter gulae dediti, aliter abstinentes.

Aliter qui sua misericorditer tribuunt, aliter qui aliena rapere contendunt.

Aliter qui nec aliena rapiunt, nec sua largiuntur: aliter qui et ea quae habent tribuunt, et tamen aliena rapere non desistunt.

Aliter discordes, aliter pacati.

Aliter seminantes jurgia, aliter pacifici.

Aliter qui sacrae legis verba non intelligunt recte; aliter qui recte quidem intelligunt, sed haec humiliter non loquuntur.

Aliter qui cum digne praedicare valeant, prae nimia humilitate formidant; aliter quos a praedicatiore imperfectio vel aetas prohibet, et tamen praecipitatio impellit.

Aliter qui in hoc quod temporaliter appetunt, prosperantur; aliter qui ea quidem quae mundi sunt concupiscunt, sed tamen adversitatis labore fatigantur.

Aliter conjugiis obligati, aliter a conjugii nexibus liberi.

Aliter admistionem carnis experti, aliter ignorantes.

Aliter qui peccata deplorant operum, aliter qui cogitationum.

Aliter qui commissa plangunt, nec tamen deserunt; aliter qui deserunt, nec tamen plangunt.

Aliter qui illicita quae faciunt, etiam laudant; aliter qui accusant prava, nec tamen devitant.

Aliter qui repentina concupiscentia superantur, atque aliter qui in culpa ex consilio ligantur.

Aliter qui licet minima, crebro tamen illicita faciunt; aliter qui se a parvis custodiunt, sed aliquando in gravioribus demerguntur.

Aliter qui bona nec inchoant, aliter qui inchoata minime consummant.

Aliter qui mala occulte agunt, et bona publice; aliter qui bona quae faciunt abscondunt, et tamen quibusdam factis publice mala de se opinari permittunt.

Sed quid utilitatis est, quod cuncta haec collecta numeratione transcurrimus, si non etiam admonitionis modos per singula, quanta possumus brevitate, pandamus.

Aliter igitur admonendi sunt viri, atque aliter feminae, quia illis graviora, istis vero injungenda sunt leviora, ut illos magna exerceant, istas autem levia demulcendo convertant. Aliter admonendi sunt juvenes, atque aliter senes, quia illos plerumque severitas admonitionis ad profectum dirigit; istos vero ad meliora opera deprecatio blanda componit. Scriptum quippe est: Seniorem ne increpaveris, sed obsecra ut patrem (I Tim. V, 1).

Quomodo admonendi sint inopes et divites.

Aliter admonendi sunt inopes, atque aliter locupletes; illis namque offerre consolationis solatium contra tribulationem, istis vero inferre metum contra elationem debemus. Inopi quippe a Domino per prophetam dicitur: Noli timere, quia non confunderis (Isai. LIV, 4). Cui non longe post blandiens, dicit: Paupercula tempestate convulsa (Ibid., 11). Rursumque banc consolatur, dicens: Elegi te in camino paupertatis (Ibid., XLVIII, 10). At contra Paulus discipulo de divitibus dicit: Divitibus hujus saeculi praecipe non superbe sapere, neque sperare in incerto divitiarum suarum (I Tim. VI, 17). Ubi notandum valde est, quod humilitatis doctor memoriam divitum faciens non ait, Roga, sed Praecipe, quia etsi impendenda est pietas infirmitati, honor tamen non debetur elationi. Talibus ergo rectum quod dicitur, tanto rectius jubetur, quanto et in rebus transitoriis altitudine cogitationis intumescunt. De his in Evangelio Dominus dicit: Vae vobis divitibus, qui habetis consolationem vestram (Luc. VI, 24). Quia enim quae sunt aeterna gaudia nesciunt, ex praesentis vitae abundantia consolantur. Offerenda est ergo eis consolatio, quos caminus paupertatis excoquit; atque illis inferendus est timor, quos consolatio gloriae temporalis extollit; ut et illi discant quia divitias quas non conspiciunt possident, et isti cognoscant quia eas quas conspiciunt nequaquam tenere possunt. Plerumque tamen personarum ordinem permutat qualitas morum, ut sit dives humilis, sit pauper elatus. Unde mox praedicantis lingua cum audientis debet vita componi, ut tanto districtius in paupere elationem feriat, quanto eam nec illata paupertas inclinat; et tanto lenius humilitatem divitum mulceat, quanto eos nec abundantia quae sublevat, exaltat. Nonnunquam tamen etiam superbus dives exhortationis blandimento placandus est, quia et plerumque dura vulnera per lenia fomenta mollescunt, et furor insanorum saepe ad salutem medico blandiente reducitur; cumque eis in dulcedine condescenditur, languor insaniae mitigatur. Neque enim negligenter intuendum est, quod cum Saulem spiritus adversus invaderet, apprehensa David cithara, ejus vesaniam sedabat (I Reg. XVIII, 10). Quid enim per Saulem, nisi elatio potentum; et quid per David innuitur, nisi humilis vita sanctorum? Cum ergo Saul ab immundo spiritu arripitur, David canente, ejus vesania temperatur; quia cum sensus potentum per elationem in furorem vertitur, dignum est ut ad salutem mentis quasi dulcedine citharae, locutionis nostrae tranquillitate revocetur. Aliquando autem cum hujus saeculi potentes arguuntur, prius per quasdam similitudines velut de alieno negotio requirendi sunt; et cum rectam sententiam quasi in alterum protulerint, tunc modis congruentibus de proprio reatu feriendi sunt; ut mens temporali potentia tumida contra corripientem nequaquam se erigat, quae suo sibi judicio superbiae cervicem calcat; et in nulla sui defensione se exerceat, quam sententia proprii oris ligat. Hinc est enim quod Nathan propheta arguere regem venerat, et quasi de causa pauperis contra divitem judicium quaerebat (II Reg. XII, 4, 5, seq.); ut prius rex sententiam diceret, et reatum suum postmodum audiret, quatenus nequaquam justitiae contradiceret, quam ipse in se protulisset. Vir itaque sanctus et peccatorem considerans et regem, miro ordine audacem reum prius per confessionem ligare studuit, et postmodum per invectionem secare. Celavit paululum quem quaesivit, sed percussit repente quem tenuit. Pigrius enim fortasse incideret, si ab ipso sermonis exordio aperte culpam ferire voluisset; sed praemissa similitudine, eam quam occultabat exacuit increpationem. Ad aegrum medicus venerat, secandum vulnus videbat, sed de patientia aegri dubitabat. Abscondit igitur ferrum medicinale sub veste, quod eductum subito fixit in vulnere, ut secantem gladium sentiret aeger antequam cerneret, ne si ante cerneret, sentire recusaret.

Aliter admonendi sunt laeti, atque aliter tristes. Laetis videlicet inferenda sunt tristia quae sequuntur ex supplicio; tristibus vero inferenda sunt laeta quae promittuntur ex regno. Discant laeti ex minarum asperitate quod timeant; audiant tristes praemiorum gaudia de quibus praesumant. Illis quippe dicitur: Vae vobis qui ridetis nunc, quoniam flebitis (Luc. VI, 25);

isti vero eodem magistro docente audiunt: Iterum videbo vos, et gaudebit cor vestrum, et gaudium vestrum nemo tollet a vobis (Joan. XVI, 22). Nonnulli autem laeti vel tristes non rebus fiunt, sed conspersionibus existunt. Quibus profecto intimandum est quod quaedam vitia quibusdam conspersionibus juxta sunt. Habent enim laeti ex propinquo luxuriam, tristes iram. Unde necesse est ut non solum quisque consideret quod ex conspersione sustinet, sed etiam quod ex vicino deterius perurget; ne dum nequaquam pugnat contra hoc quod tolerat, ei quoque a quo se liberum aestimat, vitio succumbat.

CAPUT IV

Aliter admonendi sunt subditi, atque aliter praelati. Illos ne subjectio conterat, istos ne locus superior extollat. Illi ne minus quae jubentur impleant, isti ne plus justo jubeant quae compleantur. Illi ut humiliter subjaceant, isti ut temperanter praesint. Nam quod intelligi et figuraliter potest, illis dicitur: Filii, obedite parentibus vestris in Domino; istis vero praecipitur: Et patres, nolite ad iracundiam provocare filios vestros (Coloss. III, 20, 21). Illi discant quomodo ante occulti arbitri oculos sua interiora componant, isti quomodo etiam commissis sibi exempla bene vivendi exterius praebeant. Scire etenim praelati debent quia si perversa unquam perpetrant, tot mortibus digni sunt, quot ad subditos suos perditionis exempla transmittunt. Unde necesse est ut tanto se cautius a culpa custodiant, quanto per prava quae faciunt, non soli moriuntur sed aliorum animarum, quas pravis exemplis destruxerunt, rei sunt. Unde admonendi sunt illi; ne districtius puniantur si absoluti reperiri nequiverint saltem de se; isti ne de subditorum erratibus judicentur, etiamsi se jam de se securos inveniunt. Illi ut tanto circa se sollicitius vivant, quanto eos aliena cura non implicat; isti vero ut sic aliorum curas expleant, quatenus et suas agere non desistant, et sic in propria sollicitudine ferveant, ut a commissorum custodia minime torpescant. Illi enim sibimet vacanti dicitur: Vade ad formicam, o piger, et considera vias ejus, et disce sapientiam (Proverb. VI, 6). Iste autem terribiliter admonetur, cum dicitur: Fili mi, si spoponderis pro amico tuo, defixisti apud extraneum manum tuam, et illaqueatus es verbis oris tui, et captus propriis sermonibus (Ibid., 1). Spondere namque pro amico, est alienam animam in periculo suae conversationis accipere. Unde et apud extraneum manus defigitur, quia apud curam sollicitudinis quae ante deerat, mens ligatur. Verbis vero oris sui illaqueatus est, ac propriis sermonibus captus; quia dum commissis sibi cogitur bona dicere, ipsum prius necesse est quae dixerit custodire. Illaqueatur igitur verbis oris sui, dum ratione exigente constringitur, ne ejus vita ad aliud quam admonet relaxetur. Unde apud districtum judicem cogitur tanta in opere exsolvere, quanta eum constat aliis voce praecepisse. Ubi et bene mox exhortatio subditur, ut dicatur: Fac ergo quod dico, fili mi, et temetipsum libera, quia incidisti in manus proximi tui: discurre, festina, suscita amicum tuum; ne dederis somnum oculis tuis, nec dormitent palpebrae tuae (Prov. VI, 3). Quisquis enim ad vivendum aliis in exemplo praeponitur, non solum ut ipse vigilet, sed etiam ut amicum suscitet admonetur. Ei namque vigilare bene vivendo non sufficit, si non et illum cui praeest, a peccati torpore disjungit. Bene autem dicitur: Ne dederis somnum oculis tuis, nec dormitent palpebrae tuae (Ibid., 4). Somnum quippe oculis dare, est intentione cessante, subditorum curam omnino negligere. Palpebrae vero dormitant, cum cogitationes nostrae ea quae in subditis arguenda cognoscunt, pigredine deprimente dissimulant. Plene enim dormire est commissorum acta nec scire, nec corrigere. Non autem dormire, sed dormitare est, quae quidem reprehendenda sunt cognoscere, sed tamen propter mentis taedium dignis ea increpationibus non emendare. Dormitando vero oculus ad plenissimum somnum ducitur, quia dum plerumque qui praeest malum quod cognoscit non resecat, ad hoc quandoque negligentiae suae merito pervenit, ut quod a subjectis delinquitur, nec agnoscat. Admonendi sunt itaque qui praesunt, ut per circumspectionis studium oculos pervigiles intus et in circuitu habeant, et coeli animalia fieri contendant. (Ezech. I, 18). Ostensa quippe coeli animalia in circuitu et intus oculis plena describuntur (Apoc. IV, 6). Dignum quippe est ut cuncti qui praesunt intus atque in circuitu oculos habeant, quatenus et interno judici in semetipsis placere studeant, et exempla vitae exterius praebentes, ea etiam quae in aliis sunt corrigenda deprehendant. Admonendi sunt subditi, ne praepositorum suorum vitam temere judicent, si quid eos fortasse agere reprehensibiliter vident; ne unde mala recte redarguunt, inde per elationis impulsum in profundiora mergantur. Admonendi sunt, ne cum culpas praepositorum considerant, contra eos audaciores fiant, sed sic si qua valde sunt eorum prava, apud semetipsos dijudicent, ut tamen divino timore constricti ferre sub eis jugum reverentiae non recusent. Quod melius ostendimus, si David factum ad medium deducamus (I Reg. XXIV, 4, seq.). Saul quippe persecutor, cum ad purgandum ventrem speluncam fuisset ingressus, illic cum viris suis David inerat, qui jam tam longo tempore persecutionis ejus mala tolerabat. Cumque eum viri sui ad feriendum Saul accenderent, fregit eos responsionibus, quia manum mittere in christum Domini non deberet. Qui tamen occulte surrexit, et oram chlamydis ejus abscidit. Quid enim per Saul, nisi mali rectores; quid per David, nisi boni subditi designantur? Saul igitur ventrem purgare, est pravos praepositos conceptam in corde malitiam usque ad opera miseri odoris extendere, et cogitata apud se noxia factis exterioribus exsequendo monstrare. Quem tamen David ferire metuit, quia piae subditorum mentes ab omni se peste obtrectationis abstinentes, praepositorum vitam nullo linguae gladio percutiunt, etiam cum de imperfectione reprehendunt. Qui etsi quando pro infirmitate sese abstinere vix possunt, ut extrema quaedam atque exteriora praepositorum mala, sed tamen humiliter loquantur, quasi oram chlamidis silenter incidunt; quia videlicet dum praelatae dignitati saltem innoxie et latenter derogant, quasi regis superpositi vestem foedant, sed tamen ad semetipsos redeunt seque vehementissime vel de tenuissima verbi laceratione reprehendunt. Unde bene et illic scriptum est: Post haec David percussit cor suum, eo quod abscidisset oram chlamidis Saul (Ibid., 6). Facta quippe praepositorum oris gladio ferienda non sunt, etiam cum recte reprehendenda judicantur. Si quando vero contra eos vel in minimis lingua labitur, necesse est ut per afflictionem poenitentiae cor prematur; quatenus ad semetipsum redeat, et cum praepositae potestati deliquerit, ejus contra se judicium a quo sibi praelata est perhorrescat. Nam cum praepositis delinquimus, ejus ordinationi qui eos nobis praetulit obviamus. Unde Moyses quoque cum contra se et Aaron conqueri populum cognovisset, ait: Nos enim quid sumus? Nec contra nos est murmur vestrum, sed contra Dominum (Exod. XVI, 8).

Aliter admonendi sunt servi, atque aliter domini. Servi scilicet, ut in se semper humilitatem conditionis aspiciant; domini vero, ut naturae suae qua aequaliter sunt cum servis conditi, memoriam non amittant. Servi admonendi sunt ne dominos despiciant, ne Deum offendant si ordinationi illius superbiendo contradicunt; domini quoque admonendi sunt, quia contra Deum de munere ejus superbiunt, si eos quos per conditionem tenent subditos, aequales sibi per naturae consortium non agnoscunt. Isti admonendi sunt ut sciant se servos esse dominorum: illi admonendi sunt ut cognoscant se conservos esse servorum. Istis namque dicitur: Servi, obedite dominis carnalibus (Coloss. III, 22). Et rursum: Quicunque sunt sub jugo servi, dominos suos omni honore dignos arbitrentur (I Tim. VI, 1); illis autem dicitur: Et vos domini eadem facite illis, remittentes minas, scientes quod et illorum et vester Dominus est in coelis (Ephes. VI, 2).

CAPUT VI

Quomodo admonendi sapientes et hebetes.

Aliter admonendi sunt sapientes hujus saeculi, atque aliter hebetes. Sapientes quippe admonendi sunt, ut amittant scire quae sciunt; hebetes quoque admonendi sunt, ut appetant scire quae nesciunt. In illis hoc primum destruendum est, quod se sapientes arbitrantur; in istis jam aedificandum est quidquid de superna sapientia cognoscitur, quia dum minime superbiunt, quasi ad suscipiendum aedificium corda paraverunt. Cum illis laborandum est, ut sapientius stulti fiant, stultam sapientiam deserant, et sapientem Dei stultitiam discant; istis vero praedicandum est, ut ab ea quae putatur stultitia, ad veram sapientiam vicinius transeant. Illis namque dicitur: Si quis videtur inter vos sapiens esse in hoc soeculo, stultus fiat, ut sit sapiens (I Cor. III, 18); istis vero dicitur: Non multi sapientes secundum carnem (Ibid., I, 22). Et rursum: Quae stulta sunt mundi elegit Deus, ut confundat sapientes (Ibid., 27). Illos plerumque ratiocinationis argumenta, istos nonnunquam melius exempla convertunt. Illis nimirum prodest, ut in suis allegationibus victi jaceant; istis vero aliquando sufficit ut laudabilia aliorum facta cognoscant. Unde et magister egregius, sapientibus et insipientibus debitor (Rom. I, 14), cum Hebraeorum quosdam sapientes, quosdam vero etiam tardiores admoneret, illis de completione Testamenti Veteris loquens, eorum sapientiam argumento superavit, dicens: Quod enim antiquatur et senescit, prope interitum est (Hebr. VIII, 13). Cum vero solis exemplis quosdam trahendos cerneret, in eadem Epistola adjunxit: Sancti ludibria et verbera experti, insuper et vincula et carceres, lapidati sunt, secti sunt, tentati sunt, in occisione gladii mortui sunt (Ibid., XI, 36, 37). Et rursum: Mementote praepositorum vestrorum, qui vobis locuti sunt verbum Dei, quorum intuentes exitum conversationis, imitamini fidem (Ibid., XIII, 7); quatenus et illos victrix ratio frangeret, et istos ad majora conscendere imitatio blanda suaderet.

CAPUT VII

Quomodo admonendi impudentes et verecundi.

Aliter admonendi sunt impudentes, atque aliter verecundi. Illos namque ab impudentiae vitio non nisi increpatio dura compescit; istos autem plerumque ad melius exhortatio modesta componit. Illi se delinquere nesciunt, nisi etiam a pluribus increpentur; istis plerumque ad conversionem sufficit quod eis doctor mala sua saltem leniter ad memoriam reducit. Illos melius corrigit qui invehendo reprehendit; istis autem major profectus adducitur, si hoc quod in eis reprehenditur quasi ex latere tangatur. Impudentem quippe Judaeorum plebem Dominus aperte increpans, ait: Frons mulieris meretricis facta est tibi, noluisti erubescere (Jerem. III, 3). Et rursum verecundantem refovet, dicens: Confusionis adolescentiae tuae oblivisceris, et opprobrii viduitatis tuae non recordaberis, quia dominabitur tui qui fecit te (Isai. LIV, 4). Impudenter quoque delinquentes Galatas aperte Paulus increpat, dicens: O insensati Galatae, quis vos fascinavit (Galat. III, 1)? Et rursum: Sic stulti estis, ut cum spiritu coeperitis, nunc carne consummamini (Ibid. 3)? Culpas vero verecundantium quasi compatiens reprehendit, dicens: Gavisus sum in Domino vehementer, quoniam tandem aliquando refloruistis pro me sentire sicut et sentiebatis; occupati enim eratis (Philipp. IV, 10); ut et illorum culpas increpatio dura detegeret, et horum negligentiam mollior sermo velaret.

Aliter admonendi sunt protervi, atque aliter pusillanimes. Illi enim dum valde de se praesumunt, exprobrando caeteros dedignantur; isti autem dum nimis infirmitatis suae sunt conscii. plerumque in desperationem cadunt. Illi singulariter summa aestimant cuncta quae agunt, isti vehementer despecta putant esse quae faciunt, et idcirco in desperatione franguntur. Subtiliter itaque ab arguente discutienda sunt opera protervorum, ut in quo sibi placent, ostendantur quia Deo displicent.

Tunc enim protervos melius corrigimus, cum ea quae bene egisse se credunt, male acta monstramus; ut unde adepta gloria creditur, inde utilis subsequatur confusio. Nonnunquam vero cum se vitium proterviae minime perpetrare cognoscunt, compendiosius ad correctionem veniunt, si alterius culpae manifestioris ex latere requisitae improperio confunduntur; ut ex eo quod defendere nequeunt, cognoscant se tenere improbe quod defendunt. Unde cum proterve Paulus Corinthios adversum se invicem videret inflatos, ut alius Pauli, alius Apollo, alius Cephae, alius Christi esse se diceret (I Cor. I, 12; III, 4), incestus culpam in medium deduxit, quae apud eos et perpetrata fuerat, et incorrecta remanebat, dicens: Auditur inter vos fornicatio, et talis fornicatio, qualis nec inter gentes, ita ut uxorem patris quis habeat. Et vos inflati estis, et non magis luctum habuistis, ut tolleretur de medio vestrum qui hoc opus fecit (I Cor. V, 1, 2). Ac si aperte dicat: Quid vos per proterviam, hujus vel illius dicitis, qui per dissolutionem negligentiae, nullius vos esse monstratis?

At contra, pusillanimes aptius ad iter bene agendi reducimus, si quaedam illorum bona ex latere requiramus, ut dum in eis alia reprehendendo corripimus, alia amplectendo laudemus, quatenus eorum teneritudinem laus

audita nutriat, quam culpa increpata castigat. Plerumque autem utilius apud illos proficimus, si et eorum bene gesta memoramus. Et si qua ab eis inordinate gesta sunt, non jam tanquam perpetrata corripimus, sed quasi adhuc ne perpetrari debeant prohibemus, ut et illa quae approbamus, illatus favor augeat, et contra ea quae reprehendimus magis apud pusillanimes exhortatio verecunda convalescat. Unde idem Paulus cum Thessalonicenses in accepta praedicatione perdurantes, quasi de vicino mundi termino quadam cognosceret pusillanimitate turbatos, prius in eis quae fortia prospicit laudat, et caute monendo postmodum quae infirma sunt roborat. Ait enim: Gratias agere debemus Deo semper pro vobis, fratres, ita ut dignum est, quoniam supercrescit fides vestra, et abundat charitas uniuscujusque vestrum in invicem; ita ut et nos ipsi in vobis gloriemur in ecclesiis Dei, pro patientia vestra et fide (II Thes. I, 3, 4). Qui cum blanda haec vitae eorum praeconia praemisisset, paulo post subdidit, dicens: Rogamus autem vos, fratres, per adventum Domini nostri Jesu Christi, et nostrae congregationis in ipsum, ut non cito moveamini a vestro sensu, neque terreamini, neque per spiritum, neque per sermonem, neque per epistolam tanquam per nos missam, quasi instet dies Domini (Ibid. II, 1). Egit enim verus doctor, ut prius audirent laudati quod recognoscerent, et postmodum quod exhortati sequerentur; quatenus eorum mentem ne admonitio subjuncta concuteret, laus praemissa solidaret; et qui commotos eos vicini finis suspicione cognoverat, non jam redarguebat motos, sed quasi transacta nesciens, adhuc commoveri prohibebat; ut dum de ipsa levitate motionis praedicatori suo se incognitos crederent, tanto reprehensibiles fieri, quanto et cognosci ab illo formidarent.

CAPUT IX

Quomodo admonendi sint impatientes et patientes.

Aliter admonendi sunt impatientes, atque aliter patientes. Dicendum namque est impatientibus quia dum refrenare spiritum negligunt, per multa etiam quae non appetunt iniquitatum abrupta rapiuntur, quia videlicet mentem impellit furor quo non trahit desiderium; et agit commota velut nesciens, unde post doleat sciens. Dicendum quoque impatientibus, quia dum motionis impulsu praecipites, quaedam velut alienati peragunt, vix mala sua postquam fuerint perpetrata cognoscunt. Qui dum perturbationi suae minime obsistunt, etiamsi qua a se tranquilla mente fuerant bene gesta confundunt, et improviso impulsu destruunt, quidquid forsitan diu labore provido construxerunt. Ipsa namque quae mater est omnium custosque virtutum, per impatientiae vitium virtus amittitur charitatis. Scriptum quippe est: Charitas patiens est (I Cor. XIII, 4). Igitur cum minime est patiens, charitas non est. Per hoc quoque impatientiae vitium ipsa virtutum nutrix doctrina dissipatur. Scriptum namque est: Doctrina viri per patientiam noscitur (Prov. XIX, 14). Tanto ergo quisque minus ostenditur doctus, quanto minus convincitur patiens. Neque enim potest veraciter bona docendo impendere, si vivendo nescit aequanimiter aliena mala tolerare.

Per hoc quoque impatientiae vitium plerumque mentem arrogantiae culpa transfigit; quia dum despici in mundo hoc quisque non patitur, bona si qua sibi occulta sunt, ostentare conatur, atque sic per impatientiam usque ad arrogantiam ducitur; dumque ferre despectionem non potest, detegendo semetipsum in ostentatione gloriatur. Unde scriptum est: Melior est patiens arrogante (Eccle. VII, 9). Quia videlicet eligit patiens quaelibet mala perpeti quam per ostentationis vitium bona sua occulta cognosci. At contra eligit arrogans bona de se vel falsa jactari, ne mala possit vel minima perpeti. Quia igitur cum patientia relinquitur, etiam bona reliqua quae jam gesta sunt destruuntur, recte ad Ezechielem in altari Dei fieri fossa praecipitur, ut in ea videlicet superposita holocausta serventur (Ezech. XLIII, 13). Si enim in altari fossa non esset, omne quod in eo sacrificium reperiret, superveniens aura dispergeret. Quid vero accipimus altare Dei, nisi animam justi, quae quot bona egerit, tot super se ante ejus oculos sacrificia imponit? Quid autem est altaris fossa, nisi bonorum patientia, quae dum mentem ad adversa toleranda humiliat, quasi more foveae hanc in imo positam demonstrat? Fossa ergo in altari fiat, ne superpositum sacrificium aura dispergat: id est, electorum mens patientiam custodiat, ne commota vento impatientiae, et hoc quod bene operata est amittat. Bene autem haec eadem fossa unius cubiti esse monstratur (Ibid.); quia nimirum si patientia non deseritur, unitatis mensura servatur. Unde et Paulus ait: Invicem onera vestra portate, et sic adimplebitis legem Christi (Galat. VI, 2). Lex quippe Christi est charitas unitatis, quam soli perficiunt, qui nec cum gravantur excedunt. Audiant impatientes quod scriptum est: Melior est patiens viro forti, et qui dominatur animo suo, expugnatore urbium (Prov. XVI, 32). Minor enim est victoria urbium, quia extra sunt quae subiguntur; valde autem majus est quod per patientiam vincitur, quia ipse a se animus superatur, et semetipsum sibimetipsi subjicit, quando eum patientia intra se frenare compellit. Audiant impatientes quod electis suis Veritas dicit: In patientia vestra possidebitis animas vestras (Luc. XXI, 19). Sic enim conditi mirabiliter sumus, ut ratio animam, et anima possideat corpus. Jus vero animae a corporis possessione repellitur, si non prius anima a ratione possidetur. Custodem igitur conditionis nostrae patientiam Dominus esse monstravit, qui in ipsa nos possidere nosmetipsos docuit. Quanta ergo sit impatientiae culpa cognoscimus, per quam et hoc ipsum amittimus possidere quod sumus. Audiant impatientes quod per Salomonem rursum dicitur: Totum 44 spiritum suum profert stultus, sapiens autem differt et reservat in posterum (Prov. XXIX, 11). Impatientia quippe impellente agitur ut totus foras spiritus proferatur; quem idcirco perturbatio citius ejicit, quia nulla interius disciplina sapientiae circumcludit. Sapiens autem differt et reservat in posterum. Laesus enim, in praesens se ulcisci non desiderat, quia etiam tolerans parci optat, sed tamen juste vindicari omnia extremo judicio non ignorat.

At contra admonendi sunt patientes, ne in eo quod exterius portant, interius doleant, ne tantae virtutis sacrificium quod integrum foras immolant, intus malitiae peste corrumpant; et cum ab hominibus non agnoscitur, sed tamen sub divina examinatione peccatur, tanto deterior culpa doloris fiat, quanto sibi ante homines virtutis speciem vindicat.

Dicendum itaque est patientibus, ut studeant diligere quos sibi necesse est tolerare; ne si patientiam dilectio non sequatur, in deteriorem culpam odii virtus ostensa vertatur. Unde Paulus cum diceret: Charitas patiens est, illico adjunxit: Benigna est (I Cor. XIII, 4); videlicet ostendens quia quos ex patientia tolerat, amare etiam ex benignitate non cessat. Unde idem doctor egregius cum patientiam discipulis suaderet, dicens: Omnis amaritudo, et ira, et indignatio, et clamor, et blasphemia tollatur a vobis (Ephes. IV, 31), quasi cunctis exterius jam bene compositis ad interiora convertitur, dum subjungit: Cum omni malitia (Ibid.); quia nimirum frustra indignatio, clamor et blasphemia ab exterioribus tollitur, si in interioribus vitiorum mater malitia dominatur; et incassum foras nequitia ex ramis inciditur, si surrectura multiplicius intus in radice servatur. Unde et per semetipsam Veritas dicit: Diligite inimicos vestros, benefacite his qui oderunt vos, et orate pro persequentibus et calumniantibus vos (Luc. VI, 27). Virtus itaque est coram hominibus, adversarios tolerare; sed virtus coram Deo, diligere; quia hoc solum Deus sacrificium accipit, quod ante ejus oculos in altari boni operis flamma charitatis incendit. Hinc est quod rursum quibusdam patientibus, nec tamen diligentibus dicit: Quid autem vides festucam in oculo fratris tui, et trabem in oculo tuo non vides (Matth. VII, 3; Luc. VI, 41)? Pertubatio quippe impatientiae festuca est; malitia vero in corde, trabes in oculo. Illam namque aura tentationis agitat, hanc autem consummata nequitia pene immobiliter portat. Recte vero illic subjungitur: Hypocrita, ejice primum trabem de oculo tuo, et tunc videbis ejicere festucam de oculo fratris tui (Ibid.). Ac si dicatur menti iniquae interius dolenti, et sanctam se exterius per patientiam demonstranti: Prius a te molem malitiae excute, et tunc alios de impatientiae levitate reprehende, ne dum non studes simulationem vincere, pejus tibi sit aliena prava tolerare.

Evenire etiam plerumque patientibus solet ut eo quidem tempore quo vel adversa patiuntur, vel contumelias audiunt, nullo dolore pulsentur, et sic patientiam exhibeant, ut custodire etiam cordis innocentiam non omittant; sed cum post paululum haec ipsa quae pertulerint, ad memoriam revocant, igne se doloris inflammant, argumenta ultionis inquirunt, et mansuetudinem quam tolerantes habuerunt, retractantes in malitiam vertunt. Quibus citius a praedicante succurritur, si quae sit hujus permutationis causa pandatur. Callidus namque adversarius bellum contra duos movet, unum videlicet inflammans ut contumelias prior inferat, alterum provocans ut contumelias laesus reddat. Sed plerumque dum hujus jam victor est qui injuriam persuasus irrogat, ab illo vincitur qui illatam sibi aequanimiter portat. Unius ergo victor quem commovendo subjugavit, tota contra alterum virtute se erigit, eumque obsistentem fortiter et vincentem dolet; quem quia commovere in ipsa contumeliarum jaculatione non potuit, ab aperto certamine interim quiescens, et secreta suggestione cogitationem lacescens, aptum deceptionis tempus inquirit. Quia enim publico bello perdidit, ad exercendas occulte insidias exardescit. Quietis namque tempore jam ad victoris animum redit, et vel rerum damna, aut injuriarum jacula ad memoriam reducit, cunctaque quae sibi illata sunt, vehementer exaggerans, intolerabilia ostendit; tantoque mentem moerore conturbat, ut plerumque vir patiens illa se aequanimiter tolerasse post victoriam captivus erubescat, seque non reddidisse contumelias doleat, et deteriora rependere, si occasio praebeatur, quaerat. Quibus ergo isti sunt similes, nisi his qui per fortitudinem in campo victores sunt, sed per negligentiam postmodum intra urbis claustra capiuntur? Quibus sunt similes, nisi iis quos irruens gravis languor a vita non subtrahit, sed leniter veniens recidiva febris occidit? Admonendi sunt igitur patientes, ut cor post victoriam muniant, ut hostem publico bello superatum insidiari moeniis mentis intendant; ut languorem plus reserpentem timeant, ne hostis callidus eo in deceptione postmodum majori exsultatione gaudeat, quo illa dudum contra se rigida colla victorum calcat.

CAPUT X

Quomodo admonendi benevoli et invidi.

Aliter admonendi sunt benevoli, atque aliter invidi. Admonendi namque sunt benevoli, ut sic alienis bonis congaudeant, quatenos habere propria concupiscant. Sic proximorum facta diligendo laudent, ut ea etiam imitando multiplicent, ne si in hoc praesentis vitae stadio ad certamen alienum devoti fautores, sed pigri spectatores assistant, eo post certamen sine bravio remaneant, quo nunc in certamine non laborant; et tunc eorum palmas afflicti respiciant, in quorum nunc laboribus otiosi per durant. Valde quippe peccamus, si aliena bene gesta non diligimus. Sed nil mercedis agimus, si ea quae diligimus, in quantum possumus non imitamur. Dicendum itaque est benevolis, quia si imitari bona minime festinant quae laudantes approbant, sic eis virtutum sanctitas sicut stultis spectatoribus ludicrarum artium vanitas placet. Illi namque aurigarum et histrionum gesta favoribus efferunt, nec tamen tales esse desiderant, quales illos conspiciunt esse quos laudant. Mirantur eos placita egisse, sed tamen devitant similiter placere. Dicendum est benevolis ut cum proximorum facta conspiciunt, ad suum cor redeant, et de alienis actibus non praesumant; ne bona laudent, et agere

Admonendi sunt invidi, ut perpendant quantae caecitatis sunt, qui alieno provectu deficiunt, aliena exsultatione contabescunt. Quantae infelicitatis sunt, qui melioratione proximi deteriores fiunt; dumque augmenta alienae prosperitatis aspiciunt, apud semetipsos anxie afflicti, cordis sui peste moriuntur. Quid istis infelicius, quos dum conspecta felicitas afficit, poena nequiores reddit? Aliorum vero bona quae habere non possunt, si diligerent, sua facerent. Sic quippe sunt universi consistentes in fide, sicut multa membra uno in corpore: quae per officium quidem diversa sunt, sed eo quo sibi vicissim congruunt, unum fiunt. Unde fit ut pes per oculum videat, et per pedes oculi gradiantur; ori auditus aurium serviat, et ad usum suum auribus oris lingua concurrat; suffragetur venter manibus, ventri operentur manus. In ipsa igitur corporis positione accipimus, quod in actione servemus. Nimis itaque turpe est non imitari quod sumus. Nostra sunt nimirum, quae etsi imitari non possumus, amamus in aliis; et amantium fiunt quaeque amantur in nobis. Hinc ergo pensent invidi, charitas quantae virtutis est, quae alieni laboris opera, nostra sine labore facit. Dicendum itaque est invidis, quia dum se a livore minime custodiunt, in antiquam versuti hostis nequitiam demerguntur. De illo namque scriptum est: Invidia autem diaboli mors intrarit in orbem terrarum (Sap. II, 24). Quia enim ipse caelum perdidit, condito hoc homini invidit, et damnationem suam perditus adhuc alios perdendo cumulavit. Admonendi sunt invidi ut cognoscant quantis lapsibus succrescentis ruinae subjaceant, quia dum livorem a corde non projiciunt, ad apertas operum nequitias devolvuntur. Nisi enim Cain invidisset acceptam fratris hostiam, minime pervenisset ad exstinguendam vitam. Unde scriptum est: Et respexit Dominus ad Abel et ad munera ejus; ad Cain vero et ad munera ejus non respexit. Iratusque est Cain vehementer, et concidit vultus ejus (Genes. IV, 4). Livor itaque sacrificii, fratricidii seminarium fuit. Nam quem meliorem se esse doluit, ne utcumque esset amputavit. Dicendum est invidis quia dum se ista intrinsecus peste consumunt, etiam quidquid in se aliud boni habere videntur interimunt. Unde scriptum est: Vita carnium sanitas cordis, putredo ossium invidia (Prov. XIV, 30). Quid enim per carnes nisi infirma quaedam ac tenera, et quid per ossa nisi fortia acta signantur? Et plerumque contingit ut quidam cum cordis innocentia in nonnullis suis actibus infirmi videantur, quidam vero jam quaedam ante humanos oculos robusta exerceant, sed tamen erga aliorum bona intus invidiae pestilentia tabescant. Bene ergo dicitur: Vita carnium sanitas cordis; quia si mentis innocentia custoditur, etiam si qua foris infirma sunt quandoque roborantur. Et recte illic subditur: Putredo ossium invidia, quia per livoris vitium ante Dei oculos pereunt etiam quae humanis oculis fortia videntur. Ossa quippe per invidiam putrescere, est quaedam etiam robusta deperire.

Quomodo admonendi simplices et versipelles.

Aliter admonendi sunt simplices, atque aliter impuri. Laudandi sunt simplices quod studeant numquam falsa dicere, sed admonendi sunt ut noverint nonnunquam vera reticere. Sicut enim semper dicentem falsitas laesit, ita nonnunquam quibusdam audita vera nocuerunt. Unde coram discipulis Dominus locutionem suam silentio temperans, ait: Multa habeo vobis dicere, sed nunc non potestis illa portare (Joan. XVI, 12). Admonendi sunt igitur simplices, ut sicut fallaciam semper utiliter vitant, ita veritatem semper utiliter proferant. Admonendi sunt ut simplicitatis bono prudentiam adjungant, quatenus sic securitatem de simplicitate possideant, ut circumspectionem prudentiae non amittant. Hinc namque per doctorem gentium dicitur: Volo vos sapientes esse in bono, simplices autem in malo

(Rom. XVI, 19). Hinc electos suos per semetipsam Veritas admonet, dicens: Estote prudentes sicut serpentes, et simplices sicut columbae (Matth. X, 16). Quia videlicet in electorum cordibus debet et simplicitatem columbae astutia serpentis acuere, et serpentis astutiam columbae simplicitas temperare, quatenus nec seducti per prudentiam calleant, nec ab intellectus studio ex simplicitate torpescant.

At contra admonendi sunt impuri, ut quam gravis sit, quem cum culpa sustinent, duplicitatis labor agnoscant. Dum enim deprehendi metuunt, semper improbas defensiones quaerunt, semper pavidis suspicionibus agitantur. Nil autem est ad defendendum puritate tutius, nil ad dicendum veritate facilius. Nam dum fallaciam suam tueri cogitur, duro cor labore fatigatur. Hinc namque scriptum est: Labor labiorum ipsorum operiet eos (Psal. CXXXIX, 10). Qui enim nunc implet, tunc operit, quia cujus nunc animum per blandam inquietudinem exerit, tunc per asperam retributionem premit. Hinc per Jeremiam dicitur: Docuerunt linguam suam loqui mendacium, ut inique agerent laboraverunt (Jerem. IX, 5). Ac si aperte diceretur: Qui amici esse veritatis sine labore poterant, ut peccent laborant; cumque vivere simpliciter renuunt, laboribus exigunt ut moriantur. Nam plerumque in culpa deprehensi, dum quales sint cognosci refugiunt, sese sub fallaciae velamine abscondunt, et hoc quod peccant, quodque jam aperte cernitur, excusare moliuntur; ita ut saepe is qui eorum culpas corripere studet, aspersae falsitatis nebulis seductus, pene amisisse se videat quod de eis jam certum tenebat. Unde recte sub Judaeae specie per prophetam contra peccantem animam excusantemque se, dicitur: Ibi habuit foveam ericius (Isai. XXXIV, 15). Ericii quippe nomine impurae mentis seseque callide defendentis duplicitas designatur; quia videlicet ericius cum apprehenditur, ejus et caput cernitur, et pedes videntur, et corpus omne conspicitur; sed mox ut apprehensus fuerit, semetipsum in sphaeram colligit, pedes introrsus subtrahit, caput abscondit, et intra tenentis manus totum simul amittitur, quod totum simul ante videbatur. Sic nimirum, sic impurae mentes sunt, cum in suis excessibus comprehenduntur. Caput enim ericii cernitur, quia quo initio ad culpam peccator accesserit videtur. Pedes ericii conspiciuntur, quia quibus vestigiis nequitia sit perpetrata cognoscitur, et tamen adductis repente excusationibus impura mens introrsus pedes colligit, quia cuncta iniquitatis suae vestigia abscondit. Caput subtrahit, quia miris defensionibus nec inchoasse se malum aliquod ostendit. Et quasi sphaera in manu tenentis remanet, quia is qui corripit, cuncta quae jam cognoverat subito amittens, involutum intra conscientiam peccatorem tenet; et qui totum jam deprehendendo viderat, tergiversatione pravae defensionis illusus totum pariter ignorat. Foveam ergo habet ericius in reprobis, quia malitiosae mentis duplicitas sese intra se colligens abscondit in tenebris defensionis.

Audiant impuri quod scriptum est: Qui ambulat simpliciter, ambulat confidenter (Prov. X, 9). Fiducia quippe magnae securitatis est simplicitas actionis. Audiant quod sapientis ore dicitur: Spiritus sanctus disciplinae effugiet fictum (Sap. I, 5). Audiant quod Scriptura rursum teste perhibetur: Cum simplicibus sermocinatio ejus (Prov. III, 32). Deo enim sermocinari, est per illustrationem suae praesentiae humanis mentibus arcana revelare. Cum simplicibus igitur sermocinari dicitur; quia de supernis mysteriis illorum mentes radio suae visitationis illuminat, quos nulla umbra duplicitatis obscurat. Est autem speciale duplicium malum, quia dum perversa et duplici actione caeteros fallunt, quasi praestantius caeteris prudentes se esse gloriantur; et quia districtionem retributionis non considerant, de damnis suis miseri exsultant. Audiant autem quomodo super illos propheta Sophonias vim divinae animadversionis intendat, dicens: Ecce dies Domini venit magnus et horribilis, dies irae dies illa, dies tenebrarum et caliginis, dies nebulae et turbinis, dies tubae et clangoris super omnes civitates munitas, et super omnes angulos excelsos (Soph. I, 14, 15). Quid enim per civitates munitas exprimitur, nisi suspectae mentes et fallaci semper defensione circumdatae, quae quoties earum culpa corripitur, veritatis ad se jacula non admittunt? Et quid per excelsos angulos (duplex quippe semper est in angulis paries) nisi impura corda signantur? quae dum veritatis simplicitatem fugiunt, ad semetipsa quodammodo duplicitatis perversitate replicantur, et, quod est deterius, apud cogitationes suas in fastu prudentiae ex ipsa se culpa impuritatis extollunt. Dies igitur Domini vindictae atque animadversionis plena super civitates munitas et super excelsos angulos venit, quia ira extremi judicii humana corda et defensionibus contra veritatem clausa destruit, et duplicitatibus involuta dissolvit. Tunc enim munitae civitates cadunt, quia mentes Deo impenetratae damnabuntur. Tunc excelsi anguli corruunt, quia corda quae se per impuritatis prudentiam erigunt, per justitiae sententiam prosternuntur.

Quomodo admonendi sunt incolumes et aegri.

Aliter admonendi sunt incolumes, atque aliter aegri.

Admonendi sunt incolumes, ut salutem corporis exerceant ad salutem mentis; ne si acceptae incolumitatis gratiam ad usum nequitiae inclinent, dono deteriores fiant; et eo postmodum supplicia graviora mereantur, quo nunc largioribus bonis Dei male uti non metuunt. Admonendi sunt incolumes, ne opportunitatem salutis in perpetuum promerendae despiciant. Scriptum namque est: Ecce nunc tempus acceptabile, ecce nunc dies salutis (II Cor. VI, 2). Admonendi sunt ne placere Deo si cum possunt noluerint, cum voluerint sero non possint. Hinc est enim quod eos post sapientia deserit, quos prius diutius renuentes vocavit, dicens: Vocavi, et renuistis; extendi manum meam, et non fuit qui aspiceret; despexistis omne consilium meum, et increpationes meas neglexistis; ego quoque in interitu vestro ridebo, et subsannabo, cum vobis quod timebatis advenerit (Prov. I, 24, seq.). Et rursum: Tunc invocabunt me, et non exaudiam; mane consurgent, et non invenient me. Salus itaque corporis quando ad bene operandum accepta despicitur, quanti sit muneris amissa sentitur. Et infructuose ad ultimum quaeritur, quae congruo concessa tempore utiliter non habetur. Unde bene per Salomonem rursum dicitur: Ne des alienis honorem tuum, et annos tuos crudeli; ne forte impleantur extranei viribus tuis, et labores tui sint in domo aliena, et gemas in novissimis, quando consumpseris carnes et corpus tuum (Ibid. V, 9, seq.). Qui namque alieni a nobis sunt, nisi maligni spiritus, qui a coelestis sunt patriae sorte separati? Quis vero honor noster est, nisi quia in luteis corporibus conditi, ad Conditoris tamen nostri sumus imaginem et similitudinem creati? Vel quis alius crudelis est, nisi ille angelus apostata, qui et semetipsum poena mortis superbiendo perculit, et inferre mortem humano generi etiam perditus non pepercit? Honorem itaque suum alienis dat, qui ad Dei imaginem et similitudinem conditus, vitae suae tempora malignorum spirituum voluptatibus administrat. Annos etiam suos crudeli tradit, qui ad voluntatem male dominantis adversarii accepta vivendi spatia expendit. Ubi bene subditur: Ne forte impleantur extranei viribus tuis, et labores tui sint in domo aliena. Quisquis enim per acceptam valetudinem corporis, per tributam sibi sapientiam mentis, non exercendis virtutibus, sed perpetrandis vitiis elaborat, nequaquam suis viribus suam domum, sed extraneorum habitacula, id est immundorum spirituum facta multiplicat, nimirum vel luxuriando, vel superbiendo agens, ut etiam se addito, perditorum numerus crescat. Bene autem subditur: Et gemas in novissimis, quando consumpseris carnes et corpus tuum. Plerumque enim accepta salus carnis per vitia expenditur; sed cum repente subtrahitur, cum molestiis caro atteritur, cum jam egredi anima urgetur, diu male habita quasi ad bene vivendum salus amissa requiritur. Et tunc gemunt homines quod Deo servire noluerunt, quando damna negligentiae suae recuperare serviendo nequaquam possunt. Unde alias dicitur: Cum occideret eos, tunc requirebant eum (Psal. LXXVII, 34). At contra admonendi sunt aegri, ut eo se filios Dei sentiant, quo illos disciplinae flagella castigant. Nisi enim correctis haereditatem dare disponeret, erudire eos per molestias non curaret. Hinc namque ad Joannem Dominus per angelum dicit: Ego quos amo arguo et castigo (Apoc. III, 19; Prov. III, 11). Hinc rursum scriptum est: Fili mi, noli negligere disciplinam Domini, neque fatigeris cum ab eo argueris. Quem enim diligit Dominus castigat, flagellat autem omnem filium quem recipit (Hebr. XII, 5, 6). Hinc Psalmista ait: Multae tribulationes justorum, et de omnibus his liberavit eos Dominus (Psal. XXXIII, 20). Hinc quoque beatus Job in dolore exclamans, ait: Si justus fuero, non levabo caput, saturatus afflictione et miseria (Job. X, 15). Dicendum est aegris, ut si coelestem patriam, suam credunt, necessario in hac labores velut in aliena patiantur. Hinc est enim quod lapides extra tunsi sunt, ut in constructione templi Domini absque mallei sonitu ponerentur; quia videlicet nunc foris per flagella tundimur, ut intus in templum Dei postmodum sine disciplinae percussione disponamur, quatenus quidquid in nobis est superfluum, modo percussio resecet, et tunc sola nos in aedificio concordia charitatis liget. Admonendi sunt aegri, ut considerent pro percipiendis terrenis haereditatibus quam dura carnales filios disciplinae flagella castigent. Quae ergo nobis divinae correptionis poena gravis est, per quam et nunquam amittenda haereditas percipitur, et semper mansura supplicia vitantur? Hinc etenim Paulus ait: Patres quidem carnis nostrae habuimus eruditores, et reverebamur eos; non multo magis obtemperabimus patri spirituum, et vivemus? Et illi quidem in tempore paucorum dierum secundum voluntatem suam erudiebant nos; hic autem ad id quod utile est in recipiendo sanctificationem ejus (Hebr. XII, 9, 10).

Admonendi sunt aegri, ut considerent quanta salus cordis sit molestia corporalis, quae ad cognitionem sui mentem revocat, et quam plerumque

salus abjicit, infirmitatis memoriam reformat, ut animus qui extra se in elationem ducitur, cui sit conditioni subditus, ex percussa quam sustinet carne memoretur. Quod recte per Balaam (si tamen vocem Dei subsequi obediendo voluisset) in ipsa ejus itineris retardatione signatur (Num. XXII, 23, seq.). Balaam namque pervenire ad propositum tendit, sed ejus votum animal cui praesidet praepedit. Prohibitione quippe immorata asina angelum videt, quem humana mens non videt; quia plerumque caro per molestias tarda flagello suo menti Deum indicat, quem mens ipsa carni praesidens non videbat, ita ut anxietatem spiritus proficere in hoc mundo cupientis, velut iter tendentis impediat, donec ei invisibilem qui sibi obviat innotescat. Unde et bene per Petrum dicitur: Correptionem habuit suae vesaniae subjugale mutum, quod in hominis voce loquens prohibuit prophetae insipientiam (II Petr. II, 15). Insanus quippe homo a subjugali muto corripitur, quando elata mens humilitatis bonum quod tenere debeat ab afflicta carne memoratur. Sed hujus correptionis donum idcirco Balaam non obtinuit, quia ad maledicendum pergens, vocem, non mentem mutavit. Admonendi sunt aegri ut considerent quanti sit muneris molestia corporalis, quae et admissa peccata diluit, et ea quae admitti poterant compescit; quae sumpta ab exterioribus plagis, concussae menti poenitentiae vulnera infligit. Unde scriptum est: Livor vulneris abstergit mala, et plagae in secretioribus ventris (Prov. XX, 30). Mala enim livor vulneris abstergit, quia flagellorum dolor vel cogitatas, vel perpetratas nequitias diluit. Solet vero ventris appellatione mens accipi; quia sicut venter consumit escas, ita mens petractando excoquit curas. Quia enim venter mens dicitur, ea sententia docetur qua scriptum est: Lucerna Domini spiraculum hominis, quae investigat omnia secreta ventris (Ibid.). Ac si diceret: Divini afflatus illuminatio, cum in mentem hominis venerit, eam sibimetipsi illuminans ostendit, quae ante Spiritus sancti adventum cogitationes pravas et portare poterat, et pensare nesciebat. Livor ergo vulneris abstergit mala, et plagae in secretioribus ventris; quia cum exterius percutimur, ad peccatorum nostrorum memoriam taciti afflictique revocamur, atque ante oculos nostros cuncta quae a nobis sunt male gesta reducimus, et per hoc quod foris patimur, magis intus quod fecimus dolemus. Unde fit ut inter aperta vulnera corporis amplius nos abluat plaga secreta ventris, quia sanat nequitias pravi operis occultum vulnus doloris. Admonendi sunt aegri quatenus patientiae virtutem servent, ut incessanter quanta Redemptor noster ab his quos creaverat, pertulit mala, considerent; quod tot abjecta conviciorum probra sustinuit; quod de manu antiqui hostis captivorum animas quotidie rapiens, insultantium alapas accepit; quod aqua salutis nos diluens, a perfidorum sputis faciem non abscondit; quod advocatione sua nos ab aeternis suppliciis liberans, tacitus flagella toleravit; quod inter angelorum choros perennes nobis honores tribuens, colaphos pertulit; quod a peccatorum nos punctionibus salvans, spinis caput supponere non recusavit, quod aeterna nos dulcedine inebrians in siti sua fellis amaritudinem accepit; quod qui pro nobis Patrem, quamvis divinitate esset aequalis, adoravit, sub irrisione adoratus tacuit; quod vitam mortuis praeparans, usque ad mortem ipse vita pervenit. Cur itaque asperum creditur, ut a Deo homo toleret flagella pro malis, si tanta Deus ab hominibus pertulit mala pro bonis? Aut quis sana intelligentia de percussione sua ingratus existat, si ipse hinc sine flagello non exiit, qui hic sine peccato vixit?

Quomodo admonendi qui flagella metuunt, et qui contemnunt.

Aliter admonendi sunt qui flagella metuunt, et propterea innocenter vivunt; atque aliter admonendi sunt, qui sic in iniquitate durerunt, ut neque per flagella corrigantur. Dicendum namque est flagella timentibus, ut et bona temporalia nequaquam pro magno desiderent, quae adesse etiam pravis vident; et mala praesentia nequaquam velut intolerabilia fugiant, quibus hic plerumque etiam bonos affici non ignorant. Admonendi sunt ut si malis veraciter carere desiderant, aeterna supplicia perhorrescant, neque in hoc suppliciorum timore remaneant, sed ad amoris gratiam nutrimento charitatis excrescant. Scriptum quippe est: Perfecta charitas foras mittit timorem (I Joan. IV, 18). Et rursum scriptum est: Non accepistis spiritum servitutis iterum in timore, sed spiritum adoptionis filiorum, in quo clamamus: Abba pater (Rom. VIII, 15). Unde idem doctor iterum dicit: Ubi spiritus Domini, ibi libertas (II Cor. III, 17). Si ergo adhuc a prava actione formidata poena prohibet, profecto formidantis animum nulla spiritus libertas tenet. Nam si poenam non metueret, culpam proculdubio perpetraret. Ignorat itaque mens gratiam libertatis, quam ligat servitus timoris. Bona enim pro semetipsis amanda sunt, et non poenis compellentibus exsequenda. Nam qui propterea bona facit, quia tormentorum mala metuit, vult non esse quod metuat, ut audenter illicita committat. Unde luce clarius constat quod coram Deo innocentia amittitur, ante cujus oculos desiderio peccatur. At contra hi, quos ab iniquitatibus nec flagella compescunt, tanto acriori invectione feriendi sunt, quanto majori insensibilitate duruerunt. Plerumque enim sine dedignatione dedignandi sunt, sine desperatione desperandi; ita duntaxat, ut et ostensa desperatio formidinem incutiat, et subjuncta admonitio ad spem reducat. Districte itaque contra illos divinae sententiae proferendae sunt, ut ad cognitionem sui considerata aeterna animadversione revocentur. Audiant enim in se impletum esse quod scriptum est: Si confuderis stultum in pila, quasi ptisanas ferienti desuper pilo, non auferetur ab eo stultitia ejus (Prov. XXVII, 22). Contra hos propheta Domino conqueritur, dicens: Attrivisti eos, et renuerunt accipere disciplinam (Jer. V, 3). Hinc est quod Dominus dicit: Interfeci et perdidi populum istum, et tamen a viis suis non sunt reversi (Isai. IX, 13). Hinc rursum ait: Populus non est reversus ad percutientem se (Jer. XV, 6). Hinc voce flagellantium propheta conqueritur, dicens: Curavimus Babylonem et non est sanata (Jer. LI, 9). Babylon quippe curatur, nec tamen ad sanitatem reducitur, quando mens in prava actione confusa, verba correptionis audit, flagella correptionis percipit, et tamen ad recta salutis itinera redire contemnit. Hinc captivo Israelitico populo, nec tamen ab iniquitate converso Dominus exprobrat, dicens: Versa est mihi domus Israel in scoriam; omnes isti aes, et stannum, et ferrum, et plumbum in medio fornacis (Ezech. XXII, 18). Ac si aperte dicat: Purgare eos per ignem tribulationis volui, et argentum illos vel aurum fieri quaesivi, sed in fornace mihi in aes, stannum, et ferrum, et plumbum versi sunt, quia non ad virtutem, sed ad vitia etiam in tribulatione proruperunt. Aes quippe dum percutitur, amplius metallis caeteris sonitum reddit. Qui igitur in percussione positus erumpit ad sonitum murmurationis, in aes versus est in medio fornacis. Stannum vero cum ex arte componitur, argenti speciem mentitur. Qui ergo simulationis vitio non caret in tribulatione, stannum factus est in fornace. Ferro autem utitur, qui vitae proximi insidiatur. Ferrum itaque in fornace est qui nocendi malitiam non amittit in tribulatione. Plumbum quoque caeteris metallis est gravius. In fornace ergo plumbum invenitur, qui sic peccati sui pondere premitur, ut etiam in tribulatione positus a terrenis desideriis non levetur. Hinc rursum scriptum est: Multo labore sudatum est, et non exivit de ea nimia rubigo ejus neque per ignem (Ezech. XXIV, 12). Ignem quippe nobis tribulationis admovet, ut in nobis vitiorum purget; sed nec per ignem rubiginem amittimus, quando et inter flagella vitio non caremus. Hinc Propheta iterum dicit: Frustra conflavit conflator; malitiae eorum non sunt consumptae (Jer. VI, 29).

Sciendum vero est, quod nonnunquam cum inter flagellorum duritiam remanent incorrecti, dulci sunt admonitione mulcendi. Quos enim cruciamenta non corrigunt, nonnunquam ab iniquis actionibus lenia blandimenta compescunt; quia et plerumque aegros, quos fortis pigmentorum potio curare non valuit, ad salutem pristinam tepens aqua revocavit; et nonnulla vulnera quae curari incisione nequeunt, fomentis olei sanantur. Et durus adamas incisionem ferri minime recipit, sed leni hircorum sanguine mollescit.

CAPUT XIV

Quomodo admonendi taciturni et verbosi.

Aliter admonendi sunt nimis taciti, atque aliter multiloquio vacantes. Insinuari namque nimis tacitis debet, quia dum quaedam vitia incaute fugiunt, occulte deterioribus implicantur. Nam saepe linguam quia immoderatius frenant, in corde gravius multiloquium tolerant; ut eo plus cogitationes in mente ferveant, quo illas violenta custodia indiscreti silentii angustat. Quae plerumque tanto latius diffluunt, quanto se esse securius aestimant, quia foris a reprehensoribus non videntur. Unde nonnunquam mens in superbiam extollitur, et quos loquentes audit, quasi infirmos despicit. Cumque os corporis claudit, quantum se vitiis superbiendo aperiat non agnoscit. Linguam etenim premit, mentem elevat; et cum suam nequitiam minime considerat, tanto apud se cunctos liberius, quanto et secretius accusat. Admonendi sunt igitur nimis taciti, ut scire sollicite studeant, non solum quales foris ostendere, sed etiam quales se debeant intus exhibere, ut plus ex cogitationibus occultum judicium quam ex sermonibus reprehensionem metuant proximorum. Scriptum namque est: Fili mi, attende sapientiam meam, et prudentiae meae inclina aurem tuam, ut custodias cogitationes (Prov. V, 1). Nil quippe in nobis est corde fugacius, quod a nobis toties recedit, quoties per pravas cogitationes defluit. Hinc etenim Psalmista ait: Cor meum dereliquit me (Ps. XXXIX, 13). Hinc ad semetipsum rediens, ait: Invenit servus tuus cor suum ut oraret te (II Reg. VII, 27). Cum ergo cogitatio per custodiam restringitur, cor quod fugere consuevit invenitur.

Plerumque autem nimis taciti cum nonnulla injusta patiuntur, eo in acriorem dolorem prodeunt, quo ea quae sustinent non loquuntur. Nam si illatas molestias tranquille lingua diceret, a conscientia dolor emanaret. Vulnera enim clausa plus cruciant. Nam cum putredo quae interius fervet ejicitur, ad salutem dolor aperitur. Scire igitur debent, qui plus quam expedit tacent, ne inter molesta quae tolerant, dum linguam tenent, vim doloris exaggerent. Admonendi sunt enim ut si proximos sicut se diligunt, minime illis taceant unde eos juste reprehendunt. Vocis enim medicamine utrorumque saluti concurritur, dum et ab illo qui infert actio prava compescitur, et ab hoc qui sustinet doloris fervor vulnere aperto temperatur. Qui enim proximorum mala respiciunt, et tamen in silentio linguam premunt, quasi conspectis vulneribus usum medicaminis subtrahunt, et eo mortis auctores fiunt, quo virus quod poterant curare noluerunt. Lingua itaque discrete frenanda est, non insolubiliter obliganda. Scriptum namque est: Sapiens tacebit usque ad tempus (Eccli. XX, 7), ut nimirum cum opportunum considerat, postposita censura silentii, loquendo quae congruunt, in usum se utilitatis impendat. Et rursum scriptum est: Tempus tacendi, et tempus loquendi (Eccle. III, 7). Discrete quippe vicissitudinum pensanda sunt tempora, ne aut cum restringi lingua debet, per verba inutiliter defluat; aut cum loqui utiliter potest, semetipsam pigre restringat. Quod bene Psalmista considerans, dicit: Pone, Domine, custodiam ori meo, et ostium circumstantiae labiis meis (Ps. CXL, 3). Non enim poni ori suo parietem, sed ostium petit, quod videlicet aperitur et clauditur. Unde et nobis caute discendum est, quatenus os discretum et congruo tempore vox aperiat, et rursum congruo taciturnitas claudat. At contra abmonendi sunt multiloquio vacantes, ut vigilanter aspiciant a quanto rectitudinis statu depereunt, dum per multiplicia verba dilabuntur. Humana etenim mens aquae more circumclusa ad superiora colligitur, quia illud repetit unde descendit; et relaxata deperit, quia se per infima inutiliter spargit. Quot enim supervacuis verbis a silentii sui censura dissipatur, quasi tot rivis extra se ducitur. Unde et redire interius ad sui cognitionem non sufficit, quia per multiloquium sparsa, a secreto se intimae considerationis excludit. Totam vero se insidiantis hostis vulneribus detegit, quia nulla munitione custodiae circumcludit. Unde scriptum est: Sicut urbs patens et absque murorum ambitu, ita vir qui non potest in loquendo cohibere spiritum suum (Prov. XXV, 28). Quia enim murum silentii non habet, patet inimici jaculis civitas mentis; et cum se per verba extra semetipsam ejicit, apertam se adversario ostendit. Quam tanto ille sine labore superat, quanto et ipsa quae vincitur, contra semetipsam per multiloquium pugnat.

Plerumque autem quia per quosdam gradus desidiosa mens in lapsum casus impellitur, dum otiosa cavere verba negligimus, ad noxia pervenimus; ut prius loqui aliena libeat, postmodum detractionibus eorum vitam de quibus loquitur mordeat, ad extremum vero usque ad apertas lingua contumelias erumpat. Hine seminantur stimuli, oriuntur rixae, accenduntur faces odiorum, pax exstinguitur cordium. Unde bene per Salomonem dicitur: Qui dimittit aquam, caput est jurgiorum (Prov. XVII, 14). Aquam quippe dimittere est linguam in fluxum eloquii relaxare. Quo contra in bona etiam parte iterum dicitur: Aqua profunda, verba ex ore viri (Ibid., XVIII, 4). Qui ergo dimittit aquam, caput est jurgiorum, quia qui linguam non refrenat, concordiam dissipat. Unde e diverso scriptum est: Qui imponit stulto silentium, iras mitigat (Ibid., XXVI. 10). Quod autem multiloquio quisque serviens, rectitudinem justitiae tenere nequaquam possit, testatur Propheta qui ait: Vir linguosus non dirigetur super terram (Ps. CXXXIX, 12). Hinc quoque Salomon iterum dicit: In multiloquio non deerit peccatum (Prov. X, 19). Hinc Isaias ait: Cultus justitiae silentium (Is. XXXII, 17), videlicet indicans quia mentis justitia desolatur quando ab immoderata locutione non parcitur. Hinc Jacobus ait: Si quis putat se religiosum esse non refrenans linguam suam, sed seducens cor suum, hujus vana est religio (Jac. I, 26). Hinc rursum ait: Sit omnis homo velox ad audiendum, tardus autem ad loquendum (Ibid., 19). Hinc iterum, linguae vim definiens, adjungit: Inquietum malum, plena veneno mortifero (Jac. II, 8). Hinc per semetipsam nos Veritas admonet, dicens: Omne verbum otiosum quod locuti fuerint homines, reddent de eo rationem in die judicii (Matth. XII, 36). Otiosum quippe verbum est, quod aut ratione justae necessitatis, aut intentione piae utilitatis caret. Si ergo de otioso sermone ratio exigitur, pensemus quae poena multiloquium maneat, in quo etiam per noxia verba peccatur.

CAPUT XV

Quomodo admonendi pigri et praecipites.

Aliter admonendi sunt pigri, atque aliter praecipites. Illi namque suadendi sunt, ne agenda bona, dum differunt, amittant; isti vero admonendi sunt, ne dum bonorum tempus incaute festinando praeveniunt, eorum merita immutent. Pigris itaque intimandum est quod saepe dum opportune agere quae possumus nolumus, paulo post cum volumus non valemus. Ipsa quippe mentis desidia dum congruo fervore non accenditur, a bonorum desiderio funditus, convalescente furtim torpore mactatur. Unde aperte per Salomonem dicitur: Pigredo immittit soporem (Prov. XIX, 15). Piger enim recte sentiendo quasi vigilat, quamvis nil operando torpescat; sed pigredo soporem immittere dicitur, quia paulisper etiam recte sentiendi vigilantia amittitur, dum a bene operandi studio cessatur. Ubi recte subjungitur: Et anima dissoluta esuriet (Ibid.). Nam quia se ad superiora stringendo non dirigit, neglectam se inferius per desideria expandit; et dum studiorum sublimium vigore non constringitur, cupiditatis infimae fame sauciatur; ut quo se per disciplinam ligare dissimulat, eo se esuriens per voluptatum desideria spargat. Hinc ab eodem rursus Salomone scribitur: In desideriis est omnis otiosus (Prov. XXI, 26). Hinc ipsa Veritate praedicante (Matth. XII, 44, 45), uno quidem exeunte spiritu munda domus dicitur, sed multiplicius redeunte dum vacat occupatur. Plerumque piger dum necessaria agere negligit, quaedam sibi difficilia opponit, quaedam vero incaute formidat; et dum quasi invenit quod velut juste metuat, ostendit quod in otio quasi non injuste torpescat. Cui recte per Salomonem dicitur: Propter frigus piger arare noluit; mendicabit ergo aestate, et non dabitur ei (Prov. XX, 4). Propter frigus quippe piger non arat, dum desidiae torpore constrictus, agere quae debet bona dissimulat. Propter frigus piger non arat, dum parva ex adverso mala metuit, et operari maxima praetermittit. Bene autem dicitur: Mendicabit aestate, et non dabitur ei. Qui enim nunc in bonis operibus non exsudat, cum sol judicii ferventior apparuerit, quia frustra regni aditum postulat, nil accipiens aestate mendicat. Bene huic per eumdem Salomonem rursum dicitur: Qui observat ventum, non seminat; et qui considerat nubes, numquam metit (Eccle. XI, 4). Quid enim per ventum, nisi malignorum spirituum tentatio exprimitur? Et quid per nubes quae moventur a vento, nisi adversitates pravorum hominum designantur? A ventis videlicet impelluntur nubes, quia immundorum spirituum afflatu pravi excitantur homines. Qui ergo observat ventum, non seminat; et qui considerat nubes, nunquam metit; quia quisquis tentationem malignorum spirituum, quisquis persecutionem pravorum hominum metuit, neque nunc grana boni operis seminat, neque tunc manipulos sanctae retributionis secat.

At contra, praecipites dum bonorum actuum praeveniunt tempus, meritum pervertunt, et saepe in malis corruunt, dum bona minime discernunt. Qui nequaquam quae quando agant inspiciunt, sed plerumque acta quia ita non debuerunt agere cognoscunt. Quibus sub auditoris specie recte apud Salomonem dicitur: Fili, sine consilio nihil facias, et post factum non poenitebis (Eccli. XXXII, 24). Et rursum: Palbebrae tuae precedant gressus tuos (Prov. IV, 25). Palpebrae quippe gressus praecedunt, cum operationem nostram consilia recta praeveniunt. Qui enim negligit considerando praevidere quod facit, gressus tendit, oculos claudit, pergendo iter conficit, sed praevidendo sibimetipsi non antecedit, atque idcirco citius corruit, quia quo pedem operis ponere debeat, per palpebram consilii non attendit.

CAPUT XVI

Quomodo admonendi mansueti et iracundi.

Aliter admonendi sunt mansueti, atque aliter iracundi. Nunnunquam enim mansueti cum praesunt, vicinum et quasi juxta positum torporem desidiae patiuntur. Et plerumque nimia resolutione lenitatis, ultra quam necesse est vigorem districtionis emolliunt. At contra iracundi cum regiminum loca percipiunt, quo impellente ira in mentis vaesaniam devolvuntur, eo etiam subditorum vitam dissipata quietis tranquillitate confundunt. Quos cum furor agit in praeceps, ignorant quidquid irati faciunt, ignorant quidquid a semetipsis patiuntur irati. Nunnunquam vero, quod est gravius, irae suae stimulum justitiae zelum putant. Et cum vitium virtus creditur, sine metu culpa cumulatur. Saepe ergo mansueti dissolutionis torpescunt taedio; saepe iracundi rectitudinis falluntur zelo. Illorum itaque virtuti vitium latenter adjungitur; his autem suum vitium quasi virtus fervens videtur. Admonendi sunt igitur illi ut fugiant quod juxta ipsos est, isti quod in ipsis est attendant; illi quod non habent discernant, isti quod habent. Amplectantur mansueti sollicitudinem, damnent iracundi perturbationem. Admonendi sunt mansueti, ut habere etiam aemulationem justitiae studeant; admonendi sunt iracundi, ut aemulationi quam se habere existimant, mansuetudinem subjungant. Idcirco namque Spiritus sanctus in columba nobis est et in igne monstratus, quia videlicet omnes quos implet, et columbae simplicitate mansuetos, et igne zeli ardentes exhibet.

Nequaquam ergo sancto Spiritu plenus est, qui aut in tranquillitate mansuetudinis fervorem aemulationis deserit, aut rursum in aemulationis ardore virtutem mansuetudinis amittit. Quod fortasse melius ostendimus, si in medium Pauli magisterium proferamus, qui duobus discipulis et non diversa charitate praeditis, diversa tamen adjutoria praedicationis impendit. Timotheum namque admonens, ait: Argue, obsecra, increpa in omni patientia et doctrina (II Tim. IV, 2). Titum quoque admonet dicens: Haec loquere, et exhortare, et argue cum omni imperio (Tit. II, 15). Quid est quod doctrinam suam tanta arte dispensat, ut in exhibenda hac, alteri imperium, atque alteri patientiam proponat, nisi quod mansuetioris spiritus Titum, et Paulo ferventioris vidit esse Timotheum? Illum per aemulationis studium inflammat, hunc per lenitatem patientiae temperat. Illi quod deest jungit, huic quod super est subtrahit. Illum stimulo impellere nititur, hunc freno moderatur. Magnus quippe susceptae Ecclesiae colonus, alios palmites ut crescere debeant rigat; alios cum plus justo crescere conspicit resecat, ne aut non crescendo non ferant fructus, aut, immoderate crescendo, quos protulerint amittant. Sed longe alia est ira quae sub aemulationis specie subripit, alia quae turbatum cor et sine justitiae praetextu confundit. Illa enim in hoc quod debet inordinate extenditur, haec autem semper in his quae non debet inflammatur. Sciendum quippe est quia in hoc ab impatientibus iracundi differunt, quod illi ab aliis illata non tolerant, isti autem etiam quae tolerentur important. Nam iracundi saepe etiam se declinantes insequuntur, rixae occasionem commovent, labore contentionis gaudent; quos tamen melius corrigimus, si in ipsa irae suae commotione declinamus. Perturbati quippe quid audiant ignorant, sed ad se reducti tanto liberius exhortationis verba recipiunt, quanto se tranquillius toleratos erubescunt. Menti autem furore ebriae, omne rectum quod dicitur, perversum videtur. Unde et Nabal ebrio culpam suam Abigail laudabiliter tacuit, quam digesto vino laudabiliter dixit (I Reg. XXV, 37). Idcirco enim malum quod fecerat, cognoscere potuit, quia hoc ebrius non audivit.

Cum vero ita iracundi alios impetunt, ut declinari omnino non possint, non aperta exprobratione, sed sub quadam sunt cautela reverentiae parcendo

feriendi. Quod melius ostendimus, si Abner factum ad medium deducamus. Hunc quippe cum Asael vi incautae praecipitationis impeteret, scriptum est: Locutus est Abner ad Asael, dicens: Recede, noli me persequi, ne compellar confodere te in terram. Qui audire contempsit, et noluit declinare. Percussit ergo eum Abner aversa hasta in inguine, et transfodit eum, et mortuus est (II Reg. II, 22, 23). Cujus enim Asael typum tenuit, nisi eorum, quos vehementer arripiens furor in praeceps ducit? Qui in eodem furoris impetu tanto caute declinandi sunt, quanto et insane rapiuntur. Unde et Abner, qui nostro sermone patris lucerna dicitur, fugit, quia doctorum lingua quae supernum Dei lumen indicat, cum per abrupta furoris mentem cujuspiam ferri conspicit, cumque contra irascentem dissimulat verborum jacula reddere, quasi persequentem non vult ferire. Sed cum iracundi nulla consideratione se mitigant, et quasi Asael persequi et insanire non cessant, necesse est ut hi qui furentes conantur reprimere, nequaquam se in furore erigant, sed quidquid est tranquillitatis ostendant; quaedam vero subtiliter proferant, in quibus ex obliquo furentis animum pungant. Unde et Abner cum contra persequentem substitit, non eum recta, sed aversa asta transforavit. Ex mucrone quippe percutere, est impetu apertae increpationis obviare. Aversa vero hasta persequentem ferire, est furentem tranquille ex quibusdam tangere, et quasi parcendo superare. Asael autem protinus occumbit, quia commotae mentes dum et parci sibi sentiunt, et tamen responsorum ratione in intimis sub tranquillitate tanguntur, ab eo quod et erexerant statim cadunt. Qui ergo a fervoris sui impetu sub lenitatis percussione resiliunt, quasi sine ferro moriuntur.

Aliter admonendi sunt humiles, atque aliter elati. Illis insinuandum est quam sit vera excellentia quam sperando tenent; istis vero intimandum est quam sit nulla temporalis gloria, quam et amplectentes non tenent. Audiant humiles quam sint aeterna quae appetunt, quam transitoria quae contemnunt; audiant elati quam sint transitoria quae ambiunt, quam aeterna quae perdunt. Audiant humiles ex magistra voce Veritatis: Omnis qui se humiliat, exaltabitur (Luc. XVIII, 14); audiant elati: Omnis qui se exaltat, humiliabitur (Ibid.). Audiant humiles: Gloriam praecedit humilitas; audiant elati: Ante ruinam exaltatur spiritus (Prov. XV, 33; XVI, 18). Audiant humiles: Ad quem respiciam, nisi ad humilem et quietum, et trementem sermones meos (Isai. LXVI, 2)? audiant elati: Quid superbit terra et cinis (Eccli. X, 9)? Audiant humiles: Deus humilia respicit; audiant elati: Et alta a longe cognoscit (Psal. CXXXVII, 6). Audiant humiles, quia Filius hominis non venit ministrari, sed ministrare (Matth. XX, 28); audiant elati, quia initium omnis peccati superbia est (Eccli. X, 15). Audiant humiles, quia Redemptor noster humiliavit semetipsum, factus obediens usque ad mortem (Philip. II, 8); audiant elati quod de eorum capite scriptum est: Ipse est rex super universos filios superbiae (Job. XLI, 25). Occasio igitur perditionis nostrae facta est superbia diaboli, et argumentum redemptionis nostrae inventa est humilitas Dei. Hostis enim noster inter omnia conditus, voluit videri supra omnia elatus: Redemptor autem noster magnus manens super omnia, fieri inter omnia dignatus est parvus.

Dicatur ergo humilibus, quia dum se dejiciunt, ad Dei similitudinem ascendunt: dicatur elatis, quia dum seerigunt, in apostatae angeli imitationem cadunt. Quid itaque elatione dejectius, quae dum supra se tenditur, ab altitudine verae celsitudinis elongatur? Et quid humilitate sublimius, quae dum se in ima deprimit, auctori suo manenti super summa conjungit? Est tamen aliud quod in eis debeat caute pensari, quia saepe quidam humilitatis decipiuntur specie, quidam vero elationis suae ignoratione falluntur. Nam plerumque nonnullis qui sibi humiles videntur, is qui hominibus deferri non debet, conjunctus est timor; plerumque vero elatos comitari solet liberae vocis assertio. Et cum quaedam increpanda sunt vitia, illi reticent ex timore, et tamen tacere se aestimant ex humilitate, isti loquuntur per impatientiam elationis, et tamen se credunt loqui per libertatem rectitudinis. Illos ut perversa non increpent, sub specie humilitatis premit culpa formidinis; istos ad increpanda quae non debent, aut magis increpanda quam debent, sub imagine libertatis effrenatio impellit tumoris. Unde et elati admonendi sunt, ne plus quam decet sint liberi; et humiles admonendi sunt, ne plus quam expedit sint subjecti, ne aut illi defensionem justitiae vertant in exercitationem superbiae, aut isti cum student plus quam necesse est hominibus subjici, compellantur eorum etiam vitia venerari.

Considerandum vero est quod plerumque elatos utilius corripimus, si eorum correptionibus quaedam laudum fomenta misceamus. Inferenda namque illis sunt aut alia bona quae in ipsis sunt, aut dicendum certe quae poterant esse si non sunt; et tunc demum resecanda sunt mala quae nobis displicent, cum prius ad audiendum eorum placabilem mentem fecerint praemissa bona quae placent. Nam et equos indomitos blanda prius manu tangimus, ut eos nobis plenius postmodum etiam per flagella subigamus. Et amaro pigmentorum poculo mellis dulcedo adjungitur, ne ea quae saluti profutura est, in ipso gustu aspera amaritudo sentiatur; dum vero gustus per dulcedinem fallitur, humor mortiferus per amaritudinem vacuatur. Ipsa ergo in elatis invectionis exordia, permixta sunt laude temperanda, ut dum admittunt favores quos diligunt, etiam correptiones recipiant quas oderunt.

Plerumque autem persuadere elatis utilia melius possumus, si profectum eorum nobis potius quam illis profuturum dicamus, si eorum meliorationem nobis magis quam sibi impendi postulemus. Facile enim ad bonum elatio

flectitur, si et aliis ejus inflexio prodesse credatur. Unde Moyses, qui regente se Deo, deserti iter aerea columna duce pergebat cum Hobab cognatum suum a gentilitatis conversatione vellet educere, et omnipotentis Dei dominio subjugare: Proficiscimur ad locum quem Dominus daturus est nobis; veni nobiscum, ut bene faciamus tibi, quia Dominus bona promisit Israeli. Cui cum respondisset ille: Non vadam tecum, sed revertar in terram meam in qua natus sum; illico adjunxit: Noli nos relinquere; tu enim nosti in quibus locis per desertum castra ponere debeamus, et eris ductor noster (Num. X, 29, seq.). Neque enim Moysi mentem ignorantia itineris angustabat, quem et ad prophetiae scientiam cognitio Divinitatis expanderat, quem columna exterius praeibat, quem de cunctis interius per conversationem cum Deo sedulam locutio familiaris instruebat. Sed videlicet vir providus elato auditori colloquens, solatium petivit ut daret; ducem requirebat in via, ut dux ei fieri potuisset ad vitam. Egit itaque ut superbus auditor voci ad meliora suadenti eo magis fieret devotus, quo putaretur necessarius; et unde se exhortatorem suum praecedere crederet, inde se sub verbis exhortantis inclinaret.

Quomodo admonendi pertinaces et inconstantes.

Aliter admonendi sunt pertinaces, atque aliter inconstantes. Illis dicendum est quod plus de se quam sunt sentiunt, et idcirco alienis consiliis non acquiescunt; istis vero intimandum est quod valde se despicientes negligunt, et ideo levitate cogitationum a suo judicio per temporum momenta flectuntur. Illis dicendum est quia nisi meliores se caeteris aestimarent, nequaquam cunctorum consilia suae deliberationi postponerent; istis dicendum est quia si hoc quod sunt, utcumque attenderent, nequaquam eos per tot varietatis latera mutabilitatis aura versaret. Illis per Paulum dicitur:

Nolite prudentes esse apud vosmetipsos (Rom. XII, 16); at contra isti audiunt: Non circumferamur omni vento doctrinae (Ephes. IV, 14). De illis per Salomonen dicitur: Comedent fructus viae suae, suisque consiliis saturabuntur (Prov. I, 31); de istis autem ab eo rursus scribitur: Cor stultorum dissimile erit (Ibid., XV, 7). Cor quippe sapientum sibimetipsi semper est simile; quia dum rectis persuasionibus acquiescit, constanter se in bono opere dirigit. Cor vero stultorum dissimile est, quia dum mutabilitate se varium exhibet, numquam id quod fuerat manet. Et quia quaedam vitia sicut ex semetipsis gignunt alia, ita ex aliis oriuntur, sciendum summopere est quod tunc ea corripiendo melius tergimus, cum ab ipso amaritudinis suae fonte siccamus. Pertinacia quippe ex superbia, inconstantia vero ex levitate generatur. Admonendi igitur sunt pertinaces, ut elationem suae cogitationis agnoscant, et semetipsos vincere studeant; ne dum rectis aliorum suasionibus foris superari despiciunt, intus a superbia captivi teneantur. Admonendi sunt, ut solerter aspiciant quia Filius hominis, cui una semper cum Patre voluntas est, ut exemplum nobis frangendae nostrae voluntatis praebeat, dicit: Non quaero voluntatem meam, sed voluntatem ejus qui misit me Patris (Joan. V, 30). Qui ut hujus adhuc virtutis gratiam commendaret, servaturum se hoc in extremo judicio praemisit, dicens: Ego a me ipso non possum facere quidquam, sed sicut audio, judico (Ibid.). Qua itaque conscientia dedignatur homo alienae voluntati acquiescere, quando Dei et hominis Filius, cum virtutis suae gloriam venit ostendere, testatur se non a semetipso judicare? At contra admonendi sunt inconstantes, ut mentem gravitate roborent. Tunc enim genimina in se mutabilitatis arefaciunt, cum a corde prius radicem levitatis abscidunt, quia et tunc fabrica robusta construitur, cum prius locus solidus, in quo fundamentum poni debeat, providetur. Nisi ergo ante mentis levitas caveatur, cogitationum inconstantia minime vincitur. A quibus se alienum Paulus fuisse perhibuit, cum dicit: Nunquid levitate usus sum? aut quae cogito, secundum carnem cogito, ut sit apud me, est et non (I Cor. I, 17)? Ac si aperte dicat: Idcirco mutabilitatis aura non moveor, quia levitatis vitio non succumbo.

CAPUT XIX

Quomodo admonendi qui intemperantius, et qui parcius cibo utuntur.

Aliter admonendi sunt gulae dediti, atque aliter abstinentes. Illos enim superfluitas locutionis, levitas operis, atque luxuria; istos vero saepe impatientiae, saepe vero superbiae culpa comitatur. Nisi enim gulae deditos immoderata loquacitas raperet, dives ille qui epulatus quotidie dicitur splendide in lingua gravius non arderet, dicens: Pater Abraham, miserere mei, et mitte Lazarum, ut intingat extremum digiti sui in aquam, ut refrigeret linguam meam, quia crucior in hac flamma (Luc. XVI, 24). Quibus profecto verbis ostenditur quia epulando quotidie crebrius in lingua peccaverat, qui totus ardens refrigerari se praecipue in lingua requirebat. Rursum quia gulae deditos levitas protinus operis sequitur, auctoritas sacra testatur, dicens: Sedit populus manducare et bibere, et surrexerunt ludere (Exod. XXXII, 6). Quos plerumque edacitas usque ad luxuriam pertrahit, quia dum satietate venter extenditur, aculei libidinis excitantur. Unde et hosti callido, qui primi hominis sensum in concupiscentia pomi aperuit, sed in peccati laqueo strinxit, divina voce dicitur: Pectore et venire repes (Gen. III, 14), ac si ei aperte diceretur: Cogitatione et ingluvie super humana corda dominaberis. Quia gulae deditos luxuria sequitur, propheta testatur, qui dum aperta narrat, occulta denuntiat, dicens: Princeps cocorum destruxit muros Jerusalem (Jer. XXXIX, 9; IV Reg. XXV, 10, sec. LXX). Princeps namque cocorum venter est, cui magna cura obsequium a cocis impenditur, ut ipse delectabiliter cibis impleatur. Muri autem Jerusalem virtutes sunt animae, ad desiderium supernae pacis elevatae. Cocorum igitur princeps muros Jerusalem dejicit; quia dum venter ingluvie extenditur, virtutes animae per luxuriam destruuntur.

Quo contra nisi mentes abstinentium plerumque impatientia a sinu tranquillitatis excuteret, nequaquam Petrus cum diceret: Ministrate in fide vestra virtutem, in virtute autem scientiam, in scientia autem abstinentiam (II Petr. I, 5); protinus vigilanter adjungeret, dicens: In abstinentia autem patientiam. Deesse quippe abstinentibus patientiam praevidit, quae eis ut adesset admonuit. Rursum nisi cogitationes abstinentium nonnumquam superbiae culpa transfigeret, Paulus minime dixisset: Qui non manducat, manducantem non judicet (Rom. XIV. 3). Qui rursum ad alios loquens, dum de abstinentiae virtute gloriantium praecepta perstringeret, adjunxit: Quae sunt rationem quidem habentia sapientiae in superstitione et humilitate, et non ad parcendum corpori, non in honore aliquo ad saturitatem carnis (Coloss. II, 23). Qua in re notandum est quod in disputatione sua praedicator egregius superstitioni humilitatis speciem jungit, quia dum plus quam necesse est per abstinentiam caro atteritur, humilitas foris ostenditur, sed de hac ipsa humilitate graviter interius superbitur. Et nisi aliquando mens ex abstinentiae virtute tumesceret, nequaquam hanc velut inter magna merita Pharisaeus arrogans studiose numeraret, dicens: Jejuno bis in Sabbato (Luc. XVIII, 12). Admonendi ergo sunt gulae dediti, ne in eo quod escarum delectationi incubant, luxuriae se mucrone transfigant; et quanta sibi per esum loquacitas, quanta mentis levitas insidietur, aspiciant, ne dum ventri molliter serviunt, vitiorum laqueis crudeliter astringantur. Tanto enim longius a secundo parente receditur, quanto per immoderatum usum dum manus ad cibum tenditur, parentis primi lapsus iteratur. At contra admonendi sunt abstinentes, ut sollicite semper aspiciant, ne cum gulae vitium fugiunt, acriora his vitia quasi ex virtute generentur; ne dum carnem macerant, ad impatientiam spiritus erumpant: et nulla jam virtus sit quod caro vincitur, si spiritus ab ira superatur. Aliquando autem dum mens abstinentium ab ira se deprimit, hanc quasi peregrina veniens laetitia corrumpit, et eo abstinentiae bonum deperit, quo sese a spiritalibus vitiis minime custodit. Unde recte per prophetam dicitur: In diebus jejuniorum vestrorum inveniuntur voluntates vestrae (Isai. LVIII, 3, sec. LXX). Et paulo post: In judicia et rixas jejunatis, et percutitis pugnis (Ibid.). Incassum ergo per abstinentiam corpus atteritur, si inordinatis dimissa motibus mens vitiis dissipatur. Rursumque admonendi sunt, ut abstinentiam suam et semper sine imminutione custodiant et numquam hanc apud occultum judicem eximiae virtutis credant, ne si fortasse magni esse meriti creditur, cor in elationem sublevetur. Hinc namque per prophetam dicitur: Nunquid tale est jejunium quod elegi? Sed frange esurienti panem tuum, et egenos vagosque induc in domum tuam (Ibid., 5).

Qua in re pensandum est virtus abstinentiae quam parva respicitur, quae nonnisi ex aliis virtutibus commendatur. Hinc Joel ait: Sanctificate jejunium. Jejunium quippe sanctificare, est adjunctis aliis bonis dignam Deo abstinentiam carnis ostendere. Admonendi sunt abstinentes, ut noverint quia tunc placentem Deo abstinentiam offerunt, cum ea quae sibi de alimentis subtrahunt, indigentibus largiuntur. Solerter namque audiendum est, quod per prophetam Dominus redarguit, dicens: Cum jejunaretis et plangeretis in quinto et in septimo mense per hos septuaginta annos, numquid jejunium jejunastis mihi? Et cum comedistis et bibistis, numquid non vobismetipsis comedistis, et vobismetipsis bibistis (Zach. VII, 5 seq.)? Non enimDeo, sed sibi quisque jejunat, si ea quae ventri ad tempus subtrahit, non egenis tribuit, sed ventri postmodum offerenda custodit. Itaque ne aut illos appetitus gulae a mentis statu dejiciat, aut istos afflicta caro ex elatione supplantet, audiant illi ex ore Veritatis: Attendite autem vobis, ne forte graventur corda vestra in crapula et ebrietate, et curis hujus mundi (Luc. XXI, 34). Ubi utilis quoque pavor adjungitur: Et superveniat in vos repentina dies illa. Tanquam laqueus enim superveniet in omnes, qui sedent super faciem omnis terrae (Ibidem, 35). Audiant isti: Non quod intrat in os, coinquinat hominem, sed quod procedit ex ore, coinquinat hominem (Matth. XV, 11). Audiant illi: Esca ventri, et venter escis; Deus autem et hunc et has destruet (I Cor. VI, 13). Et rursum: Non in commessationibus et ebrietatibus (Rom. XIII, 13). Et rursum: Esca nos non commendat Deo (I Cor. VIII, 8). Audiant isti, quia omnia munda mundis; coinquinatis autem et infidelibus nihil est mundum (Tit. I, 15). Audiant illi: Quorum deus venter est, et gloria in confusione ipsorum (Philip. III, 19). Audiant isti: Discedent quidam a fide (I Tim. IV, 1, 3). Et paulo post: Prohibentium nubere, abstinere a cibis, quos Deus creavit ad percipiendum cum gratiarum actione fidelibus et his qui cognoverunt veritatem. Audiant illi: Bonum est non manducare carnem, neque bibere vinum: neque in quo frater tuus scandalizatur (Rom. XIV, 21). Audiant isti: Modico vino utere propter stomachum et frequentes tuas infimitates (I. Tim. V, 23). Quatenus et illi discant cibos carnis inordinate non appetere, et isti creaturam Dei quam non appetunt, non audeant condemnare.

CAPUT XX

Quomodo admonendi qui sua distribuunt, et qui rapiunt aliena.

Aliter admonendi sunt qui jam sua misericorditer tribuunt, atque aliter qui adhuc et aliena rapere contendunt. Admonendi namque sunt qui jam sua misericorditer tribuunt, ne cogitatione tumida super eos se quibus terrena largiuntur, extollant; ne idcirco se meliores aestiment, quia contineri per se caeteros vident. Nam terrenae domus dominus famulorum ordines ministeriaque dispertiens, hos ut regant, illos vero statuit ut ab aliis regantur. Istos jubet ut necessaria caeteris praebeant, illos ut accepta ab aliis sumant. Et tamen plerumque offendunt qui regunt, et in patrisfamilias gratia permanent qui reguntur. Iram merentur qui dispensatores sunt, sine offensione perdurant qui ex aliena dispensatione subsistunt. Admonendi sunt igitur qui jam quae possident misericorditer tribuunt, ut a coelesti Domino dispensatores se positos subsidiorum temporalium agnoscant; et tanto humiliter praebeant, quanto et aliena esse intelligunt quae dispensant. Cumque in illorum ministerio quibus accepta largiuntur constitutos se esse considerant, nequaquam eorum mentes tumor sublevet, sed timor premat. Unde et necesse est ut sollicite perpendant ne commissa indigne distribuant; ne quaedam quibus nulla, ne nulla quibus quaedam; ne multa quibus pauca, ne pauca praebeant quibus impendere multa debuerunt; ne praecipitatione hoc quod tribuunt inutiliter spargant; ne tarditate petentes noxie crucient; ne recipiendae hic gratiae intentio subrepat; ne dationis lumen laudis transitoriae appetitio exstinguat; ne oblatum munus conjuncta tristitia obsideat; ne in bene oblato munere animus plus quam decet hilarescat, ne sibi quidquam, cum totum recte impleverint, tribuant, et simul omnia postquam peregerint perdant. Ne enim sibi virtutem suae liberalitatis deputent, audiant quod scriptum est: Si quis administrat, tanquam ex virtute quam administrat Deus (I Petr. IV. 11). Ne in benefactis immoderatius gaudeant, audiant quod scriptum est: Cum feceritis omnia quae praecepta sunt vobis, dicite: Servi inutiles sumus, quod debuimus facere, fecimus (Luc. XVII, 10). Ne largitatem tristitia corrumpat, audiant quod scriptum est: Hilarem enim datorem diligit Deus (II Cor. IX, 7). Ne ex impenso munere transitoriam laudem quaerant, audiant quod scriptum est: Nesciat sinistra tua quid faciat dextera tua (Matth. VI, 3); Id est, piae dispensationi nequaquam se gloria vitae praesentis admisceat, sed opus rectitudinis appetitio ignoret favoris. Ne impensae gratiae vicissitudinem requirant, audiant quod scriptum est: Cum facis prandium aut coenam, noli vocare amicos tuos, neque fratres tuos, neque cognatos, neque vicinos divites, ne forte et ipsi te reinvitent, et fiat tibi retributio: sed cum facis convivium, voca pauperes, debiles, claudos coecos; et beatus eris, quia non habent unde retribuere tibi (Luc. XIV, 12 seq. etc.). Ne quae praebenda sunt citius, sero praebeantur, audiant quod scriptum est: Ne dicas amico tuo: Vade et revertere, et cras dabo tibi, cum statim possis dare (Prov. III, 28). Ne sub obtentu largitatis ea quae possident inutiliter spargant, audiant quod scriptum est: Sudet eleemosyna in manu tua. Ne cum multa necesse sint, pauca largiantur, audiant quod scriptum est: Qui parce seminat, parce et metet (II Cor. IX, 6). Ne cum pauca oportet, plurima praebeant et ipsi postmodum minime inopiam tolerantes ad impatientiam erumpant, audiant quod scriptum est: Non ut aliis sit remissio, vobis autem tribulatio, sed ex aequalitate, vestra abundantia illorum inopiam suppleat, et ut illorum abundatia vestrae inopiae sit supplementum (Ibid. VIII, 13, 14). Cum enim dantis mens ferre inopiam nescit, si multa sibi subtrahit, occasionem contra se impatientiae exquirit. Prius namque praeparandus est patientiae animus, et tunc aut multa sunt aut cuncta largienda, ne dum minus aequanimiter inopia irruens fertur, et praemissae largitatis merces pereat, et adhuc mentem deterius murmuratio subsequens perdat. Ne omnino nihil eis praebeant, quibus conferre aliquid parvum debent, audiant quod scriptum est: Omni petenti te tribue (Luc. VI, 30). Ne saltem aliquid praebeant, quibus omnino conferre nil debent, audiant quod scriptum est: Da bono, et non receperis peccatorem; benefac humili, et non dederis impio (Eccli. XII, 4). Et rursum; Panem tuum et vinum super sepulturam justi constitue, et noli ex eo manducare et bibere cum peccatoribus (Tob. IV, 17).

Panem enim suum et vinum peccatoribus praebet, qui iniquis subsidia pro eo quod iniqui sunt impendit. Unde et nonnulli hujus mundi divites, cum fame crucientur Christi pauperes, effusis largitatibus nutriunt histriones. Qui vero indigenti etiam peccatori panem suum, non quia peccator, sed quia homo est, tribuit; nimirum non peccatorem, sed justum pauperem nutrit, quia in illo non culpam, sed naturam diligit.

Admonendi sunt etiam qui jam sua misericorditer largiuntur, ut sollicite custodire studeant, ne cum commissa peccata eleemosynis redimunt, adhuc redimenda committant; ne venalem Dei justitiam aestiment, si cum curant pro peccatis nummos tribuere, arbitrentur se posse inulte peccare. Plus est namque anima quam esca, et corpus quam vestimentum (Matth. VI, 25; Luc. XII, 23). Qui ergo escam aut vestimentum pauperibus largitur, sed tamen animae vel corporis iniquitate polluitur, quod minus est justitiae obtulit, et quod majus est, culpae; sua enim Deo dedit, et se diabolo.

At contra admonendi sunt qui adhuc et aliena rapere contendunt, ut sollicite audiant quid veniens in judicium Dominus dicat. Ait namque: Esurivi, et non dedistis mihi manducare; sitivi, et non dedistis mihi bibere; hospes eram, et non collegistis me; nudus, et non operuistis me; infirmus et in carcere, et non visitastis me (Matth. XXV, 35, 36). Quibus etiam praemittit, dicens: Discedite a me, maledicti, in ignem aeternum, qui paratus est diabolo et angelis ejus (Matth. XXV, 41). Ecce nequaquam audiunt, quia rapinas vel quaelibet alia violenta commiserunt, et tamen aeternis gehennae ignibus mancipantur. Hinc ergo colligendum est quanta damnatione plectendi sunt qui rapiunt aliena, si tanta animadversione feriuntur qui sua indiscrete tenuerunt. Perpendant quo eos obliget reatu res rapta, si tali subjicit poenae non tradita. Perpendant quid mereatur injustitia illata, si tanta percussione digna est pietas non impensa.

Cum aliena rapere intendunt, audiant quod scriptum est: Vae ei qui multiplicat non sua; usquequo aggravat contra se densum lutum (Habac. II, 6)? Avaro quippe contra se densum lutum aggravare, est terrena lucra cum pondere peccati cumulare. Cum multiplicare large habitationis spatia cupiunt, audiant quod scriptum est: Vae qui conjungitis domum ad domum, et agrum agro copulatis, usque ad terminum loci. Nunquid habitabitis soli vos in medio terrae (Isai. V, 8)? Ac si aperte diceret: Quousque vos extenditis, qui habere in communi mundo consortes minime potestis? Conjunctos quidem premitis, sed contra quos valeatis vos extendere, semper invenitis. Cum augendis pecuniis inhiant, audiant quod scriptum est: Avarus non impletur pecunia; et qui amat divitias, non capiet fructus ex eis (Eccle. V, 9). Fructus quippe ex illis caperet, si eas bene spargere non amando voluisset. Qui vero eas diligendo retinet, hic utique sine fructu derelinquet. Cum repleri cunctis simul opibus inardescunt, audiant quod scriptum est: Qui festinat ditari, non erit innocens (Prov. XXVIII, 20); profecto enim qui augere opes ambit, vitare peccatum negligit; et more avium captus, cum escam terrenarum rerum avidus conspicit, quo stranguletur peccati laqueo non agnoscit. Cum quaelibet praesentis mundi lucra desiderant, et ea quae de futuro damna patientur, ignorant, audiant quod scriptum est: Haereditas ad quam festinatur in principio, in novissimo benedictione carebit (Prov. XX, 21). Ex hac quippe vita initium ducimus, ut ad benedictionis sortem in novissimo veniamus: qui itaque in principio haereditari festinant, sortem sibi in novissimo benedictionis amputant; quia dum per avaritiae nequitiam hic multiplicari appetunt, illic ab aeterno patrimonio exhaeredes fiunt. Cum vel plurima ambiunt, vel obtinere cuncta quae ambierint possunt, audiant quod scriptum est: Quid prodest homini si totum mundum lucretur, animae vero suae detrimentum faciat (Matth. XVI, 26)? Ac si aperte Veritas dicat: Quid prodest homini si totum quod extra se est congregat, si hoc ipsum solum quod ipse est, damnat? Plerumque autem citius raptorum avaritia corrigitur, si in verbis admonentis quam fugitiva sit praesens vita, monstretur: si eorum ad medium memoria deducatur, qui et ditari in hoc mundo diu conati sunt, et tamen in adeptis divitiis diu manere nequiverunt, quibus festina mors repente et simul abstulit quidquid eorum nequitia nec simul nec repente congregavit; qui non solum hic rapta reliquerunt, sed secum ad judicium causas rapinae detulerunt. Horum itaque exempla audiant, quos in verbis suis procul dubio et ipsi condemnant; ut cum post verba ad cor redeunt, imitari saltem quos judicant, erubescant.

CAPUT XXI

Quomodo admonendi qui aliena non appetunt, sed sua retinent; et qui sua tribuentes, aliena tamen rapiunt.

Aliter admonendi sunt qui nec aliena appetunt, nec sua largiuntur; atque aliter qui et ea quae habent tribuunt, et tamen aliena rapere non desistunt. Admonendi sunt qui nec aliena appetunt, nec sua largiuntur, ut sciant sollicite quod ea de qua sumpti sunt, cunctis hominibus terra communis est, et idcirco alimenta quoque omnibus communiter profert. Incassum ergo se innocentes putant, qui commune Dei munus sibi privatum vindicant; qui cum accepta non tribuunt, in proximorum nece grassantur, quia tot pene quotidie perimunt, quot morientium pauperum apud se subsidia abscondunt. Nam cum quaelibet necessaria indigentibus ministramus, sua illis reddimus, non nostra largimur; justitiae debitum potius solvimus, quam misericordiae opera implemus. Unde et ipsa Veritas cum de misericordia caute exhibenda loqueretur, ait: Attendite ne justitiam vestram faciatis coram hominibus (Matth. VI, 1). Cui quoque sententiae etiam Psalmista concinens dicit: Dispersit dedit pauperibus, justitia ejus manet in aeternum (Psal. CI, 9). Cum enim largitatem impensam pauperibus praemisisset, non hanc vocare misericordiam, sed justitiam maluit; quia quod a communi Domino tribuitur, justum profecto est, ut quicunque accipiunt, eo communiter utantur. Hinc etiam Salomon ait: Qui justus est, tribuet et non cessabit (Prov. XXI, 26). Admonendi sunt quoque ut sollicite attendant quod ficulnea quae fructum non habuit, contra hanc districtus agricola queritur, quod etiam terram occupavit. Terram quippe ficulnea sine fructu occupat, quando mens tenacium hoc quod prodesse multis poterat, inutiliter servat.

Terram ficulnea sine fructu occupat, quando locum quem exercere alius per solem boni operis valuit, stultus per desidiae umbram premit.

Hi autem nonnunquam dicere solent: Concessis utimur, aliena non quaerimus, et si digna misericordiae retributione non agimus, nulla tamen perversa perpetramus. Quod idcirco sentiunt, quia videlicet aurem cordis a verbis coelestibus claudunt.

Admonendi sunt tenaces, ut noverint quod hanc primam injuriam faciunt Deo, quia danti sibi omnia, nullam misericordiae hostiam reddunt. Hinc enim Psalmista ait: Non dabit Deo propitiationem suam, nec pretium redemptionis animae suae (Psal. XLVIII, 8). Pretium namque redemptionis dare, est opus bonum praevenienti nos gratiae reddere. Hinc Joannes exclamat dicens: Jam securis ad radicem arboris posita est. Omnis arbor quae non facit fructum bonum, excidetur, et in ignem mittetur (Luc. III, 9). Qui ergo se innoxios, quia aliena non rapiunt aestimant, ictum securis vicinae praevideant, et torporem improvidae securitatis amittant, ne cum ferre fructum boni operis negligunt, a praesenti vita funditus quasi a viriditate radicis exsecentur. At contra admonendi sunt, qui et ea quae habent tribuunt, et aliena rapere non desistunt, ne valde munifici videri appetant, et de boni specie deteriores fiant. Hi etenim propria indiscrete tribuentes, non solum ut supra jam diximus, ad impatientiae murmurationem proruunt; sed cogente se inopia, usque ad avaritiam devolvuntur. Quid ergo eorum mente infelicius, quibus de largitate nascitur avaritia, et peccatorum seges quasi ex virtute seminatur? Prius itaque admonendi sunt ut tenere sua rationabiliter sciant, et tunc demum ut aliena non ambiant. Si enim radix culpae in ipsa effusione non exuritur, nunquam per ramos exuberans avaritiae spina siccatur. Occasio ergo rapiendi subtrahitur, si bene prius jus possidendi disponatur. Tunc vero admoniti audiant, quomodo quae habent misericorditer tribuant, quando nimirum didicerunt ut bona misericordiae per interjectam rapinae nequitiam non confundant. Violenter enim exquirunt quae misericorditer largiuntur. Sed aliud est pro peccatis misericordiam facere, aliud pro misericordia facienda peccare: quae jam nequaquam misericordia nuncupari potest, quia ad dulcem fructum non proficit quae per virus pestiferae radicis amarescit. Hinc est enim quod ipsa etiam sacrificia per prophetam Dominus reprobat, dicens: Ego Dominus diligens judicium, et odio habens rapinam in holocausto (Isai. LXI, 8). Hinc iterum dixit: Hostiae impiorum abominabiles, quae offeruntur ex scelere (Prov. XXI, 27). Qui saepe quoque et indigentibus subtrahunt quae Deo largiuntur. Sed quanta eos animadversione renuat per quemdam sapientem Dominus demonstrat, dicens: Qui offert sacrificium de substantia pauperis, quasi qui victimat filium in conspectu patris sui (Eccli. XXXIV. 24). Quid namque esse intolerabilius potest, quam mors filii ante oculos patris? Hoc itaque sacrificium quanta ira aspiciatur ostenditur, quod orbati patris dolori comparatur. Et tamen plerumque quanta tribuunt, pensant; quanta autem rapiunt, considerare dissimulant. Quasi mercedem numerant, et perpendere culpas recusant. Audiant itaque quod scriptum est: Qui mercedes congregavit, misit eas in sacculum pertusum (Aggaei. VI). In sacculo quippe pertuso videtur, quando pecunia mittitur; sed quando amittitur, non videtur. Qui ergo quanta largiuntur aspiciunt, sed quantum rapiunt non perpendunt, in pertuso sacculo mercedes mittunt, quia profecto has in spem suae fiduciae intuentes congerunt, sed non intuentes perdunt.

Aliter admonendi sunt discordes, atque aliter pacati. Discordes namque admonendi sunt ut certissime sciant quia quantislibet virtutibus polleant, spiritales fieri nullatenus possunt, si uniri per concordiam proximis negligunt. Scriptum quippe est: Fructus autem spiritus est charitas, gaudium, pax (Gal. V, 22). Qui ergo servare pacem non curat, ferre fructum spiritus recusat. Hinc Paulus ait: Cum sit inter vos zelus et contentio, nonne carnales estis (I Cor. III, 3)? Hinc iterum quoque dicit: Pacem sequimini cum omnibus, et sanctimoniam, sine qua nemo videbit Deum (Hebr. XII, 14). Hinc rursum admonens ait: Solliciti servare unitatem spiritus in vinculo pacis: unum corpus et unus spiritus, sicut vocati estis in una spe vocationis vestrae (Ephes. IV, 3, 4). Ad unam ergo vocationis spem nequaquam pertingitur, si non ad eam unita cum proximis mente curratur. At saepe nonnulli quo quaedam specialiter dona percipiunt, eo superbiendo donum concordiae quod majus est, amittunt; ut si fortasse carnem prae caeteris gulae refrenatione quis edomat, concordare eis quos superat abstinendo contemnat. Sed qui abstinentiam a concordia separat, quid admoneat Psalmista perpendat; ait enim: Laudate eum in tympano et choro (Psal. CL, 4). In tympano namque sicca et percussa pellis resonat, in choro autem voces societate concordant. Quisquis itaque corpus affligit, sed concordiam deserit, Deum quidem laudat in tympano, sed non laudat in choro. Saepe vero dum quosdam major scientia erigit, a caeterorum societate disjungit, et quasi quo plus sapiunt, eo a concordiae virtute desipiscunt. Hi itaque audiant quid per semetipsam Veritas dicat: Habete sal in vobis, et pacem habete inter vos (Marc. IX, 49). Sal quippe sine pace non virtutis est donum, sed damnationis argumentum. Quo enim quisque melius sapit, eo deterius delinquit; et idcirco inexcusabiliter merebitur supplicium, quia prudenter si voluisset, potuit vitare peccatum. Quibus recte quoque per Jacobum dicitur: Quod si zelum amarum habetis, et contentiones sunt in corde vestro, nolite gloriari, et mendaces esse adversum veritatem. Non est ista sapientia desursum descendens, sed terrena, animalis, diabolica. Quae autem desursum est sapientia primum quidem pudica est, deinde pacifica

(Jac. III, 14, 15, 17). Pudica videlicet, quia caste intelligit; pacifica autem, quia per elationem se minime a proximorum societate disjungit. Admonendi sunt dissidentes, ut noverint quod tandiu nullum boni operis Deo sacrificium immolant, quandiu a proximorum charitate discordant. Scriptum namque est: Si offers munus tuum ad altare, et ibi recordatus fueris quia frater tuus habet aliquid adversum te, relinque ibi munus tuum ante altare, et vade prius reconciliari fratri tuo, et tunc veniens offeres munus tuum (Matth. V, 28, 24). Ex qua scilicet praeceptione pensandum est quorum hostia repellitur, quam intolerabilis culpa monstratur. Nam cum mala cuncta bonis sequentibus diluantur, pensemus quanta sint mala discordiae, quae nisi exstincta funditus fuerint, bonum subsequi non permittunt. Admonendi sunt discordes, ut si aures a mandatis coelestibus declinant, mentis oculos ad consideranda ea quae in infimis versantur aperiant; quod saepe aves unius ejusdemque generis sese socialiter volando non deserunt, et quod gregatim animalia bruta pascuntur. Quia si solerter aspicimus, concordando sibi irrationalis natura indicat, quantum malum per discordiam rationalis natura committat, quando haec a rationis intentione perdidit, quod illa motu naturali custodit.

At contra admonendi sunt pacati, ne dum plus quam necesse est, pacem quam possident amant, ad perpetuam pervenire non appetant. Plerumque enim gravius intentionem mentium rerum tranquillitas tentat; ut quo non sunt molesta quae tenent, eo minus amabilia fiant quae vocant; et quo delectant praesentia, eo non inquirantur aeterna. Unde et per semetipsam Veritas loquens, cum terrenam pacem a superna distingueret, atque ad venturam discipulos ex praesenti provocaret, ait: Pacem relinquo vobis, pacem meam do vobis (Joan. XIV, 27). Relinquo scilicet transitoriam, do mansuram. Si ergo in ea cor quae relicta est figitur, numquam ad illam quae danda est, pervenitur. Pax igitur praesens ita tenenda est, et ut diligi debeat et contemni; ne si immoderate diligitur, diligentis animus in culpa capiatur.

Unde et admonendi sunt pacati, ne dum nimis humanam pacem desiderant, pravos hominum mores nequaquam redarguant; et consentiendo perversis, ab auctoris sui se pace disjungant; ne dum humana foras jurgia metuunt, interni foederis discissione feriantur. Quid est enim pax transitoria, nisi quoddam vestigium pacis aeternae? Quid ergo esse dementius potest, quam vestigia in pulvere impressa diligere, sed ipsum a quo impressa sunt, non amare? Hinc David dum totum se ad foedera pacis internae constringeret, testatur quod cum malis concordiam non teneret, dicens: Nonne qui te oderunt, Deus, oderam illos, et super inimicos tuos tabescebam? Perfecto odio oderam illos, inimici facti sunt mihi (Psal. CXXXVIII, 21, 22). Inimicos etenim Dei perfecto odio odisse, est et quod facti sunt diligere, et quod faciunt increpare; mores parvorum premere, vitae prodesse. Pensandum ergo est, quando ab increpatione quiescitur, quanta culpa cum pessimis pax tenetur, si propheta tantus hoc velut in hostiam Deo obtulit, quod contra se pro Domino pravorum inimicitias excitavit. Hinc est quod tribus Levi assumptis gladiis per castrorum media transiens, quia feriendis noluit peccatoribus parcere, Deo manus dicta est consecrasse (Exod., XXXII, 27, seq.). Hinc Phinees peccantium civium gratiam spernens, coeuntes cum Madianitis perculit, et iram Domini iratus placavit (Num. XXV, 9). Hinc per semetipsam Veritas dicit: Nolite arbitrari, quia venerim pacem mittere in terram. Non veni pacem mittere, sed gladium (Matth. X, 34). Malorum namque cum incaute amicitiis jungimur, culpis ligamur. Unde Josaphat, qui tot de anteacta vita praeconiis attollitur, de Achab regis amicitiis pene periturus increpatur. Cui a Domino per prophetam dicitur: Impio praebes auxilium, et his qui oderunt Dominum, amicitia jungeris; et idcirco iram quidem Domini merebaris, sed bona opera inventa sunt in te, eo quod abstuleris lucos de terra Juda (II Par. XIX, 24). Ab illo enim qui summe rectus est, eo ipso jam discrepat, quo perversorum amicitiis vita nostra concordat. Admonendi sunt pacati, ne si ad correptionis verba prosiliant, temporalem pacem sibi perturbare formident. Rursumque admonendi sunt, ut eamdem pacem dilectione integra intrinsecus teneant, quam per invectionem vocis sibi extrinsecus turbant. Quod utrumque provide se David servasse perhibet, cum dicit: Cum his qui oderunt pacem, eram pacificus, cum loquebar illis, impugnabant me gratis (Psal. CXIX, 7). Ecce et loquens impugnabatur; et tamen impugnatus, erat pacificus, quia nec insanientes cessabat reprehendere, nec reprehensos negligebat amare. Hinc etiam Paulus ait: Si fieri potest, quod ex vobis est, cum omnibus hominibus pacem habentes (Rom. XII, 18). Hortaturus enim discipulos ut pacem cum omnibus haberent, praemisit, dicens: Si fieri potest, atque subjunxit: Quod ex vobis est. Difficile quippe erat ut si male acta corriperent, habere pacem cum omnibus possent. Sed cum temporalis pax in pravorum cordibus ex nostra increpatione confunditur, inviolata necesse est ut in nostro corde servetur. Recte itaque ait: Quod ex vobis est. Ac si nimirum dicat: Quia pax ex duarum partium consensu subsistit, si ab eis qui corripiuntur expellitur, integra tamen in vestra qui corripitis mente teneatur. Unde idem rursum discipulos admonet, dicens: Si quis non obedit verbo nostro, per epistolam hunc notate: et non commisceamini cum illo, ut confundatur (II Thess. III, 14). Atque illico adjunxit: Et nolite ut inimicum existimare illum, sed corripite ut fratrem (Ibid., 15). Ac si diceret: Pacem cum eo exteriorem solvite, sed interiorem circa illum medullitus custodite; ut peccantis mentem sic vestra discordia feriat, quatenus pax a cordibus vestris nec abnegata discedat.

Quomodo admonendi qui jurgia serunt, et pacifici.

Aliter admonendi sunt seminantes jurgia, atque aliter pacifici. Admonendi namque sunt qui jurgia seminant, ut cujus sint sequaces agnoscant. De apostata quippe angelo scriptum est, cum bonae messi inserta fuisset zizania: Inimicus homo hoc fecit (Matth. XIII, 28). De cujus etiam membro per Salomonem dicitur: Homo apostata, vir inutilis, graditur ore perverso, annuit oculis, terit pede; digito loquitur, pravo corde machinatur malum, et omni tempore jurgia seminat (Prov. VI, 12). Ecce quem seminantem jurgia dicere voluit, prius apostatam nominavit: quia nisi more superbientis angeli a conspectu Conditoris prius intus aversione mentis caderet, foras postmodum usque ad seminanda jurgia non veniret. Qui recte describitur quod annuit oculis, digito loquitur, terit pede. Interior namque est custodia, quae ordinata servat exterius membra. Qui ergo statum mentis perdidit, subsequenter foras in inconstantiam motionis fluit, atque exteriori mobilitate indicat, quod nulla interius radice subsistat. Audiant jurgiorum seminatores quod scriptum est: Beati pacifici, quoniam filii Dei vocabuntur (Matth. V, 9). Atque e diverso colligant, quia si filii Dei vocantur qui pacem faciunt, proculdubio Satanae sunt filii qui confundunt. Omnes autem qui per discordiam separantur a viriditate dilectionis, arefiunt. Qui etsi boni operis fructus in suis actionibus proferunt, profecto nulli sunt, quia non ex unitate charitatis oriuntur. Hinc ergo perpendant seminantes jurgia, quam multipliciter peccant: qui dum unam nequitiam perpetrant, ab humanis cordibus cunctas simul virtutes eradicant. In uno enim malo innumera peragunt, quia seminando discordiam, charitatem quae nimirum virtutum omnium mater est, exstinguunt. Quia autem nihil pretiosius est Deo virtute dilectionis, nil est desiderabilius diabolo exstinctione charitatis. Quisquis ergo seminando jurgia dilectionem proximorum perimit, hosti Dei familiarius servit, quia qua ille amissa cecidit, hanc iste vulneratis cordibus subtrahens, eis iter ascensionis abscidit.

At contra admonendi sunt pacifici, ne tantae actionis pondus levigent, si inter quos fundare pacem debeant, ignorent. Nam sicut multum nocet si unitas desit bonis, ita valde est noxium si non desit malis. Si ergo perversorum nequitia in pace jungitur, profecto eorum malis actibus robur augetur; quia quo sibi in malitia congruunt, eo se robustius bonorum afflictionibus illidunt. Hinc namque est quod contra damnati illius vasis, videlicet Antichristi praedicatores, divina voce beato Job dicitur: Membra carnium ejus cohaerentia sibi (Job. XLI, 14). Hinc sub squamarum specie de ejus satellitibus perhibetur: Una uni conjungitur, et ne spiraculum quidem incedit per eas (Ibid., 7). Sequaces quippe illius quo nulla inter se discordiae adversitate divisi sunt, eo in benorum gravius nece glomerantur. Qui ergo iniquos pace sociat, iniquitati vires administrat, quia bonos deterius deprimunt, quos et unanimiter persequuntur. Unde praedicator egregins gravi Pharisaeorum Sadducaeorumque persecutione deprehensus, inter semetipsos dividere studuit, quos contra se graviter unitos vidit, cum clamavit, dicens: Viri fratres, ego Pharisaeus sum, filius Pharisaeorum, de spe et resurrectione mortuorum ego judicor (Act. XXIII, 6). Dumque Sadducaei spem resurrectionemque mortuorum esse denegarent, quam Pharisaei juxta sacri eloquii praecepta crederent, facta in persecutorum unanimitate dissensio est, et divisa turba illaesus Paulus exivit, quae hunc unita prius immaniter pressit. Admonendi itaque sunt qui faciendae pacis studiis occupantur, ut pravorum mentibus prius amorem debeant internae pacis infundere, quatenus eis postmodum valeat exterior pax prodesse; ut dum eorum cor in illius cognitione suspenditur, nequaquam ad nequitiam ex hujus perceptione rapiatur; dumque supernam provident, terrenam nullo modo ad usum suae deteriorationis inclinent. Cum vero perversi quique tales sunt, ut nocere bonis nequeant, etiamsi concupiscant, inter hos nimirum debet terrena pax construi et priusquam ab eis valeat superna cognosci; ut hi scilicet quos contra dilectionem Dei malitia suae impietatis exasperat, saltem ex proximi amore mansuescant; et quasi e vicino ad melius transeant, ut ad illam quae a se longe est, pacem Conditoris ascendant.

Quomodo admonendi rudes in doctrina sacra, et docti, sed non humiles.

Aliter admonendi sunt qui sacrae legis verba non recte intelligunt; atque aliter qui recte quidem intelligunt, sed haec humiliter non loquuntur. Admonendi enim sunt qui sacrae legis verba non recte intelligunt, ut perpendant, quia saluberrimum vini potum in veneni sibi poculum vertunt, ac per medicinale ferrum vulnere mortali se feriunt, dum per hoc in se sana perimunt, per quod salubriter abscindere sauciata debuerunt. Admonendi sunt, ut perpendant quo Scriptura sacra in nocte vitae praesentis quasi quaedam nobis lucerna sit posita, cujus nimirum verba dum non recte intelligunt, de lumine tenebrescunt. Quos videlicet ad intellectum pravum intentio perversa non raperet, nisi prius superbia inflaret. Dum enim se prae caeteris sapientes arbitrantur, sequi alios ad melius intellecta despiciunt; atque ut apud imperium vulgus scientiae sibi nomen extorqueant, student summopere et ab aliis recte intellecta destruere, et sua perversa roborare. Unde bene per prophetam dicitur: Secuerunt praegnantes Galaad ad dilatandum terminum suum (Amos I, 13). Galaad namque acervus testimonii interpretatur. Et quia cuncta simul congregatio Ecclesiae per confessionem servit testimonio veritatis, non incongrue per Galaad Ecclesia exprimitur, quae ore cunctorum fidelium, de Deo quaeque vera sunt testatur. Praegnantes autem vocantur animae, quae intellectum verbi ex divino amore concipiunt, si ad perfectum tempus veniant, conceptam intelligentiam operis ostensione pariturae. Terminum vero suum dilatare, est opinionis suae nomen extendere. Secuerunt ergo praegnantes Galaad ad dilatandum terminum suum; quia nimirum haeretici mentes fidelium quae jam aliquid de veritatis intellectu conceperant perversa praedicatione perimunt, et scientiae sibi nomen extendunt. Parvulorum corda jam de verbi conceptione gravida, erroris gladio scindunt, et quasi doctrinae sibi opinionem faciunt. Hos ergo cum conamur instruere ne perversa sentiant, admoneamus prius necesse est, ne inanem gloriam quaerant. Si enim radix elationis absciditur, consequenter rami pravae assertionis arefiunt. Admonendi sunt etiam, ne errores discordiasque generando, legem Dei quae idcirco data est ut sacrificia Satanae prohibeat, eamdem ipsam in Satanae sacrificium vertant. Unde per prophetam Dominus queritur, dicens: Dedi eis frumentum, vinum et oleum, et argentum multiplicavi eis et aurum, quae fecerunt Baal (Oseae II, 8). Frumentum quippe a Domino accipimus, quando in dictis obscurioribus subducto tegmine litterae per medullam spiritus legis interna sentimus. Vinum suum Dominus nobis praestat, cum Scripturae suae alta praedicatione nos debriat [inebriat]. Oleum quoque suum nobis tribuit, cum praeceptis apertioribus vitam nostram blanda lenitate disponit. Argentum multiplicat cum nobis luce veritatis plena eloquia subministrat. Auro quoque nos ditat, quando cor nostrum intellectu summi fulgoris irradiat. Quae cuncta haeretici Baal offerunt, quia apud auditorum suorum corda corrupte omnia intelligendo pervertunt. Et de frumento Dei, vino atque oleo, argento pariter et auro, Satanae sacrificium immolant, quia ad errorem discordiae verba pacis inclinant. Unde admonendi sunt ut perpendant, quia dum perversa mente de praeceptis pacis discordiam faciunt, justo Dei examine ipsi de verbis vitae moriuntur.

At contra admonendi sunt qui recte quidem verba legis intelligunt, sed haec humiliter non loquuntur; ut in divinis sermonibus prius quam aliis eos proferant, semetipsos requirant, ne insequentes aliorum facta, se deserant; et cum recte cuncta de sacra Scriptura sentiunt, hoc solum quod per illam contra elatos dicitur, non attendant. Improbus quippe et imperitus est medicus, qui alienum mederi appetit, et ipse vulnus quod patitur nescit. Qui igitur verba Dei humiliter non loquuntur, profecto admonendi sunt, ut cum medicamina aegris apponunt, prius virus suae pestis inspiciant, ne alios medendo ipsi moriantur. Admoneri debent, ut considerent ne a virtute dicti, dicendi qualitate discordent, ne loquendo aliud, et ostendendo aliud praedicent. Audiant itaque quod scriptum est: Si quis loquitur, quasi sermones Dei (I Petr. IV, 11). Qui ergo verba quae proferunt, ex propriis non habent, cur quasi de propriis tument? Audiant quod scriptum est: Sicut ex Deo coram Deo in Christo loquimur (II Cor. II, 17). Ex Deo enim coram Deo loquitur, qui praedicationis verbum et quia a Deo accepit intelligit, et placere per illud Deo non hominibus quaerit. Audiant quod scriptum est: Abominatio Domini est omnis arrogans (Prov. XVI, 15). — Quia videlicet dum in verbo Dei gloriam propriam quaerit, jus dantis invadit; eumque laudi suae postponere nequaquam metuit, a quo hoc ipsum quod laudatur accepit. Audiant quod praedicatori per Salomonem dicitur: Bibe aquam de cisterna tua, et fluenta putei tui. Deriventur fontes tui foras, et in plateis aquas divide. Habeto eas solus, nec sint alieni participes tui (Prov. V, 15). Aquam quippe praedicator de cisterna sua bibit, cum ad cor suum rediens, prius audit ipse quod dicit. Bibit sui fluenta putei, si sui irrigatione verbi infunditur. Ubi bene subjungitur: Diriventur fontes tui foras, et in plateis aquas divide (Ibid., 18). Rectum quippe est ut ipse prius bibat, et tunc praedicando aliis influat. Fontes namque foras derivare, est exterius aliis vim praedicationis infundere. In plateis autem aquas dividere, est in magna auditorum amplitudine juxta uniuscujusque qualitatem divina eloquia dispensare. Et quia plerumque inanis gloriae appetitus subrepit dum sermo Dei ad multorum notitiam currit, postquam dictum est: In plateis aquas divide, recte subjungitur: Habeto eas solus, nec sint alieni participes tui (Ibid.). Alienos quippe malignos spiritus vocat, de quibus per Prophetam tentati hominis voce dicitur: Alieni insurrexerunt in me, et fortes quaesierunt animam meam (Ps. LIII, 5). Ait ergo: Aquas et in plateis divide, et tamen solus habe. Ac si apertius dicat: Sic necesse est ut praedicationi exterius servias, quatenus per elationem te immundis spiritibus non conjungas, ne in divini verbi ministerio hostes tuos ad te participes admittas. Aquas ergo et in plateis dividimus, et tamen soli possidemus, quando et exterius late praedicationem fundimus, et tamen per eam humanas laudes assequi minime ambimus.

CAPUT XXV

Quomodo admonendi qui officium praedicationis nimia humilitate detrectant, et qui praecipiti festinatione occupant.

Aliter admonendi sunt qui cum praedicare digne valeant, prae nimia humilitate formidant; atque aliter admonendi sunt quos a praedicatione imperfectio vel aetas prohibet, et tamen praecipitatio impellit. Admonendi namque sunt qui cum praedicare utiliter possunt, immoderata tamen humilitate refugiunt; ut ex minori consideratione colligant quantum in majoribus rebus derelinquant. Si enim indigentibus proximis ipsi quas haberent pecunias absconderent, adjutores proculdubio calamitatis exstitissent. Quo ergo reatu constringantur aspiciant, qui dum peccantibus fratribus verbum praedicationis subtrabunt, morientibus mentibus vitae remedia abscondunt. Unde et bene quidam sapiens dicit: Sapientia abscondita et thesaurus invisus, quae utilitas in utrisque (Eccli. XX, 32)? Si populos fames attereret, et occulta frumenta ipsi servarent, auctores proculdubio mortis existerent. Qua itaque plectendi sunt poena considerent, qui cum fame verbi animae pereant, ipsi panem perceptae gratiae non ministrant. Unde et bene per Salomonem dicitur: Qui abscondit frumenta, maledicetur in populis (Prov. XI, 26). Frumenta quippe abscondere, est praedicationis sanctae apud se verba retinere. In populis autem talis quisque maledicitur, quia in solius culpa silentii pro multorum quos corrigere potuit poena damnatur. Si medicinalis artis minime ignari secandum vulnus cernerent, et tamen secare recusarent, profecto peccatum fraternae mortis ex solo torpore committerent. Quanta ergo culpa involvantur aspiciant, qui dum cognoscunt vulnera mentium, curare ea negligunt sectione verborum. Unde et bene per prophetam dicitur: Maledictus qui prohibet gladium suum a sanguine (Jer. XLVIII, 10). Gladium quippe a sanguine prohibere, est praedicationis verbum a carnalis vitae interfectione retinere. De quo rursum gladio dicitur: Et gladius meus manducabit carnes (Deut. XXXII, 42).

Hi itaque cum apud se sermonem praedicationis occultant, divinas contra se sententias terribiliter audiant, quatenus ab eorum cordibus timorem timor expellat. Audiant quod talentum qui erogare noluit, cum sententia damnationis amisit (Matth. XXV, 24, seq.). Audiant quod Paulus eo se a proximorum sanguine mundum credidit, quo feriendis eorum vitiis non pepercit, dicens: Contestor vos hodierna die, quia mundus sum a sanguine omnium: non enim subterfugi quominus annuntiarem omne consilium Dei vobis (Act. XX, 26, 27). Audiant quod voce angelica Joannes admonetur, cum dicitur: Qui audit, dicat: Veni (Apoc. XXII, 17). Ut nimirum cui se vox interna insinuat, illuc etiam clamando alios quo ipse rapitur trahat; ne clausas fores etiam vocatus inveniat, si vocanti vacuus appropinquat. Audiant quod Isaias quia a verbi ministerio tacuit, illustratus superno lumine, magna voce poenitentiae se ipse reprehendit, dicens: Vae mihi quia tacui (Isai. VI, 5). Audiant quod per Salomonem in illum praedicationis scientia multiplicari promittitur, qui in hoc quod jam obtinuit, torporis vitio non tenetur. Ait namque: Anima quae benedicit, impinguabitur; et qui inebriat, ipse quoque inebriabitur (Prov. XI, 25). Qui enim exterius praedicando benedicit, interioris augmenti pinguedinem recipit; et dum vino eloquii auditorum mentem debriare [inebriare] non desinit, potu multiplicati muneris debriatus excrescit. Audiant quod David hoc Deo in munere obtulit, quod praedicationis gratiam quam acceperat non abscondit, dicens: Ecce labia mea non prohibebo. Domine, tu cognovisti; justitiam tuam non abscondi in corde meo, veritatem tuam et salutare tuum dixi (Ps. XXXIX, 10, 11). Audiant quod sponsi colloquio ad sponsam dicitur: Quae habitas in hortis, amici auscultant; fac me audire vocem tuam (Cant. VIII, 13). Ecclesia quippe in hortis habitat, quae ad viriditatem intimam exculta plantaria virtutum servat. Cujus vocem amicos auscultare, est electos quosque verbum praedicationis illius desiderare: quam videlicet vocem sponsus audire desiderat, quia ad praedicationem ejus per electorum suorum animas anhelat. Audiant quod Moyses cum irascentem Deum populo cerneret, et assumi ad ulciscendum gladio juberet; illos a parte Dei denuntiavit existere, qui delinquentium scelera incunctanter ferirent, dicens: Si quis Domini est, jungatur mihi; ponat vir gladium super femur suum: ite et redite de porta usque ad portam per medium castrorum, et occidat unusquisque fratrem, et amicum, et proximum suum (Exod. XXXII, 27). Gladium quippe super femur ponere, est praedicationis studium voluptatibus carnis anteferre; ut cum sancta quis studet dicere, curet necesse est illicitas suggestiones edomare. De porta vero usque ad portam ire, est a vitio usque ad vitium, per quod ad mentem mors ingreditur, increpando discurrere. Per medium vero castrorum transire, est tanta aequalitate intra Ecclesiam vivere, ut qui delinquentium culpas redarguit, in nullius se debeat favorem declinare. Unde et recte subjungitur: Occidat vir fratrem, et amicum, et proximum suum. Fratrem scilicet et amicum et proximum interficit, qui cum punienda invenit, ab increpationis gladio nec eis quos per cognationem diligit parcit. Si ergo ille Dei dicitur qui ad ferienda vitia zelo divini amoris excitatur, profecto esse se Dei denegat, qui inquantum sufficit, increpare vitam carnalium recusat. At contra admonendi sunt quos a praedicationis officio vel imperfectio, vel aetas prohibet, et tamen praecipitatio impellit, ne dum tanti sibi onus officii praecipitatione arrogant, viam sibi subsequentis meliorationis abscidant; et cum arripiunt intempestive quod non valent, perdant etiam quod implere quandoque tempestive potuissent; atque scientiam, quia incongrue conantur ostendere, juste ostendantur amisisse. Admonendi sunt ut considerent quod pulli avium si ante pennarum perfectionem volare appetant, unde ire in alta cupiunt, inde in ima merguntur. Admonendi sunt ut considerent quod, structuris recentibus necdum solidatis, si tignorum pondus superponitur, non babitaculum, sed ruina fabricatur. Admonendi sunt ut considerent quod conceptas soboles feminae si priusquam plene formentur proferunt, nequaquam domos, sed tumulos replent. Hinc est enim quod ipsa Veritas, quae repente quos vellet roborare potuisset, ut exemplum sequentibus daret, ne imperfecti praedicare praesumerent, postquam plene discipulos de virtute praedicationis instruxit, illico adjunxit: Vos autem sedete in civitate quoadusque induamini virtute ex alto (Luc. XXIV, 49). In civitate quippe considemus, si intra mentium nostrarum nos claustra constringimus, ne loquendo exterius evagemur; ut cum virtute divina perfecte induimur, tunc quasi a nobismetipsis foras etiam alios instruentes exeamus. Hinc per quemdam sapientem dicitur: Adolescens loquere in causa tua vix; et si bis interrogatus fueris, habeat initium responsio tua (Eccli. XXXII, 10). Hinc est quod idem Redempter noster, cum in coelis sit conditor, et ostensione suae potentiae semper doctor angelorum, ante tricennale tempus in terra magister noluit fieri hominum; ut videlicet praecipitatis vim saluberrimi timoris infunderet, cum ipse etiam, qui labi non posset, perfectae vitae gratiam non nisi perfecta aetate praedicaret. Scriptum quippe est: Cum factus esset annorum duodecim, remansit puer Jesus in Jerusalem (Luc. II, 42). De quo a parentibus requisito, paulo post subditur: Invenerunt illum in templo sedentem in medio doctorum, audientem illos et interrogantem (Ibid., 46). Vigilanti itaque consideratione pensandum est, quod cum Jesus annorum duodecim dicitur in medio doctorum sedens, non docens, sed interrogans invenitur. Quo exemplo scilicet ostenditur ne infirmus docere quis audeat, si ille puer doceri interrogando voluit, qui per divinitatis potentiam verbum scientiae ipsis suis doctoribus ministravit. Cum vero per Paulum discipulo dicitur: Praecipe haec et doce: nemo adolescentiam tuam contemnat (I Tim. IV, 12); sciendum nobis est quia in sacro eloquio aliquando adolescentia juventus vocatur. Quod citius ostenditur, si Salomonis ad medium verba proferantur, qui ait: Laetare juvenis in adolescentia tua (Eccle. XI, 9). Si enim utraque unum esse non decerneret, quem monebat in adolescentia, juvenem non vocaret.

CAPUT XXVI

Quomodo admonendi quibus omnia ex sententia succedunt, et quibus nulla.

Aliter admonendi sunt qui in hoc quod temporaliter appetunt prosperantur; atque aliter qui ea quidem quae mundi sunt concupiscunt, sed tamen adversitatis labore fatigantur. Admonendi namque sunt qui in hoc quod temporaliter appetunt prosperantur, ne cum cuncta ad votum suppetunt, dantem quaerere negligant; sed in his quae dantur animum figant; ne peregrinationem pro patria diligant, ne subsidia itineris in obstacula perventionis vertant, ne nocturno lunae lumine delectati, claritatem solis videre refugiant. Admonendi itaque sunt ut quaeque in hoc mundo consequuntur, calamitatis solatia, non autem praemia retributionis credant; sed contra favores mundi mentem erigant, ne in eis ex tota cordis delectatione succumbant. Quisquis enim prosperitatem qua utitur, apud judicium cordis, melioris vitae amore non reprimit, favorem vitae transeuntis in mortis perpetuae occasionem vertit. Hinc est enim quod sub Idumaeorum specie, qui vincendos se prosperitati suae reliquerunt, in hujus mundi successibus laetantes increpantur cum dicitur: Dederunt terram meam sibi in haereditatem cum gaudio, et toto corde, et ex animo (Ezech. XXXVI, 5). Quibus verbis perpenditur, quod non solum quia gaudeant, sed quod toto corde et ex animo gaudeant, districta reprehensione feriantur. Hinc Salomon ait: Aversio parvulorum interficiet eos, et prosperitas stultorum perdet illos (Prov. I, 32). Hinc Paulus admonet dicens: Qui emunt, tamquam non possidentes, et qui utuntur hoc mundo, tanquam non utantur (I Cor. VII, 30). Ut videlicet sic nobis quae suppetunt, exterius serviant, quatenus a supernae delectationis studio animum non inflectant, ne luctum nobis internae peregrinationis temperent eaque in exsilio positis subsidium praebent; et quasi felices in transitoriis nos gaudeamus, qui ab aeternis nos interim miseros cernimus. Hinc namque est quod electorum voce dicit Ecclesia: Laeva ejus sub capite meo, et dextera illius amplexabitur me (Cant. II, 6). Sinistram Dei, prosperitatem videlicet vitae praesentis, quasi sub capite posuit, quam intentione summi amoris premit. Dextera vero Dei eam amplectitur; quia sub aeterna ejus beatitudine tota devotione continetur. Hinc rursum per Salomonem dicitur: Longitudo dierum in dextera ejus, in sinistra vero illius divitiae et gloria. (Prov. III, 16). Divitiae itaque et gloria qualiter sint habenda docuit, quae posita in sinistra memoravit. Hinc Psalmista ait: Salvum me fac dextera tua (Ps. CVII, 7). Neque enim ait manu, sed dextera; ut videlicet cum dexteram diceret, quia aeternam salutem quaereret, indicaret. Hinc rursum scriptum est: Dextera manus tua, Domine, confregit inimicos (Exod. XV, 6, sec. LXX). Hostes enim Dei etsi in sinistra ejus proficiunt, dextera franguntur quia plerumque pravos vita praesens elevat, sed adventus aeternae beatitudinis damnat.

Admonendi sunt qui in hoc mundo prosperantur, ut solerter considerent quia praesentis vitae prosperitas aliquando idcirco datur ut ad meliorem vitam provocet, aliquando vero ut in aeternum plenius damnet. Hinc est enim quod plebi Israeliticae Chanaan terra promittitur, ut quandoque ad aeterna speranda provocetur. Neque enim rudis ille populus promissionibus Dei in longinquum crederet, si a promissore suo non etiam e vicino aliquid percepisset. Ut ergo ad aeternorum fidem certius roboretur, nequaquam solummodo spe ad res, sed rebus quoque ad spem trahitur. Quod liquido Psalmista testatur, dicens: Dedit eis regiones gentium, et labores populorum possederunt: ut custodiant justificationes ejus, et legem ejus requirant (Ps.

CIV, 44). Sed cum largientem Deum humana mens boni operis responsione non sequitur, unde nutrita pie creditur, inde justius damnatur. Hinc enim per Psalmistam rursum dicitur: Dejecisti eos, dum allevarentur (Ps. LXXII, 18). Quia videlicet reprobi cum recta opera divinis muneribus non rependunt, cum totos se hic deserunt, et affluentibus prosperitatibus dimittunt, unde exterius proficiunt, inde ab intimis cadunt. Hinc est quod in inferno cruciato diviti dicitur: Recepisti bona in vita tua (Luc. XVI, 25). Idcirco enim bona hic recepit et malus, ut illic plenius mala reciperet, quia hic fuerat nec per bona conversus.

At contra admonendi sunt, qui ea quidem quae mundi sunt concupiscunt, sed tamen adversitatis labore fatigantur, ut sollicita consideratione perpendant, Creator dispositorque cunctorum quanta super eos gratia vigilat, quos in sua desideria non relaxat. Aegro quippe quem medicus desperat, concedit ut cuncta quae concupiscit accipiat. Nam qui sanari posse creditur, a multis quae appetit prohibetur: et pueris nummos subtrahimus, quibus tota simul patrimonia haeredibus reservamus. Hinc ergo de spe aeternae haereditatis gaudium sumant, quos adversitas vitae temporalis humiliat; quia nisi salvandos in perpetuum cerneret, erudiendos sub disciplinae regimine divina dispensatio non frenaret. Admonendi itaque sunt qui in his quae temporaliter concupiscunt, adversitatis labore fatigantur, ut sollicite considerent quod plerumque etiam justos cum temporalis potentia sustollit, velut in laqueo culpa comprehendit. Nam sicut in priori hujus voluminis parte jam diximus (I parte, c. 3), David Deo amabilis rectior fuit in servitio, quam cum pervenit ad regnum (I Reg. XXIV, 18). Servus namque amore justitiae, deprehensum adversarium ferire timuit; rex autem persuasione luxuriae devotum militem etiam sub studio fraudis exstinxit (II Reg. XI, 17). Quis ergo opes, quis potestatem, quis gloriam quaerat innoxie, si et illi exstiterunt noxia, qui haec habuit non quaesita? Quis inter haec sine magni discriminis labore salvabitur, si ille in his culpa interveniente turbatus est, qui ad haec fuerat Deo eligente praeparatus? Admonendi sunt ut considerent quia Salomon qui post tantam sapientiam usque ad idololatriam cecidisse describitur, nihil in hoc mundo priusquam caderet, adversitatis habuisse memoratur; sed concessa sapientia funditus cor deseruit, quod nulla vel minima tribulationis disciplina custodivit (III Reg. XI, 4).

CAPUT XXVII

Quomodo admonendi conjugati et caelibes.

Aliter admonendi sunt conjugiis obligati, atque aliter a conjugii nexibus liberi. Admonendi namque sunt conjugiis obligati, ut cum vicissim quae sunt alterius cogitant, sic eorum quisque placere studeat conjugi, ut non displiceat Conditori; sic ea quae hujus mundi sunt agant, ut tamen appetere quae Dei sunt non omittant; sic de bonis praesentibus gaudeant, ut tamen sollicita intentione mala aeterna pertimescant; sic de malis temporalibus lugeant, ut tamen consolatione integra spem in bonis perennibus figant; quatenus dum in transitu cognoscunt esse quod agunt, in mansione quod appetunt; nec mala mundi cor frangant, cum spes bonorum coelestium roborat; nec bona praesentis vitae decipiant, cum suspecta subsequentis judicii mala contristant. Itaque animus Christianorum conjugum et infirmus et fidelis, qui et plene cuncta temporalia despicere non valet, et tamen aeternis se conjungere per desiderium valet; quamvis in delectatione carnis interim jaceat, supernae spei refectione convalescat. Et si habet quae mundi sunt in usu itineris, sperat quae Dei sunt in fructu perventionis; nec totum se ad hoc quod agit conferat, ne ab eo quod robuste sperare debuit funditus cadat. Quod bene ac breviter Paulus exprimit, dicens: Qui habent uxores, tanquam non habentes sint; et qui flent, tanquam non flentes; et qui gaudent, tanquam non gaudentes (I Cor. VII, 29, 30). Uxorem quippe quasi non habendo habet, qui sic per illam carnali consolatione utitur, ut tamen numquam ad prava opera a melioris intentionis rectitudine ejus amore flectatur. Uxorem quasi non habendo habet, qui transitoria esse cuncta conspiciens, curam carnis ex necessitate tolerat, sed aeterna gaudia spiritus ex desiderio exspectat. Non flendo autem flere, est sic exteriora adversa plangere, ut tamen noverit aeternae spei consolatione gaudere. Et rursum, non gaudendo gaudere, est sic de infimis animum attollere, ut tamen nunquam desinat summa formidare. Ubi apte quoque paulo post subdit: Praeterit enim figura hujus mundi (Ibid., 1). Ac si aperte diceret: Nolite constanter mundum diligere, quando et ipse non potest, quem diligitis, stare. Incassum cor quasi manentes figitis, dum fugit ipse quem amatis.

Admonendi sunt conjuges, ut ea in quibus sibi aliquando displicent, et patientes invicem tolerent, et exhortantes invicem salvent. Scriptum namque est: Invicem onera vestra portate, et sic adimplebitis legem Christi (Galat. IV, 2). Lex quippe Christi charitas est; quia ex illo nobis et largiter sua bona contulit, et aequanimiter mala nostra portavit. Tunc ergo legem Christi imitando complemus, quando et nostra bona benigne conferimus, et nostrorum mala pie sustinemus. Admonendi quoque sunt, ut eorum quisque non tam quae ab altero tolerat, quam quae ab ipso tolerantur attendat. Si enim sua quae portantur considerat, ea quae ab altero sustinet, levius portat.

Admonendi sunt conjuges, ut suscipiendae prolis se meminerint causa conjunctos, et cum immoderatae admistioni servientes, propagationis articulum in usum transferunt voluptatis, perpendant quod licet extra non exeant, in ipso tamen conjugio conjugii jura transcendunt. Unde necesse est ut crebris exorationibus deleant quod pulchram copulae speciem admistis voluptatibus foedant. Hinc est enim quod peritus medicinae coelestis Apostolus non tam sanos instituit, quam infirmis medicamenta monstravit, dicens: De quibus scripsistis mihi: Bonum est homini mulierem non tangere; propter fornicationem autem unusquisque suam habeat uxorem, et unaquaeque suum virum habeat (I Cor. VII, 1, seq. etc.). Qui enim fornicationis metum praemisit, profecto non stantibus praeceptum contulit; sed ne fortasse in terram ruerent, lectum cadentibus ostendit. Unde adhuc infirmantibus subdidit: Uxori vir debitum reddat, similiter et uxor viro (Ibid.). Quibus dum in magna honestate conjugii aliquid de voluptate largiretur, adjunxit: Hoc autem dico secundum indulgentiam, non secundum imperium (Ibid.). Culpa quippe esse innuitur, quod indulgeri perhibetur; sed quae tanto citius relaxetur, quanto non per hanc illicitum quid agitur, sed hoc quod est licitum, sub moderamine non tenetur. Quod bene Loth in semetipso exprimit, qui ardentem Sodomam fugit; sed tamen Segor inveniens, nequaquam mox montana conscendit (Gen. XIX, 30). Ardentem quippe Sodomam fugere, est illicita carnis incendia declinare. Altitudo vero montium, est munditia continentium. Vel certe quasi in monte sunt qui etiam carnali copulae inhaerent, sed tamen extra suscipiendae prolis admistionem debitam, nulla carnis voluptate solvuntur. In monte quippe stare est, nisi fructum propaginis in carne non quaerere. In monte stare, est carni carnaliter non adhaerere. Sed quia multi sunt qui scelera quidem carnis deserunt, nec tamen in conjugio positi usus solummedo debiti jura conservant, exiit quidem Loth Sodomam, sed tamen mox ad montana non pervenit, quia jam damnabilis vita relinquitur, sed adhuc celsitudo conjugalis continentiae subtiliter non tenetur. Est vero in medio Segor civitas, quae fugientem salvet infirmum, quia videlicet cum sibi per incontinentiam miscentur conjuges, et lapsus scelerum fugiunt, et tamen venia salvantur. Quasi parvam quippe civitatem inveniunt in qua ab ignibus defendantur, quia conjugalis haec vita non quidem in virtutibus mira est, sed tamen a suppliciis secura. Unde idem Loth ad angelum dicit: Est civitas hic juxta, ad quam possum fugere, parva; et salvabor in ea. Numquid non modica est, et vivet anima mea in ea (Genes. XIX, 20)? Juxta ergo dicitur, et tamen ad salutem tuta perhibetur, quia conjugalis vita nec a mundo longe divisa est, nec tamen a gaudio salutis aliena. Sed tunc in hac actione vitam suam conjuges quasi in parva civitate custodiunt, quando pro se assiduis deprecationibus intercedunt. Unde et recte per angelum ad eumdem Loth dicitur: Ecce etiam in hoc suscepi preces tuas, ut non subvertam urbem pro qua locutus es (Ibid. 21). Qui videlicet cum deprecatio funditur Deo nequaquam talis conjugii vita damnatur. De qua deprecatione Paulus quoque admonet, dicens: Nolite fraudare invicem, nisi forte ex consensu ad tempus, ut vacetis orationi (I Cor. VII, 5).

At contra admonendi sunt qui ligati conjugiis non sunt, ut praeceptis coelestibus eo rectius serviant, quo eos ad curas mundi nequaquam jugum copulae carnalis inclinat; ut quos onus licitum conjugii non gravat, nequaquam pondus illicitum terrenae sollicitudinis premat; sed tanto eos paratiores dies ultimus, quanto et expeditiores inveniat; ne quo meliora agere vacantes possunt, sed tamen negligunt, eo supplicia deteriora mereantur. Audiant quod Apostolus cum quosdam ad caelibatus gratiam instrueret, non conjugium sprevit, sed curas mundi nascentes ex conjugio repulit, dicens: Hoc ad utilitatem vestram dico, non ut laqueum vobis injiciam; sed ad id quod honestum est, et quod facultatem praebeat sine impedimento Domino observiendi (Ibid., 35). Ex conjugiis quippe terrenae sollicitudines prodeunt; et idcirco magister gentium auditores suos ad meliora persuasit, ne sollicitudine terrena ligarentur. Quem igitur caelibem curarum saecularium impedimentum praepedit, et conjugio se nequaquam subdidit, et tamen conjugii onera non evasit. Admonendi sunt caelibes, ne sine damnationis judicio misceri se feminis vacantibus putent. Cum enim Paulus fornicationis vitium tot criminibus exsecrandis inseruit, cujus sit reatus indicavit, dicens: Neque fornicatores, neque idolis servientes, neque adulteri, neque molles, neque masculorum concubitores, neque fures, neque avari, neque ebriosi, neque maledici, neque rapaces regnum Dei possidebunt (I Cor. VI, 9, 10). Et rursum: Fornicatores autem et adulteros judicabit Deus (Hebr. XIII, 4). Admonendi itaque sunt, ut si tentationum procellas cum difficultate salutis tolerant, conjugii portum petant. Scriptum namque est: Melius est nubere, quam uri (I Cor. VII, 9). Sine culpa scilicet ad conjugium veniunt, si tamen necdum meliora voverunt. Nam quisquis bonum majus subire proposuit, bonum minus quod licuit, illicitum fecit. Scriptum quippe est: Nemo mittens manum suam ad aratrum, et respiciens retro, aptus est regno caelorum (Luc. IX, 62). Qui igitur fortiori studio intenderat, retro convincitur respicere, si relictis amplioribus bonis ad minima retorquetur.

Quomodo admonendi peccata carnis experti, et eorum expertes.

Aliter admonendi sunt peccatorum carnis conscii, atque aliter ignari. Admonendi namque sunt peccata carnis experti, ut mare saltem post naufragium metuant, et perditionis suae discrimina vel cognita perhorrescant; ne qui pie post perpetrata mala servati sunt, haec improbe repetendo moriantur. Unde peccanti animae et numquam a peccato desinenti dicitur: Frons mulieris meretricis facta est tibi, noluisti erubescere (Jerem. III, 3).

Admonendi itaque sunt ut studeant quatenus si accepta naturae bona integra servare noluerunt, saltem scissa resarciant. Quibus nimirum necesse est ut perpendant in tam magno fidelium numero quam multi et se illibatos custodiant, et alios ab errore convertant. Quid ergo isti dicturi sunt, si aliis in integritare stantibus, ipsi nec post damna resipiscunt. Quid dicturi sunt, si cum multi et alios secum deferunt ad regnum, hi exspectanti Domino nec semetipsos reducunt? Amonendi sunt, ut praeterita commissa considerent, et imminentia devitent. Unde sub Judaeae specie per prophetam Dominus corruptis in hoc mundo mentibus transactas ad memoriam culpas revocat, quatenus pollui in futuris erubescant, dicens: Fornicatae sunt in Aegypto, in adolescentia sua fornicatae sunt; ibi subacta sunt ubera earum, et fractae sunt mammae pubertatis earum (Ezech. XXIII, 3). In Aegypto quippe ubera subiguntur, cum turpi hujus mundi desiderio humanae mentis voluntas substernitur. In Aegypto pubertatis mammae franguntur, quando naturales sensus adhuc in semetipsis integri, pulsantis concupiscentiae corruptione vitiantur.

Admonendi sunt peccata carnis experti, ut vigilanti cura conspiciant post delicta nobis ad se redeuntibus Deus quanta benevolentia sinum suae pietatis expandat, cum per prophetam dicat: Si dimiserit vir uxorem suam, et illa recedens duxerit virum alium, numquid revertetur ad eam ultra? Nunquid non polluta et contaminata erit mulier illa? Tu autem fornicata es cum amatoribus multis, tamen revertere ad me, dicit Dominus (Jerem. III, 1). Ecce de fornicante et relicta muliere argumentum justitiae proponitur, et tamen nobis post lapsum redeuntibus non justitia, sed pietas exhibetur. Ut hinc utique colligamus, si nobis delinquentibus tanta pietate parcitur, a nobis nec post delictum redeuntibus quanta improbitate peccatur; aut quae ab illo erit super improbos venia, qui non cessat vocare post culpam. Quae nimirum bene per prophetam post delictum misericordia vocationis exprimitur, cum averso homini dicitur: Et erunt oculi tui videntes praeceptorem tuum, et aures tuae audient verbum post tergum monentis (Isai. XXX, 20). Humanum quippe genus Dominus in faciem monuit, quando in paradiso condito homini atque in libero arbitrio stanti, quid facere, quidve non facere deberet, indixit. Sed homo in Dei faciem terga dedit, cum superbiens ejus jussa contempsit. Nec tamen superbientem Deus deseruit, qui ad revocandum hominem legem dedit, exhortantes angelos misit, in carne nostrae mortalitatis ipse apparuit. Ergo post tergum stans nos admonuit, qui ad recuperationem nos gratiae etiam contemptus vocavit.

Quod igitur generaliter simul potuit dici de cunctis, hoc necesse est specialiter sentiri de singulis. Quasi enim coram Deo positus quisque verba monitionis ejus percipit, cum priusquam peccata perpetret, voluntatis ejus praecepta cognoscit. Adhuc enim ante faciem ejus stare, est necdum eum peccando contemnere. Cum vero derelicto bono innocentiae, iniquitatem eligens appetit, jam terga in ejus faciem mittit. Sed ecce adhuc et post tergum Deus subsequens monet, qui etiam post culpam ad se redire persuadet. Aversum revocat, commissa non respicit, revertenti sinum pietatis expandit. Vocem ergo post tergum monentis audimus, si ad invitantem nos Dominum saltem post peccata revertimur. Debemus igitur pietatem vocantis erubescere, si justitiam nolumus formidare; quia tanto graviori improbitate contemnitur, quanto et contemptus adhuc vocare non dedignatur.

At contra admonendi sunt peccata carnis ignorantes, ut tanto sollicitius praecipitem ruinam metuant, quanto altius stant. Admonendi sunt, ut noverint, quia quo magis loco prominenti consistunt, eo crebrioribus sagittis insidiatoris impetuntur. Qui tanto ardentius solet erigi, quanto robustius se conspicit vinci; tantoque intolerabilius dedignatur vinci, quanto contra se videt per integra infirmae carnis castra pugnari. Admonendi sunt ut incessanter praemia suscipiant, et libenter proculdubio tentationum quas tolerant labores calcabunt. Si enim attendatur felicitas quae sine transitu attingitur, leve fit quod transeundo laboratur. Audiant quod per prophetam dicitur: Haec dicit Dominus eunuchis: Qui custodierint sabbata mea, et elegerint quae volui, et foedus meum tenuerint: dabo eis in domo mea et in muris meis locum et nomen melius a filiis et filiabus (Isa. LVI, 4, 5). Eunuchi quippe sunt, qui compressis motibus carnis, affectum in se pravi operis abscidunt. Quo autem apud Patrem loco habeantur, ostenditur; quia in domo Patris videlicet aeterna mansione etiam filiis praeferuntur. Audiant quod per Joannem dicitur: Hi sunt qui cum mulieribus non sunt coinquinati:

virgines enim sunt, et sequuntur Agnum quocunque ierit (Apoc. XIV, 4). Et quod canticum cantant, quod nemo potest dicere, nisi illa centum quadraginta quatuor millia. Singulariter quippe canticum Agno cantare, est cum eo in perpetuum prae cunctis fidelibus etiam de incorruptione carnis gaudere. Quod tamen electi caeteri canticum audire possunt, licet dicere nequeant, quia per charitatem quidem in illorum celsitudine laeti sunt, quamvis ad eorum praemia non assurgant. Audiant peccatorum carnis ignari quod per semetipsam de hac integritate Veritas dicit: Non omnes capiunt verbum hoc (Matth. XIX, 11). Quod eo innotuit summum, quo denegavit omnium; et dum preadicit quia difficile capitur, audientibus innuit captum cum qua cautela teneatur.

Admonendi sunt itaque peccata carnis ignorantes, ut et praeeminere virginitatem conjugio sciant, et tamen se super conjuges non extollant, quatenus dum et virginitatem praeferunt, et se postponunt; et illud non deserant quod melius esse aestimant, et se custodiant quo se inaniter non exaltant. Admonendi sunt ut considerent quod plerumque actione saecularium vita continentium confunditur, cum et illi ultra habitum assumunt opera, et isti juxta ordinem proprium non excitant corda. Unde bene per prophetam dicitur: Erubesce, Sidon, ait mare (Isai. XXIII, 4). Quasi enim per vocem maris ad verecundiam Sidon adducitur, quando per comparationem vitae saecularium atque in hoc mundo fluctuantium, ejus qui munitus et quasi stabilis cernitur, vita reprobatur. Saepe enim nonnulli ad Dominum post carnis peccata redeuntes, tanto se ardentius in bonis operibus exhibent, quanto damnabiliores se de malis vident. Et saepe quidam in carnis integritate perdurantes, cum minus se respiciunt habere quod defleant, plene sibi sufficere vitae suae innocentiam putant, atque ad fervorem spiritus nullis se ardoris stimulis inflammant. Et fit plerumque Deo gratior amore ardens vita post culpam, quam securitate torpens innocentia. Unde et voce judicis dicitur: Remittuntur ei peccata multa, quia dilexit multum (Luc. VII, 47). Et: Gaudium erit in coelo super uno peccatore poenitente, magis quam super nonaginta novem justis, quibus non opus est poenitentia (Luc. XV, 10). Quod citius ex ipso usu colligimus, si nostrae mentis judicia pensemus. Plus namque terram diligimus quae post spinas exarata fructus uberes producit, quam quae nullas spinas habuit, sed tamen exculta sterilem segetem gignit. Admonendi sunt peccata carnis ignorantes, ne superioris ordinis celsitudine se caeteris praeferant, cum ab inferioribus quanta se melius agantur ignorant. In examine namque recti judicis mutat merita ordinum, qualitas actionum. Quis enim consideratis ipsis rerum imaginibus, nesciat quod in natura gemmarum carbunculus praeferatur hyacintho? Sed tamen caerulei coloris hyacinthus praefertur pallenti carbunculo; quia et illi quod naturae ordo subtrahit, species decoris adjungit; et hunc quem naturalis ordo praetulerat, coloris qualitas foedat. Sic ergo in humano genere et quidam in meliori ordine deteriores sunt, et quidam in deteriori meliores, quia et isti sortem extremi habitus bene vivendo transcendunt, et illi superioris loci meritum moribus non exsequendo diminuunt.

Quomodo admonendi qui peccata operum lugent, et qui solum cogitationum.

Aliter admonendi sunt qui peccata deplorant operum, atque aliter qui cogitationum. Admonendi quippe sunt qui peccata deplorant operum, ut consummata mala perfecta diluant lamenta, ne plus astringantur in debito perpetrati operis, et minus solvant fletibus satisfactionis. Scriptum quippe est: Potum dedit nobis in lacrymis in mensura (Psal. LXXIX, 6); ut videlicet uniuscujusque mens tantum poenitendo compunctionis suae bibat lacrymas, quantum se a Deo meminit aruisse per culpas. Admonendi sunt ut incessanter admissa ante oculos reducant, atque vivendo agant, ut a districto judice videri non debeant. Unde David cum peteret, dicens: Averte oculos tuos a peccatis meis (Psal. L, 11), paulo superius intulit: Delictum meum coram me est semper (Ibid., 5). Ac si diceret: Peccatum meum ne respicias postulo, quia hoc respicere ipse non cesso. Unde et per prophetam Dominus dicit: Et peccatorum tuorum memor non ero, tu autem memor esto (Isai. XLIII, 25, 26, sec. LXX). Admonendi sunt ut singula quaeque admissa considerent, et dum per unumquodque erroris sui inquinationem deflent, simul se ac totos lacrymis mundent. Unde bene per Jeremiam dicitur, cum Judaeae singula delicta pensarentur: Divisiones aquarum deduxit oculus meus (Thren. III, 48). Divisas quippe ex oculis aquas deducimus, quando peccatis singulis dispertitas lacrymas damus. Neque enim uno eodemque tempore aeque mens de omnibus dolet; sed dum nunc hujus, nunc illius culpae memoria acrius tangitur, simul de omnibus in singulis commota purgatur.

Admonendi sunt, ut de misericordia quam postulant, praesumant, ne vi immoderatae afflictionis intereant. Neque enim pie Dominus ante delinquentium oculos flenda peccata opponeret, si per semetipsum ea districte ferire voluisset. Constat enim quod a suo judicio abscondere voluit, quos miserando praeveniens sibimetipsis judices fecit. Hinc enim scriptum est: Praeveniamus faciem Domini in confessione (Psal. XCIV, 2). Hinc per Paulum dicitur: Si nosmetipsos dijudicaremus, non utique judicaremur (I Cor. XI, 31). Rursumque admonendi sunt, ut sic de spe fiduciam, habeant, ne tamen incauta securitate torpescant. Plerumque enim hostis callidus mentem quam peccato supplantat, cum de ruina sua afflictam respicit, securitatis pestiferae blanditiis seducit. Quod figurate exprimitur, cum factum Dinae memoratur. Scriptum quippe est: Egressa est Dina ut videret mulieres regionis illius; quam cum vidisset Sichem filius Hemor Hevaei, princeps terrae illius, adamavit eam, et rapuit, et dormivit cum illa, vi opprimens virginem; et conglutinata est anima ejus cum ea, tristemque blanditiis delinivit (Genes. XXXIV, 1-3). Dina quippe ut mulieres videat extraneae regionis, egreditur, quando unaquaeque mens sua studia negligens, actiones alienas curans, extra habitum atque extra ordinem proprium vagatur. Quam Sichem princeps terrae opprimit, quia videlicet inventam in curis exterioribus diabolus corrumpit. Et conglutinata est anima ejus cum ea (Ibid.); quia unitam sibi per iniquitatem respicit. Et quia cum mens a culpa resipiscit, addicitur, atque admissum flere conatur: corruptor autem spes ac securitates vacuas ante oculos revocat, quatenus utilitatem tristitiae subtrahat, recte illic adjungitur: Tristemque blanditiis delinivit (Ibid.). Modo enim aliorum facta graviora, modo nil esse quod perpetratum est, modo misericordem Deum loquitur, modo adhuc tempus subsequens ad poenitentiam pollicetur; ut dum per haec decepta mens ducitur, ab intentione poenitentiae suspendatur; quatenus tunc bona nulla percipiat, quam nunc mala nulla contristant: et tunc plenius obruatur suppliciis, quae nunc etiam gaudet in delictis. At contra admonendi sunt qui peccata cogitationum deflent, ut sollicite considerent intra mentis arcana utrum delectatione tantummodo, an etiam consensu deliquerint. Plerumque enim tentatur cor, et ex carnis nequitia delectatur, et tamen eidem nequitiae ex ratione renititur, ut in secreto cogitationis et contristet quod libet, et libeat quod contristat. Nonnumquam vero ita mens baratro tentationis absorbetur, ut nullatenus renitatur, sed ex deliberatione sequitur hoc, unde ex delectatione pulsatur; et si facultas exterior suppetat, rerum mox effectibus interiora vota consummat. Quod videlicet si justa animadversio districti judicis respicit, non est jam cogitationis culpa, sed operis; quia etsi rerum tarditas foras peccatum distulit, intus hoc consensionis opere voluntas implevit.

In primo autem parente didicimus quia tribus modis omnis culpae nequitiam perpetramus, suggestione scilicet, delectatione et consensu.

Primum itaque per hostem, secundum vero per carnem, tertium per spiritum perpetratur. Insidiator enim prava suggerit, caro se delectationi subjicit, atque ad extremum spiritus victus delectatione consentit. Unde et ille serpens prava suggessit, Eva autem quasi caro se delectationi subdidit, Adam vero velut spiritus suggestione ac delectatione superatus assensit. Suggestione itaque peccatum agnoscimus, delectatione vincimur, consensu etiam ligamur. Admonendi sunt igitur qui nequitias cogitationis deflent, ut sollicite considerent in qua peccati mensura ceciderunt, quatenus juxta ruinae modum quam in semetipsis introrsus sentiunt, etiam mensura lamentationis erigantur, ne si cogitata mala minus cruciant, usque ad perpetranda opera perducant. Sed inter haec ita terrendi sunt, ut tamen minime frangantur. Saepe enim misericors Deus eo citius peccata cordis abluit, quo haec exire ad opera non permittit; et cogitata nequitia quando citius solvitur, quia effectu operis districtius non ligatur. Unde recte per Psalmistam dicitur: Dixi, pronuntiabo adversum me injustitias meas Domino, et tu remisisti impietatem cordis mei (Ps. XXXI, 3). Qui enim impietatem cordis subdidit, quia cogitationum injustitias pronuntiare vellet indicavit. Dumque ait: Dixi, pronuntiabo, atque illico adjunxit, Et tu remisisti; quam sit super haec facilis venia ostendit. Qui dum se adhuc petere promittit, hoc quod petere se promittebat, obtinuit; quatenus quia usque ad opus non venerat culpa, usque ad cruciatum non perveniret poenitentia, sed cogitata afflictio mentem tergeret, quam nimirum tantummodo cogitata iniquitas inquinasset.

CAPUT XXX

Quomodo admonendi qui a peccatis quae deflent, non abstinent; et qui cum abstineant, non deflent.

Aliter admonendi sunt qui admissa plangunt, nec tamen deserunt; atque aliter qui deserunt, nec tamen plangunt. Admonendi sunt enim qui admissa plangunt, nec tamen deserunt, ut considerare sollicite sciant quia flendo inaniter se mundant, qui vivendo se nequiter inquinant, cum idcirco se lacrymis lavant, ut mundi ad sordes redeant. Hinc enim scriptum est: Canis reversus ad suum vomitum, et sus lota in volutabro luti (Prov. XXVI, 11; II Petr. II, 22). Canis quippe cum vomit, profecto cibum qui pectus deprimebat, projicit; sed cum ad vomitum revertitur, unde levigatus fuerat, rursus oneratur. Et qui admissa plangunt, profecto nequitiam, de qua male satiati fuerant, et quae mentis intima deprimebat, confitendo projiciunt, quam post confessionem dum repetunt, resumunt. Sus vero in volutabro luti cum lavatur, sordidior redditur. Et qui admissa plangit, nec tamen deserit, poenae gravioris culpae se subjicit; quia et ipsam quam flendo potuit impetrare veniam contemnit, et quasi in lutosa aqua semetipsum volvit, quia dum fletibus suis vitae munditiam subtrahit, ante Dei oculos sordidas ipsas etiam lacrymas facit. Hinc rursum scriptum est: Ne iteres verbum in oratione tua (Eccli. VII, 15). Verbum namque in oratione iterare, est post fletum committere quod rursum necesse sit flere. Hinc per Isaiam dicitur: Lavamini (Isai. I, 16), mundi estote. Post lavacrum enim mundus esse negligit, quisquis post lacrymas vitae innocentiam non custodit. Et lavantur ergo et nequaquam mundi sunt, qui commissa flere non desinunt, sed rursus flenda committunt. Hinc per quemdam sapientem dicitur: Qui baptizatur a mortuo, et iterum tangit illum, quid proficit lavatio ejus (Eccli. XXXIV, 30)? Baptizatur quippe a mortuo, qui mundatur fletibus a peccato; sed post baptisma mortuum tangit, qui culpam post lacrymas repetit.

Admonendi sunt qui admissa plangunt, nec tamen deserunt, ut ante districti judicis oculos eis se esse similes agnoscant, qui venientes ad faciem quorumdam hominum, magna eis submissione blandiuntur; recedentes autem, inimicitias ac damna quae valent atrociter inferunt. Quid est enim culpam flere, nisi humilitatem Deo suae devotionis ostendere? Et quid est post fletum prava agere, nisi superbas in eum quem rogaverat, inimicitias exercere? Jacobo attestante qui ait: Quicumque voluerit amicus esse saeculi hujus, inimicus Dei constituitur (Jac. IV, 4). Admonendi sunt qui admissa plangunt, nec tamen deserunt, ut sollicite considerent quia ita plerumque mali inutiliter compunguntur ad justitiam, sicut plerumque boni innoxie tentantur ad culpam. Fit quippe mira exigentibus meritis dispositionis internae mensura, ut et illi dum de bono aliquid agunt, quod tamen non perficiunt, superbe inter ipsa quae etiam plenissime perpetrant mala confidant; et isti dum de malo tentantur, cui nequaquam consentiunt, quo per infirmitatem titubant, eo gressus cordis ad justitiam per humilitatem verius figant. Balaam quippe, justorum tabernacula respiciens, ait: Moriatur anima mea morte justorum, et fiant novissima mea horum similia (Num. XXIII, 10). Sed cum compunctionis tempus abscessit, contra eorum vitam, quibus se similem fieri etiam moriendo poposcerat, consilium praebuit; et cum occasionem de avaritia reperit, illico oblitus est quidquid sibi de innocentia optavit (Ibid., XXIV, 14). Hinc vero doctor et praedicator gentium Paulus, ait: Video aliam legem in membris meis, repugnantem legi mentis meae, et captivum me ducentem in lege peccati, quae est in membris meis (Rom. VII, 23). Qui profecto idcirco tentatur, ut in bono robustius ex ipsa infirmitatis suae cognitione solidetur. Quid est ergo quod ille compungitur, et tamen justitiae non appropinquat; iste tentatur, et tamen eum culpa non inquinat, nisi hoc quod aperte ostenditur, quod nec malos bona imperfecta adjuvant, nec bonos mala inconsummata condemnant?

At contra admonendi sunt qui admissa deserunt, nec tamen plangunt; ne jam relaxatas aestiment culpas, quas etsi agendo non multiplicant, nullis tamen fletibus mundant. Neque enim scriptor, si a scriptione cessaverit, quia alia non addidit, etiam illa quae scripserat delevit; nec qui contumelias irrogat, si solummodo tacuerit, satisfecit, cum profecto necesse sit ut verba praemissae superbiae verbis subjectae humilitatis impugnet; nec debitor absolutus est quia alia non multiplicat, nisi et illa quae ligaverat solvat. Ita et cum Deo delinquimus, nequaquam satisfacimus si ab iniquitate cessamus, nisi voluptates quoque quas dileximus, e contrario appositis lamentis insequamur. Si enim nulla nos in hac vita operum culpa maculasset, nequaquam nobis hic adhuc degentibus ipsa ad securitatem innocentia nostra sufficeret, quia illicita animum multa pulsarent. Qua ergo mente securus est, qui perpetratis iniquitatibus ipse sibi testis est quia innocens non est? Neque enim Deus nostris cruciatibus pascitur, sed delictorum morbos medicamentis contrariis medetur, ut qui voluptatibus delectati discessimus, fletibus amaricati redeamus; et qui per illicita defluendo cecidimus, etiam a licitis nosmetipsos restringendo surgamus; et cor quod insana laetitia infuderat, salubris tristitia exurat; et quod vulneraverat elatio superbiae, curet abjectio humilis vitae. Hinc enim scriptum est: Dixi iniquis, Nolite inique agere; et delinquentibus, Nolite exaltare cornu (Ps. LXXIV, 5). Cornu quippe delinquentes exaltant, si nequaquam se ad poenitentiam ex cognitione suae iniquitatis humiliant. Hinc rursum dicitur: Cor contritum et humiliatum Deus non spernit (Ps. L, 19). Quisquis enim peccata plangit, nec tamen deserit, cor quidem conterit, sed humiliare contemnit. Qui vero peccata jam deserit, nec tamen plangit, jam quidem humiliat, sed tamen cor conterere recusat. Hinc Paulus ait: Et haec quidem fuistis; sed abluti estis, sed sanctificati estis (I Cor. VI, 11). Quia nimirum illos emendatior vita sanctificat, quos per poenitentiam abluens afflictio fletuum mundat. Hinc Petrus cum quosdam territos malorum suorum consideratione conspiceret, admonuit, dicens: Poenitentiam agite, et baptizetur unus quisque vestrum (Act. II, 38). Dicturus enim baptisma, praemisit poenitentiae lamenta, ut prius se aqua suae afflictionis infunderent, et postmodum sacramento baptismatis lavarent. Qua igitur mente qui transactas culpas flere negligunt, vivunt securi de venia, quando ipse summus Pastor Ecclesiae huic etiam

Sacramento addendam poenitentiam credidit, quod peccata principaliter exstinguit?

CAPUT XXXI

Quomodo admonendi qui illicita quorum sunt conscii laudant; et qui condemnantes, minime tamen cavent.

Aliter admonendi sunt qui illicita quae faciunt etiam laudant; atque aliter qui accusant prava, nec tamen devitant. Admonendi sunt enim qui illicita quae faciunt etiam laudant, ut considerent quod plerumque plus ore quam opere delinquant. Opere namque per semetipsos solos prava perpetrant; ore autem per tot personas iniquitatem exhibent, quot audientium mentes iniqua laudantes docent. Admonendi ergo sunt, ut si eradicare mala dissimulant, saltem seminare pertimescant. Admonendi sunt, ut eis perditio privata sufficiat. Rursumque admonendi sunt, ut si mali esse non metuunt, erubescant saltem videri quod sunt. Plerumque enim culpa dum absconditur, effugatur, quia dum mens erubescit videri quod tamen esse non metuit, erubescit quandoque esse quod fugit videri. Cum vero pravus quisque impudenter innotescit, quo liberius omne facinus perpetrat, eo etiam licitum putat; et quod licitum suspicatur, in hoc proculdubio multiplicius mergitur. Unde scriptum est: Peccatum suum sicut Sodoma praedicaverunt, nec absconderunt (Isai. III, 9). Peccatum enim suum si Sodoma absconderet, adhuc sub timore peccaret. Sed funditus frena timoris amiserat, quae ad culpam nec tenebras inquirebat. Unde et rursum scriptum est: Clamor Sodomorum et Gomorrhae multiplicatus est (Gen. XVIII 20). Peccatum quippe cum voce, est culpa in actione; peccatum vero etiam cum clamore, est culpa cum libertate.

At contra admonendi sunt qui accusant prava, nec tamen devitant, ut provide perpendant quid in districto Dei judicio pro sua excusatione dicturi

sunt, qui de reatu suorum criminum etiam semetipsis judicibus non excusantur. Hi itaque quid aliud quam praecones sunt sui? Voces contra culpas proferunt, et semetipsos operibus reos trahunt. Admonendi sunt ut videant quia de occulta jam retributione judicii est, quod eorum mens malum quod perpetrat illuminatur ut videat, sed non conatur ut vincat; ut quo melius videt, eo deterius pereat, quia et intelligentiae lumen percipit, et actionis pravae tenebras non relinquit. Nam cum acceptam ad adjutorium scientiam negligunt, hanc contra se in testimonium vertunt; et de lumine intelligentiae augent supplicia, quod profecto acceperant ut possent delere peccata. Quorum nimirum nequitia cum malum agit quod dijudicat, venturum jam judicium hic degustat; ut cum aeternis suppliciis servatur obnoxia, suo hic interim examine non sit absoluta; tantoque illic graviora tormenta percipiat, quanto hic malum non deserit, etiam quod ipsa condemnat. Hinc enim Veritas dicit: Servus qui cognovit voluntatem Domini sui, et non praeparavit, et non fecit secundum voluntatem ejus, vapulabit multis (Luc. XII, 47). Hinc Psalmista, ait: Descendant in infernum viventes (Psal. LIV, 16). Vivi quippe quae circa illos aguntur sciunt et sentiunt, mortui autem sentire nil possunt. Mortui enim in infernum descenderent, si mala nesciendo perpetrarent. Cum vero sciunt mala, et tamen faciunt, ad iniquitatis infernum viventes miseri sentientesque descendant.

Quomodo admonendi qui subito motu, et qui consulto peccant.

Aliter admonendi sunt qui repentina concupiscentia superantur, atque aliter qui in culpa ex consilio ligantur. Admonendi quippe sunt quos repentina concupiscentia superat, ut in bello praesentis vitae se quotidie positos attendant, et cor quod praevidere vulnera non potest, scuto solliciti timoris tegant; ut occulta insidiantis hostis jacula perhorrescant, et in tam caliginoso certamine intentione continua intra mentis castra se muniant. Nam si a circumspectionis sollicitudine cor destituitur, vulneribus aperitur, quia hostis callidus tanto liberius pectus percutit, quanto nudum a providentiae lorica deprehendit. Admonendi sunt qui repentina concupiscentia superantur, ut curare nimis terrena desuescant; quia intentionem suam dum rebus transitoriis immoderatius implicant, quibus culparum jaculis transfigantur ignorant. Unde et per Salomonem vox percussi et dormientis exprimitur, qui ait: Verberaverunt me, sed non dolui; traxerunt me, et ego non sensi. Quando evigilabo, et rursum vina reperiam (Prov. XXVIII, 35)? Mens quippe a cura suae sollicitudinis dormiens verberatur et non dolet, quia sicut imminentia mala non prospicit, sic nec quae perpetraverit agnoscit. Trahitur et nequaquam sentit, quia per illecebras vitiorum ducitur, nec tamen ad sui custodiam suscitatur. Quae quidem evigilare optat, ut rursum vina reperiat, quia quamvis somno torporis a sui custodia prematur, vigilare tamen ad saeculi curas nititur, ut semper voluptatibus debrietur [inebrietur]; et cum ad illud dormiat in quo solerter vigilare debuerat, ad aliud vigilare appetit, ad quod laudabiliter dormire potuisset. Hinc superius scriptum est: Et eris quasi dormiens in medio mari, et quasi sopitus gubernator amisso clavo (Ibid., 34). In medio enim mari dormit, qui in hujus mundi tentationibus positus, providere motus irruentium vitiorum quasi imminentes undarum cumulos negligit. Et quasi clavum gubernator amittit, quando mens, ad regendam navem corporis, studium sollicitudinis perdit. Clavum quippe in mari amittere, est intentionem providam inter procellas hujus saeculi non tenere. Si enim gubernator clavum sollicite stringit, modo in fluctibus ex adverso navem dirigit, modo ventorum impetus per obliquum findit. Ita cum mens vigilanter animam regit, modo alia superans calcat, modo alia providens declinat; ut et praesentia laborando subjiciat, et contra futura certamina prospiciendo convalescat.

Hinc rursum de fortibus supernae patriae bellatoribus dicitur: Uniuscujusque ensis super femur suum, propter timores nocturnos (Cant. III, 8). Ensis enim super femur ponitur, quando acumine sanctae praedicationis prava suggestio carnis edomatur. Per noctem vero caecitas nostrae infirmitatis exprimitur, quia quidquid adversitatis in nocte imminet non videtur. Uniuscujusque ergo ensis super femur suum ponitur propter timores nocturnos, quia videlicet sancti viri dum ea quae non vident metuunt, ad intentionem certaminis parati semper assistunt. Hinc rursum sponsae dicitur: Nasus tuus sicut turris quae est in Libano (Cant. VII, 4). Rem namque quam oculis non cernimus, plerumque odore praevidemus. Per nasum quoque odores fetoresque discernimus. Quid ergo per nasum Ecclesiae, nisi sanctorum provida discretio designatur? Qui etiam turri similis quae est in Libano dicitur, quia discreta eorum providentia ita in alto sita est, ut tentationum certamina et priusquam veniant videat, et contra ea dum venerint munita subsistat. Quae enim futura praevidentur, cum praesentia fuerint, minoris virtutis fiunt; quia dum contra ictum quisque paratior redditur, hostis qui se inopinatum credidit, eo ipso quo praevisus est, enervatur.

At contra admonendi sunt qui in culpa ex consilio ligantur, quatenus provida consideratione perpendant, quia dum mala ex judicio faciunt, districtius contra se judicium accendunt; ut tanto eos durior sententia feriat, quanto illos in culpa arctius vincula deliberationis ligant. Citius fortasse delicta poenitendo abluerent, si in his sola praecipitatione cecidissent. Nam tardius peccatum solvitur quod et per consilium solidatur. Nisi enim mens omni modo aeterna despiceret, in culpa ex judicio non periret. Hoc ergo praecipitatione lapsis per consilium pereuntes differunt, quod cum hi a statu justitiae peccando concidunt, plerumque simul et in laqueum desperationis cadunt. Hinc est quod per prophetam Dominus non tam praecipitationum prava, quam delictorum studia reprehendit, dicens: Ne forte egrediatur ut ignis indignatio mea, et succendatur, et non sit qui exstinguat, propter malitiam studiorum vestrorum. Hinc iterum iratus dicit: Visitabo super vos juxta fructum studiorum vestrorum (Ibid. XXIII, 2). Quia ergo peccatis aliis differunt peccata quae per consilium perpetrantur, non tam prave facta Dominus quam studia pravitatis insequitur. In factis enim saepe infirmitate, saepe negligentia, in studiis vero malitiosa semper intentione peccatur. Quo contra recte beati viri expressione per Prophetam dicitur: Et in cathedra pestilentiae non sedit (Ps. I, 1). Cathedra quippe judicis esse vel praesidentis solet. In cathedra autem pestilentiae sedere, est ex judicio prava committere: in cathedra pestilentiae sedere, est et ex ratione mala discernere, et tamen ex deliberatione perpetrare. Quasi in perversi consilii cathedra sedet, qui tanta iniquitatis elatione attollitur, ut adimplere malum etiam per consilia conetur. Et sicut assistentibus turbis praelati sunt qui cathedrae honore fulciuntur, ita delicta eorum qui praecipitatione corruunt, exquisita per studium peccata transcendunt. Admonendi ergo sunt, ut hinc colligant qui in culpa etiam se per consilium ligant, qua quandoque ultione feriendi sunt, qui nunc pravorum non socii, sed principes fiunt.

Quomodo admonendi qui minimis, sed crebris noxis, et qui minimas caventes gravibus aliquando immerguntur.

At contra admonendi sunt qui se a parvis custodiunt, sed aliquando in gravibus demerguntur, ut sollicite seipsos deprehendant, quia dum cor eorum de custoditis minimis extollitur, ad perpetranda graviora ipso elationis suae barathro devorantur; et dum foris sibi parva subjiciunt, sed per inanem gloriam intus intumescunt, languore superbiae intrinsecus victam mentem etiam foras per mala majora prosternunt. Admonendi ergo sunt qui se a parvis custodiunt, sed aliquando in gravibus demerguntur, ne ubi se stare extrinsecus aestimant, ibi intrinsecus cadant, et juxta districti judicis retributionem elatio minoris justitiae via fiat ad foveam gravioris culpae. Qui enim vane elati, boni minimi custodiam suis viribus tribuunt, juste derelicti culpis majoribus obruuntur; et cadendo discunt non fuisse proprium quod steterunt, ut mala immensa cor reprimant, quod minima bona exaltant.

CAPUT XXXIV

Quomodo admonendi qui bona nec inchoant et qui inchoata non absolvunt.

Aliter admonendi sunt qui bona nec inchoant, atque aliter qui inchoata minime consummant. Qui enim bona nec inchoant, non sunt eis prius aedificanda quae salubriter diligant, sed destruenda ea in quibus semetipsos nequiter versant. Neque enim sequuntur quae inexperta audiunt, nisi prius quam perniciosa sint ea quae sibi sunt experta, deprehendant, quia nec levari appetit, qui et hoc ipsum quia cecidit nescit; et qui dolorem vulneris non sentit, salutis remedia non requirit. Prius ergo ostendenda sunt, quam sint vana quae diligunt, et tunc demum vigilanter intimanda quam sint utilia quae praetermittunt. Prius videant fugienda quae amant, et sine difficultate postmodum cognoscant amanda esse quae fugiunt. Melius enim inexperta recipiunt, si de expertis quidquid disputationis audiunt, veraciter cognoscunt. Tunc igitur pleno voto discunt vera bona quaerere, cum certo judicio deprehenderint falsa se vacue tenuisse. Audiant ergo quod bona praesentia et a delectatione citius transitura sunt, et tamen eorum causa ad ultionem sine transitu permansura; quia et nunc quod libet invitis subtrahitur, et tunc quod dolet invitis in supplicium reservatur. Itaque eisdem rebus terreantur salubriter, quibus noxie delectantur; ut dum perculsa mens alta ruinae suae damna conspiciens, sese in praecipitium pervenisse deprehendit, gressum post terga revocet, et pertimescens quae amaverat, discat diligere quae contemnebat. Hinc est enim quod Jeremiae misso ad praedicationem dicitur: Ecce constitui te hodie super gentes et super regna, ut evellas et destruas, et disperdas et dissipes, et aedifices et plantes (Jer. I, 10). Quia nisi prius perversa destrueret, aedificare utiliter recta non posset; nisi ab auditorum suorum cordibus spinas vani amoris evelleret, nimirum frustra in eis sanctae praedicationis verba plantaret. Hinc est quod Petrus prius evertit, ut postmodum construat, cum nequaquam Judaeos monebat quid jam facerent, sed de his quae fecerant, increpabat dicens: Jesum Nazarenum virum approbatum a Deo in vobis, virtutibus et prodigiis et signis quae per illum fecit Deus in medio vestri, sicut vos scitis: hunc definito consilio et praescientia Dei traditum, per manus iniquorum affigentes interemistis, quem Deus suscitavit solutis doloribus inferni (Act. II, 22-24); ut videlicet crudelitatis suae cognitione destructi, aedificationem sanctae praedicationis quanto anxie quaererent, tanto utiliter audirent. Unde et illico respondet: Quid ergo faciemus, viri fratres? Quibus mox dicitur: Agite poenitentiam, et baptizetur unusquisque vestrum (Ibid., 37, 38). Quae aedificationis verba profecto contemnerent, nisi prius salubriter ruinam suae destructionis invenissent. Hinc est quod Saulus cum super eum coelitus lux emissa resplenduit, non jam quid recte deberet facere, sed quid prave fecisset, audivit. Nam cum prostratus requireret, dicens: Quis es, Domine? Respondetur protinus: Ego sum Jesus Nazarenus, quem tu persequeris (Act. IX, 4, seq., XXII, 8, seq.). Et cum repente subjungeret: Domine, quid me jubes facere (Ibid.)? Illico adjungitur: Surgens ingredere civitatem, et ibi dicetur tibi quid te oporteat facere (Ibid.). Ecce de coelo Dominus loquens persecutoris sui facta corripuit, nec tamen illico quae essent facienda monstravit. Ecce elationis ejus fabrica jam tota corruerat, et post ruinam suam humilis aedificari requirebat, et cum superbia destruitur, aedificationis tamen verba retinentur; ut videlicet persecutor immanis diu destructus jaceret, et tanto post in bonis solidius surgeret, quanto prius funditus eversus a pristino errore cecidisset. Qui ergo nulla adhuc agere bona coeperunt, a rigiditate antea suae pravitatis, correctionis manu evertendi sunt, ut ad statum postmodum rectae operationis erigantur, quia et idcirco altum silvae lignum succidimus, ut hoc in aedificii tegmine sublevemus; sed tamen non repente in fabrica ponitur, ut nimirum prius vitiosa ejus viriditas exsiccetur, cujus quo plus in infimis humor excoquitur, eo ad summa solidius levatur At contra admonendi sunt qui inchoata bona minime consummant, ut cauta circumspectione considerent quia dum proposita non perficiunt, etiam quae fuerant coepta convellunt. Si enim quod videtur gerendum sollicita intentione non crescit, etiam quod fuerat bene gestum decrescit. In hoc quippe mundo humana anima quasi more navis est contra ictum fluminis conscendentis: uno in loco nequaquam stare permittitur, quia ad ima relabitur, nisi ad summa conetur. Si ergo inchoata bona fortis operantis manus ad perfectionem non sublevat, ipsa operandi remissio contra hoc quod operatum est, pugnat. Hinc est enim quod per Salomonem dicitur: Qui mollis et dissolutus est in opere suo, frater est sua opera dissipantis (Prov. XVIII, 9). Quia videlicet qui coepta bona districte non exsequitur, dissolutione negligentiae manum destruentis imitatur. Hinc Sardis Ecclesiae ab angelo dicitur: Esto vigilans, et confirma caetera quae moritura erant, non enim invenio opera tua plena coram Deo meo (Apoc. III, 2). Quia igitur plena coram Deo ejus opera inventa non fuerant, moritura reliqua etiam quae erant gesta praedicebat. Si enim quod mortuum in nobis est ad vitam non accenditur, hoc etiam exstinguitur, quod quasi adhuc vivum tenetur. Admonendi sunt ut perpendant quod tolerabilius esse potuisset recti viam non arripere, quam arrepta post tergum redire. Nisi enim retro aspicerent,erga coeptum studium nullo torpore languerent. Audiant ergo quod scriptum est: Melius erat eis non cognoscere viam justitiae, quam post agnitionem retrorsum converti (II Petr. II, 21). Audiant quod scriptum est: Utinam frigidus esses, aut calidus; sed quia tepidus es, et nec frigidus, nec calidus, incipiam te evomere ex ore meo (Apoc. III, 15). Calidus quippe est qui bona studia et arripit et consummat; frigidus vero est qui consummanda nec inchoat. Et sicut a frigore per teporem transitur ad calorem, ita a calore per teporem reditur ad frigus. Quisquis ergo amisso infidelitatis frigore vivit, sed nequaquam tepore superato excrescit ut ferveat, procul dubio calore desperato, dum noxio in tepore demoratur, agit ut frigescat. Sed sicut ante teporem frigus sub spe est, ita post frigus tepor in desperatione. Qui enim adhuc in peccatis est, conversionis fiduciam non amittit. Qui vero post conversionem tepuit, et spem quae esse potuit de peccatore subtraxit. Aut calidus ergo quisque esse, aut frigidus quaeritur, ne tepidus evomatur; ut videlicet aut necdum conversus, adhuc de se spem conversionis praebeat, aut jam conversus in virtutibus inardescat; ne evomatur tepidus, qui a calore quem proposuit torpore ad noxium frigus redit.

Quomodo admonendi qui mala clam et bona palam faciunt; ac qui versa vice.

Aliter admonendi sunt qui mala occulte agunt, et bona publice; atque aliter qui bona quae faciunt abscondunt, et tamen quibusdam factis publice mala de se opinari permittunt. Admonendi enim sunt qui mala occulte agunt, et bona publice, ut pensent humana judicia quanta velocitate evolant, divina autem quanta immobilitate perdurant. Admonendi sunt ut in fine rerum mentis oculos figant, quia et humanae laudis attestatio praeterit, et superna sententia, quae et abscondita penetrat, ad retributionem perpetuam convalescit. Dum igitur occulta mala sua divinis judiciis, recta autem sua humanis oculis anteponunt, et sine teste est bonum quod publice faciunt, et non sine aeterno teste est quod latenter delinquunt. Culpas itaque suas occultando hominibus, virtutesque pandendo, et unde puniri debeant abscondentes detegunt, et unde remunerari poterant, detegentes abscondunt. Quos recte sepulcra dealbata speciosa exterius, sed mortuorum ossibus plena Veritas vocat (Matth. XXIII, 27), quia vitiorum mala intus contegunt, humanis vero oculis quorumdam demonstratione operum, de solo foris justitiae colore blandiuntur. Admonendi itaque sunt, ne quae agunt recta despiciant, sed ea meriti melioris credant. Valde namque bona sua dijudicant, qui ad eorum mercedem sufficere humanos favores putant. Cum enim pro recto opere laus transitoria quaeritur, aeterna retributione res digna vili pretio venundatur. De quo videlicet pretio percepto Veritas dicit: Amen dico vobis, receperunt mercedem suam (Matth. VI, 2, 5). Admonendi sunt ut considerent quia dum pravos se in occultis exhibent, sed tamen exempla de se publice in bonis operibus praebent, ostendunt sequenda quae fugiunt, clamant amanda quae oderunt, vivunt postremo aliis, et sibi moriuntur. At contra admonendi sunt qui bona occulte faciunt, et tamen quibusdam factis publice de se mala opinari permittunt, ne cum bona semetipsos actionis rectae virtute vivificant, in se alios per exemplum pravae aestimationis occidant; ne minus quam se proximos diligant, et cum ipsi salubrem potum vini sorbeant, intentis in sui consideratione mentibus pestiferum veneni poculum fundant. Hi nimirum in uno proximorum vitam minus adjuvant, in altero multum gravant, dum student et recta occulte agere, et quibusdam factis, ad exemplum de se prava seminare. Quisquis enim laudis concupiscentiam calcare jam sufficit, aedificationis fraudem perpetrat, si bona quae agit, occultat; et quasi jactato semine germinandi radices subtrahit, qui opus quod imitandum est, non ostendit. Hinc namque in Evangelio Veritas dixit: Videant opera vestra bona, et glorificent Patrem vestrum qui in coelis est (Matth. V, 16). Ubi illa quoque sententia promitur, quae longe aliud praecepisse videtur, dicens: Attendite ne justitiam vestram faciatis coram hominibus, ut videamini ab eis (Matth. VI, 1). Quid est ergo quod opus nostrum et ita faciendum est ne videatur, et tamen ut debeat videri praecipitur, nisi quod ea quae agimus, et occultanda sunt, ne ipsi laudemur, et tamen ostendenda sunt, ut laudem coelestis Patris augeamus? Nam cum nos justitiam nostram coram hominibus facere Dominus prohiberet, illico adjunxit: Ut videamini ab eis. Et cum rursus videnda ab hominibus bona opera nostra praeciperet, protinus subdidit: Ut glorificent Patrem vestrum qui in coelis est (Matth. V, 16). Qualiter igitur videnda essent, vel qualiter non videnda, ex sententiarum fine monstravit, quatenus operantis mens opus suum et propter se videri non quaereret, et tamen hoc propter coelestis Patris gloriam non celaret. Unde fit plerumque ut bonum opus et in occulto sit, cum fit publice; et rursus in publico, cum agitur occulte. Qui enim in publico bono opere non suam, sed superni Patris gloriam quaerit, quod fecit abscondit; quia solum illum testem habuit, cui placere curavit. Et qui in secreto suo bono opere deprehendi ac laudari concupiscit; et nullus fortasse vidit quod exhibuit, et tamen hoc coram hominibus fecit, quia tot testes in bono opere secum duxit, quot humanas laudes in corde requisivit. Cum vero prava aestimatio, in quantum sine peccato valet, ab intuentium mente non tergitur, cunctis mala credentibus per exemplum culpa propinatur. Unde et plerumque contingit, ut qui negligenter de se mala opinari permittunt, per semetipsos quidem nulla iniqua faciant; sed tamen per eos qui se imitati fuerint, multiplicius delinquant. Hinc est quod Paulus immunda quaedam sine pollutione comedentibus, sed imperfectis tentationis scandalum sua hac comestione moventibus dicit: Videte ne forte haec licentia vestra offendiculum fiat infirmis (I Cor. VIII, 9). Et rursus: Et peribit infirmus in tua conscientia frater, propter quem Christus mortuus est. Sic autem peccantes in fratres, et percutientes conscientiam eorum infirmam, in Christum peccatis (Ibid., 11, 12). Hinc est quod Moyses cum diceret: Non maledices surdo, protinus adjunxit: Nec coram caeco pones offendiculum (Levit. XIX, 14). Surdo quippe maledicere, est absenti et non audienti derogare: coram caeco vero offendiculum ponere, est discretam quidem rem agere, sed tamen ei qui lumen discretionis non habet, scandali occasionem praebere.

CAPUT XXXVI

De exhortatione multis exhibenda, ut sic singulorum virtutes adjuvet, quatenus per hanc contraria virtutibus vitia non excrescant.

Haec sunt quae praesul animarum in praedicationis diversitate custodiat, ut sollicitus congrua singulorum vulneribus medicamina opponat. Sed cum magni sit studii ut exhortandis singulis serviatur ad singula, cum valde laboriosum sit unumquemque de propriis sub dispensatione debitae considerationis instruere, longe tamen laboriosius est auditores innumeros ac diversis passionibus laborantes, uno eodemque tempore voce unius et tanta arte vox temperanda est, ut cum diversa sint auditorum vitia, et singulis inveniatur congrua, et tamen sibimetipsi non sit diversa; ut inter passiones medias uno quidem ductu transeat, sed more bicipitis gladii tumores cogitationum carnalium ex diverso latere incidat, quatenus sic superbis praedicetur humilitas, ut tamen timidis non augeatur metus, sic timidis infundatur auctoritas, ut tamen superbis non crescat effrenatio. Sic otiosis ac torpentibus praedicetur sollicitudo boni operis, ut tamen inquietis immoderatae licentia non augeatur actionis. Sic inquietis ponatur modus, ut tamen otiosis non fiat torpor securus. Sic ab impatientibus exstinguatur ira, ut tamen remissis ac lenibus non crescat negligentia. Sic lenes accendantur ad zelum, ut tamen iracundis non addatur incendium. Sic tenacibus infundatur tribuendi largitas, ut tamen prodigis effusionis frena minime laxentur. Sic prodigis praedicetur parcitas, ut tamen tenacibus periturarum rerum custodia non augeatur. Sic incontinentibus laudetur conjugium, ut tamen jam continentes non revocentur ad luxum. Sic continentibus laudetur virginitas corporis, ut tamen in conjugibus despecta non fiat fecunditas carnis. Sic praedicanda sunt bona, ne ex latere juventur et mala. Sic laudanda sunt bona summa, ne desperentur ultima. Sic nutrienda sunt ultima, ne dum sufficere creduntur, nequaquam tendatur ad summa.

CAPUT XXXVII

Et gravis quidem praedicatori labor est, in communis praedicationis voce, ad occultos singulorum motus causasque vigilare, et palaestrarum more in diversi lateris arte se vertere; multo tamen acriori labore fatigatur, quando uni e contrariis vitiis servienti praedicare compellitur. Plerumque enim quis laetae nimis conspersionis existit; sed tamen eum repente tristitia oborta immaniter deprimit. Curandum est itaque praedicatori quatenus sic tergatur tristitia quae venit ex tempore, ut non augeatur laetitia quae suppetit ex conspersione; et sic frenetur laetitia quae ex conspersione est, ut tamen non crescat tristitia quae venit ex tempore. Iste gravatur usu immoderatae praecipitationis, et aliquando tamen ab eo quod festine agendum est, eum vis praepedit subito natae formidinis. Ille gravatur usu immoderatae formidinis, et aliquando tamen in eo quod appetit, temeritate impellitur praecipitationis. Sic itaque in isto reprimatur subito oborta formido, ut tamen non excrescat enutrita diu praecipitatio. Sic in illo reprimatur repente oborta praecipitatio, ut tamen non convalescat impressa ex conspersione formido. Quid autem mirum si mentium medici ista custodiunt, dum tanta discretionis arte se temperant, qui non corda sed corpora medentur? Plerumque enim debile corpus opprimit languor immanis, cui languori scilicet obviari adjutoriis fortibus debet, sed tamen corpus debile, adjutorium forte non sustinet. Studet igitur qui medetur, quatenus sic superexistentem morbum subtrahat, ut nequaquam supposita corporis debilitas crescat, ne fortasse languor cum vita deficiat. Tanta ergo adjutorium discretione componit, ut uno eodemque tempore et languori obviet et debilitati. Si igitur medicina corporis indivise adhibita servire divisibiliter potest (tunc enim vere medicina est, quando sic per eam vitio superexistenti succurritur, ut etiam suppositae conspersioni serviatur), cur medicina mentis una eademque praedicatione apposita, morum morbis diverso ordine obviare non valeat, quae tanto subtilior agitur, quanto de invisibilibus tractatur?

CAPUT XXXVIII

Quod aliquando leviora vitia relinquenda sunt, ut graviora subtrahantur.

Sed quia plerumque dum duorum vitiorum languor irruit, hoc levius, illud fortasse gravius premit; ei nimirum vitio rectius sub celeritate subvenitur, per quod festine ad interitum tenditur. Et si hoc a vicina morte restringi non potest, nisi illud etiam quod existit contrarium crescat tolerandum praedicatori est, ut per exhortationem suam artificioso moderamine unum patiatur crescere, quatenus possit aliud a vicina morte retinere. Quod cum agit, non morbum exaggerat, sed vulnerati sui, cui medicamentum adhibet, vitam servat, ut exquirendae salutis congruum tempus inveniat. Saepe enim quis a ciborum se ingluvie minime temperans, jamjamque pene superantis luxuriae stimulis premitur, qui hujus pugnae metu territus, dum se per abstinentiam restringere nititur, inanis gloriae tentatione fatigatur: in quo nimirum unum vitium nullatenus extinguitur, nisi aliud nutriatur. Quae igitur pestis ardentius insequenda est, nisi quae periculosius premit? Tolerandum numquam est ut per virtutem abstinentiae interim arrogantia contra viventem crescat, ne eum per ingluviem a vita funditus luxuria exstinguat. Hinc est quod Paulus, cum infirmum auditorem suum perpenderet, aut prava adhuc velle agere, aut de actione recta humanae laudis retributione gaudere, ait: Vis non timere potestatem? bonum fac, et habebis laudem ex illa (Rom. XIII, 3). Neque enim ideo bona agenda sunt ut potestas hujus mundi nulla timeatur, aut per haec gloria transitoriae laudis sumatur. Sed cum infirmam mentem ad tantum robur ascendere non posse pensaret, ut et pravitatem vitaret simul et laudem; praedicator egregius ei, admonendo aliquid obtulit, et aliquid tulit. Concedendo enim lenia, subtraxit acriora; ut quia ad deserenda cuncta simul non assurgeret, dum in quodam suo vitio animus familiariter relinquitur, a quodam suo sine labore tolleretur.

CAPUT XXXIX

Quod infirmis mentibus omnino non debent alta praedicari.

Sciendum vero est praedicatori, ut auditoris sui animum ultra vires non trahat, ne, ut ita dicam, dum plus quam valet tenditur, mentis chorda rumpatur. Alta enim quaeque debent multis audientibus contegi, et vix paucis aperiri. Hinc namque per semetipsam Veritas dicit: Quis putas est fidelis dispensator et prudens, quem constituit dominus super familiam suam, ut det illis in tempore tritici mensuram (Matth. XXIV, 45; Luc. XII, 42)? Per mensuram quippe tritici exprimitur modus verbi, ne cum angusto cordi incapabile aliquid tribuitur, extra fundatur. Hinc Paulus ait: Non potui vobis loqui quasi spiritalibus, sed quasi carnalibus. Tanquam parvulis in Christo lac vobis potum dedi, non escam (I Cor. III, 1). Hinc Moyses a secreto Dei exiens, coruscantem coram populo faciem velat (Exod. XXXIV, 33), quia nimirum turbis claritatis intimae arcana non indicat. Hinc per eum divina voce praecipitur (Ibid. XXI, 33), ut is qui cisternam foderit, si operire neglexerit, corruente in ea bove vel asino, pretium reddat; quia ad alta scientiae fluenta perveniens, cum haec apud bruta audientium corda non contegit, poenae reus addicitur, si per verba ejus in scandalum, sive munda sive immunda mens capiatur. Hinc ad beatum Job dicitur? Quis dedit gallo intelligentiam (Job. XXXVIII, 36)? Praedicator etenim sanctus dum caliginoso hoc clamat in tempore, quasi gallus cantat in nocte, cum dicit: Hora est jam nos de somno surgere (Rom. XIII, 11). Et rursum: Evigilate justi, et nolite peccare (I Cor. XV, 34). Gallus autem profundioribus horis noctis altos edere cantus solet; cum vero matutinum jam tempus in proximo est, minutas ac tenues voces format, quia nimirum qui recte praedicat, obscuris adhuc cordibus aperta clamat, nil de occultis mysteriis indicat, ut tunc subtiliora quaeque de coelestibus audiant, cum luci veritatis appropinquant.

CAPUT XL

De opere praedicationis et voce.

Sed inter haec ad ea quae jam superius diximus, charitatis studio retorquemur, ut praedicator quisque plus actibus quam vocibus insonet, et bene vivendo vestigia sequacibus imprimat potius, quam loquendo quo gradiantur ostendat. Quia et gallus iste, quem pro exprimenda boni praedicatoris specie in locutione sua Dominus assumit, cum jam edere cantus parat, prius alas excutit, et semetipsum feriens vigilantiorem reddit, quia nimirum necesse est ut hi qui verba sanctae praedicationis movent, prius studio bonae actionis evigilent, ne in semetipsis torpentes opere, alios excitent voce; prius se per sublimia facta excutiant, et tunc ad bene vivendum alios sollicitos reddant; prius cogitationum alis semetipsos feriant; quidquid in se inutiliter torpet, sollicita investigatione deprehendant, districta animadversione corrigant; et tunc demum aliorum vitam loquendo componant; prius punire propria fletibus curent, et tunc quae aliorum punienda sunt denuntient; et antequam verba exhortationis insonent, omne quod locuturi sunt, operibus clament.

QUARTA PARS. QUALITER PRAEDICATOR OMNIBUS RITE PERACTIS AD SEMETIPSUM REDEAT, NE HUNC VEL VITA VEL PRAEDICATIO EXTOLLAT

Sed quia saepe dum praedicatio modis congruentibus ubertim funditur, apud semetipsum de ostensione sui occulta laetitia loquentis animus sublevatur, magna cura necesse est ut timoris laceratione se mordeat, ne qui aliorum vulnera medendo ad salutem revocat, ipse per negligentiam suae salutis intumescat, ne proximos juvando se deserat, ne alios erigens cadat. Nam quibusdam saepe magnitudo virtutis occasio perditionis fuit; ut cum de confidentia virium inordinate securi sunt, per negligentiam inopinate morerentur. Virtus namque cum vitiis renititur, quadam delectatione ejus sibimetipsi animus blanditur; fitque ut bene agentis mens metum suae circumspectionis abjiciat, atque in sui confidentia secura requiescat; cui jam torpenti seductor callidus omne quod bene gessit enumerat, eamque quasi prae caeteris praepollentem in tumore cogitationis exaltat. Unde agitur, ut ante justi judicis oculos, fovea mentis sit memoria virtutis; quia reminiscendo quod gessit, dum se apud se erigit, apud humilitatis auctorem cadit. Hinc namque superbienti animae dicitur: Quo pulchrior es, descende, et dormi cum incircumcisis (Ezech. XXXII, 19). Ac si aperte diceretur: Quia ex virtutum decore te elevas, ipsa tua pulchritudine impelleris ut cadas. Hinc sub Jerusalem specie, virtute superbiens anima reprobatur, cum dicitur: Perfecta eras in decore meo, quem posueram super te, dicit Dominus; et habens fiduciam in pulchritudine tua, fornicata es in nomine tuo (Ezech. XVI, 14, 15). Fiducia quippe suae pulchritudinis animus attollitur, cum de virtutum meritis laeta apud se securitate gloriatur. Sed per hanc eamdem fiduciam ad fornicationem ducitur; quia cum interceptam mentem cogitationes suae decipiunt, hanc maligni spiritus per innumera vitia seducendo corrumpunt. Notandum vero quod dicitur: Fornicata es in nomine tuo; quia cum respectum mens superni rectoris deserit, laudem protinus privatam quaerit, et sibi arrogare incipit omne bonum, quod ut largitoris praeconio serviret accepit; opinionis suae gloriam dilatare desiderat, satagit ut mirabilis cunctis innotescat. In suo ergo nomine fornicatur, quae legalis thori connubium deserens, corruptori spiritui in laudis appetitu substernitur. Hinc David ait: Tradidit in captivitatem virtutem eorum, et pulchritudinem eorum in manus inimici (Psal. LXXVII, 61). In captivitatem etenim virtus, et pulchritudo in manus inimici traditur, cum deceptae menti antiquus hostis ex boni operis elatione dominatur: quae tamen virtutis elatio, quamvis plene non superat, utcumque tamen et electorum animum saepe tentat; sed cum sublevatus destituitur, destitutus ad formidinem revocatur. Hinc etenim David iterum ait: Ego dixi in abundantia mea, non movebor in aeternum (Psal. XXIX, 7). Sed quia de confidentia virtutis intumuit, paulo post quid pertulit adjunxit: Avertisti faciem tuam a me, et factus sum conturbatus (Ibid., 8). Ac si aperte dicat: Fortem me inter virtutes credidi, sed quantae infirmitatis sim derelictus agnovi. Hinc rursum dicit: Juravi et statui custodire judicia justitiae tuae (Ps. CXVIII, 106). Sed quia ejus virium non erat manere in custodia quam jurabat, debilitatem suam protinus turbatus invenit. Unde et ad precis opem repente se contulit, dicens: Humiliatus sum usquequaque, Domine; vivifica me secundum verbum tuum (Ibid., CVII). Nonnumquam vero superna moderatio priusquam per munera provehat, infirmitatis memoriam ad mentem revocat, ne de acceptis virtutibus intumescat. Unde Ezechiel propheta quoties ad contemplanda coelestia ducitur, prius filius hominis vocatur; ac si hunc aperte Dominus admoneat, dicens: Ne de his quae vides, in elatione cor subleves, cautus perpende quod es; ut cum summa penetras, esse te hominem recognoscas, quatenus dum ultra te raperis, ad temetipsum sollicitus infirmitatis tuae freno revoceris. Unde necesse est ut cum virtutum nobis copia blanditur, ad infirma sua mentis oculus redeat, seseque salubriter deorsum premat; nec recta quae egit, sed quae agere neglexit aspiciat; ut dum cor ex memoria infirmitatis atteritur, apud humilitatis auctorem robustius in virtute solidetur. Quia et plerumque omnipotens Deus idcirco Rectorum mentes quamvis ex magna parte perficit, imperfectas tamen ex parva aliqua parte derelinquit; ut cum miris virtutibus rutilant, imperfectionis suae taedio tabescant, et nequaquam se de magnis erigant, dum adhuc contra minima innitentes laborant; sed quia extrema non valent vincere, de praecipuis actibus non audeant superbire. Ecce, bone vir, reprehensionis meae necessitate compulsus, dum monstrare qualis esse debeat Pastor invigilo, pulchrum depinxi hominem pictor foedus; aliosque ad perfectionis littus dirigo, qui adhuc in delictorum fluctibus versor. Sed in hujus quaeso vitae naufragio orationis tuae me tabula sustine, ut quia pondus proprium deprimit, tui meriti manus me levet.

Homiliarum in Ezechielem Prophetam

Dilectissimo fratri, Mariano episcopo, Gregorius episcopus servus servorum Dei. Homilias quae in beatum Ezechielem prophetam, ita ut coram populo loquebar, exceptae sunt, multis curis irruentibus in abolitione reliqueram. Sed post annos octo, petentibus fratribus, notariorum schedas requirere studui, easque, favente Domino transcurrens, inquantum ab angustiis tribulationum licuit emendavi. Tua itaque dilectio has sibi ad legendum mitti poposcerat, sed valde incongruum credidi ut aquam despicabilem hauriret quem constat de beatorum Patrum Ambrosii atque Augustini torrentibus profunda ac perspicua fluenta assidue bibere. Sed rursum dum cogito quod saepe inter quotidianas delicias etiam viliores cibi suaviter sapiunt, transmisi minima legenti potiora, ut dum cibus grossior velut pro fastidio sumitur, ad subtiliores epulas avidius redeatur.

1. Dei omnipotentis aspiratione de Ezechiele propheta locuturus, prius debeo tempora et modos aperire prophetiae, ut dum accessus ejus ostenditur, virtus melius cognoscatur. Prophetiae tempora tria sunt, scilicet praeteritum, praesens et futurum. Sed sciendum est quod in duobus temporibus prophetia etymologiam perdit. Quia cum ideo prophetia dicta sit quod futura praedicat, quando de praeterito vel praesenti loquitur, rationem sui nominis amittit, quoniam non prodit quod venturum est, sed vel ea memorat quae transacta sunt, vel ea quae sunt. Quae tamen tria prophetiae tempora verius loquimur, si ex sacrae Scripturae testimoniis ostendamus. Prophetia de futuro est: Ecce Virgo concipiet et pariet filium (Isai. VII, 14). Prophetia de praeterito: In principio creavit Deus coelum et terram (Genes. I, 1). De illo enim tempore dixit homo quo non erat homo. Prophetia de praesenti est, quando Paulus apostolus dicit: Si autem omnes prophetent, intret autem quis infidelis vel idiota, convincitur ab omnibus, dijudicatur ab omnibus; occulta enim cordis ejus manifesta fiunt, et ita cadens in faciem adorabit Deum, pronuntians quod vere Deus in vobis sit (I Cor. XIV, 24). Cum igitur dicitur: Occulta cordis ejus manifesta fiunt, profecto monstratur quia per hunc modum prophetiae spiritus non praedicit quod futurum est, sed ostendit quod est. Quo autem pacto prophetiae dicatur spiritus, qui nihil futurum indicat, sed praesens narrat? Qua in re animadvertendum est quod recte prophetia dicitur, non quia praedicit ventura, sed quia prodit occulta. Rem quippe quamlibet, sicut ab oculis nostris in futuro subtrahunt tempora, ita ab oculis nostris in praesenti subtrahit causa. Ventura etenim [res occultatur in futuro tempore, praesens autem cogitatio absconditur in latenti corde. Est etiam prophetia praesens cum res quaelibet non per animum, sed per absentem locum tegitur, quae tamen per spiritum denudatur. Et ibi fit praesens prophetantis animus, ubi per praesentiam non est corpus. Nam Giezi longe a propheta recesserat cum Naaman Syri munera percipiebat, cui tamen idem Propheta dicit: Nonne cor meum in praesenti erat quando reversus est homo de curru suo in occursum tibi (IV Reg. V, 26)?

2. Sciendum quoque est quia prophetiae tempora invicem sibi concinunt ad probationem, ut aliquando ex futuris praeterita, aliquando vero ex praeteritis probentur futura. Dixerat enim Moyses: In principio creavit Deus coelum et terram (Genes. I, 1). Sed quis crederet quia verum de praeterito diceret, si de futuro etiam aliquid non dixisset? In ipsius etenim libri fine, in cujus exordio illa de praeterito dixerat, aliquid prophetiae per Jacob vocem de venturis permiscuit, dicens: Non auferetur sceptrum de Juda, et dux de femoribus ejus, donec veniat qui mittendus est, et ipse erit exspectatio gentium (Genes. XLIX, 10). Qui etiam per semetipsum eumdem qui mittendus erat ei quem ducebat populo prophetavit, dicens: Prophetam suscitabit vobis Dominus Deus vester de fratribus vestris, tanquam me ipsum audietis. Erit autem, quicunque non audierit prophetam illum, exterminabitur de populo suo (Deut. XVIII, 15). Cur ergo praeteritis ventura permiscuit, nisi ut, dum implerentur ea quae de futuro praediceret, ostenderet etiam quia de praeterito vera dixisset?

3. Quia itaque docuimus qualiter ex futurorum prophetia probentur praeterita, restat nunc ut adhuc de sacris eloquiis ostendamus quomodo in ipso prophetiae spiritu ex praeteritis probentur futura. Certe rex Babylonicus, cum somnium vidisset (Dan. II, 2), misit ad magos et ariolos, omnesque sapientes Babyloniae convocavit, nec ab eis solummodo interpretationem somnii, sed etiam somnium quaesivit, ut nimirum ex praeterito colligeret si quid in eorum responsionibus de venturo certum teneret. Qui cum dicere nullatenus potuissent, S. Daniel deductus ad medium est, qui de interpretatione somnii, et de narratione requisitus, non solum hoc respondit quod interrogatus est, sed ipsam somnii originem replicavit, dicens: Tu, rex, caepisti cogitare in stratu tuo quid esset futurum post haec (Ibid., 29). Et paulo post: Tu, rex, videbas, et ecce quasi statua una grandis (Ibid., 31), et caetera. Cujus videlicet somnii mox ut ordinem dixit, quidquid ex eodem venturum sequebatur aperuit. Pensemus ergo ordinem prophetiae. A cogitationibus venit ad somnium, a somnio pervenit ad futura. Qui ergo ipsam, ut ita dicam, radicem somnii protulit, profecto ex praeteritis probavit quam vera essent quae de futuris diceret. Prophetia autem praesentis temporis nec praeteriti attestatione indiget, nec futuri, quia cum res occulta per prophetiae verba detegitur, veritati illius res ipsa quae ostenditur attestatur.

4. Igitur quia de temporibus prophetiae tractavimus, restat ut de modis ejus ac qualitatibus aliqua disseramus. Spiritus quippe prophetiae nec semper, nec eodem modo prophetae animum tangit. Aliquando enim spiritus prophetiae ex praesenti tangit animum prophetantis, et ex futuro nequaquam tangit; aliquando ex futuro tangit, et ex praesenti non tangit. Aliquando vero ex praesenti et ex futuro tangit; aliquando autem ex praeterito, et ex praesenti, atque ex futuro pariter tangitur animus prophetantis. Aliquando tangit ex praeterito prophetiae spiritus, nec tangit ex futuro; aliquando autem tangit ex futuro, nec tangit ex praeterito. Aliquando vero in praesenti ex parte tangit, et ex parte non tangit; aliquando in futuro ex parte tangit, et ex parte non tangit. Sed haec ipsa, si possumus, eo ordine quo praemissa sunt sacrae Scripturae testimoniis ostendamus.

5. Ex praesenti enim prophetiae spiritus prophetantis animum tangit, atque ex futuro non tangit, sicut Joannes Baptista venientem Dominum videns, ait: Ecce Agnus Dei, ecce qui tollit peccata mundi (Joan. I, 29). Sed cum jam moriturus esset, missis discipulis, requirebat, dicens: Tu es qui venturus es, an alium exspectamus (Matth. XI, 3)? In quibus verbis ostenditur quia in terris quidem venisse Redemptorem noverat, sed an per semetipsum ad aperienda inferni claustra descenderet dubitabat. Ex praesenti enim per prophetiae spiritum tactus fuerat, qui humanitatem Mediatoris videns, et divinitatem ejus intelligens, confitebatur Agnum qui peccata mundi tolleret; sed tactus ex futuro non fuerat, quia adventum illius in infernum nesciebat.

6. Aliquando vero prophetiae spiritus animum prophetantis ex futuro tangit, atque ex praesenti non tangit, sicut aperte libri Geneseos historia testatur, cum Isaac Esau filium suum ad venandum misit (Genes. XXVII, 3, seq.), cui minorem filium Rebecca ad benedicendum supposuit, qui hoedinis pellibus indutus paterno palpatui corpus fraternum finxit. Cui ille minori filio tanquam majori benedictionem dedit, quaeque ei essent longe futura nuntiavit; sed quis esset qui coram se assisteret, scire non potuit. Prophetiae ergo spiritus ex futuro animum prophetantis tetigit, atque ex praesenti non tetigit, quando caligantibus oculis pater et ventura praedicebat, et praesentem filium nesciebat.

7. Aliquando prophetantis animum ex praesenti pariter et ex futuro tangit, quod ex eodem libro Geneseos liquido docemur (Genes. XLVIII). In illo quippe scriptum est quia cum vitae jam termino propinquaret Jacob, et duos filios suos Joseph fecit assistere, ut ex benedictione illius possent longe post futura promereri, cui majorem ad dexteram, minorem vero posuit ad sinistram (Ibid., 10). Cumque ille, oculis senectute caligantibus, nepotes suos quis prior, quisve esset minor, humano visu discernere nequaquam posset, ductis in obliquum brachiis, dexteram manum minori, sinistram majori imposuit. Quod dum corrigere filius vellet, dicens: Non ita convenit, pater, quia hic est primogenitus, audivit: Scio, fili mi, scio: et iste quidem erit in populos, et multiplicabitur, sed frater ejus junior major illo erit (Ibid., 18, 19). Prophetiae ergo spiritus ex praesenti pariter et ex futuro prophetantis animum tetigit, dum Jacob et ventura nuntiabat, et eos quos corporeis oculis videre non poterat, ante se positos per spiritum discernebat. Sic Ahiae prophetae animum prophetiae spiritus ex praesenti atque ex futuro tetigerat, cum, caligantibus oculis, eam quae se esse aliam simulabat, et uxorem Jeroboam esse cognovit, et quidquid ei futurum esset aperuit, dicens: Ingredere, uxor Jeroboam, quare aliam te esse simulas? Ego autem missus sum ad te durus nuntius. Vade et dic Jeroboam: Haec dicit Dominus Deus Israel: Quia operatus es mala super omnes qui fuerunt ante te, et fecisti tibi deos alienos et conflatiles, ut me ad iracundiam provocares, me autem projecisti post corpus tuum, idcirco ego inducam mala super domum Jeroboam (III Reg. XIV, 6). Ex praesenti enim atque ex futuro pariter prophetantis animus tactus fuerat, qui et ingredientem deprehendere potuit, et ei ventura nuntiare.

8. Aliquando autem ex praeterito et ex praesenti, atque ex futuro pariter animus tangitur prophetantis, sicut Elisabeth venire ad se Mariam conspiciens quia incarnatum Verbum gestaret in utero agnovit, eamque jam Domini sui matrem vocavit, dicens: Unde hoc mihi, ut veniat mater Domini mei ad me (Luc. I, 43)? De cujus conceptione per angelum quoque ad Joseph dicitur: Quod enim in ea natum est, de Spiritu sancto est (Matth. I, 20). Quae videlicet Elisabeth dixit: Beata quae credidisti, quoniam perficientur ea quae dicta sunt tibi a Domino (Luc. I, 45). Dicens enim: Beata quae credidisti, aperte indicat quia verba angeli quae dicta ad Mariam fuerant per spiritum agnovit; atque subjungens: Perficientur ea quae dicta sunt tibi a Domino, quae eam etiam in futuro sequerentur praevidit. Simul ergo de praeterito et praesenti atque ex futuro per prophetiae spiritum tacta est, quae et eam promissionibus angeli credidisse cognovit, et matrem nominans, quia Redemptorem humani generis in utero portaret intellexit; et cum omnia perficienda praediceret, quid etiam de futuro sequeretur aspexit.

9. Aliquando vero prophetiae spiritus ex praeterito tangit animum, nec tangit ex futuro, sicut in Paulo apostolo aperte ostenditur, qui discipulis dicit: Notum vobis facio, fratres, Evangelium, quod evangelizatum est a me, quia non est secundum hominem; neque enim ego ab homine accepi illud, neque didici, sed per revelationem Jesu Christi (Gal. I, 11). Unde aliis quoque discipulis dicit: Secundum revelationem notum factum est mihi sacramentum (Ephes. III, 3). Qui tamen hoc ipsum Evangelium quod per revelationem cognoverat, cum Jerosolymam praedicaturus ascenderet, ait: Ecce ego alligatus spiritu vado in Jerusalem, quae in ea ventura sunt mihi ignorans (Act. XX, 22). Hoc quippe Evangelii sacramentum est, quia Unigenitus Patris incarnatus atque perfectus homo factus est, qui crucifixus, mortuus, et sepultus, die tertia surrexit; die quoque quadragesima ascendit in coelum, atque in dextera Patris sedet. Qui ergo per revelationem Evangelium agnovit, prophetiae spiritu de praeterito tactus est; sed quia quid pro eodem Evangelio passurus esset ignoravit, de futuro procul dubio tactus non est. Nam sic dicit: Nisi quod Spiritus sanctus per omnes civitates protestatur mihi, dicens: Quoniam vincula et tribulationes Jerosolymis me manent (Ibid., 23), aperte ostendens quia ea quae ipsi futura essent aliis de ipso revelata erant, non autem ipsi de se, sicut de illo per Agabum dicitur: Virum, cujus haec zona est ita alligari oportet in Jerusalem (Act. XXI, 11).

10. Aliquando autem prophetiae spiritus tangit ex futuro, nec tangit ex praeterito; sicut de Elisaei facto scriptum est, quia cum unus ex filiis prophetarum materiam succideret, huic ferrum securis in aquam cecidit, qui exclamavit: Heu! heu! Domine mi, et hoc ipsum mutuum acceperam. Dixit autem homo Dei: Ubi cecidit? At ille monstravit ei locum. Praecidit ergo lignum, et misit illuc, natavitque ferrum (IV Reg. VI, 5). In quo videlicet prophetae facto cognoscitur quia qui requirit ubi ceciderat quid esset facturus noverat; sed tamen cum requirit, constat quia ubi ferrum cecidisset ignorabat. Prophetiae ergo spiritus Elisaei mentem ex futuro tetigerat, sed ex praeterito non tangebat, qui et ferrum in profundis demersum, quia revocaturus esset ad superficiem, scire potuit; sed ubi ceciderat omnino nescivit.

11. Aliquando vero prophetiae spiritus in praesenti ex parte tangit, et ex parte non tangit. Quod Petri apostoli historia testatur, cum missi ad eum a Cornelio milites ei sunt per spiritum nuntiati; scriptum quippe est: Et dixit spiritus ei: Ecce viri tres quaerunt te. Ad quos ille descendit, et requirens dixit: Quae causa est propter quam venistis (Act. X, 20)? In cujus verbis ostenditur quia eamdem causam per spiritum non audierat quam a militibus requirebat. In praesenti ergo mentem Petri spiritus ex parte tetigerat, et ex parte non tetigerat, qui et adesse milites dixit, et pro qua causa venerant tacuit.

12. Aliquando spiritus prophetiae in futuro ex parte tangit, et ex parte non tangit; sicut prophetarum filii de auferendo Elia ad Elisaeum dicunt: Nunquid nosti quia hodie Dominus tollat dominum tuum a te (IV Reg. II, 3, 5)? Quo tamen ablato, sese per diversa dispergunt, eumque in rupibus et vallibus quaerunt. In futuro ergo eorum mentem prophetiae spiritus ex parte tetigerat, et ex parte non tangebat, quando eum quem tollendum noverant non inveniendum quaerebant. Ex parte itaque tacti sunt, atque ex parte non tacti, quia et sciebant quod tolli posset, et nesciebant quod inveniri non posset. Idem quoque Elisaeus per prophetiae spiritum de futuro ex parte tactus est, et ex parte non tactus, cum regi Israel diceret: Percute jaculo terram. Et cum percussisset tribus vicibus, et stetisset, iratus est contra eum vir Dei, et ait: Si percussisses quinquies, aut sexies, sive septies, percussisses Syriam usque ad consumptionem: nunc autem tribus vicibus percuties eam (IV Reg. XIII, 18, 19). Qui itaque noverat quia toties percuteret Syriam, quoties percussisset terram; sed cum ei diceret, Percute terram, quoties eam percussurus esset ignorabat (quippe quia et indignatus est terram tertio fuisse percussam), profecto constat quia de futuro ex parte tactus fuerat, et ex parte non tactus, qui Syriam percuti praedixit, sed terram amplius percuti voluit. Sic Samuel cum ad unguendum S. David a Domino mitteretur, respondit: Quomodo vadam? Audiet enim Saul, et interficiet me

(I Reg. XVI, 2). Qui et David unxit, nec tamen a Saule occisus est. Ex parte ergo de futuro tactus prophetae animus fuerat, et ex parte non tactus, qui et unguendum S. David in regno noverat, et quia a Saule non esset occidendus ignorabat.

13. Sciendum quoque est quod prophetae quidem e proximo tanguntur, atque e longinquo minime tanguntur; alii vero e longinquo, et non tanguntur e proximo; alii autem et e longinquo, et e proximo, prophetiae spiritu tanguntur. Nam quidam tanguntur e proximo, et non e longinquo, sicut Samuel perisse asinas noverat, easque inventas esse nuntiavit, et Saul regem futurum praedicit (I Reg. IX, 15, 20); S. David quoque quia in ejus regno succederet nuntiat, sed quia pater Regis aeterni futurus sit non praedicit (I Reg. XVI, 12). Quidam vero tanguntur e longinquo, et non tanguntur e proximo, sicut idem David incarnandum Dei Unigenitum noverat, de Judaea dicens: Homo factus est in ea, et ipse fundavit eam Altissimus (Psal. LXXXVI, 5). Atque hunc ad coelos ascensurum, et ad Patris dexteram sessurum intelligit, dicens: Dixit Dominus Domino meo, sede a dextris meis (Psal. CIX, 1). Et tamen multa quae e vicino acta sunt minime praevidit. Ut enim pauca de multis loquar, servum Miphiboseth sibi contra suum dominum mentientem non intellexit (II Reg. XVI, 3, 4); et Amasae promittens, dicit: Haec faciat mihi Deus, et haec addat, si non magister militiae fueris coram me omni tempore pro Joab (Ibid. XIX, 13), videlicet quid sequeretur ignorans, quia Amasa idem non solum principatum militiae pro Joab non susciperet, sed etiam per Joab post paululum vitam finiret (Ibid., XX, 10). Et cum templum Deo construere voluit, quid e vicino sequeretur nesciens, prophetam alterum requisivit (Ibid. VII, 3).

14. Quidam vero et e longinquo tanguntur et e proximo, sicut Isaias longe post futura praenuntiat, dicens: Ecce virgo concipiet, et pariet filium, et vocabitur nomen ejus Emmanuel (Isai. VII, 14). De quo rursus ait: Parvulus natus est nobis, et filius datus est nobis; et factus est principatus super humerum ejus, et vocabitur nomen ejus admirabilis, consiliarius, Deus, fortis, pater futuri saeculi, princeps pacis. Multiplicabitur ejus imperium, et pacis non erit finis (Ibid. IX, 6). Qui etiam de Ezechia rege prophetiae spiritu tactus e vicino, quia eum de infirmitate sua surgeret praedixit, et quot annis post infirmitatem viveret nuntiavit (Ibid. XXXVIII, 5).

15. Aliquando vero prophetiae spiritus prophetis deest, nec semper eorum mentibus praesto est, quatenus cum hunc non habent, se hunc agnoscant ex dono habere cum habent. Unde Elisaeus cum flentem Sunamitem mulierem a suis pedibus per Giezi puerum avelli prohiberet, dixit: Dimitte illam, anima enim ejus in amaritudine est, et Dominus celavit a me, et non indicavit mihi (IV Reg. IV, 27). Sic quoque cum eum Josaphat de futuris requireret, et prophetiae ei spiritus deesset, psaltem fecit applicari, ut prophetiae ad hunc spiritus per laudem psalmodiae descenderet, atque ejus animum de venturis repleret (Ibid., III, 11, 15). Vox enim psalmodiae cum per intentionem cordis agitur, per hanc omnipotenti Domino ad cor iter paratur, ut intentae menti vel prophetiae mysteria, vel compunctionis gratiam infundat. Unde scriptum est: Sacrificium laudis honorificabit me, et illic iter est quo ostendam illi salutare Dei (Psal. XLIX, 23). Quod enim Latine salutare, hoc Hebraice Jesus dicitur. In sacrificio igitur laudis fit Jesu iter ostensionis, quia dum per psalmodiam compunctio effunditur, via nobis in corde fit, per quam ad Jesum in fine pervenitur, sicut ipse de sua ostensione loquitur, dicens: Qui diligit me, diligetur a Patre meo, et ego diligam eum, et manifestabo ei meipsum (Joan. XIV, 21). Hinc quoque scriptum est: Cantate Domino, psalmum dicite nomini ejus, iter facite ei qui ascendit super occasum, Dominus nomen est ei (Psal. LXVII, 5). Ipse etenim super occasum ascendit, qui mortem resurgendo calcavit. Cui dum cantamus, iter facimus, ut ad nostrum cor veniat, et sui nos amoris gratia accendat. Quia autem prophetis prophetiae spiritus non semper adest, etiam vir Dei indicat, qui, contra Samariam missus, mala quae ei ventura erant nuntiavit (III Reg. XIII); qui, tamen, prohibitus a Domino in via comedere, prophetae falsi persuasione deceptus est (Ibid., XVIII, 19); quem fallax sermo non deciperet, si prophetiae spiritum praesentem habuisset.

16. Sciendum quoque est quod aliquando prophetae sancti dum consuluntur, ex magno usu prophetandi quaedam ex suo spiritu proferunt, et se haec ex prophetiae spiritu dicere suspicantur; sed quia sancti sunt, per sanctum Spiritum citius correcti, ab eo quae vera sunt audiunt, et semetipsos quia falsa dixerint reprehendunt. Nathan etenim prophetam sanctum virum fuisse quis nesciat? Qui David regem et de culpa aperte reprehendit, et quae ei pro culpa eadem essent ventura nuntiavit; quem tamen dum idem David, quia templum Deo vellet construere, requisisset, illico respondit: Omne quod est in corde tuo, vade et fac, quia Dominus tecum est (II Reg. VII, 3). De quo illic statim subditur: Factum est autem in nocte illa, et ecce sermo Domini ad Nathan, dicens: Vade et loquere ad servum meum David. Haec dicit Dominus Deus: Nunquid tu aedificabis mihi domum ad habitandum? Neque enim habitavi in domo ex die qua eduxi filios Israel de terra Aegypti usque in diem hanc (Ibid. 4). Et paulo post: Cum completi fuerint dies tui, et dormieris cum patribus tuis, suscitabo semen tuum post te, quod egredietur de utero tuo, et firmabo regnum ejus; ipse aedificabit domum nomini meo (Ibid. 12, 13). Ecce Nathan propheta qui prius regi dixerat: Vade et fac, ipse postmodum per prophetiae spiritum edoctus, hoc fieri non posse denuntians, et regis consiliis et suis sermonibus contradixit, quia quod ex suo spiritu dixerat, falsum fuisse deprehendit.

17. Qua in re inter prophetas veros ac falsos ista distantia est, quia prophetae veri si quid aliquando per suum spiritum dicunt, hoc ab auditorum mentibus per Spiritum sanctum eruditi citius corrigunt.

Prophetae autem falsi et falsa denuntiant, et alieni a sancto Spiritu in sua falsitate perdurant.

18. Consideratis igitur prophetiae temporibus et modis, intueri libet qualiter omnipotens Deus ad provectum hominum suae irae moderamina dispensat. Israeliticus quippe populus conditori suo deliquerat, et idcirco regi Babylonio in captivitate serviebat; cum quo tamen S. Ezechiel propheta in captivitatem mittitur (Ezech. III, 11), quem divina gratia ita sibi placabilem fecerat, ut per eum ventura quaeque praediceret, et afflicti populi mentem consolari dignaretur. Consideremus ergo, si possumus, quanta est dispensatio supernae pietatis, quia sic iratus est populo suo Dominus, ut tamen omnimodo non irasceretur. Nam si iratus non esset, in captivitatem populum minime tradidisset; et si omnimodo iratus esset, electos suos in captivitatem cum illo non mitteret. Sed agit haec divina misericordia, ut ex una eademque re, ex qua carnalibus dat flagellum, ex ea spiritualibus virtutis praestet incrementum. Cumque illos per tribulationem purgat, istos ex societate tribulantium ad majora promerenda excitat. Et sic injustis irascitur, ut tamen eorum corda per justorum consortium consoletur; ne si omni modo deserat, nullus post culpas ad veniam redeat. Tenendo igitur repellit, et repellendo tenet, quando cum his quos dijudicat simul in tribulationem mittit quos amat. Quis ista tantae pietatis viscera pensare sufficiat? Quod et culpas populi Dominus sine vindicta non deserit, et tamen delinquentem populum a se funditus non repellit. Sic cum Moyses ad repromissionis terram exploratores duodecim misisset (Num. XIII), ex quibus cum decem postmodum desperationem populo facerent, idem populus in ira murmurationis accensus, seductum se a Domino esse conquestus est, ut ejus cadavera jacerent in deserto (Ibid., XIV); cui omnipotens Deus iratus dixit quod nullus eorum in terram repromissionis intraret (Ibid.): quo terrore compuncti, prave se egisse cognoverunt, sese in lacrymis afflixerunt, et accincti armis, protinus coeperunt contra hostes ascendere, ut repromissionis terram post lacrymas intrare potuissent (Ibid. 42). Quibus per S. Moysen Dominus dicit: Dic eis, Nolite ascendere, neque pugnetis; non enim sum vobiscum, ne cadatis coram inimicis vestris (Deut. I, 42). Qua in re pensandum est, si cum ipsis non erat, cur eos ne caderent ascendere prohibebat? Si autem cum ipsis erat, quid est quod ait: Non enim sum vobiscum? Sed mira dispensatione disciplinae ac misericordiae, et cum ipsis erat, et cum ipsis non erat. Cum ipsis non erat ut vincerent, sed tamen cum ipsis erat ne ab hostibus perirent. O ineffabilia pietatis viscera! Culpas insequitur, et tamen peccantes protegit. Iratum se indicat, et tamen ab hostibus defendit. Sic plerumque parvulo filio delinquenti irascitur mater, reprehendit, increpat, verberat; sed si hunc in praeceps ire conspexerit, ubi in mortis periculum ruat, manum tendit et retinet, et quae sic irata verberaverat ac si non diligeret, sic diligendo retinet, ac si irata non verberasset.

19. Haec in sola praefatione colloquentes, navigii nostri quasi intra portum exercitium fecimus, ut ad indaganda prophetiae mysteria, velut in immensitatem pelagi, post vela pandamus. Quod tamen non in nostra virtute praesumimus, sed in eo qui linguas infantium facit disertas, quia spiritus Domini replevit orbem terrarum, et hoc quod continet omnia scientiam habet vocis (Sap. I, 7). Omnipotens enim Deus, sermo Patris omnipotentis est, et qui de illo loqui concupiscimus, muti in illo nullo modo erimus. Dabit verba utilia omnipotens Verbum, quod pro nobis incarnatum vivit et regnat cum Patre in unitate Spiritus sancti Deus, per omnia saecula saeculorum. Amen.

1. Usus propheticae locutionis est ut prius personam, tempus locumque describat, et postmodum dicere mysteria prophetiae incipiat, quatenus ad veritatem solidius ostendendam, ante historiae radicem figat, et post fructus spiritus per signa et allegorias proferat. S. Ezechiel itaque aetatis suae tempus indicat, dicens: EZECH. I, 1. — Et factum est in tricesimo anno, in quarto mense, in quinta mensis. Locum quoque denuntians, adjungit: IBID. — Cum essem in medio captivorum juxta fluvium Chobar, aperti sunt coeli, et vidi visiones Dei. Tempus etiam insinuat, subdens: VERS. 2. — In quinta mensis, ipse est annus quintus transmigrationis regis Joachin. Qui ut bene personam indicet, etiam genus narrat, cum subditur: VERS. 3. — Et factum est verbum Domini ad Ezechielem filium Buzi, sacerdotem.

2. Sed prima quaestio nobis oritur cur is qui nihil adhuc dixerat ita exorsus est, dicens: Et factum est in tricesimo anno. Et namque sermo conjunctionis est, et scimus quia non conjungitur sermo subsequens nisi sermoni praecedenti. Qui igitur nihil dixerat cur dicit: Et factum est, cum non sit sermo cui hoc quod incipit subjungat? Qua in re intuendum est quia sicut nos corporalia, sic prophetae sensus spiritalia aspiciunt, eisque et illa sunt praesentia quae nostrae ignorantiae absentia videntur. Unde fit ut in mente prophetarum ita conjuncta sint exterioribus interiora, quatenus simul utraque videant, simulque in eis fiat et intus verbum quod audiunt, et foras quod dicunt. Patet igitur causa cur qui nihil dixerat inchoavit dicens: Et factum est in tricesimo anno. Quia hoc verbum quod foris protulit illi verbo quod intus audierat conjunxit. Continuavit ergo verba quae protulit visioni intimae, et idcirco incipit dicens: Et factum est. Subjungit enim hoc quod exterius loqui inchoat, ac si et illud foris sit quod intus videt.

3. Hoc autem quod dicitur, quia tricesimo anno spiritum prophetiae acceperit, indicat aliquid nobis considerandum, videlicet quia juxta rationis usum doctrinae sermo non suppetit nisi in aetate perfecta. Unde et ipse Dominus anno duodecimo aetatis suae in medio doctorum in templo sedens, non docens, sed interrogans voluit inveniri (Luc. II, 46). Ut enim non auderent homines in infirma aetate praedicare, ille anno duodecimo aetatis suae interrogare homines est dignatus in terra, qui per divinitatem suam semper angelos docet in coelo. Quia enim ipse est Dei sapientia, de ipso angeli videndo vivunt hoc quod beatitudine aeterna satiantur. Quod Moyses quoque sub allegoriae mysterio admonet, dicens: Non arabis in primogenito bovis (Deut. XV, 19). Primogenitum enim bovis accipimus in infirma aetate primi nostri temporis bonam operationem. In qua tamen arandum non est, quia cum prima sunt adolescentiae vel juventutis nostrae tempora, nobis adhuc a praedicatione cessandum est, ut vomer linguae nostrae proscindere non audeat terram cordis alieni. Quoadusque etenim infirmi sumus, continere nos intra nosmetipsos debemus, ne dum tenera bona citius ostendimus, amittamus, quia et arbusta plantata si prius in terra radicata non fuerint, manu tacta citius arescunt; at si semel radicem fixerint, manus tangit, et tamen nil officit; venti impellunt, nec tamen impellentes laedunt. Et constructi parietes si impellantur, eruuntur, nisi a suo prius fuerint humore siccati. Mens itaque quousque ab humore pravitatis suae perfecte non fuerit exsiccata, alienae linguae manu tangi non debet, ne priusquam plene percipiat, perdat soliditatem suam, ne impulsa ruat, ne velut arbustum sine radicibus, dum plus quam tolerare valet concutitur, arescat. Ad exemplum ergo non sunt ostendenda nisi quae firma sunt. Prius etenim convalescere debet mens, atque ad utilitatem proximorum postmodum demonstrari, cum jam nec per laudem elevata corruat, nec per vituperationem percussa contabescat. Nam etsi Timotheo dicitur: Praecipe haec, et doce; nemo adolescentiam tuam contemnat (I Tim. IV, 11, 12), sciendum est quod in sacro eloquio nonnunquam adolescentia juventus vocatur. Unde scriptum est: Laetare, juvenis, in adolescentia tua (Eccle. XI, 9). Propheta igitur, ut ostendatur cujus auctoritatis sit in praedicatione, aetatis solidae esse describitur, quatenus ei cum vita et spiritu omnia quae ad praedicandum congruunt concordare videantur.

4. Nec contra haec quempiam movere debet quod Jeremias (Jerem. I, 5) atque Daniel (Dan. XIII, 45) prophetiae spiritum pueri perceperunt, quoniam miracula in exemplum operationis non sunt trahenda. Omnipotens enim Deus et linguas infantium facit disertas (Sap. X, 21), et ex ore infantium atque lactentium perficit laudem (Psal. VIII, 3). Sed aliud est quod nos de doctrinae usu atque disciplina discimus, aliud quod de miraculo scimus.

5. Jam vero si quaeritur ut in ipsa quoque aetatis illius expressione mysticum aliquid designetur, absurdum non est quod propheta Dominum, quem verbis denuntiat, ipso quoque aetatis suae tempore ostendat. Anno tricesimo Ezechielis prophetae coeli aperti sunt, et vidit visiones Domini juxta fluvium Chobar, quia quasi tricesimo aetatis suae anno Dominus ad fluvium Jordanem venit. Ibi itaque coeli aperti sunt, quia Spiritus in columba descendit; vox quoque de coelo sonuit, dicens: Hic est filius meus dilectus, in quo mihi complacui (Matth. III, 17).

6. Sed et ipsa Hebraea verba multum nobis ad mysterium interpretandum valent. Nam Chobar interpretatur gravitudo, vel gravitas; Ezechiel, fortitudo Dei; Buzi, despectus vel contemptus; Chaldaei, captivantes, vel quasi daemones. Venit ergo Ezechiel juxta fluvium Chobar; quia enim Chobar gravitudo, vel gravitas dicitur, quid per Chobar fluvium, nisi humanum genus congrue designatur? Quod ab ortu defluit ad mortem, et grave sibi est ex peccatis, quae et perpetrat et portat, quia, sicut scriptum est: Iniquitas in talentum plumbi sedet (Zach. V, 7). Omne enim peccatum grave est, quia non permittit animam ad sublimia levari. Unde et per Psalmistam dicitur:

Filii hominum, usquequo gravi corde (Psal. IV, 3)? Scriptum vero de Domino est, Quia ipse est Dei virtus, et Dei sapientia (I Cor. I, 18). Venit ergo Ezechiel juxta fluvium Chobar, quia fortitudo Dei per incarnationis suae mysterium propinquare dignata est peccatorum suorum pondera portanti generi humano, quod ab ortu suo quotidie defluit ad mortem, sicut de illo per Psalmistam dicitur: Et erit tanquam lignum quod plantatum est secus decursus aquarum (Psal. I, 3). Juxta decursus quippe aquarum plantatus est, quia juxta lapsus incarnatus est defluentium populorum. Ezechielem autem fortitudinem Dei, Buzi vero despectum interpretari diximus. Sed Ezechiel filius est Buzi, quia ex illo populo unigenitus Dei incarnari dignatus est, quem propter culpam perfidiae Dominus despexit. Fortitudo ergo Dei ex contemptu, vel despectu nascitur, quia Redemptor noster humanitatem assumere ex populo perfido et contempto dignatus est. Venit vero in terram Chaldaeorum. Chaldaei interpretantur, ut diximus, captivantes, vel quasi daemones. Iniqui etenim, quia et ipsi iniquitates perpetrant, et ad iniquitatem alios persuadendo trahunt, nimirum captivantes sunt. Qui recte quoque et quasi daemones interpretantur, quia et hi qui alios ad iniquitatem suadendo pertrahunt, in semetipsis ministerium daemonum ad iniquitatem suscipiunt, quamvis daemones per naturam non sint. Venit ergo fortitudo Dei in terram Chaldaeorum, quia inter eos Unigenitus Patris apparuit qui in semetipsis ad peccatum defluxerant, et ad peccata alios captivantes trahebant. Sed expositionis sermo ad prophetae nunc personam redeat. VERS. 3. — Et facta est super eum ibi manus Domini.

7. Manus vel brachium Domini Filius dicitur, quia per ipsum omnia facta sunt. De quo etiam Psalmista ait: Fiat manus tua ut salvum me faciat (Psal. CXVIII, 173). Manus quippe Dei quae per divinitatem non est facta, sed genita, per humanitatem facta est, ut humani generis vulnera sanaret. Ibi ergo propheta incarnationem Unigeniti agnovit, ubi super se manum Domini factam vidit. Quod vero hic subditur: VERS. 4. — Et vidi, et ecce ventus turbinis veniebat ab Aquilone.

8. Intuendum nobis est quis sit in prophetae verbis ordo locutionis. Qui enim superius de se ipso dixerat: Aperti sunt coeli, et vidi visiones Dei, postea tanquam si de alio narret, adjungit: Et facta est super eum ibi manus Domini. Ac deinde quasi ad se revertitur, et dicit: Et vidi, et ecce ventus turbinis veniebat ab Aquilone. Quid est hoc, quod modo Ezechiel loquitur, modo de Ezechiele? Si per totum diceret de se, quaestio non esset. Si per totum diceret quasi de alio, nihilominus quaestio non fuisset. Quid est ergo hoc quod sic variatur sermo propheticus, ut modo Propheta de se loquatur, modo autem de ipso quasi alius loqui videatur? Sed sciendum est quia hi qui prophetiae spiritu replentur, per hoc quod aperte nonnunquam loquuntur de se, et nonnunquam sic de se verba tanquam de aliis proferunt, indicant quia non propheta, sed Spiritus sanctus loquitur per prophetam. Pro eo enim quod per ipsos sermo fit, ipsi loquuntur de se; et pro eo quod aspirante Spiritu sancto loquuntur, idem Spiritus sanctus per ipsos loquitur de ipsis, Veritate attestante quae dicit: Non enim vos estis qui loquimini, sed Spiritus Patris vestri qui loquitur in vobis (Matth. X, 20). Hinc etiam Moyses ait: Erat Moyses vir mitissimus super omnes homines qui morabantur in terra (Num. XII, 3). Qui enim non dicit eram, sed erat, profecto aperte indicat quia is qui per illum de illo loquebatur alius erat. Hinc Joannes ait: Vidit illum discipulum quem ditigebat Jesus (Joan. XXI, 20). Unde et Paulus ut non se esse qui loquebatur ostenderet, dixit: An experimentum quaeritis ejus qui in me loquitur Christus (II Cor. XIII, 3)? Quia igitur in locutione prophetica alter est qui praesidet, alter qui obsequitur, cum de se ipso propheta loquitur persona obsequentis est, cum vero per prophetam Spiritus sanctus loquitur de propheta, sublimitas praesidentis ostenditur. Recte ergo et tanquam de alio dicitur: Et facta est super eum ibi manus Domini; et de se protinus adjungit: Et vidi, et ecce ventus turbinis veniebat ab Aquilone.

Nunc itaque discutiendum nobis est quid sit quod dicit: Et ecce ventus turbinis veniebat ab Aquilone, et nubes magna.

9. Pro eo quod ventus Aquilo constringit in frigore, non incongrue Aquilonis nomine torpor maligni spiritus designatur. Quod Isaias quoque propheta testatur, qui dixisse diabolum denuntiat: Sedebo in monte testamenti, in lateribus Aquilonis (Isai. XIV, 13). Malignus enim spiritus montem testamenti tenuit, quia Judaicum populum, qui legem acceperat, sibi in perfidiam subjugavit. Quando enim corda doctorum tenet, monti testamenti diabolus praesidet. Qui etiam in lateribus Aquilonis sedet, quia mentes hominum frigidas possidet. Unde et sponsi voce in Cantico canticorum dicitur: Surge, Aquilo, et veni, Auster, perfla hortum meum, et fluant aromata illius (Cant. IV, 5). Cum enim, jubente Domino, frigidus spiritus recedit, calidus spiritus mentem fidelium occupat; qui hortum Dei, id est sanctam Ecclesiam perflat, ut opiniones virtutum ejus ad multorum notitiam velut aromata defluant. Recedente etenim Aquilone, id est maligno spiritu, sanctus Spiritus mentem quasi Auster replet. Qui dum calefaciendo flaverit, statim de fidelium cordibus aromata virtutum fluunt. Propheta ergo ea quae essent in finem ventura conspiciens, venire ab Aquilone ventum turbinis vidit, quia in extremo saeculi mentes hominum torporis sui frigore malignus spiritus gravius occupabit. Unde scriptum est: Vae terrae et mari, quia descendit diabolus ad vos habens iram magnam, sciens quia modicum tempus habet (Apoc. XII, 12). Antiquus quippe adversarius insidiarum suarum molimina in humanis mentibus gravius exaggeravit. Contra cujus excrescentem superbiam incarnati manifestata est humilitas Dei: atque ut humanum genus a suo languore sanaret, tunc magna apparuit potentia medici, cum languor crevit aegroti.

10. Bene autem maligni spiritus immissio, ventus turbinis appellatur. Turbo quippe aedificium quod tangit, concutiendo subruit. Et omnis antiqui hostis tentatio, quae agitur in mente, ventus est turbinis; quia hanc concutiendo per desideria, a statu suae rectitudinis evellit. Sed nos ista reticentes quae humano generi erunt ab hoste callido in finem ventura, ad solam Judaeam, ex qua Propheta fuit, et cujus perditionem prophetando conspicit, verba vertamus. Quae incarnato Domino tanto gravius ab Aquilone ventum turbinis pertulit, quanto a sua rectitudine concussa cadens, per torporem mentis in perfidia frigida remansit. Ventus ergo turbinis ab Aquilone venit, cum vitam Judaici populi malignus spiritus in tentatione concussit. Ubi et recte additur: IBID. — Et nubes magna.

11. Quia quanto plus quisque exarsit in crudelitate, tanto amplius obcaecari meruit in ignorantiae suae caligine. Redemptorem quippe humani generis, quem in lege ac prophetis intelligentes exspectaverant, videntes negabant. Unde actum est ut eorum mens magna ignorantiae suae nube tegeretur, ne hunc post inquirentes agnoscerent, quem prius et denuntiare poterant, et amare renuebant. Nam cum modo ejus virtutes et miracula, modo autem passiones conspicerent, in infidelium cordibus nubes magna ab Aquilone venerat, quia ex peccati sui frigore propter infirmitatem passionis illius et inter signa caligabant. Quid vero ex illa nubis magnae caligine sit secutum, subjungitur, cum protinus dicit: IBID. — Et ignis involvens.

12. Ignis enim nomine, cum per significationem dicitur, aliquando Spiritus sanctus, aliquando autem mentis malitia designatur. De bono enim igne scriptum est: Ignem veni mittere in terram; et quid volo, nisi ut accendatur (Luc. XII, 49). Ignis quippe in terram mittitur cum per ardorem sancti Spiritus afflata terrena mens a carnalibus suis desideriis concrematur. De malo autem igne dicitur: Et nunc ignis adversarios consumet (Hebr. X, 27), quia cor pessimum ex sua malitia tabescit. Sicut autem ignis amoris mentem erigit, ita ignis malitiae involvit, quia et Spiritus sanctus cor quod replet elevat, et ardor malitiae ad inferiora semper incurvat. Judaea igitur nube suae ignorantiae caecata, quia mox ad persecutionis nequitiam erupit, igne suo involuta est, quae in obligatione se nequitiae per eamdem ipsam crudelitatem qua arsit implicavit. Ventus autem turbinis veniebat ab Aquilone, et nubes magna, et ignis involvens, quia ex torporis sui frigore ad ignorantiae caliginem perducta, usque ad malitiam persecutionis erupit. Unde ad alium quoque prophetam dicitur: Quid tu vides? Qui illico respondit: Ollam succensam ego video, et faciem ejus a facie Aquilonis (Jerem. I, 13). Judaeorum quippe mens in persecutione saeviens, atque in crudelitate malitiae undas cogitationum volvens, quid aliud quam olla succensa fuit? Cujus facies a facie Aquilonis esse dicitur, quia si se adverso spiritui per torporem mentis non subderet, contra bonos in tanta malitia non exarsisset. Nubem itaque sequitur ignis involvens, quia in eis caecitatem mentis secuta est crudelitas persecutionis. Si enim cognovissent, nunquam Dominum gloriae crucifixissent (I Cor. II, 8). Sed iste ignis alibi arsit, atque alibi splenduit. Nam subditur: IBID. — Et splendor in circuitu ejus.

13. Dum enim persecutio in Judaea agitur, sancta apostolorum praedicatio in universo mundo dispersa est, sicut ipsi dicunt: Vobis missum fuerat verbum Dei, sed quia indignos vos judicastis, ecce imus ad gentes (Act. XIII, 46). De crudelitate ergo malitiae, quae mentem Judaeae concremavit, omnipotens Deus lucem gentibus sparsit, quia per hoc quod illa Redemptorem suum ac membra ejus persecuta est, sanctis apostolis per diversa dispersis, nos qui in Judaeae circuitu positi in tenebris fuimus, dono coelestis gratiae splendorem veri luminis vidimus. Unde scriptum est: Sedentibus in tenebris et umbra mortis, lux orta est eis (Isai. IX, 2). Iste itaque ignis malitiae qui a Judaeorum cordibus arsit in persecutione, priusquam sanctos apostolos saeviendo affligeret, in ipso se exercuit auctore ac redemptore generis humani. Unde et subditur: IBID. — Et de medio ejus quasi species electri, id est de medio ignis.

14. Quid electri specie, nisi Christus Jesus Mediator Dei et hominum designatur (I Tim. II, 5)? Electrum quippe ex auro et argento est. In electro dum aurum argentumque miscetur, argentum ad claritatem crescit, aurum vero a suo fulgore pallescit. Illud ad claritatem proficit, hoc a claritate temperatur. Quia igitur in unigenito Dei Filio naturae divinitatis unita est natura nostra, in qua adunatione humanitas in majestatis gloriam excrevit, divinitas vero a sui fulgoris potentia humanis se oculis temperavit, per hoc quod humana natura clarior facta est, quasi per aurum crevit argentum. Et quia divinitas a fulgore suo nostris est aspectibus temperata, quasi aurum nobis palluit per argentum. Illa enim natura immutabilis, quae in se manens innovat omnia, si ita ut est nobis apparere voluisset, fulgore suo nos incenderet potius quam renovaret. Sed claritatem suae magnitudinis temperavit nostris oculis Deus, ut dum nobis ejus claritas temperatur, etiam nostra infirmitas per ejus similitudinem in ejus luce claresceret, et per acceptam gratiam, ut ita dicam, suae habitudinis colorem mutaret. Quasi electrum ergo in igne est Deus factus homo in persecutione. Sequitur: VERS. 5. — Et in medio ejus similitudo quatuor animalium.

15. Quod in medio ejus dicitur, sive electri sive ignis, nil obstat intelligi, quia quatuor haec animalia, sancti scilicet evangelistae, et ex ejusdem Domini incarnatione ad fidei virtutem solidati sunt, et in igne persecutionis multis tribulationibus afflicti.

16. Quod si quis haec quae de primo Domini adventu diximus etiam de secundo velit accipere, celeri assensu sequendus est, quia saepe prophetiae spiritus in uno quod loquitur multa simul intuetur. Ventus enim turbinis ab Aquilone venit, quia nimirum causa peccatorum exigit ut districti judicii concussio omnia simul elementa perturbet. Terror enim perturbationis ultimae inde venire dicitur, unde generatur. Nam quia ad feriendas frigidas peccatorum mentes judicium perturbationis ultimae agitur, recte ab Aquilone ventus turbinis venire perhibetur. Quae videlicet concussio apte ventus turbinis dicitur, quia in illo die cunctorum qui tunc in carne mortali inventi fuerint, in pavore nimio corda commovebuntur. Cum enim coeperit impleri quod scriptum est: Sol obscurabitur, et luna non dabit lumen suum, et stellae cadent de coelo, et virtutes coelorum commovebuntur (Matth. XXIV, 29), quae mens erit hominis aeterni Judicis sententiam non formidantis? Ibi enim tunc cuncta simul peccata ante oculos redeunt, ibi omnia quae cum delectatione acta sunt ad memoriam cum pavore revocantur, ibi caligo cogitationis miserae ex poena proximae damnationis. Unde et subditur: Et nubes magna. Tunc quippe ex peccatorum memoria sensum mentis deprimit caligo caecitatis, cum unigenitum Dei Filium in forma divinitatis conspicere reprobi non permittuntur. Videbunt enim in quem transfixerunt (Joan. XIX, 37; Zach. XII, 10). Et, Tollatur impius, ne videat gloriam Dei (Isai. XXVI, 10). Ubi et aperte subditur: Et ignis involvens. Quia videlicet ignis ille judicii, qui coelum aereum et terram concremabit, peccatores jam in sua superbia non permittet erigi, sed involvet, quos procul dubio in poena suae damnationis confringet.

17. Et splendor in circuitu ejus. Quia sicut fulgur exit ab Oriente, et paret usque ad Occidentem, ita erit adventus Filii hominis (Matth. XXIV, 27). Ubi nullus tunc a judicio in sua mente latere permittitur, quia ipso judicis fulgore penetratur. De quo mox subditur: Et in medio ejus quasi species electri, id est de medio ignis. Ipse enim angelis atque archangelis omnibusque virtutibus praesidens Redemptor noster, qui velut in electri similitudinem unus ex utraque et in utraque natura et Deus permansit cum Patre, et ad redemptionem nostram factus est mortalis cum hominibus, in suo tunc terrore videbitur, eique ignis judicii in reproborum vindicta famulabitur. Hinc enim scriptum est: Dies Domini declarabit quia in igne revelabitur (I Cor. III, 13). Hinc Psalmista ait: Deus manifestus veniet, Deus noster, et non silebit; ignis in conspectu ejus ardebit, et in circuitu ejus tempestas valida (Psal. XLIX, 3). Hinc Petrus apostolus dicit: Adveniet dies Domini ut fur, in quo coeli magno impetu transibunt, elementa vero ignis ardore solventur (II Pet. III, 10). Et quia tunc sancti omnes qui mundum perfecte reliquerunt judices veniunt, apte mox subditur:

18. Et in medio ejus similitudo quatuor animalium. Quid enim per quatuor animalia, nisi quatuor evangelistae signantur? Nec immerito per evangelistas quatuor perfectorum omnium numerus exprimitur, quia omnes qui in Ecclesia modo perfecti sunt perfectionis suae rectitudinem per eorum Evangelium didicerunt. In medio enim ejus similitudo quatuor animalium, quia illi tunc ejus corpori uniti ejus majestati conjuncti, et simul facti cum eo judices videbuntur, qui modo perfecta opera juxta Evangelica praecepta secuti sunt. Hinc est enim quod ipsis sanctis apostolis dicitur: Vos qui secuti estis me, in regeneratione, cum sederit Filius hominis in sede majestatis suae, sedebitis et vos super sedes duodecim, judicantes duodecim tribus Israel (Matth. XIX, 28). Hinc Isaias ait: Dominus ad judicium veniet cum senioribus populi sui (Isai. III, 14). Hinc Salomon de Ecclesia loquitur, dicens: Nobilis in portis vir ejus, cum sederit cum senatoribus terrae (Prov. XXXI, 23). His itaque sub brevitate transcursis, adventus primi ordinem, sicut coepimus, exsequentes, ad Evangelistarum personas in expositione redeamus. Sequitur: VERS. 5. — Et hic aspectus eorum, similitudo hominis in eis.

19. Cum paulo post sancta haec animalia singulis distincta imaginibus describantur, ut aliud homini, aliud leoni, aliud vitulo, aliud aquilae simile dicatur, quid est quod hoc loco de omnibus simul dicitur, Similitudo hominis in eis? Sed quis hoc loco homo describitur, nisi ille de quo scriptum est: Qui cum in forma Dei esset, non rapinam arbitratus est esse se aequalem Deo; sed semetipsum exinanivit, formam servi accipiens, in similitudinem hominum factus, et habitu inventus ut homo (Philip. II, 6)? Haec itaque animalia ut surgere ad sanctitatis virtutem valeant, ad hujus hominis similitudinem tendunt. Sancta enim non essent, si hujus hominis similitudinem non haberent, quia quidquid in eis de visceribus pietatis, quidquid de mansuetudine spiritus, quidquid de zelo rectitudinis, quidquid de custodia humilitatis, quidquid de fervore charitatis est, hoc ab ipso fonte misericordiae, ab ipsa radice mansuetudinis, ab ipsa virtute justitiae, id est a Mediatore Dei et hominum Deo Domino traxerunt. Hujus se hominis similitudinem habere egregius praedicator ostendit, dicens: Imitatores mei estote, sicut et ego Christi (I Cor. IV, 16). Ad ejus nos similitudinem surgere admonet, cum dicit: Primus homo de terra terrenus, secundus homo de coelo coelestis. Sicut portavimus imaginem terreni, portemus et imaginem ejus qui de coelo descendit (I Cor. XV, 47). Sanctus etenim quisque in tantum ad similitudinem hujus hominis ducitur, in quantum vitam sui Redemptoris imitatur. Nam ab ejus mandatis atque operibus discordare, quid est aliud quam a similitudine longe recedere? Plangunt autem vitam delinquentium praedicatores sancti: sed de ipso nostro capite scriptum est, quia flevit super Jerusalem (Luc. XIX, 41). Gaudent de bonis actibus subditorum, et recte operantes diligunt; sed de Redemptore nostro scriptum est quia cum adolescens quidam diceret: Haec omnia custodivi a juventute mea (Matth. XIX, 20), magis dilexit eum. Portant illatas contumelias praedicatores sancti, et nullam ad invicem contumeliam reddunt; sed cum Redemptori nostro diceretur: Daemonium habes (Joan. VIII, 48), non injuriam reddidit, sed mansuete respondit, dicens: Ego daemonium non habeo (Ibid., 49). Fervent zelo rectitudinis praedicatores sancti; sed Redemptor omnium, flagello de resticulis facto, vendentes et ementes ejecit de templo, cathedras vendentium columbas evertit, et nummulariorum effudit aes. (Matth. XXI, 12; Joan. II, 15). In omni quod fortiter agunt, humilitatem tota intentione custodiunt; sed per Redemptorem nostrum dicitur: Discite a me, quia mitis sum, et humilis corde (Matth. XI, 29). Persecutores quoque suos diligunt praedicatores sancti; sed ipse, auctor omnium ac redemptor in passione positus, pro persecutoribus intercedit, dicens: Pater, ignosce illis, quia nesciunt quid faciunt (Luc. XXIII, 34). Membra sua ponunt in passione pro fratribus; sed pro electorum vita usque ad mortem se tradidit auctor vitae. Dicatur ergo de sanctis animalibus quod similitudo hominis in eis est, quia quod sancta, quod mira sunt, hoc in eis de specie similitudinis est, id est de virtute imitationis. Caput quippe omnium nostrum Redemptor noster est. Et per Salomonem dicitur: Oculi sapientis in capite ejus, stultus autem in tenebris ambulat (Eccle. II, 14). Tunc enim in capite oculos habemus, cum vitam Redemptoris nostri tacita cogitatione conspicimus, cum omnis nostra intentio in ejus imitationem se erigit, ne si vias lucis aspicere oculus mentis neglexerit, statim clausus in tenebris erroris cadat. Ad hujus similitudinem hominis surgere festinabat Propheta, cum diceret: In mandatis tuis exercebor, et considerabo vias tuas (Psal. CXVIII, 15). Qui enim vias Domini tacitus in mente considerat, et se exercere in mandatis illius festinat, quid aliud in semetipso nisi imaginem novi hominis reformat? Quod quia in sanctorum cordibus incessanter agitur, recte nunc de animalibus dicitur: Similitudo hominis in eis.

20. Post hanc vero similitudinem quae nunc in moribus tenetur, quandoque ad similitudinem gloriae pervenitur. Hinc etenim Joannes dicit: Nunc filii Dei sumus, et nondum apparuit quid erimus. Scimus autem quoniam cum apparuerit, similes ei erimus (I Joan. III, 2). Qui mox unde hoc fieri valeat adjungit dicens: Quoniam videbimus eum sicuti est (Ibid.). Esse enim Dei est aeternum hunc atque incommutabilem permanere. Nam omne quod mutatur desinit esse quod fuit, et incipit esse quod non fuit; Dei vero esse, est dissimiliter nunquam esse. Unde ad Moysen dicitur: Ego sum qui sum. Et dices filiis Israel: Qui est, misit me ad vos (Exod. III, 14). Jacobus quoque ait: Apud quem non est transmutatio, nec vicissitudinis obumbratio (Jac. I, 17). Itaque per Joannem dicitur: Similes ei erimus, quoniam videbimus eum sicuti est, quia per hoc quod aspicimus ejus essentiam naturae, a mutabilitate nostra liberati, figimur in aeternitate. Immutabimur quippe in ipso quem videbimus, quia morte carebimus videndo vitam, Mutabilitatem nostram transcendemus videndo immutabilem. Corruptione nulla tenebimur videndo incorruptum.

21. Erit autem tunc similitudo hominis etiam in corporibus nostris. Hinc etenim per Paulum dicitur: Nostra conversatio in coelis est; unde etiam Salvatorem exspectamus Dominum Jesum Christum, qui reformabit corpus humilitatis nostrae, configuratum corpori claritatis suae (Philip. III, 20). Erunt ergo tunc electorum corpora claritati dominici corporis configurata, quae etsi aequalitatem gloriae ejus non habent per naturam, similitudinem tamen configurationis ejus habebunt per gratiam. Quia itaque similitudo vitae ejus nunc in moribus trahitur electorum, et in resurrectione sequitur similitudo aeternitatis in mente, quoniam videbimus eum sicuti est; et quia similitudinem quoque illius etiam corpora nostra percipient in configuratione, dicatur recte de sanctis animalibus: Similitudo hominis in eis. Haec nos in expositionis exordio praelibasse sufficiat, ut loquendi virtus silentio refota, ad indaganda mysteria quae sequuntur robustior exsurgat. Certi etenim sumus quia ipsum, de quo loquimur habemus adjutorem, qui vivit et regnat cum Patre in unitate Spiritus sancti Deus, per omnia saecula saeculorum. Amen.

HOMILIA III

1. Sancta quatuor animalia quae per prophetiae spiritum futura praevidentur subtili narratione describuntur cum dicitur: EZECH. I, 6. — Quatuor facies uni, et quatuor pennae uni. Quid per faciem nisi notitia, et quid per pennas nisi volatus exprimitur? Per faciem quippe unusquisque cognoscitur, per pennas vero in altum avium corpora sublevantur. Facies itaque ad fidem pertinet, penna ad contemplationem. Per fidem namque ab omnipotenti Deo cognoscimur, sicut ipse de suis ovibus dicit: Ego sum pastor bonus, et cognosco oves meas, et cognoscunt me meae (Joan. X, 14). Qui rursus: Ego scio quos elegerim (Joan. XIII, 18). Per contemplationem vero quia super nosmetipsos tollimur, quasi in aera levamur. Quatuor ergo facies uni sunt, quia si requiras quid Matthaeus de incarnatione Domini sentiat, hoc nimirum sentit quod Marcus, Lucas et Joannes. Si quaeras quid Joannes sentiat, hoc procul dubio quod Lucas, Marcus et Matthaeus. Si quaeras quid Marcus, hoc quod Matthaeus, Joannes et Lucas. Si quaeras quid Lucas, hoc quod Joannes, Matthaeus et Marcus sentit. Quatuor ergo facies uni sunt, quia notitia fidei, qua cognoscuntur a Deo, ipsa est in uno, quae est simul in quatuor. Quidquid enim in uno inveneris, hoc in omnibus simul quatuor recte cognoscis.

2. Et quatuor pennae uni, quia Dei omnipotentis Filium Dominum nostrum Jesum Christum simul omnes concorditer praedicant, et ad divinitatem ejus mentis oculos levantes, penna contemplationis volant. Evangelistarum ergo facies ad humanitatem Domini pertinent, penna ad divinitatem, quia in eo quem corporeum aspiciunt, quasi facies intendunt. Sed dum hunc esse incircumscriptum atque incorporeum ex divinitate annuntiant, per contemplationis pennam quasi in aera levantur. Quia itaque et una fides incarnationis ejus in omnibus, et par contemplatio divinitatis ejus in singulis, recte nunc dicitur: Quatuor facies uni, et quatuor pennae uni. Sed quae virtus esset, si fidem atque contemplationem Domini habentes praedicatores illius sancta opera non haberent? Sequitur: VERS. 7. — Et pedes eorum pedes recti.

3. Quid per pedes nisi gressus actuum designantur? Quatuor ergo animalium pedes recti esse describuntur, quia sanctorum evangelistarum atque omnium perfectorum opera ad sequendam iniquitatem non sunt retorta. Hi autem pedes rectos non habent, qui ad mala mundi quae reliquerunt reflectuntur. De quibus scriptum est: Canis reversus ad suum vomitum, et sus lota in volutabro luti (Prov. XXVI, 11; II Pet. II, 22). Dolebat de quibusdam doctor egregius, quod pedum rectitudinem retro retorserant, quibus per increpationem dicebat: Quomodo convertimini iterum ad infirma et egena elementa, quibus denuo servire vultis? Dies observatis, et menses, et tempora, et annos. Timeo vos, ne forte sine causa laboraverim in vobis (Galat. IV, 9). Qui alios admonet, dicens: Propter quod remissas manus, et soluta genua erigite, et gressus rectos facite pedibus vestris (Hebr. XII, 12). Ut vero in eisdem sanctis praedicatoribus vitae gravitas, fortitudo, atque discretio monstraretur, recte subjungitur: IBID. — Planta pedis eorum quasi planta pedis vituli.

4. Quia enim praedicatores sancti boum nomine designantur docet Paulus apostolus, legis testimonium exponens: Non obturabis os bovi trituranti (I Cor. IX, 9; Deut. XXV, 4). In sanctis ergo praedicatoribus planta pedis est vituli, scilicet mature incedens, et fortis, et divisa, quia unusquisque praedicator et venerationem habet in maturitate, et fortitudinem in opere, et divisionem ungulae in discretione. Non enim facile praedicatio ejus accipitur, si levis in moribus esse videatur. Et nulla erit maturitatis ostensio, si contra adversa omnia non adfuerit operis fortitudo. Virtutis autem meritum ipsa fortitudo operis admittit, si discreta in intellectu non fuerit. Ecce enim sacram Scripturam legimus: si omnia ad litteram sentiamus, virtutem discretionis amisimus; si omnia ad spiritalem allegoriam ducimus, similiter indiscretionis stultitia ligamur. Legunt enim sacra eloquia praedicatores sancti, et aliquando in historia litteram suscipiunt, aliquando vero per significationem litterae spiritum requirunt. Et modo bona facta patrum praecedentium, sicut juxta litteram inveniunt, imitantur; modo quaedam, quae juxta historiam imitanda non sunt, spiritaliter intelligunt, et ad provectum tendunt. Quid ergo aliud praedicatores sancti in suo opere nisi in pede ungulam findunt? De quibus adhuc apte subditur: IBID. — Et scintillae quasi aspectus aeris candentis.

5. Aeris metallum valde sonorum est. Et recte voces praedicantium aeri comparantur, quia in omnem terram exivit sonus eorum, et in fines orbis terrae verba eorum (Psal. XVIII, 5). Bene autem aes candens dicitur, quia vita praedicantium sonat et ardet. Ardet enim desiderio, sonat verbo. Aes ergo candens est praedicatio accensa. Sed de candente aere scintillae prodeunt, quia de eorum exhortationibus verba flammantia ad aures audientium procedunt. Recte autem praedicatorum verba scintillae appellata sunt, quia eos quos in corde tetigerint incendunt. Considerandum quoque est quod scintillae subtiles sunt valde et tenues, quia cum praedicatores sancti de coelesti patria loquuntur, non tantum valent aperire verbo quantum possunt ardere desiderio. Ex eorum ergo lingua quasi quaedam ad nos scintillae veniunt, quia de coelesti patria in eorum voce vix tenue aliquid cognoscitur, quod tamen ab eis non tenuiter amatur. Neque enim coelestem gloriam aut tantum videre sufficiunt quantum est, aut tantum loqui praevalent quantum vident. Candens ergo aes scintillas projicit quando vix tenuiter praedicator loqui sufficit hoc unde ipse fortiter ignescit. Divina autem pietate agitur ut ex ipsis scintillis tenuissimis audientis animus inflammetur, quia sunt quidam qui dum parva audiunt majore desiderio replentur; et inde perfecte in Dei amore ardent, unde vix tenuissimas verborum scintillas acceperunt.

6. Verbum quippe praedicationis semen in corde audientis est. Et auditor bonus inde profert postmodum magnam messem scientiae, unde parvum prius acceperat semen linguae. Cui rei bene concinit factum in vidua ab Elisaeo propheta miraculum, quae, ne duos filios auferente creditore amitteret, prophetae dictis obedivit, et ex eo quod parum olei habebat, per vasa vacua effudit, quae cuncta post usque ad summum repleta sunt, et ex eorum repletione mulier a creditoris sui debito est soluta (IV Reg. IV, 2, seq.). Quae videlicet mulier quam aliam nisi sanctam Ecclesiam signat, duorum populorum, id est Judaici et gentilis, quasi duorum filiorum matrem? Quae prius ex perverso opere per callidi spiritus persuasionem quasi quemdam peccati nummum a creditore acceperat, et duos quos in fide genuit amittere filios timebat. Sed prophetae verbis, id est Scripturae sacrae praeceptis, obediens, ex parvo quod habebat olei vasa vacua infudit, quia dum ab unius ore doctoris parum quid de amore Divinitatis multorum vacuae mentes audiunt, exuberante gratia, unguento divini amoris usque ad summum replentur. Et multorum jam nunc corda, quae prius fuerant vacua vascula, unguento spiritus plena sunt, quae ex paucitate olei solummodo infusa videbantur. Quod dum aliis atque aliis datur, et ab auditoribus fides accipitur, Sareptana mulier, videlicet sancta Ecclesia, sub creditoris sui jam debito non tenetur. Sequitur: VERS. 8. — Et manus hominis sub pennis eorum in quatuor partes.

7. Possunt hoc in loco quatuor partes quatuor mundi regiones accipi, scilicet Oriens, Occidens, Meridies, et Septentrio, quia sanctorum praedicatio auctore Deo in cunctis mundi partibus est egressa.

8. Possumus etiam per quatuor partes principales quatuor virtutes accipere, ex quibus reliquae virtutes oriuntur, videlicet prudentiam, fortitudinem, justitiam atque temperantiam. Quas nimirum virtutes tunc veraciter accipimus, cum earum ordinem custodimus. Prima quippe prudentia, secunda fortitudo, tertia justitia, quarta temperantia est. Quid enim prodesse potest prudentia, si fortitudo desit? Scire etenim cuiquam quod non potest facere poena magis quam virtus est. Sed qui prudenter intelligit quod agat, et fortiter agit quod intellexerit, jam procul dubio justus est; sed ejus justitiam temperantia sequi debet, quia plerumque justitia, si modum non habet, in crudelitatem cadit. Ipsa ergo justitia vere justitia est, quae se temperantiae freno moderatur, ut in zelo quo quisque fervet, sit etiam temperans; ne si plus ferveat, perdat justitiam, cujus servare moderamina ignorat.

9. Duae autem sunt sanctorum praedicatorum vitae, activa scilicet, et contemplativa; sed activa prior est tempore quam contemplativa, quia ex bono opere tenditur ad contemplationem. Contemplativa autem major est merito quam activa, quia haec in usu praesentis operis laborat, illa vero sapore intimo venturam jam requiem degustat. Quid itaque per manus nisi activa, et quid per pennas nisi contemplativa vita signatur? Manus ergo hominis sub pennis eorum est, id est virtus operis sub volatu contemplationis. Quod bene in Evangelio duae illae mulieres designant, Martha scilicet et Maria. Martha etenim satagebat circa frequens ministerium; Maria autem sedebat ad pedes Domini, et verba ejus audiebat (Luc. X, 39, 40). Erat ergo una intenta operi, altera contemplationi. Una activae serviebat per exterius ministerium, altera contemplativae per suspensionem cordis in verbum. Et quamvis activa bona sit, melior tamen est contemplativa, quia illa cum mortali vita deficit, ista vero in immortali vita plenius excrescit. Unde dicitur: Maria optimam partem elegit, quae non auferetur ab ea (Ibid., 42). Quia igitur activa minor est merito, quam contemplativa, recte nunc dicitur: Manus hominis sub pennis eorum. Nam etsi per activam boni aliquid agimus, ad coeleste tamen desiderium per contemplativam volamus. Unde et apud S. Moysen activa servitus, contemplativa autem libertas vocatur.

10. Et cum utraque vita ex dono sit gratiae, quandiu tamen inter proximos vivimus, una nobis in necessitate est, altera in voluntate. Quis enim cognoscens Deum ad ejus regnum ingreditur, nisi prius bene operetur? Sine contemplativa ergo vita intrare possunt ad coelestem patriam, qui bona quae possunt operari, non negligunt; sine activa autem intrare non possunt, si negligunt bona operari quae possunt. Illa ergo in necessitate, haec in voluntate est. Illa in servitute, ista in libertate. Hinc est enim quod ad Moysen dicitur: Si emeris servum Hebraeum, sex annis serviet tibi, in septimo egredietur liber gratis. Cum quali veste intraverit, cum toli exeat. Si habens uxorem, et uxor egrediatur simul. Sin autem dederit illi dominus uxorem, et pepererit filios et filias, mulier et liberi ejus erunt domini sui, ipse vero exibit cum vestitu suo. Quod si dixerit servus, Diligo dominum meum, et uxorem ac liberos, non egrediar liber, offerat eum dominus diis, et applicabitur ad ostium et postes, perforabitque aurem ejus subula, et erit ei servus in saeculum (Exod. XXI, 2, seq.). Paulo latius testimonium dedimus, ut distinctionem servitutis atque libertatis in utraque vita monstraremus. Sed onerosum esse non debet si hoc exponendo exsequimur, unde haec ipsa quae diximus affirmemus.

11. Hebraeus enim transiens interpretatur. Et servus Hebraeus emitur quando unusquisque qui jam ab hoc saeculo mente transit servitio omnipotentis Domini subditur. Ille etenim vero Deo servire appetit, qui ab hoc saeculo mente transire didicerit. Sic S. Moyses transivit, ut videret visum (Exod. III, 3). Sic S. David cum videret impium exaltatum et elevatum super cedros Libani, transivit, et ecce non erat (Psal. LXVI, 35). Quia iniquorum potentias esse magnum aliquid fortasse credimus, nisi ad permanens saeculum mente transeamus. Servus vero Hebraeus emptus sex annis servire praecipitur, ita ut in septimo liber exeat gratis. Quid enim per senarium numerum nisi activae vitae perfectio designatur? quid per septenarium nisi contemplativa exprimitur? Sex ergo annis servit, et septimo egreditur liber, qui per activam vitam quam perfecte exhibuerit ad contemplativae vitae libertatem transit. Et notandum quod gratis liber egreditur, quia ii qui postquam omnia fecerint dicunt se inutiles servos (Luc. XVII, 10), eis procul dubio sicut ipsa activa fuit ex munere, ita erit ex gratia etiam contemplativa. Cum quali veste intraverit, cum tali exeat, quia omnino necesse est ut unusquisque nostrum in hoc quod incipit perseveret, atque usque ad finem operis in ea qua inchoavit intentione perduret. Ille quippe bene ad contemplativam transit, qui in activa vita intentionis suae vestem ad deteriora non mutaverit. Et sunt nonnulli qui priusquam omnipotentis Dei servitio in sancta conversatione socientur, jam bona operari diligunt. Sunt vero alii qui bona opera, postquam ad servitium omnipotentis Dei venerint, discunt. Qui ergo operationem bonam et priusquam ad Dei servitium venerit habere studuit, Hebraeus servus cum uxore emptus est.

12. Et plerumque is qui talis est potest ad contemplativam vitam transire, et tamen activam non deserere. Unde et illic subditur: Si habens uxorem, et uxor egrediatur simul. Cum eo enim ad libertatem et uxor egreditur, quando is qui ad contemplationem pervenit etiam foris actionem boni operis qua prodesse possit aliis non relinquit. Sin autem Dominus dederit illi uxorem, et pepererit filios et filias, mulier et liberi ejus erunt Domini sui, ipse vero exibit cum vestitu suo. Servo empto dominus dat uxorem, cum praedicator quisque eum quem juri omnipotentis Dei mancipaverit, bonae actioni conjungit. Nam et praedicatores domini vocantur, sicut Elisaeo prophetae de praedicatore suo dicitur: Scis quod dominus tuus tollatur a te (IV Reg. II, 3)? Uxor vero servi emptitii filios et filias parit, quando bona actio fortes vel teneros fructus generat. Sed mulier quae a domino data est eidem domino cum filiis remanet, ipse vero servus exit cum vestitu suo, quia bona actio, vel ejusdem bonae actionis fructus, praedicatoris mercedi reputantur. Ipse vero in desiderii sui intentione perdurans, per supernam gratiam ad contemplationem liber egreditur: Quod si dixerit servus, Diligo dominum meum, et uxorem ac liberos; non egrediar liber (Exod. XXI, 5). Servus dominum suum diligit, quando praedicatoris verba sollicita mente custodit. Uxorem quoque amans et liberos, liber egredi recusat, quando activam vitam ejusque fructus diligens, transire ad contemplativam non vult, quia bona se opera habere in ministerii sui servitute considerans, ad libertatis quietem recusat secedere. Sed offerat eum dominus diis, et applicetur ad ostium et postes, et perforet aurem ejus subula, ut sit ei servus in saeculum. Is enim qui in activa disposuit vita perdurare, a domino diis offertur, quando a praedicatore suo antiquorum patrum dictis imbuitur, qui nobis in via omnipotentis Domini sacerdotes fuerunt. Atque ad ostium et postes tabernaculi ducitur, ut de ingressu coelestis habitaculi altius aliquid audiat, et tremendi judicii diem subtiliter agnoscat, ne per bona opera quae facit placere hominibus appetat. Sicque auris ejus subula perforatur, dum mens illius timoris Dei subtilitate percutitur, ut, verbi acumine transfixa, per omne quod agit noverit ingressum regni semper attendere, et quasi ab ostio et poste tabernaculi perforatam aurem portare.

13. Qui erit servus in saeculum, ut esse post saeculum liber possit. In saeculum etenim servus est, qui per activam vitam hominibus servire disposuit, ut post praesens saeculum ad libertatem veram valeat pervenire. De qua per Paulum dicitur: Quia et ipsa creatura liberabitur a servitute corruptionis in libertatem gloriae filiorum Dei. Tunc enim in nobis vera libertas erit, cum ad gloriam filiorum Dei adoptio nostra pervenerit. Nunc vero non solum activa vita in servitute est, sed ipsa quoque contemplatio, qua super nos rapimur, libertatem mentis adhuc perfecte non obtinet, sed imitatur, quia illa quies intima in aenigmate videtur. Ipsa tamen in quantalibet sit contemplationis angustia, activa vita jam valde est latior atque sublimior, quae ad quamdam mentis libertatem transit, temporalia non cogitans, sed aeterna. Quia itaque contemplativa vita ad superiora evolat, et activae vitae longe superest quadam, ut ita dicam, dignitate securitatis suae, apte nunc dicitur: Et manus hominis sub pennis eorum.

14. Sin vero hoc in loco homo Redemptor noster accipitur, manus hominis sub pennis eorum est, quia nisi Deus homo fieret, qui mentes praedicantium ad coelestia sublevasset, illa quae apparent animalia non volarent. Nec immerito manus hominis esse sub pennis dicitur, quia de eodem Redemptore nostro scriptum est: Qui cum sit splendor gloriae, et figura substantiae ejus, portansque omnia (Hebr. I, 3). Ejus ergo manus corda nostra portat, ejus manus in contemplatione nos sublevat. Nisi enim, ut dictum est, omnipotens Verbum propter homines homo fieret, humana corda ad contemplandam Verbi excellentiam non volarent. Inde ergo excelsae factae sunt hominum mentes, unde inter homines apparuit humilis Deus. Dicatur itaque de sanctis animalibus, dicatur: Et manus hominis sub pennis eorum. De quibus adhuc subditur: VERS. 8, 9. — Et facies et pennas per quatuor partes habebant, junctaeque erant pennae eorum alterius ad alterum.

15. Per quatuor partes facies et pennas habent, quia in cunctis mundi regionibus praedicantes demonstrant quidquid de humanitate, quidquid de divinitate nostri Redemptoris sentiunt. Quia dum incarnatum Deum ubique praedicant, in quatuor mundi partibus faciem demonstrant. Dumque eum esse unum cum Patre et Spiritu sancto annuntiant, ubique penna contemplationis volant. Quorum pennae junctae sunt alterius ad alterum, quia omnis eorum virtus, omnisque sapientia, qua caeteros homines contemplationis suae volatu transcendunt, vicissim sibi in pace atque unanimitate conjungitur. Unde scriptum est: Quae desursum est sapientia, primum quidem pudica est, deinde pacifica (Jac. III, 17). Unde et eisdem suis praedicatoribus Veritas dicit: Habete in vobis sal, et pacem habete inter vos (Marc. IX, 49). Penna ergo animalium alterius ad alterum jungitur, quia sanctorum praedicatorum virtus atque sapientia vicissim sibi in charitatis atque concordiae pace sociatur. Penna autem alterius ab altero divisa esset, si in hoc quod unusquisque in sapientiam evolat, habere pacem cum altero recusaret. Sequitur: VERS. 9. — Non revertebantur cum incederent, sed unumquodque ante faciem suam gradiebatur.

16. Pennata animalia, videlicet praedicatores sancti, cum incedunt, minime revertuntur, quia sic a terrenis actibus ad spiritalia pertranseunt, ut ad ea quae reliquerunt, ulterius nullatenus reflectantur. Quasi enim per quamdam viam eis incedere est mente ire semper ad meliora. Quo contra de reprobis dicitur quia reversi sunt corde in Aegyptum (Num. XIV, 3, 4). Et per semetipsam Veritas dicit: Nemo mittens manum in aratrum, et aspiciens retro, aptus est regno Dei (Luc. IX, 62). Manum quippe in aratrum mittere est quasi per quemdam compunctionis vomerem ad proferendos fructus terram sui cordis aperire. Sed retro post aratrum aspicit, qui post exordia boni operis ad mala revertitur quae reliquit. Quod quia electis Dei minime contingit, recte nunc per prophetam dicitur: Non revertebantur cum incederent.

17. Qui cur non revertantur indicat cum subjungit: Unumquodque ante faciem suam gradiebatur. Ante nos enim aeterna sunt, post nos temporalia, quia et illa pergentes invenimus, et ista recedentes quasi post dorsum relinquimus. Unde et magnum illud pennatum animal dicebat quod usque ad coeli tertii secreta volaverat: Unum vero, quae retro sunt oblitus, in ea quae sunt ante extendens me, sequor ad palmam supernae vocationis (Philip. III, 13, 14). In anteriora etenim extentus, eorum quae retro sunt oblitus fuerat, quia, temporalia despiciens, sola quae sunt aeterna requirebat. Ante faciem ergo suam gradiuntur sancta animalia, quia et ea quae reliquerunt nullo jam appetitu respiciunt, et in aeternis quae appetunt sub contemplationis suae oculis boni operis pedem ponunt.

18. Quisquis itaque jam ante faciem suam ambulare decreverit, magna ei consideratione pensandum est quod aliter retro respicitur ex opere, atque

aliter ex cogitatione. Sunt etenim quidam qui magna deliberant, et, peccatorum suorum conscii, multa ex his quae possident egenis distribuere pertractant, ut culpas suas ante Dei oculos misericordiae visceribus redimant. Jamque haec operari inchoant, et plerumque cum operantur paupertatis timor eorum animum concutit, atque, timentes ne egeant, erga egentes tenaces fiunt, seseque ab ea quam coeperunt bona operatione suspendunt. Hi nimirum incedentes reversi sunt, quia ante faciem suam ambulare noluerunt. Contra quos recte per Salomonem dicitur: Propter frigus piger arare noluit, mendicabit ergo aestate, et non dabitur ei (Prov. XX, 4). Qui enim nunc propter pavorem mentis atque torporem bene operari negligit, cum sol justitiae in judicio velut in aestate claruerit, mendicat vitam, sed non accipit, quia propter illam bona operari contempsit. Alius, despectis carnis desideriis, cuncta relinquere et omnipotentis Dei se subdere servitio pertractat, seque ipsum restringere sub continentiae et castitatis freno deliberat; sed cum cecidisse alios etiam post castitatem conspicit, hoc ipsum facere quod deliberaverat pertimescit. Fitque ut retro per cogitationem redeat, qui ad anteriora respiciens jam mentis gressibus ad alta ibat. De quo bene per Salomonem dicitur: Qui observat ventum, non seminat; et qui considerat nubes, nunquam metet (Eccle. XI, 4). Venti quippe nomine malignus spiritus, qui mentem tentationibus impellit; nubis vero appellatione peccator exprimitur, qui tentationis impulsione commovetur. Qui ergo attendit ventum, non seminat, et qui considerat nubes, nunquam metit, quia is qui tentationes maligni spiritus metuens, et iniquorum lapsus conspiciens, semetipsum desperat, neque nunc exercetur in bono semine operis, neque post reficietur de munere justae retributionis. Sunt vero nonnulli qui bona quidem quae noverunt operantur, atque haec operantes, meliora deliberant; sed retractantes meliora quae deliberaverant, immutant; et quidem bona agunt quae coeperant, sed a melioribus quae deliberaverant succumbunt. Hi nimirum ante humana judicia stare videntur in opere, sed ante omnipotentis Dei oculos ceciderunt in deliberatione. Unde fit plerumque ut et bonum opus eorum minus Deo placeat, quia cum pes mentis in meliori gradu deliberationis inconstanter ponitur, hoc ipsa cogitationis inconstantia accusat. Sed quia perfecti quique magna se discretionis subtilitate conspiciunt, ne ad deteriora unquam vel in opere, vel in cogitatione delabantur, quantum quotidie proficiant incessanter pensant, recte de his dicitur: Non revertebantur cum incederent, sed unumquodque ante faciem suam gradiebatur.

19. Inter haec igitur considerare libet nos ad ista tractanda qui sumus, et unde venimus, et usque ad quae sacri eloquii mysteria perscrutanda sublevamur. Certe in antiquis parentibus nostris cultores idolorum fuimus, sed ecce per spiritum gratiae verba jam coelestia rimamur. Unde hoc nobis? Sed implevit Redemptor humani generis quod per prophetam dixit: Et deserta in ubertatem versa advenae comedent (Isa. V, 17). Haec quippe prophetarum dicta deserta apud Judaeos fuerunt, quia per intellectum mysticum ea excolere inquirendo noluerunt. Nobis autem in ubertatem versa sunt, quia juxta historiam visionis dicta largiente Deo menti nostrae spiritaliter sapiunt, et jam advenae comedimus quae cives legis manducare noluerunt. Sint gratiae Unigenito, sit laus aeternae Sapientiae, qui vivit et regnat cum Patre in unitate Spiritus sancti Deus, per omnia saecula saeculorum. Amen.

HOMILIA IV

In explicatione versuum decimi, undecimi et duodecimi inchoati, multa praecepta moralia, praesertim de continua in Deum intentione, et ad se attentione proponuntur.

1. Per sanctum prophetiae spiritum pennata animalia subtiliter describuntur, ut per haec Evangelistarum significari personas ipsa nobis subtilitas descriptionis aperiat, nihilque sermo Dei nostro intellectui dubietatis relinquat. Ecce enim dicitur: VERS. 10. — Similitudo autem vultus eorum, facies hominis, et facies leonis a dextris ipsorum quatuor; facies autem bovis a sinistris ipsorum quatuor; et facies aquilae desuper ipsorum quatuor. Quod enim quatuor haec pennata animalia sanctos quatuor Evangelistas designent, ipsa uniuscujusque libri evangelici exordia testantur. Nam quia ab humana generatione coepit, jure per hominem Matthaeus; quia per clamorem in deserto, recte designatur per leonem Marcus; quia a sacrificio exorsus est, bene per vitulum Lucas; quia vero a divinitate Verbi coepit, digne per aquilam significatur Joannes, qui dicens: In principio erat Verbum, et Verbum erat apud Deum, et Deus erat Verbum (Joan. I, 1), dum in ipsam Divinitatis substantiam intendit, quasi more aquilae oculos in solem fixit. Sed quia electi omnes membra sunt Redemptoris nostri, ipse autem Redemptor noster caput est omnium electorum, per hoc quod membra ejus figurata sunt, nihil obstat si etiam in his omnibus et ipse signetur. Ipse enim unigenitus Dei Filius veraciter factus est homo; ipse in sacrificio nostrae redemptionis dignatus est mori ut vitulus: ipse per virtutem suae fortitudinis surrexit ut leo. Leo etiam apertis oculis dormire perhibetur, quia in ipsa morte in qua ex humanitate Redemptor noster dormire potuit, ex divinitate sua immortalis permanendo vigilavit. Ipse etiam post resurrectionem suam ascendens ad coelos, in superioribus est elevatus ut aquila. Totum ergo simul nobis est, qui et nascendo homo, et moriendo vitulus, et resurgendo leo, et ad coelos ascendendo aquila factus est. Sed quia per haec animalia evangelistas quatuor, et sub eorum specie simul perfectos omnes jam superius significari diximus (Hom. 3), restat ut quomodo unusquisque electorum istis animalium visionibus exprimitur ostendamus.

2. Omnis etenim electus atque in via Dei perfectus, et homo, et vitulus, et leo simul et aquila est. Homo enim rationale est animal. Vitulus autem in sacrificio mactari solet. Leo fortis est bestia, sicut scriptum est: Leo vero fortissimus bestiarum, ad nullius pavebit occursum (Prov. XXX, 30). Aquila ad sublimia evolat, et irreverberatis oculis solis radiis intendit. Omnis itaque qui in ratione perfectus est, homo est. Et quoniam semetipsum ab hujus mundi voluptate mortificat, vitulus est. Quia vero ipsa sua spontanea mortificatione contra adversa omnia fortitudinem securitatis habet, unde scriptum est: Justus autem quasi leo confidens absque terrore erit (Prov. XXVIII, 1), leo est. Quia vero sublimiter contemplatur ea quae coelestia atque aeterna sunt, aquila est. Igitur quoniam justus quisque per rationem homo, per sacrificium mortificationis suae vitulus, per fortitudinem securitas leo, per contemplationem vero efficitur aquila, recte per haec sancta animalia signari unusquisque perfectus potest. Quod idcirco dicimus, ut ea quae de quatuor animalibus dicta sunt, pertinere quoque etiam ad perfectorum singulos demonstremus.

3. Sed magna nobis de eisdem evangelistis et sanctis praedicatoribus quaestio oritur, cur homo et leo a dextris ipsorum quatuor, vitulus vero a sinistris ipsorum quatuor esse perhibetur. Neque enim sine admiratione est cur duo illa a dextris et unum hoc esse a sinistris dicitur. Et rursum quaerendum cur aquila non a dextris, vel sinistris, sed desuper ipsorum quatuor esse memoratur. Duas itaque nobis quaestiones objecimus, quas oportet ut aperiente Domino dissolvamus. Homo igitur et leo a dextris, vitulus vero a sinistris esse perhibetur. A dextris etenim laeta, a sinistris vero tristia habemus. Unde et sinistrum nobis esse dicimus hoc quod adversum esse deputamus. Et, sicut praefati sumus, per hominem incarnatio, per vitulum passio, per leonem vero auctoris nostri resurrectio designatur. De incarnatione autem unigeniti Filii, qua redempti sumus, omnes electi laetati sunt; de morte vero illius ipsi electorum primi sancti apostoli contristati, qui iterum de ejus resurrectione gavisi sunt. Quia ergo ejus et nativitas et resurrectio laetitiam discipulis praebuit, quos ejus passio contristavit, homo et leo a dextris, vitulus vero a sinistris ejus fuisse describitur. Ipsi namque evangelistae sancti de ejus humanitate gavisi sunt, de ejus resurrectione confirmati, qui de ejus passione fuerant contristati. Homo ergo et leo eis a dextris est, quia Redemptoris nostri eos incarnatio vivificavit, resurrectio confirmavit. Sed vitulus a sinistris, quia mors illius eos ad momentum temporis in infidelitate prostravit. Jure autem locus aquilae non juxta, sed desuper esse describitur, quia sive per hoc quod ejus ascensionem signat, seu quia Verbum Patris Deum apud Patrem esse denuntiat, super evangelistas caeteros virtute contemplationis excrevit; cum quibus etsi simul de ejus Deitate loquitur, hanc tamen omnibus subtilius contemplatur. Sed si aquila cum tribus aliis adjuncta, quatuor animalia esse memorantur, mirum quomodo desuper ipsorum quatuor esse describitur, nisi quia Joannes per hoc quod in principio Verbum vidit, etiam super semetipsum transiit. Nam nisi et se transisset, Verbum in principio non vidisset (Joan. I, 1). Quia ergo et semetipsum transgressus est, non jam solummodo super tria, sed adjuncto et se, super quatuor fuit. Sequitur: VERS. 11. — Et facies eorum et pennae eorum extentae desuper.

4. Facies et pennae extentae desuper describuntur, quia omnis intentio omnisque contemplatio sanctorum super se tendit, ut illud possit adipisci quod in coelestibus appetit. Sive enim bono operi, sive vero invigilet contemplationi, tunc veraciter hoc quod agit bonum est, quando ei complacere concupiscit a quo est. Nam qui bona agere videtur, et per haec non Deo, sed hominibus placere desiderat, intentionis suae faciem deorsum premit. Et qui idcirco in sacro eloquio ea quae divinitatis sunt contemplatur, ut per hoc quod intelligit occupari ad quaestiones possit, quia non dulcedine quaesitae beatitudinis satiari appetit, sed doctus videri, iste nimirum intellectus sui pennas desuper non extendit; sed quoniam sensus sui vigilantiam in terreno appetitu occupat, pennas quas sublevare in altum et quibus sublevari ipse potuit in imis deponit. Qua in re pensandum est, ut omne bonum quod agitur per intentionem semper ad coelestia levetur. Qui enim per bona quae facit terrenam gloriam concupiscit, pennas suas et faciem suam deorsum deprimit. Hinc etenim per prophetam de quibusdam dicitur: Victimas in profundum deferebant (Osee V, 2). Quid enim sunt aliud lacrymae orationis, nisi victimae oblationis nostrae? sicut scriptum est: Sacrificium Deo spiritus contribulatus (Psal. L, 19). Et sunt nonnulli qui idcirco se in prece lamentis afficiunt, ut aut terrena commoda acquirant, aut hominibus sancti esse videantur. Quid isti, nisi victimas in profundum deferunt? Qui per hoc quod in imo sunt quae requirunt, orationis suae sacrificium deorsum deponunt. Electi autem qui et in bono opere omnipotenti Deo placere appetunt, et per contemplationis gratiam aeternam jam beatitudinem degustare concupiscunt, facies et pennas desuper extendunt. Sequitur: IBID. — Duae pennae singulorum jungebantur, et duae tegebant corpora eorum.

5. Dictum fuerat: Et facies et pennae eorum extentae desuper, atque mox subjunctum est quod protulimus, quia duae pennae singulorum jungebantur. Ubi aperte intelligitur quia et extendebantur desuper et jungebantur, duae vero tegebant corpora eorum. Quid autem pennae animalium, nisi alae nominantur? Qua in re nobis diligenti perscrutatione quaerendum est quae sint quatuor pennae sanctorum, ex quibus duae superius extensae junguntur, duae vero eorum corpora contegunt. Si enim vigilanter aspicimus, quatuor esse virtutes invenimus quae a terrenis actibus omne pennatum animal levant, in futuris videlicet amor et spes, de praeteritis autem timor et poenitentia. Pennae ergo sibimet junctae superius extenduntur, quia sanctorum mentem amor et spes ad superna sublevant. Quae apte quoque conjunctae nominantur, quia electi procul dubio et amant coelestia quae sperant, et sperant quae amant. Duae vero corpora contegunt, quia timor et poenitentia ab omnipotentis Dei oculis eorum mala praeterita abscondunt. Duae itaque, ut dictum est, pennae junguntur sursum, quando amor et spes electorum corda ad superiora elevant, ad coelestia suspendunt. Duae autem pennae tegunt corpora, quando eorum mala praeterita a conspectu aeterni judicis timor et poenitentia abscondunt. In eo enim quod se peccasse meminerunt, quia pertimescunt et deflent, quid aliud quam corpus cooperiunt? Qui facta carnalia per superducta bona opera a districto examine abscondunt. Scriptum quippe est: Beati quorum remissae sunt iniquitates, et quorum tecta sunt peccata (Psal. XXXI, 1). Peccata enim tegimus, cum bona facta malis actibus superponimus. Omne enim quod operitur, inferius ponitur; et hoc unde operitur, desuper ducitur. Quando ergo abdicamus mala quae fecimus, et eligimus bona quae faciamus, quasi tegimen ei rei superducimus, quam erubescimus videri.

6. Quamlibet enim sancti viri in hac adhuc vita sint, habent tamen quod ante Dei oculos operire debeant, quia omnino est impossibile, ut aut in opere, aut in locutione, aut in cogitatione nunquam delinquant. Unde et beatus Job, qui perfecta quidem hominibus dixerat, Dei tamen vocem audiens, seque ipsum de ipsa sua perfecta locutione reprehendens, dicebat: Manum meam ponam super os meum (Job. XXXIX, 34). In manu quippe operatio, in ore locutio est. Manum ergo super os ponere est peccata locutionis per virtutem boni operis tegere. Libet, fratres charissimi, ad hujus rei testimonium magistrum gentium vocare, et qualiter sanctum illud animal alis quatuor innitatur aspicere, ex quibus duabus ad superiora evolat; duabus vero pennis corpus contegit, quia praeterita quae egerat abscondit. Videamus igitur quantus hunc amor ad coelestia elevet: Mihi vivere

Christus est, et mori lucrum (Philip. I, 21). Cognoscamus quanta spe ad superiora tollitur: Nostra conversatio in coelis est, unde etiam Salvatorem exspectamus Jesum Christum Dominum nostrum (Ibid., III, 20). Videamus si et in tantis virtutibus positus adhuc timet: Castigo corpus meum, et servituti subjicio, ne forte, cum aliis praedicaverim, ipse reprobus efficiar (I Cor. IX, 27). Cognoscamus si hunc mala fecisse poenitet: Ego minimus apostolorum sum, qui non sum dignus vocari apostolus, quia persecutus sum Ecclesiam Dei (I Cor. XV, 9). In cujus verbis quid aliud quam duritia nostrae mentis accusatur? Quia ipse plangit quod ante baptisma commiserat, nos vero et post baptisma multa commisimus, et tamen flere recusamus. Quatuor itaque pennis sancta animalia utuntur, quia per amorem et spem ad coelestia evolant, et per timorem et poenitentiam facta in se illicita deplorant.

7. Sed quia dictum est: Duae pennae singulorum jungebantur, hoc fortasse intelligitur, quod non pennas proprias elevantes jungant, sed unius ad alterum pennae conjunctae sint, ut pennae videlicet elevatae vicissim sibi in conjunctione concordent. Qua in re quaestio oritur, quia si duae pennae quae elevant amorem et spem, duae vero quae corpora contegunt timorem et poenitentiam designant, cur duae quae extentae sunt dicuntur esse conjunctae, et duae quae corpus contegunt non dicuntur? Sed hac in re facilis, largiente Domino, ratio occurrit, quod sanctorum duae pennae conjunctae sunt amor et spes, duae vero quae corpora contegunt, sibimetipsis ad alterutrum conjunctae non sunt, timor et poenitentia. David enim pro lapsu carnis timendo et poenitendo affligitur (II Reg. XII, 13). Petrus casum perfidiae flevit amare (Matth. XXVI, 75). Paulus in se crudelitatem praeteritae persecutionis plangit (I Cor. XV, 9). Omnes tamen unam patriam appetunt, ad unum auctorem omnium pervenire festinant. Duae ergo singulorum pennae conjunctae sunt, et duae non sunt, quia per amorem et spem unum est quod desiderant, sed per timorem et poenitentiam diversum est quod deplorant. Sequitur: VERS. 12. — Et unumquodque eorum coram facie sua ambulabat.

8. Dictum superius fuerat: Unumquodque eorum ante faciem suam gradiebatur, nunc autem dicitur: Coram facie sua ambulabat. Ipsa itaque repetita videtur esse sententia. Sed quia coram in praesenti dicimus (Id est, significat in praesenti), possumus subtilius inquirendo discernere quod aliud sit ante faciem ambulare, atque aliud in praesenti. Ante faciem quippe ambulare est anteriora appetere; in praesenti vero ambulare est sibimetipsi absentem non esse. Omnis etenim justus qui vitam suam sollicitus aspicit, et diligenter considerat quantum quotidie in bonis crescat, aut fortasse quantum a bonis decrescat, iste quia se ante se ponit, coram se ambulat, quippe qui vigilanter videt utrum surgat, an defluat. Quisquis vero vitae suae custodiam negligit, discutere quae agit, quae loquitur, quae cogitat, aut despicit, aut nescit, coram se iste non ambulat; quia qualis sit in suis moribus, vel in actibus, ignorat. Nec sibimetipsi praesens est qui semetipsum quotidie exquirere atque cognoscere sollicitus non est. Ille autem veraciter se ante se ponit, sibique in praesenti est, qui se in suis actibus tanquam alium attendit.

9. Nam sunt multa peccata quae committimus, sed idcirco nobis gravia non videntur, quia privato nos amore diligentes, clausis nobis oculis, in nostra deceptione blandimur. Unde fit plerumque ut et nostra gravia leviter, et proximorum mala levia graviter judicemus. Scriptum quippe est: Erunt homines seipsos amantes (II Tim. III, 2). Et scimus quia vehementer claudit oculum cordis amor privatus. Ex quo fit ut hoc quod nos agimus, et grave esse non existimamus, plerumque agatur a proximo, et nimis nobis detestabile esse videatur. Sed quare hoc quod nobis vile videbatur in nobis grave videtur in proximo, nisi quia nec nos sicut proximum, nec proximum conspicimus sicut nos? Si enim nos sicut proximum aspiceremus, nostra reprehensibilia districte videremus. Et rursum si proximum aspiceremus ut nos, nunquam nobis ejus actio appareret intolerabilis, qui saepe fortasse talia egimus, et nil nos proximo intolerabile fecisse putabamus. Hoc male divisum mentis nostrae judicium corrigere per legis praeceptum S. Moyses studuit, cum dixit ut justus deberet esse modius, aequusque sextarius (Levit. XIX, 36). Hinc Salomon ait: Pondus et pondus, mensura et mensura, utrumque abominabile est apud Deum (Prov. XX, 10). Scimus quia in negotiatorum duplici pondere aliud majus, aliud minus est. Nam aliud pondus habent ad quod pensant sibi, et aliud pondus ad quod pensant proximo. Ad dandum pondera leviora, ad accipiendum vero graviora praeparant. Omnis itaque homo qui aliter pensat ea quae sunt proximi, et aliter ea quae sua sunt, pondus et pondus habet. Utrumque ergo abominabile est apud Deum, quia si sic proximum ut se diligeret, hunc in bonis sicut se amaret. Et si sic se sicut proximum aspiceret, se in malis sicut proximum judicaret. Debemus ergo nosmetipsos sollicite sicut alios videre, nosque ipsos, ut dictum est, ante nos ponere, ut pennata animalia incessanter imitantes, ne nesciamus quid agimus, coram facie nostra semper ambulemus. Perversi autem, sicut paulo ante jam diximus, coram facie sua non ambulant, quia ea quae agunt nunquam considerant, ad interitum tendunt, in pravis actibus exsultant. De quibus scriptum est: Qui laetantur cum malefecerint, et exsultant in rebus pessimis (Prov. II, 14). Saepe vero justus qui eos conspicit deflet, sed ipsi phreneticorum more planguntur, et rident.

10. Alii indigentibus de rebus propriis multa largiuntur, sed cum occasionis tempus invenerint, indigentes opprimunt, eosque quibus valuerint rapinis devastant. Ponunt ante oculos cogitationis suae bona quae faciunt, et non ponunt pessima quae committunt. Hi videlicet coram facie sua non ambulant, quia si sibimetipsis praesentes essent, cuncta subtiliter quae agunt viderent, qualiter bona opera malis actibus perdant agnoscerent, sicut scriptum est: Et qui mercedes congregavit misit eas in sacculum pertusum (Aggae. I, 6). De pertuso quippe sacculo aliunde exit quod aliunde mittitur), quia indiscretae mentes mercedem quae ex bono opere acquiritur non aspiciunt quomodo ex malo opere perdatur. Alius castitatem corporis servat, seque vigilanter circumspicit, ne quid foris reprehensibiliter admittat, suis contentus est, aliena non diripit, sed tamen in corde odium fortasse contra proximum servat. Et cum scriptum sit: Qui odit fratrem suum, homicida est (I Joan. III, 15), considerat quam sit mundus foris in opere, et non perpendit quam sit crudelis in mente. Quid iste nisi sibimetipsi absens est, qui in cordis sui tenebris ambulat et ignorat? Alius jam aliena non diripit, jam corpus ab immunditia custodit, jam mente pura proximum diligit, et malorum praeteritorum conscius lamentis se in precibus afficit; sed, finita prece, laeta de quibus in hoc mundo gaudeat requirit, et temporalibus gaudiis negligentem animum demittit, nec curat ne in eo lacrymarum mensuram immoderata gaudia transeant; fitque ut bonum nimie ridendo perdat, quod plangendo lucratus est. Hic itaque coram facie sua non ambulat, quia damna quae patitur conspicere recusat. Scriptum quippe est: Cor sapientium ubi tristitia est, et cor stultorum ubi laetitia (Eccle. VII, 5). In cunctis ergo quae agimus diligenter nosmetipsos conspicere interius exteriusque debemus, ut pennata animalia sequentes, nobismetipsis praesentes simus, et coram facie nostra semper ambulemus, habentes adjutorem unicum Patris Jesum Christum Dominum nostrum, qui cum eo vivit et regnat in unitate Spiritus sancti, per omnia saecula saeculorum. Amen.

HOMILIA V

In expositione trium versuum a duodecimo ad decimum quintum docte disseritur de Spiritu sancto ejusque in sanctis impulsu, motu et inhabitatione.

1. O quam mira est profunditas eloquiorum Dei! Libet huic intendere, libet ejus intima, gratia duce, penetrare. Hanc quoties intelligendo discutimus, quid aliud quam silvarum opacitatem ingredimur, ut in ejus refrigerio ab hujus saeculi aestibus abscondamur? Ibi viridissimas sententiarum herbas legendo carpimus, tractando ruminamus. In ea locutione quae ad vos, fratres charissimi, nudiustertius facta est qualiter ostensa animalia vel Redemptorem nostrum, vel quatuor ejus evangelistas atque perfectos omnes significent, dictum est. Quorum videlicet animalium adhuc subtilius virtus exprimitur, ut ad eorum imitationem nos quoque infirmi et despicabiles, in quantum, Domino largiente, possumus, extendamur. Ecce enim dicitur: VERS. 12. Ubi erat impetus spiritus, illuc gradiebantur.

2. In electis et reprobis diversi sunt impetus. In electis videlicet impetus spiritus in reprobis impetus carnis. Impetus quippe carnis ad odium, ad elationem, ad immunditiam, ad rapinam, ad exteriorem gloriam, ad crudelitatem, ad perfidiam, ad desperationem, ad iram, ad jurgia, ad voluptates animum impellit. Impetus vero spiritus ad charitatem, ad humilitatem, ad continentiam, ad largitatem misericordiae, ad interiorem provectum, ad pietatis opera, ad aeternorum fidem, ad spem sequentisgaudii, ad patientiam, ad pacem, ad considerationem vitae mortalis, ad lacrymas mentem pertrahit. Unde necesse est ut magna semper cura considerare debeamus in omne quod agimus quis nos impetus ducat; utrum nostra cogitatio per impetum carnis, an per impetum spiritus impellatur. Amare enim terrena, temporalia aeternis praeponere, exteriora bona non ad usum necessarium habere, sed ad voluptatem concupiscere, ultionem de inimico quaerere, de aemuli casu gaudere, impetus carnis est. At contra, amare coelestia, contemnere terrena, non ad fructum voluptatis transitoria, sed ad usum necessitatis quaerere, de inimici morte tribulari, impetus spiritus est. Et quia perfecti quique in istis se semper virtutibus exercent, recte nunc de sanctis animalibus dicitur: Ubi erat impetus spiritus, illuc gradiebantur.

3. Sed sciendum nobis est quod plerumque impetus carnis se sub velamine spiritalis impetus palliat, et quod carnaliter facit mentitur sibi ipsa cogitatio quia hoc spiritaliter faciat. Nam saepe quis, iracundiae stimulis victus, contra delinquentes zelo ulciscendae justitiae plus quam necesse est inflammatur, et justitiae limitem in ultione transiens agit crudeliter, quod se agere juste suspicatur. Impetus igitur carnis huic sub specie spiritus velatus est, quando hoc quod juste agi creditur sub discretionis moderamine non tenetur. Et saepe alius, nimiae mansuetudini studens, subjectorum vitia aspicit, atque haec per fervorem zeli corrigere recusat, quae in eis crudeliter non corrigendo multiplicat; fitque ut ejus lenitas et sibi sit et subjectis inimica, qui torporem mentis suae quia patientiam deputat, per carnis spiritum ab impetu spiritus elongat. Prima ergo nos cogitatio in inquisitionem nostri cordis debet excutere, ne ad quaedam quae agimus per apertum carnis impetum ducamur, ne pravis delectationibus animus seductus mala esse cognoscat, et tamen faciat. Secunda vero nos cura debet vigilantes reddere, ne se impetus carnis quasi sub impetu spiritus latenter subjiciat, et culpas quas agimus nobis virtutes fingat.

4. Sciendum vero est quia graviores culpae sunt quae superducta specie virtutes imitantur, quia illae in aperto cognitae animum in confusionem dejiciunt, atque ad poenitentiam trahunt; istae vero non solum in poenitentiam non humiliant, sed etiam mentem operantis elevant, dum virtutes potantur. Hoc autem quod de sanctis animalibus dictum superius fuerat, ut altius confirmetur, iterum replicatur: IBID. — Non revertebantur cum ambularent.

5. Quia electi quique sic ad bona tendunt, ut ad mala perpetranda non redeant: Qui enim perseveraverit usque in finem, hic salvus erit (Matth. X, 22). Et sicut per Salomonem dicitur: Justorum semita quasi lux splendens procedit et crescit usque ad perfectum diem (Prov. IV, 18). In eorum namque animis bonum desiderium atque intellectus lucis intimae jam pars diei est, sed quia usque ad finem vitae in virtute proficiunt, ad perfectum diem tunc veniunt, quando, ad regna coelestia perducti, in ea luce quam desiderant jam minus aliquid non habebunt. Sequitur: VERS. 13. — Et similitudo animalium, et aspectus eorum quasi carbonum ignis ardentium, et quasi aspectus lampadarum.

6. Aspectus animalium carbonibus ignis ardentibus atque lampadibus comparatur. Quisquis enim carbonem tangit, incenditur, quia qui sancto viro adhaeret, ex ejus assiduitate visionis, usu locutionis, exemplo operis accipit ut accendatur in amorem veritatis, peccatorum suorum tenebras fugiat, in desiderio lucis exardescat, et jam per verum amoremardeat, qui prius in iniquitate tantum mortuus, quantum frigidus jacebat. Lampades vero lucem suam longius spargunt, et cum in alio loco sint, in alio resplendent. Qui enim spiritu prophetiae, verbo doctrinae, miraculorum pollet gratia, hujus opinio longe lateque ut lampas lucet; et quique bona ejus audiunt, quia per haec ad amorem coelestium surgunt, in eo quod se per bona opera exhibent, quasi ex lampadis lumine resplendent. Quia ergo sancti viri quosdam juxta se positos quasi tangendo ad amorem patriae coelestis accendunt, carbones sunt. Quia vero quibusdam longe positis lucent, eorum itineri, ne in peccati tenebras corruant, lampades fiunt. Hoc vero inter carbones et lampades distat, quod carbones ardent quidem, sed ejus loci in quo jacuerint tenebras non expellunt; lampades autem, quia magno flammarum lumine resplendent, diffusas circumquaque tenebras effugant.

7. Qua ex re notandum est quia sunt plerique sanctorum ita simplices et occulti, seseque in locis minoribus sub magno silentio contegentes, ut vix eorum vita ab aliis possit agnosci. Quid itaque isti nisi carbones sunt? Qui etsi per fervorem spiritus ardorem habent, tamen exempli flammam non habent. Nec in alienis cordibus tenebras peccatorum vincunt, quia vitam suam omnino sciri refugiunt. Sibimetipsis quidem accensi sunt, sed aliis in exemplo luminis non sunt. Hi autem qui et exempla virtutum praerogant, et lumen boni operis per vitam et verbum itinerantibus demonstrant, jure lampades appellantur, quia et per ardorem desiderii, et per flammam verbi, a peccatorum cordibus erroris tenebras expellunt. Qui igitur in occulto bene vivit, sed alieno provectui minime proficit, carbo est. Qui vero, in imitatione sanctitatis positus, lumen ex se rectitudinis multis demonstrat, lampas est, quia et sibi ardet, et aliis lucet. Sequitur: IBID. — Et haec erat visio discurrens in medio animalium, splendor ignis, et de igne fulgur egrediens.

8. In medio animalium discurrens ignis videtur, quia nisi ab igne veritatis pennata illa animalia calorem susciperent, ipsa in carbonum atque lampadarum similitudinem non arderent. Ignis enim nomine sanctus Spiritus significari solet. De quo in Evangelio Dominus dicit: Ignem veni mittere in terram, et quid volo nisi ut accendatur (Luc. XII, 49)? Cum enim carnalis mens Spiritum sanctum accipit, spiritali amore succensa malum plangit quod fecit. Et terra ardet, quando accusante se conscientia cor peccatoris uritur, atque in dolore poenitentiae crematur. Hinc rursum scriptum est: Deus tuus ignis consumens est. (Deut. IV, 24). Quia enim mentem quam repleverit, eam a peccatorum rubigine mundam reddit, creator noster et ignis dicitur, et consumens. Sanctus ergo Spiritus in medio animalium splendor ignis, et de igne fulgur egrediens discurrere dicitur, quia universam Ecclesiam replens, in electorum cordibus ex seipso flammas amoris projicit, ut corusci more per terrorem feriat, et ad amorem suum corda torpentia accendat.

9. Sed quia Spiritus sanctus Deus ante saecula Patri est et Filio coaeternus, quaerendum nobis est cur discurrere dicatur. Omnis etenim qui discurrit accedit ad locum in quo non fuit, et eum deserit in quo fuit. Qua igitur ratione discurrere spiritum dicamus, dum cuncta intra ipsum sint, et locus nusquam sit ubi non sit? Sicut scriptum est: Spiritus Domini replevit orbem terrarum (Sap. I, 7). Et tamen, cum laus sapientiae describeretur, adjunctum est: Est enim in illa spiritus intellectus, spiritus unicus, multiplex, subtilis, mobilis (Ibid. VII, 22). Et paulo post: Humanus stabilis (Ibid., 23).

10. In quibus rursum verbis magna nobis quaestio oritur, cur iste spiritus qui implet omnia simul mobilis et stabilis dicatur. Sed si ad usum consuetudinis humanae recurrimus, sensum citius loquentis invenimus. Homo quippe, qui in ea regione in qua est ubique discurrit, procul dubio ubique obviam venit, et repente ubi non creditur, invenitur. Omnipotens ergo Spiritus, ut ubique praesentia signaretur, simul et mobilis et stabilis dicitur. Stabilis, quia per naturam omnia continet, mobilis autem dicitur quia ubique etiam nescientibus occurrit. Tenens ergo omnia stabilis, praesentem se omnibus exhibens mobilis appellatur. Splendor ergo ignis, et de igne fulgur egrediens inter pennata animalia discurrit, quia Spiritus sanctus simul singulis atque omnibus praesto fit, et incendit quos contigerit, et illuminat quos incendit, ut post frigus pristinum accensi ardeant, et per ignem amoris quem acceperint flammas exemplorum reddant. Fulgur quippe de hoc igne egrediens torpentes mentes percutit, easque percutiendo excitat et inflammat, ut post amorem illus ardentes pariter et lucentes currant. Unde alias scriptum est: Thronus ejus flamma ignis, rotae ejus ignis accensus (Dan. VII, 9). Hi enim qui animarum custodes sunt, et pascendi gregis onera susceperunt, mutare loca minime permittuntur. Sed quia uno in loco positi, divinitatis in se praesentiam portant et ardent, thronus Dei flamma ignis dicitur. Hi autem qui amore Domini in praedicatione discurrunt, rotae ejus ignis ardens sunt, quia cum ex ejus desiderio per varia loca discurrunt, unde ipsi ardent et alios accendunt.

11. Potest tamen discursus atque mobilitas Spiritus requisitione alterius considerationis intelligi. In Sanctorum quippe cordibus juxta quasdam virtutes semper permanet, juxta quasdam vero recessurus venit, et venturus recedit. In fide etenim, spe, atque charitate, et in bonis aliis, sine quibus ad coelestem patriam non potest perveniri, sicut est humilitas, castitas, justitia, atque misericordia, perfectorum corda non deserit. In prophetiae vero virtute, doctrinae facundia, miraculorum exhibitione, electis suis aliquando adest, aliquando se subtrahit. Adest ut eleventur, et semetipsum subtrahit ut humilientur. Adest ut eos ostensa virtute glorificet, recedit ut semetipsos subtracta ejus virtute cognoscant. Adest ut ostendat quid per ipsum sint, recedit ut patefaciat qui vel quales, remaneant sine ipso. In his itaque virtutibus sine quibus ad vitam minime pervenitur, sanctus Spiritus in electorum suorum cordibus permanet; unde recte stabilis esse perhibetur. In his vero per quas sanctitatis virtus ostenditur, aliquando misericorditer praesto est, et aliquando misericorditer recedit, unde recte mobilis nuncupatur. Discurrens ergo et mobilis Spiritus dicitur, quia in signis atque virtutibus juxta uniuscujusque votum continue non habetur. Bene autem inter sancta animalia discurrere perhibetur. Discursus quippe ad celeritatem pertinet. Inter perfectos autem discurrit spiritus, quia etsi ab eorum corde ad momentum recesserit, citius redit. Sequitur: VERS. 14. — Et animalia ibant, et revertebantur in similitudinem fulguris coruscantis.

12. Cum superius dictum sit: Non revertebantur cum ambularent, qua ratione nunc dicitur: Animalia ibant et revertebantur? Valde sibi haec videntur esse contraria, quia ibant et non revertebantur, et ibant et revertebantur. Sed qualiter intelligendum sit citius agnoscimus si duas vitas, activam scilicet et contemplativam, sollicite discernamus. In una enim fixi permanere possumus, in altera autem intentam mentem tenere nullo modo valemus. Cum enim torporem nostrum relinquimus, nosque ipsos ad bonae operationis studium excitamus, quo alibi nisi ad activam imus? A qua reverti post nos nullo modo debemus, quia qui post illam ad torporem negligentiae, ad pravitatis nequitias quas reliquerat redit, esse sine dubio coeleste animal nescit. Cum vero ab activa vita ad contemplativam surgimus, quia diu mens stare in contemplatione non valet, sed omne quod de aeternitate per speculum et in aenigmate conspicit, quasi furtim hoc et per transitum videt, ipsa sua infirmitate ab immensitate tantae celsitudinis animus repulsus in semetipso relabitur. Et necesse est ut ad activam redeat, seque ipsum continue in usu bonae operationis exerceat, ut cum mens surgere ad contemplanda coelestia non valet, quaeque potest bona agere non recuset. Sicque fit ut ipsis suis bonis actibus adjuta ad superiora rursus in contemplationem surgat, et amoris pastum de pabulo contemplatae veritatis accipiat. In qua quia diu se tenere ipsa corruptionis infirmitas non potest, ad bona rursus opera rediens, suavitatis Dei memoria pascitur, et foris piis actibus, intus vero sanctis desideriis nutritur. Hinc etenim de perfectis viris post contemplationem suam redeuntibus dicitur: Memoriam suavitatis tuae eructabunt (Psal. CXLIV, 7). Dulcedinem quippe suavitatis intimae, quia utcunque possunt, velut quodam ex corusco, praegustando tangere, ejus memoriam student recolendo semper et loquendo eructare. Unde et apte nos Psalmista admonet, dicens: Lux orta est justo, et rectis corde laetitia. Laetamini justi in Domino, et confitemini memoriae sanctitatis ejus (Psal. XCVI, 11, 12). Qui rursum ait: Quam magna multitudo dulcedinis tuae, Domine (Psal. XXX, 20)! Quae videlicet quam magna esset nullo modo cognosceret, nisi hanc aliquatenus contemplando gustasset. Hinc iterum dicit: Ego dixi in ecstasi mea, projectus sum a vultu oculorum tuorum (Ibid., 23). Nisi enim in mentis excessu sublevatus dulcedinem suavitatis aeternae cognovisset, in hoc adhuc mundo retentus non discerneret quam longe projectus jaceret. Ostensa ergo animalia vadunt et non revertuntur, atque vadunt et redeunt; quia sancti viri et ab activa vita quam apprehenderunt ad iniquitates non corruunt, et a contemplativa, quam tenere jugiter non possunt, in activam relabuntur. Sicut enim dictum est, ipso infirmitatis suae pondere devicti, ad semetipsos repulsi redeunt, ut euntes discant quid desiderent, et revertentes ubi jaceant sciant. Euntes intelligant ubi nondum sint, revertentes quid sint.

13. Sed qualiter haec sancta animalia redeant, demonstratur cum subditur: In similitudinem fulguris coruscantis. Bene autem revertentia animalia coruscanti fulguri comparantur, quia sancti viri cum ad superna contemplanda evolant, cum primitias sui spiritus in coelestis patriae amore ligant, sed gravati humanae conversationis pondere ad semetipsos redeunt, bona coelestia quae saltem per speculum contemplari potuerunt, fratribus denuntiant, eorumque animos in amorem intimae claritatis accendunt, quam nec videre sicut est, nec loqui praevalent sicut viderunt. Loquentes autem verbis suis corda audientium feriunt et incendunt. Quasi ergo fulgur coruscans redeunt, qui, cum coelestia loquuntur, quia per eos supernum lumen intermicat, ad amorem coelestis patriae mentes audientium inflammant. More itaque coruscantis fulguris cum loquendo percutiunt, ignem spiritalis desiderii spargunt.

14. Alio quoque modo sancta animalia vadunt et redeunt. Vadunt enim cum ad insinuandam coelestis doni gratiam in praedicationem mittuntur, atque ut ad fidem trahant, mira coram infidelibus faciunt; sed redeunt, quia, haec omnipotentis Domini virtuti tribuentes, sibimetipsis quae fecerint non ascribunt. Cum enim stupenda faciunt, fulgur sunt, quia corda intuentium concutiunt, terrent, illuminant, et accendunt. Unde scriptum est: In lumine jacula tua ibunt, in splendore fulguris armorum tuorum (Habac. III, 11). Jacula Domini sunt verba Sanctorum, quae corda peccantium feriunt. Sed ista jacula habent arma. Scitis, fratres, quia praeliatores viri jacula mittunt, armis vero muniuntur. Dum ergo verbis addunt miracula, quasi armis se muniunt, ne ipsi feriantur: In lumine jacula tua ibunt, quia in aperto exeunt verba Dei. Sed quia comitari debent sententias sanctorum doctorum facta miraculorum, recte subjungitur: In splendore fulguris armorum tuorum, quia dum addis eis arma miraculorum, mentes persequentium fulgurant, ut eos persequi non praesumant. Haec itaque animalia vadunt et revertuntur in similitudinem fulguris coruscantis, quia postquam mira sancti inter homines faciunt, postquam corda audientium sparso lumine incendunt, ad dandam auctori suo gloriam redeunt, ut illi laudem reddant per quem se posse talia sciunt.

15. Sic Petrus, cum, sanato homine qui claudus ex utero matris fuerat, signum fecit quod omnes qui cognoscerent valde mirarentur, dixit: Quid miramini in hoc, aut nos quid intuemini, quasi nostra virtute aut potestate fecerimus hunc ambulare? Deus Abraham, Deus Isaac, et Deus Jacob, Deus patrum nostrorum glorificavit Filium suum Jesum (Act. III, 12, 13). Et paulo post: In fide nominis ejus hunc quem vidistis et nostis, confirmavit nomen ejus (Ibid., 16). Signum quippe faciens, intuentium oculos miraculi lumine perstrinxit; sed humilitatem custodiens, et laudem auctori reddens, quasi unde venerat rediit, quia lux fulguris unde fuerit ostendit. Sancta itaque animalia cum ad signa operanda veniunt, et cum ad reddendam auctori suo gloriam intus apud semetipsa redeunt, fulgur sunt, quia et ostendendo miracula, et exempla humilitatis praebendo, mentes intuentium feriunt et incendunt.

16. In omne autem quod faciunt, idcirco semper ad laudem Creatoris redeunt, ut in ea virtute quam accipiunt, vera stabilitate persistant. Nam si quid sibi tribuerent, in hoc quod acceperant, stare non possent. Unde bene etiam per Salomonem dicitur: Ad locum de quo exeunt flumina revertentur ut iterum fluant (Eccle. I, 7). Sive enim in virtutibus, seu in doctrina, quid aliud sunt sancti viri quam flumina quae terram cordis carnalium aridam rigant? Sed sive in operatione quam faciunt, seu in doctrinae verbis, citius siccarentur, nisi per intentionem cordis semper sollicite ad locum de quo exeunt redirent. Si enim introrsus ad cor non redeant, ac sese in amore conditoris desideriorum vinculis non astringant, et manus ab eo quod agebat deficit, et lingua ab eo quod loquebatur arescit. Sed intus semper per amorem redeunt, et hoc quod in publico operantes atque loquentes fundunt, in secreto suo de fonte amoris hauriunt. Amando enim discunt quod docendo proferunt. Ad locum ergo de quo exeunt flumina revertuntur ut iterum fluant, quia aquam sapientiae inde semper hauriunt unde oritur, ne cum cucurrerit exsiccetur. Per omne ergo quod agimus ad fontem veri luminis sollicita mente redeamus. Reddamus Creatori nostro gratias de bonis quae accipimus, eique cum Isaia propheta suppliciter dicamus: Omnia opera nostra operatus es nobis (Isai. XXVI, 12). Bona enim nostra ejus sunt opera, cujus visceribus non suffecit ut nos erigeret, nisi et semetipsum pro nobis inclinaret. Si enim coaeternus Patri Deus ante saecula non fieret homo in tempore, quando homo temporalis saperet aeterna? Descensio ergo veritatis ascensio facta est humilitatis nostrae. Demus ei gloriam, demus laudem, qui vivit cum Patre in unitate Spiritus sancti Deus, per omnia saecula saeculorum. Amen.

HOMILIA VI

Explanantur versus 15, 16, 17, cum media decimi octavi parte; deflexo ad sacrae Scripturae, ad Evangelii praesertim commendationem, prophetici sermonis sensu.

1. Tenebrosa aqua in nubibus aeris (Psal. XVII, 12), quia obscura est scientia in prophetis. Sed Salomonis voce attestante didicimus: Gloria regum celare verbum, et gloria Dei est investigare sermonem, quia et honor est hominum eorum secreta abscondere, et gloria Dei est mysteria sermonis ejus aperire (Prov. XXV, 2). Ipsa autem per se Veritas discipulis dicit: Quae dico vobis in tenebris, dicite in lumine (Matth. X, 27); id est, aperte exponite quae in allegoriarum obscuritatibus auditis. Magnae vero utilitatis est ipsa obscuritas eloquiorum Dei, quia exercet sensum ut fatigatione dilatetur, et exercitatus capiat quod capere non posset otiosus. Habet quoque adhuc aliud majus, quia Scripturae sacrae intelligentia, quae si in cunctis esset aperta vilesceret, in quibusdam locis obscurioribus tanto majore dulcedine inventa reficit, quanto majore labore fatigat animum quaesita. Ecce enim sancti Ezechielis nunc voce dicitur: VERS. 15. — Cumque aspicerem animalia, apparuit rota una super terram.

2. Quid autem rota, nisi sacram Scripturam signat, quae ex omni parte ad auditorum mentes volvitur, et nullo erroris angulo a praedicationis suae via retinetur? Ex omni autem parte volvitur, quia inter adversa et prospera recte et humiliter incedit. Circulus quippe praeceptorum illius modo sursum, modo deorsum est, quae perfectioribus spiritaliter dicuntur, infirmis juxta litteram congruunt; et ipsa quae parvuli juxta litteram intelligunt, docti viri per spiritalem intelligentiam in altum ducunt. Quis namque parvulorum in facto Esau et Jacob, quod alter ad venatum mittitur ut benedicatur, alter vero per suppositionem matris a patre benedicitur (Genes. XXVII, 3, 28), nisi juxta sacrae lectionis historiam pascitur? In qua videlicet historia si ad intellectum paulo subtilius astringatur, videt quia Jacob primogeniti benedictionem non per fraudem subripuit, sed sibi debitam accepit, quam, concedente fratre, datae lentis mercede emerat.

3. At vero si quis altius sentiens utrorumque facta velit per allegoriae arcana discutere, protinus ab historia in mysterium surgit. Quid est enim quod Isaac de majoris filii sui venatione vesci concupiscit, nisi quod omnipotens Deus Judaici populi bona operatione pasci desideravit? Sed illo tardante, minorem Rebecca supposuit, quia dum Judaicus populus bona opera foris quaerit, gentilem populum mater gratia instruxit, ut omnipotenti patri cibum boni operis offerret, benedictionemque majoris fratris acciperet. Qui eosdem cibos ex domesticis animalibus praebuit, quia gentilis populus placere Deo de exterioribus sacrificiis non quaerens, per vocem Prophetae dicit: In me sunt, Deus, vota tua, quae reddam, laudationes tibi (Psal. LV, 12). Quid est quod idem Jacob manus ac brachia et collum haedinis pellibus texit, nisi quod haedus pro peccato offerri consuevit? Et gentilis populus carnis quidem in se peccata mactavit, sed coopertum se peccatis carnalibus confiteri non erubuit Quid est quod vestimentis fratris majoris induitur, nisi quod sacrae Scripturae praeceptis quae majori populo data fuerant in bona operatione vestitus est? Et eis minor in domo utitur, quae major foras exiens intus reliquit, quia illa gentilis populus praecepta tenet in mente, quae Judaicus populus habere non potuit, dum solam in eis litteram attendit. Et quid est quod Isaac eumdem filium nescit quem benedicit, nisi hoc quod de gentili populo Dominus per Psalmistam dixit: Populus quem non cognovi, servivit mihi, ob auditum auris obedivit mihi (Psal. XVII, 45)? Quid est quod praesentem non vidit, et tamen quae ei in futuro veniant vidit, nisi quod omnipotens Deus, cum per prophetas suos praediceret gentilitati gratiam praerogandam, eam et in praesenti per gratiam non vidit, quia tunc in errore dereliquit, et tamen quia hanc quandoque collecturus erat, per benedictionis gratiam praevidit? Unde et eidem Jacob, gentilis populi figuram tenenti, in benedictione dicitur: Ecce odor filii mei sicut odor agri pleni, cui benedixit Dominus Deus (Genes. XXVII, 27). Sicut enim in Evangelio Veritas dicit, Ager est hic mundus (Matth. XIII, 38), et quia gentilis populus ad fidem perductus per electos suos in universo mundo virtutibus redolet, odor filii odor est agri pleni.

4. Aliter namque olet flos uvae, quia magna est virtus et opinio praedicatorum quae debriant mentes audientium; aliter flos olivae, quia suave est opus misericordiae quod more olei refovet et lucet; aliter flos rosae, quia mira est fragrantia quae rutilat et redolet ex cruore martyrum; aliter flos lilii, quia candida vita carnis est de incorruptione virginitatis; aliter flos violae, quia magna est virtus humilium, qui ex desiderio loca ultima tenentes, se per humilitatem a terra in altum non sublevant, et coelestis regni purpuram in mente servant; aliter redolet spica, cum ad maturitatem perducitur, quia bonorum operum perfectio ad satietatem eorum qui justitiam esuriunt praeparatur. Quia ergo gentilis populus in electis suis ubique per mundum sparsus est, et ex eis virtutibus quas agit omnes qui intelligunt odore bonae opinionis replet, dicatur recte: Ecce odor filii mei sicut odor agri pleni. Sed quia easdem virtutes ex semetipso non habet, adjungat: Cui benedixit Dominus Deus.

5. Et quoniam idem electorum populus per quosdam etiam in contemplationem surgit, per quosdam vero in activae vitae solummodo opera pinguescit, recte illic additur: Det tibi Deus de rore coeli, et de pinguedine terrae (Genes. XXVII, 28). Ros enim desuper et subtiliter cadit. Et toties de rore coeli accipimus, quoties per infusionem contemplationis intimae de supernis aliquid tenuiter videmus. Cum vero bona opera etiam per corpus agimus, de terrae pinguedine ditamur.

6. Quid est autem quod Esau tarde ad patrem redit, nisi quod Judaicus populus ad placendum Domino sero revertitur? Cui et hoc in benedictione dicitur: Tempusque erit cum solvatur jugum de collo tuo (Ibid., 40). Quia a servitute peccati Judaicus populus in fine liberatur, sicut scriptum est:

Donec plenitudo gentium introiret, et sic omnis Israel salvus fieret (Rom. XI, 25).

7. Quem non parvulorum ipsa evangelica historia in miraculi operatione reficiat, quod hydrias vacuas Dominus aqua impleri praecepit, eamdemque aquam protinus in vinum vertit (Joan. II, 7)? Sed cum haec vigilantiores ingenio audiunt, et sacram historiam credendo venerantur, et quid interius innuat requirunt. Qui enim mutare aquam in vinum potuit, etiam vacuas hydrias valuit vino statim replere. Sed impleri hydrias aqua jubet, quia prius per sacrae lectionis historiam corda nostra replenda sunt. Et aquam nobis in vinum vertit, quando ipsa historia per allegoriae mysterium in spiritalem nobis intelligentiam commutatur. Rota ergo quasi per terram trahitur, quia parvulis humili sermone concordat, et tamen magnis spiritalia infundens, quasi circulum in altum levat; et inde sursum erigitur, unde terram tangere paulo ante videbatur.

8. Quia vero undique aedificat, quasi per circulum rota currit. Unde et in lege scriptum est: Facies et candelabrum ductile de auro mundissimo, hastile ejus et calamos, scyphos et sphaerulas ac lilia ex ipso procedentia (Exod. XXV, 31; XXXVII, 17). Quis in candelabro nisi Redemptor humani generis designatur? Qui in natura humanitatis infulsit lumine divinitatis, ut mundi candelabrum fieret, quatenus in ejus lumine omnis peccator in quibus jaceret tenebris videret. Qui pro eo quod naturam nostram sine culpa suscepit, candelabrum tabernaculi ex auro purissimo fieri jubetur. Ductile autem feriendo producitur, quia et Redemptor noster qui ex conceptione et nativitate perfectus Deus et homo exstitit, passionum dolores pertulit, et sic ad resurrectionis gloriam pervenit. Ex auro ergo mundissimo ductile candelabrum fuit, quia et peccatum non habuit, et tamen ejus corpus per passionis contumelias ad immortalitatem profecit. Nam juxta virtutes animae quo percussionibus potuisset proficere, omnino non habuit. In membris autem suis, quae nos sumus, quotidie percussionibus proficit, quia dum nos tundimur et afficimur ut ejus corpus esse mereamur, ipse proficit. De cujus corpore scriptum est: Ex quo totum corpus per nexus et conjunctiones subministratum et constructum crescit in augmentum Dei (Coloss. II, 19). Corpus quippe illius nos omnes sumus. Per nexus vero et conjunctiones corpus ligatur, quia dum capiti pectus, dum pectori brachia, dum brachiis manus, digiti manibus sunt conjuncti, ac membra caetera membris inhaerent, corpus omne perficitur, sicut sancti apostoli, quia Redemptori nostro propinqui steterunt, quasi pectus capiti adhaesit. Quos quia martyres sunt secuti, quasi conjuncta brachia pectori fuerunt. Quibus dum pastores et doctores subjuncti sunt per bona opera, manus brachiis inhaeserunt. Hoc vero omne corpus Redemptoris nostri quotidie per nexus et conjunctiones subministratur in coelo, quia cum ad eum illuc electae animae ducuntur, ei sua membra colligantur. De quo bene dicitur: Subministratum et constructum crescit in augmentum Dei (Ibid.), quia Deus omnipotens redemptor noster, qui in se quo proficiat non habet, adhuc per membra sua quotidie augmentum habet. Unde rursum scriptum est: Donec occurramus omnes in virum perfectum, in mensuram aetatis plenitudinis Christi (Ephes. IV, 13). Hastile vero ejusdem candelabri ipsa Ecclesia debet intelligi, quae corpus ejus est, quia inter tot adversa liber stat. Calami autem qui de hastili prodeunt, praedicatores sunt, qui dulcem sonum in mundo ediderunt, videlicet canticum novum. Scyphi autem vino repleri solent. Quid ergo mentes auditorum nisi scyphi sunt, quae a sanctis praedicatoribus vino scientiae replentur? Sphaerula autem quid est aliud nisi volubilitas praedicationis? Sphera enim ex omni parte volvitur. Et praedicatio, quae nec adversitate retineri potest, nec prosperitatibus elevatur, sphaera est, quia est et inter adversa fortis, et inter prospera humilis, nec timoris habet angulum, nec elationis. In cursu ergo suo figi non valet, quia per cuncta se volubiliter trahit.

9. Ut autem hoc quod exempli causa protulimus exsequamur, bene post calamos, scyphos et sphaerulas, in candelabro lilia describuntur, quia post eam quam diximus praedicationis gratiam atque volubilitatem, illa virens patria sequitur, quae animabus sanctis, id est floribus vernat aeternis. Sphaerulae ergo ad laborem pertinent, lilia ad retributionem. Itaque sicut apud Moysen sphaerula, doctrina praedicationis accipitur; ita hic per rotam ipsa sacra Scriptura signatur. Propheta igitur dum sancta animalia videret, adjunxit: Cumque aspicerem animalia, apparuit rota una super terram.

10. Qua in re quaerendum est, cum inferius rotae describuntur, cur una rota prius apparuisse dicitur, nisi quia antiquo populo Vetus solummodo Testamentum datum est, quod ad erudiendam mentem illius quasi rota volveretur? Bene autem rota eadem super terram apparuisse dicitur. Peccanti enim homini dictum est: Terra es, et in terram ibis (Genes. III, 19). Rota ergo super terram apparuit, quia Deus omnipotens legem super corda peccantium dedit. Sed quia haec pennata animalia sanctos, ut ante diximus, evangelistas designant, quomodo prius animalia, et postmodum rota una aspicitur, cum ante Testamentum Vetus fuerit, et postmodum sancti evangelistae secuti sint? Sed intelligere in his possumus quod illi prius a propheta visi sunt qui merito transcendunt. Nam quanto sanctum Evangelium Testamentum Vetus praecellit, tanto et praedicatores ejus in descriptione prophetica praeferri debuerunt.

11. Quamvis sit adhuc aliud quod in hac descriptione considerari debeat, quia prophetiae spiritus sic intra semetipsum anteriora et posteriora simul colligit, ut haec simul prophetae lingua proferre non possit. Sed ampla quae videt de dispertitis sermonibus emanat, et nunc ultima post prima, nunc vero prima post ultima loquitur. Unde Ezechiel propheta sub figura sanctae universalis Ecclesiae, et evangelistarum gloriam per quatuor animalium similitudinem videt, et tamen repente illa subjungit, quae anterioribus temporibus gesta sunt, ut patenter indicet simul se vidisse quod carnis

lingua non sufficeret simul dicere. Quia vero per quatuor animalia etiam perfectos omnes significari diximus, considerandum quoque est quosdam sanctorum et ante legem fuisse, qui naturali lege districte viverent, et omnipotenti Domino placerent. Post animalia ergo rota describitur, quia electorum multi apud omnipotentem Dominum perfecti et ante legem fuerunt. Sin vero animalia solos, ut diximus, Evangelistas debemus accipere, est adhuc aliud quod considerare debeamus. Videbat enim sanctus propheta quia haec ipsa verba quae obscuritatibus obvoluta proferebat, non Judaico populo, sed gentibus panderentur. Nobis igitur loquens prius animalia et post rotam describere debuit, quia nos ad fidem Domino largiente venientes, non per legem Evangelium, sed per sanctum Evangelium legem didicimus. Ubi vero, vel qualis rota apparuerit, adjungit cum dicit: — VERS. 15. — Juxta animalia habens quatuor facies. Ubi adhuc subditur: VERS. 16. — Et aspectus rotarum et opus earum quasi visio maris; et una similitudo ipsarum quatuor, et aspectus earum et opera, quasi si sit rota in medio rotae.

12. Quid est hoc, quod cum una rota diceretur, paulo post adjungitur, Quasi si sit rota in medio rotae, nisi quod in Testamenti Veteris littera Testamentum Novum latuit per allegoriam? Unde et rota eadem quae juxta animalia apparuit quatuor facies habere describitur, quia Scriptura sacra per utraque Testamenta in quatuor partibus est distincta. Vetus etenim Testamentum in lege et prophetis, Novum vero in Evangeliis atque apostolorum Actibus et dictis. Scimus autem quia ubi faciem intendimus, ibi quod necesse est videmus. Rota ergo quatuor habet facies, quia prius resecanda mala in populis vidit per legem, postmodum vidit per prophetas, subtilius vero per Evangelium, ad extremum autem per apostolos ea quae in culpis hominum resecarentur aspexit. Potest quoque intelligi quod quatuor facies rota habeat, propter hoc quod Scriptura sacra per gratiam praedicationis extensa in quatuor mundi partes innotuit. Unde et bene rota eadem una prius juxta animalia apparuisse et postmodum quatuor facies habuisse describitur, quia nisi lex Evangelio concordaret, in quatuor mundi partibus non innotesceret.

13. Sequitur: Et aspectus rotarum, et opus earum quasi visio maris. Recte sacra eloquia visioni maris similia narrantur, quia in eis magna sunt volumina sententiarum, cumuli sensuum. Nec immerito mari similis Scriptura sacra dicitur, quia firmantur in ea sententiae locutionis, sacramento baptismatis. Vel certe considerandum est quia navibus in mare navigamus, cum ad desideratas terras tendimus. Nobis autem quid est in desiderio nisi illa terra de qua scriptum est: Portio mea in terra viventium (Psal. CXLI, 6)? Ligno autem, ut dixi, evehitur qui mare transit. Et scimus quia sacra Scriptura lignum crucis per legem nobis praenuntiat, cum dicit: Maledictus omnis qui pendet in ligno (Deut. XXI, 23). Quod Redemptori nostro Paulus attestatur, dicens: Factus pro nobis maledictum (Galat. III, 13). Per prophetas quoque lignum annuntiat, cum dicitur: Dominus regnabit a ligno (Psal. XCV, 10). Et rursum: Mittamus lignum in panem ejus (Jerem. XI, 9). Per Evangelium vero lignum crucis aperte ostenditur, ubi ipsa Domini passio quae prophetata est declaratur. Per apostolos autem haec eadem crux etiam in verbis et operibus tenetur, cum Paulus dicit: Mihi mundus crucifixus est, et ego mundo (Galat. VI, 14). Et rursus: Mihi autem absit gloriari nisi in cruce Domini nostri Jesu Christi (Ibid., 14). Nobis ergo qui ad aeternam patriam tendimus Scriptura sacra per quatuor suas facies mare est. Quae crucem annuntiat, quia nos ad terram viventium ligno portat. Nisi autem mari Scripturam sacram similem cerneret propheta, minime dixisset: Repleta est terra scientia Domini, sicut aquae maris operientis (Isai. XI, 9). Sequitur: VERS. 16. — Et una similitudo ipsarum quatuor, et aspectus earum et opera, quasi si sit rota in medio rotae.

14. Una similitudo ipsarum est quatuor, quia quod praedicat lex, hoc etiam prophetae; quod denuntiant prophetae, hoc exhibet Evangelium; quod exhibuit Evangelium, hoc praedicaverunt apostoli per mundum. Una ergo est similitudo ipsarum quatuor, quia divina eloquia etsi temporibus distincta, sunt tamen sensibus unita.

15. Et aspectus earum et opera, quasi si sit rota in medio rotae. Rota intra rotam est Testamentum Novum, sicut diximus, intra Testamentum Vetus, quia quod designavit Testamentum Vetus, hoc Testamentum Novum exhibuit. Ut enim pauca de multis loquar, quid est quod Adam dormiente Eva producitur (Genes. II, 21, 22), nisi quod moriente Christo Ecclesia formatur? Quid est quod Isaac ad immolandum ducitur, et ligna portat, arae superimponitur et vivit (Genes. XXII, 6), nisi quod Redemptor noster ad passionem ductus lignum sibi crucis ipse portavit? Et sic in sacrificio pro nobis ex humanitate est mortuus, ut tamen immortalis maneret ex divinitate. Quid est quod homicida post mortem summi pontificis absolutus ad terram propriam redit (Num. XXXV, 25; Josue XX, 6), nisi quod humanum genus quod peccando sibimetipsi mortem intulit, post mortem veri sacerdotis, videlicet Redemptoris nostri peccatorum suorum vinculis solvitur, et in paradisi possessione reparatur? Quid est quod in tabernaculo propitiatorium fieri jubetur (Exod. XXV, 17), super quod duo cherubim, unum a summitate una, et alterum a summitate alia, ex auro mundissimo ponuntur expandentes alas, et operientes oraculum, qui se mutuo respiciunt versis vultibus in propitiatorium (Exod. XXV, 20), nisi quod utraque Testamenta ita sibi in Mediatore Dei et hominum congruunt, ut quod unum designat, hoc alterum exhibeat? Quid enim per propitiatorium, nisi ipse Redemptor humani generis designatur? De quo per Paulum dicitur: Quem proposuit Deus propitiationem per fidem in sanguine ipsius (Rom. III, 25). Quid vero per duo Cherubim, quae plenitudo scientiae dicuntur, nisi utraque Testamenta signata sunt? Ex quibus unum a summitate una propitiatorii, aliud vero a summitate altera stat, quia quod Testamentum Vetus de incarnatione nostri Redemptoris coepit prophetando promittere, hoc Testamentum Novum perfecte narrat expletum. Duo autem cherubim ex auro mundissimo facta sunt, quia utraque Testamenta pura ac simplici veritate describuntur. Expandunt vero alas, et oraculum operiunt, quia nos qui omnipotentis Dei oraculum sumus, a culpis imminentibus, Scripturae sacrae aedificatione protegimur. Cujus dum sententias sollicite aspicimus, ab errore ignorantiae, ejus alis velamur. Duo ergo cherubim se mutuo respiciunt versis vultibus in propitiatorium, quia utraque Testamenta in nullo a se discrepant. Et quasi ad semetipsa vicissim facies tenent, quia quod unum promittit, hoc aliud exhibet, dum inter se positum Mediatorem Dei et hominum vident. Facies quippe a semetipsis cherubim averterent, si quod unum Testamentum promitteret, aliud negaret. Sed dum concorditer de Mediatore Dei et hominum loquuntur, ut vicissim se respiciant, in propitiatorium intendunt. Rota ergo in medio rotae est, quia inest Testamento Veteri Testamentum Novum. Et, sicut saepe jam diximus, quod Testamentum Vetus promisit, hoc Novum exhibuit; et quod illud occulte annuntiat, hoc istud exhibitum aperte clamat. Prophetia ergo Testamenti Novi, Testamentum Vetus est; et expositio Testamenti Veteris, Testamentum Novum. Sequitur: VERS. 17. — Per quatuor partes earum ibant, et non revertebantur.

16. Quo alibi divina eloquia, nisi ad corda hominum vadunt? Sed per quatuor partes euntes ibant, quia Scriptura sacra per legem ad corda hominum vadit, signando mysterium. Per prophetas vadit paulo apertius, prophetando Dominum. Per Evangelium vadit, exhibendo quem prophetavit. Per apostolos vadit, praedicando eum quem Pater pro nostra redemptione exhibuit. Habent ergo rotae facies et vias, quia ostendunt sacra eloquia notitiam praeceptorum cum exhibitione operum. Et per quatuor partes vadunt, quia distinctis, ut praediximus, temporibus loquuntur, vel certe quia in cunctis mundi regionibus incarnatum Dominum praedicant. De quibus aperte mox subditur: IBID. — Et non revertebantur, cum ambularent.

17. Haec superius de animalibus dicta sunt, sed non eadem intelligi de rotis quae de animalibus possunt. Rotas quippe signare Testamenta diximus. Et Testamentum Vetus ambulavit quidem, quia per praedicationem ad mentes hominum venit, sed post semetipsum reversum est, quia juxta litteram in praeceptis suis et sacrificiis usque ad finem servari non potuit. Non enim sine immutatione permansit, cum in eo spiritalis intelligentia defuit. Sed cum Redemptor noster in mundum venit, hoc spiritaliter fecit intelligi, quod carnaliter invenit teneri. Itaque dum spiritaliter littera ejus intelligitur, omnis in eo illa carnalis exhibitio vivificatur. Testamentum vero Novum etiam per Testamenti Veteris paginas testamentum aeternum appellatum est, quia intellectus illius nunquam mutatur. Bene ergo dicitur quod rotae euntes ibant, et non revertebantur cum ambularent, quia dum Novum Testamentum non rescinditur, dum Vetus jam spiritaliter intellectum tenetur, post se non redeunt, quae usque ad finem mundi immutabilia persistunt. Ambulant ergo, sed non revertuntur, quia sic spiritaliter ad cor nostrum veniunt, ut eorum praecepta vel studia ulterius non mutentur. Sequitur: VERS. 18. — Statura quoque erat rotis, et altitudo, et horribilis aspectus.

18. Quid est quod in Scripturae sacrae eloquiis tria haec inesse narrantur, ut staturam, altitudinem et horribilem aspectum, id est terribilem habere memorentur? Quaerendum nobis magnopere est quae divinae Scripturae statura, quae altitudo, qui horribilis aspectus dicitur. Sciendum ergo est quia stare ad vitam congruit bene operantis. Unde per Paulum dicitur: Qui stat, videat ne cadat (I Cor. X, 12). Qui etiam discipulis dicit: Sic state in Domino, charissimi (Philip. IV, 1). Et propheta, qui se vita ac moribus ante Dominum stare videbat, ait: Vivit Dominus, in cujus conspectu sto (IV Reg. III, 14). Altitudo vero est, coelestis regni promissio. Ad quam tunc pertingitur, quando jam mortalis vitae omnis corruptio subjugatur. Horribilis vero aspectus est terror gehennae, quae sine fine reprobos cruciat, et semper in cruciatu conservat. Statura ergo in rectitudine praeceptionis est, altitudo in celsitudine supernae promissionis, horribilis vero aspectus in minis atque terroribus supplicii sequentis. Scriptura igitur sacra staturam habet, quia mores ad standum dirigit, ut auditorum mentes ad terrenam concupiscentiam non curventur. Altitudinem habet, quia in coelesti patria aeternae vitae gaudia promittit. Horribilem quoque aspectum habet, quia omnibus reprobis gehennae supplicia minatur. Ostendit igitur staturam suam in aedificatione morum, ostendit altitudinem in promissione praemiorum, ostendit horribilem aspectum in terroribus suppliciorum. Recta est enim in praeceptis, alta in promissionibus, horribilis in minis. Habet staturam cum per prophetam dicit: Quiescite agere perverse, discite benefacere, quaerite judicium, subvenite oppresso, judicate pupillum, defendite viduam (Isai. I, 17). Et rursum: Frange esurienti panem tuum, et egenos vagosque induc in domum tuam; cum videris nudum, operi eum, et domesticos seminis tui ne despexeris (Ibid. LVIII, 7). Habet altitudinem cum per eumdem prophetam dicit: Non erit tibi sol amplius ad lucendum per diem, nec splendor lunae illuminabit te; sed erit tibi Dominus in lucem sempiternam, et Deus tuus in gloriam tuam (Ibid. LX, 19). Habet horribilem aspectum cum, infernum describens, dicit: Dies ultionis Domini, annus retributionis judicii Sion; et convertentur torrentes ejus in picem, et humus ejus in sulphur; et erit terra in picem ardentem, nocte et die non exstinguetur in sempiternum (Isai. XXXIV, 8, seq.). Quam beatus quoque Job describit, dicens: Terram tenebrosam et opertam mortis caligine, terram miseriae et tenebrarum, ubi umbra mortis, et nullus ordo, sed sempiternus horror inhabitans (Job. X, 21, 22). Habet staturam cum per eam Dominus propitius pollicetur, dicens: Sicut coeli novi et terra nova, quae ego stare facio coram me, dicit Dominus; sic stabit semen vestrum et nomen vestrum (Isai. LXVI, 22). Illi enim veraciter coram Domino stant, qui vitam suam in pravitate non dissipant. Habet altitudinem cum statim subdit: Et erit mensis ex mense, et Sabbatum ex Sabbato, et veniet omnis caro ut adoret coram facie mea, dicit Dominus (Ibid., 23). Quid est mensis nisi perfectio dierum? Et quid est Sabbatum nisi requies in qua fieri opus servile non liceat? Mensis ergo ex mense est, quia qui hic perfecte vivunt, illuc ad perfectionem gloriae perducuntur. Sabbatum vero ex Sabbato est, quia qui hic cessant a perverso opere, illic quiescunt in coelesti retributione. Habet etiam horribilem aspectum cum protinus adjungit: Et egredientur et videbunt cadavera virorum, qui praevaricati sunt in me. Vermis eorum non morietur, et ignis eorum non exstinguetur (Ibid., 24). Quid enim horribilius dici, quid cogitari potest, quam damnationis vulnera suscipere, et dolores vulnerum nunquam finire! De hoc horribili aspectu rotarum bene per Sophoniam dicitur, cum supervenire duris mentibus dies judicii denuntiatur: Juxta est dies Domini magnus, juxta et velox nimis. Vox diei Domini amora, tribulabitur ibi fortis. Dies irae dies illa, dies tribulationis et angustiae, dies calamitatis et miseriae, dies tenebrarum et caliginis, dies nebulae et turbinis, dies tubae et clangoris (Soph. I, 14).

19. Sed quia exterioris rotae dicta posuimus, restat nunc ut interioris quoque staturam, altitudinem, et horribilem aspectum proferre debeamus. Habet quippe rota interior staturam suam cum per sanctum Evangelium ad terrena desideria incurvare nos prohibet, Redemptoris nostri vocibus dicens: Attendite ut non graventur corda vestra in crapula et ebrietate, aut in curis hujus vitae (Luc. XXI, 34). Habet altitudinem cum de eodem Redemptore promittit, dicens: Quotquot autem crediderunt in eum, dedit eis potestatem filios Dei fieri (Joan. I, 12). Quid enim hac potestate altius, quid hac altitudine sublimius dici potest, in qua creatus quisque efficitur filius creatoris? Habet horribilem aspectum cum de reprobis loquitur, dicens: Ibunt hi in supplicium aeternum (Matth. XXV, 46). Habet staturam cum Veritas discipulos admonet, dicens: Vendite quae possidetis, et date eleemosynam. Facite vobis sacculos non veterascentes (Luc. XII, 33).

Habet promissionis altitudinem cum dicit: Venient ab Oriente et Occidente, et recumbent cum Abraham et Isaac et Jacob in regno coelorum (Matth. VIII, 11). Habet horribilem aspectum cum subdit: Filii autem regni ejicientur in tenebras exteriores; ibi erit fletus et stridor dentium (Ibid., 12). Quibus rursum voce Veritatis dicitur: Vos in peccatis vestris moriemini (Joan. VIII, 21, 24). Habet staturam cum primi pastoris vocibus dicit: Ministrate in fide vestra virtutem, in virtute autem scientiam, in scientia autem abstinentiam, in abstinentia autem patientiam, in patientia autem pietatem, in pietate autem amorem fraternitatis, in amore autem fraternitatis charitatem (II Petr. I, 5). Habet altitudinem cum paulo post dicit: Sic enim abundanter ministrabitur vobis introitus in aeternum regnum Domini et Salvatoris nostri Jesu Christi (Ibid., 11). Qui rursus bonis pastoribus pollicetur, dicens: Cum apparuerit princeps pastorum, percipietis immarcescibilem gloriae coronam (I Petr. V, 4). Habet horribilem aspectum cum dicit: Adveniet autem dies Domini ut fur, in qua coeli magno impetu transibunt, elementa vero calore solventur (II Petr. III, 10, 6). Cum haec igitur omnia dissolvenda sint, quales oportet vos esse in sanctis conversationibus et pietatibus, exspectantes et properantes in adventum diei Dei per quam coeli ardentes solventur, elementa vero ignis ardore tabescent? Habet staturam cum per Paulum nos a terrenis desideriis erigit, dicens: Mortificate membra vestra quae sunt super terram, fornicationem, immunditiam, libidinem, concupiscentiam malam, et avaritiam, quae est idolorum servitus (Coloss. III, 5). Habet altitudinem cum promittit, dicens: Vita vestra abscondita est cum Christo in Deo. Cum enim Christus apparuerit vita vestra, tunc et vos apparebitis cum ipso in gloria (Ibid., 3). Habet horribilem aspectum cum minatur, dicens: In revelatione Domini nostri Jesu Christi de coelo, cum angelis virtutis ejus in flamma ignis, dantis vindictam his qui non noverunt Deum, et qui non obediunt Evangelio Domini nostri Jesu Christi, qui poenas dabunt in interitu aeternas a facie

Domini, et a gloria virtutis ejus (II Thess. I, 7). Habet staturam cum nos admonet, dicens: Videte, ne quis alicui malum pro malo reddat, sed semper quod bonum est sectamini in invicem et in omnes (I Thess. V, 15). Habet altitudinem cum promittit, dicens: Si commorimur, et convivemus, si sustinemus, et conregnabimus (II Tim. II, 11). Et rursum: Non sunt condignae passiones hujus temporis ad futuram gloriam, quae revelabitur in nobis (Rom. VIII, 18). Habet horribilem aspectum cum minatur, dicens: Terribilis quaedam exspectatio judicii, et ignis aemulatio, quae consumptura est adversarios (Hebr. X, 27). Qui rursus ait: Horrendum est incidere in manus Dei viventis (Ibid., 31). Quae omnia brevi quoque sententia stringit, dicens: Ut possitis comprehendere cum omnibus sanctis quae sit latitudo, et longitudo, et sublimitas, et profundum (Ephes. III, 18). Lata quippe est charitas, quia et inimicorum dilectionem capit, et per eam charitatem qua nos Deus omnipotens late diligit etiam longanimiter portat. Hoc ergo nos debemus exhibere proximis, quod indignis nobis a creatore nostro conspicimus exhiberi. Latitudo itaque et longitudo ad staturam pertinet, quia per amorem mores dilatat, ut fraterna mala charitas longanimiter portet. Sublimitas autem est aeternorum illa remuneratio praemiorum, de cujus immensitate dicitur: Quia nec oculus vidit, nec auris audivit, nec in cor hominis ascendit, quae praeparavit Deus diligentibus se (I Cor. II, 9). Habet ergo in sublimitate altitudinem, quia aeterna sanctorum gaudia nulla nunc praevalent cogitatione penetrari. Profundum quoque est illa inaestimabilis damnatio suppliciorum, quae eos quos susceperit in ima demergit. In quibus sacra eloquia horribilem aspectum habent, quia inaestimabilem terrorem audientibus incutiunt, cum supplicia inferni loquuntur. Bene ergo dicitur: Statura quoque erat rotis, et altitudo, et horribilis aspectus, quia Scriptura sacra in utroque Testamento et admonendo recta est, et promittendo alta, et minando terribilis. Haec nos, fratres charissimi, hodierna die largiente Domino, dixisse sufficiat, ut ad disserenda ea quae subjuncta sunt otio reparati redeamus, in auctore omnium Deo et Domino nostro Jesu Christo confidentes, qui vivit et regnat cum Patre in unitate Spiritus sancti Deus, per omnia saecula saeculorum. Amen.

Exponitur versus 18 cum quinque sequentibus, maxime de sacrae lectionis utilitate, et de exhibendis ea cautione charitatis officiis, ut nobis potissimum per poenitentiam intendamus.

1. Sicut nostis, fratres charissimi, consuetudo prophetiae est nunc ista, nunc illa aspicere, et ab aliis in aliud subito verba derivare, sicut Psalmista cum de Domino loqueretur, dicens: Deus judex justus, fortis et longanimis, nunquid irascitur per singulos dies? Nisi convertamini, gladium suum vibravit, arcum suum tetendit, et paravit illum; et in ipso paravit vasa mortis, sagittas suas ardentibus effecit (Psal. VII, 12, seq.); repente subjungit: Concepit dolorem, et peperit iniquitatem; lacum aperuit, et effodit eum, et incidit in foveam quam fecit (Ibid., 15). Ecce cum Domini narraret justitiam, quasi non mutata voce, repente peccatoris intulit culpam. Quod unum me exempli causa dixisse sufficiat, quia quisquis in prophetis usum lectionis habet, quam crebro ista faciant non ignorat. Unde nunc Ezechiel propheta cum de rotis loqueretur, adjunxit: VERS. 18. — Et totum corpus plenum oculis in circuitu ipsorum quatuor.

2. Qui enim non ipsarum, sed ipsorum dixit, profecto indicat quia repente sermo ejus a rotis ad animalia rediit. Per quae nimirum perfecti quique, ut praedictum est, designantur. Corpora itaque animalium idcirco plena oculis describuntur, quia sanctorum actio ab omni parte circumspecta est, bona desiderabiliter providens, mala solerter cavens. Et hoc est laboriosius, ubi sanctorum mens vehementer invigilat, ne se ante eorum oculos mala sub bonorum specie abscondant. Circumspecta ergo est vita sanctorum, ne sic sit libera, ut superba sit, quia saepe superbia excedit in verbis, et videri appetit libertas puritatis. Ne sic sit humilis, ut formidolosa, quia aliquando timor restringit animum, et loqui quae recta sunt non praesumit, sed tamen in ipsa timida cogitatione humilitatem esse se simulat. Ne sic sit parca, ut tenax sit, quia plerumque tenacia parcimonia appetit aestimari, ut juste ac necessarie videatur tenere quidquid egenti proximo misericorditer non vult impendere. Ne sic sit misericors, ut effusa sit, quia nonnunquam effusionem esse misericordiam putat. Aliud enim est pietatis studio necessaria proximis dare, atque aliud ea quae possidentur sine mercedis intentione dispergere. Quidquid ergo agitur, in radice intentionis pensandum est quo merito apud judicium creatoris habeatur. Unde et idem creator dicit: Si oculus tuus simplex fuerit, totum corpus tuum lucidum erit (Luc. XI, 34). Oculum videlicet intentionem, corpus vero actionem nominans. Quia si nostra intentio apud Deum simplex fuerit, in ejus judicio nostra actio tenebrosa non erit. Igitur quia sancti viri solerter invigilant ut se undique aspiciant, et ubique custodiant, ne aut mala propter ea ipsa appetant, aut haec eadem sub specie bonorum agant, scilicet ne se eis vitia virtutes esse mentiantur, totum corpus plenum in circuitu oculis habent, quia omnis eorum actio providentia sollicitudinis et repletur et circumdatur.

3. Hinc est quod Paulus apostolus dum cuidam poenitenti de perpetrato facinore Corinthios prospiceret voluisse misereri, ait: Si cui aliquid donastis, et ego. Nam et ego quod donavi, propter vos in persona Christi, ut non circumveniamur a Satana. Non enim ignoramus cogitationes ejus (II Cor. II, 10). Si enim parcendum erat, cur se humilitate tanta voluntati discipulorum magister egregius sociat, ut neque ipse discipulis, neque ab eo discipuli in compassionis causa divisi viderentur, nisi quia sollicito providentiae oculo attendit, quod plerumque dum alter donat, alter irascitur? Et quale est jam misericordiae sacrificium, quod cum discordia proximi offertur? Unde recte ait: Ut non circumveniamur a Satana. Non enim ignoramus cogitationes ejus. Quia videlicet inde alterius cordi rixae malum solet immittere, unde alterum conspicit pietatis negotium fecisse. Imperfectum enim bonum est quod sic agitur, ut ne quid ei ex alio latere mali subrepat non attendatur, nisi forte hoc quod sine cujuspiam scandalo fieri non potest, culpa sit non fecisse.

4. Hoc vero ideo dicimus, ut notum vestrae dilectioni faciamus quia in nostro bono opere aliquando cavendum est scandalum proximi, aliquando vero pro nihilo contemnendum. Quod in ipso nostro auctore didicimus, qui, dum tributum Petro inquisito peteretur, prius paradigma proposuit, per quod se nihil debere respondit, dicens: Reges terrae a quibus accipiunt tributum vel censum, a filiis suis, an ab alienis (Matth. XVII, 24, 25)? Cui cum diceretur ab alienis, illico respondit: Ergo liberi sunt filii. Sed postquam liberum se esse monstravit, ne fortasse scandalum cuiquam faceret, subdidit: Ut autem non scandalizemus eos, vade ad mare, et mitte hamum, et eum piscem qui primus ascenderit tolle, et aperto ore ejus invenies staterem; illum sumens da eis pro me et te (Ibid., 26). Qui rursum cum diceret quia omne quod in os intrat non coinquinat hominem, tunc accedentes discipuli dixerunt ei: Scis quia Pharisaei, audito hoc verbo, scandalizati sunt? (Matth. XV, 11, seq.) At ille respondens, ait: Omnis plantatio quam non plantavit Pater meus coelestis, eradicabitur. Sinite illos, caeci sunt, et duces caecorum. Ecce magistra Veritas, ne in quorumdam cordibus scandalum gigneretur, quod non debuit tributum dedit; et rursum quia generari scandalum in quorumdam cordibus contra veritatem vidit, in suo eos scandalo remanere permisit.

5. Ex qua re nobis considerandum est quia, in quantum sine peccato possumus, vitare proximorum scandalum debemus. Si autem de veritate scandalum sumitur, utilius permittitur nasci scandalum quam veritasrelinquatur. Corpora ergo animalium plena sunt oculis cum se hinc inde caute circumspiciunt.

6. Sed sciendum nobis est quia saepe, dum aliis rebus intendimus, fit ut alias negligamus; et ubi negligimus, ibi procul dubio oculum non habemus. Nam Pharisaeus ille qui ascenderat in templum orare, testante Evangelio, quid dixit agnovimus. Ait enim: Deus, gratias ago tibi (Luc. XVIII, 11). Recte autem gratias Deo agebat, a quo acceperat bona quae fecerat. Qui etiam subjungit: Quia non sum sicut caeteri hominum, raptores, injusti, adulteri, velut etiam hic Publicanus; jejuno bis in Sabbato, decimas do omnium quae possideo (Ibid., 12). Ecce ad exhibendam abstinentiam, ad impendendam misericordiam, ad referendas Deo gratias oculum Pharisaeus habuerat, sed ad humilitatis custodiam oculum non habebat. Et quid prodest quod contra hostium insidias pene tota civitas caute custoditur, si unum foramen apertum relinquitur, unde ab hostibus intretur? Quid ergo prodest custodia quae pene ubique circumponitur, quando inimicis tota civitas per neglectum loci unius aperitur? Pharisaeus autem qui jejunium exhibuit, decimas dedit, Deo gratias retulit, quasi pene per circuitum in suae civitatis custodia vigilavit. Sed quia unum in se foramen superbiae non attendit, ibi hostem pertulit, ubi per negligentiam oculum clausit. Quia ergo sanctorum mentes undique se circumspicientes invigilant, atque in omni suo opere pavoris et sollicitudinis oculum circumducunt, ne aut prava agant, aut recta quae praecepta sunt non agant, aut bonis actibus expletis, in suis cogitationibus intumescant, et tanto gravius offendant quanto justi videntur foris et occultius peccant, recte dicitur: Totum corpus eorum plenum oculis in circuitu.

7. Sciendum quoque quod in translatione veteri non habetur: Totum corpus eorum plenum oculis in circuitu, sed dicitur: Dorsa eorum plena oculis. Quae videlicet sententia ab aedificationis intellectu non discrepat. Ea enim quae sunt in facie saepe etiam peccatores homines custodire solent. Justi autem viri, quia se et in eis custodiunt quae in promptu et in facie non videntur, in dorsis oculos habere referuntur. Qui ergo et ea quae in occultis sunt discutiunt, atque ab ipsis se custodiant quae latent, profecto oculos in dorsis habent. Quod tamen intelligi et aliter potest, quia ea quae sunt ante faciem nostram videmus, dorsa autem nostra alius in nobis videt, et nos videre non possumus. Quia autem sancti viri solerter se aspiciunt in quibus ab aliis judicari possunt, et districte se vident, sicut saepe districte ab aliis videntur, qui in se nec ea quae se latere poterant ignorant, lumen in dorso portant. Sequitur: VERS. 19. — Cumque ambularent animalia, ambulabant pariter et rotae juxta ea; et cum elevarentur animalia de terra, elevabantur simul et rotae.

8. Ambulant animalia cum sancti viri in Scriptura sacra intelligunt quemadmodum moraliter vivant. Elevantur vero a terra animalia, cum sancti viri se in contemplatione suspendunt. Et quia unusquisque sanctorum quanto ipse in Scriptura sacra profecerit, tanto haec eadem Scriptura sacra proficit apud ipsum, recte dicitur: Cum ambularent animalia, ambulabant pariter et rotae; et cum elevarentur animalia de terra, elevabantur simul et rotae, quia divina eloquia cum legente crescunt; nam tanto illa quisque altius intelligit, quanto in eis altius intendit. Unde nec elevantur rotae, si non elevantur animalia, quia nisi legentium mentes ad alta profecerint, divina dicta, velut in imis, non intellecta jacent. Cum enim legenti cuilibet sermo Scripturae sacrae (si tepidus videtur sensus divini eloquii) ejus mentem non excitat, et in cogitatione sua nullo intellectus lumine emicat, rota et otiosa et in terra est, quia animal non elevatur a terra. At vero si animal ambulet, id est bene vivendi ordinem quaerat, et per gressum cordis inveniat quemadmodum gressum boni operis ponat, ambulant pariter et rotae, quia tantum in sacro eloquio provectum invenis, quantum apud illud ipse profeceris. Si vero pennatum animal sese in contemplatione tetenderit, rotae protinus a terra sublevantur, quia terrena non esse intelligis, quae prius in sacro eloquio juxta terrenum morem dicta credidisti. Fitque ut Scripturae sacrae verba esse coelestia sentias, si accensus per contemplationis gratiam temetipsum ad coelestia suspendas. Et mira atque ineffabilis sacri eloquii virtus agnoscitur, cum superno amore legentis animus penetratur. Quia ergo animal ad alta se sublevat, rota volat. Sequitur: VERS. 20. — Quocunque ibat spiritus, illuc eunte spiritu et rotae pariter levabantur, sequentes eum.

9. Quo enim spiritus legentis tendit, illuc et divina eloquia levantur, quia si in eis altum quid videndo et sentiendo quaesieris, haec eadem sacra eloquia tecum crescunt, tecum in altiora ascendunt. Bene autem de eisdem rotis dicitur: Sequentes eum. Legentis enim spiritus, si quid in eis scire morale aut historicum quaerit, sensus hunc moralis historiae sequitur. Si quid typicum, mox figurata locutio agnoscitur. Si quid contemplativum, statim rotae quasi pennas accipiunt, et in aere suspenduntur, quia in verbis sacri eloquii intelligentia coelestis aperitur. Quocunque ergo ibat spiritus, illuc eunte spiritu et rotae pariter levabantur, sequentes eum. Rotae enim spiritum sequuntur, quia verba sacri eloquii, ut saepe jam dictum est, juxta sensum legentium per intellectum crescunt.

10. In una enim eademque Scripturae sententia alius sola historia pascitur, alius typicam, alius vero intelligentiam per typum contemplativam quaerit. Et fit plerumque ut, sicut dictum est, in una eademque sententia cuncta simul tria valeant inveniri. S. Moyses enim cum de ardenti rubo vocatus fuisset (Exod. III, 3), accessit propius ut videret visum, et ecce rubus ardebat, et non consumebatur. Magnum est hoc miraculum. Si solam in eo historiam requiras, est unde legentis nutriatur animus, ut videas quod in ligno ignis ardeat, et non consumat. Jam vero si typicam intelligentiam quaeras, quid flamma nisi legem, de qua scriptum est: In dextera ejus ignea lex (Deut. XXXIII, 2)? et quid rubus ille, nisi Judaicum populum designavit, peccatorum suorum spinis obsitum? Sed rubus ardens consumi non potuit, quia Judaicus populus et ignem quidem legis accepit, et tamen peccatorum suorum spinas non deseruit, nec ejus vitia divini sermonis flamma concremavit. Fortasse in hoc facto alius majora per typum contemplari desiderat. Hujus quia sensus excrescit, elevantur pariter et rotae. Inter homines enim perfectus homo factus est unicus Dei Filius, qui sua peccata non habuit, sed spinas nostrae nequitiae suscepit, atque usque ad passionem pro nobis humiliari dignatus est, et in semetipso ignem tribulationis nostrae suscipere. Sed arsit, et non arsit, quia et ex humanitate est mortuus, et tamen immortalis ex divinitate permansit. Suscepit a nobis unde sacrificium fieret pro nobis, et tamen impassibilis atque incommutabilis permansit in propriis, ut nos commutaret a nostris. Alius fortasse per historiam, moralitatem, atque alius per allegoriae intelligentiam contemplationem requirit. Patet cunctis juxta historiam hoc quod in lege scriptum est, ut turtur quae pro peccato offertur, retorqueatur caput ejus ad pennulas, ita ut collo inhaereat, et non penitus abrumpatur (Levit. I, 15; V, 8). In quibus verbis dubius legentibus sensus historicus non est. Sed si haec intelligere moraliter requiras, agitatur rota dum ad moralem intelligentiam ducitur sacri verbi sententia. Nos enim ipsi in omnipotentis Dei sacrificio esse turtur debemus, ita ut caput nostrum retorqueatur ad pennulas, id est animus ad virtutes. Non enim immerito per caput mentem intelligimus, quia sicut caput corpus, ita mens actiones regit. Sed caput ad pennulas retorqueri praecipitur, ut ea quae dicis facias, et os ad opera conjungas. Nec ita caput abscindendum est, ut a corpore dividatur, sed ex parte decisum, corpori suo jubetur inhaerere, quia videlicet mens nostra a carnali delectatione incidenda est, sed a carnis cura necessaria incidenda non est. Hinc enim scriptum est: Carnis curam ne feceritis in desideriis (Rom. XIII, 14). Quae ergo in desideriis fieri prohibetur, procul dubio in necessitate conceditur. Caput ergo turturis ex parte abscissum est, et ex parte inhaeret, ut, sicut dictum est, et a voluntate carnis mens nostra incisa sit, et tamen a necessitate non sit abscissa. Quid, si hoc sacrificii genus sub typica Redemptoris nostri intelligentia alius ad contemplationem requirat? Ascendat ergo ad fortiora animus, eleventur animalia, ut eleventur pariter et rotae. Quis enim caput nostrum est, nisi Redemptor generis humani? De quo scriptum est: Ipsum dedit caput supra omnem Ecclesiam, quae est corpus ipsius (Ephes. I, 22). Quem cum Judaei persequerentur, nomen ejus delere de terra conati sunt. Cumque eum crucifixum et sepultum viderent, hunc se ab amore omnium divisisse crediderunt. Sed caput turturis et incisum est, et tamen a suo corpore divisum non est, quia ex eo quod pro nobis mortem pertulit, omnes nos sib verius in ipsa sua morte conjunxit; et per hoc quod se nostris oculis visibiliter subtraxit, nostris se mentibus invisibiliter radicavit. Caput ergo turturis incisum inhaesit corpori, quia pro nobis quidem Redemptor noster passus est, sed a nobis separatus per passionem non est. Quia igitur dicta sacri eloquii cum legentium spiritu excrescunt, recte nunc dicitur: Quocunque ibat spiritus, illuc eunte spiritu et rotae pariter levabantur, sequentes eum. Et subditur: IBID. — Spiritus enim vitae erat in rotis.

11. In rotis enim spiritus vitae est, quia per sacra eloquia dono spiritus vivificamur, ut mortifera a nobis opera repellamus. Potest etiam intelligi quia spiritus vadit cum legentis animum diversis modis et ordinibus tangit Deus, quando hunc per verba sacri eloquii modo in zelo excitans, ad ultionem erigit, modo ad patientiam mitigat, modo in praedicationem instruit, modo ad poenitentiae lamenta compungit. Sed curramus breviter per haec eadem verba quae diximus, et videamus quomodo sequuntur rotae spiritum, qui vitae spiritus dicitur, et rotis inesse perhibetur. Certe si legentis animum spiritus vitae in zeli fervore tetigerit, protinus in sacris eloquiis videt quod Moyses, ad castra rediens, et populum per idola peccasse cognoscens, hunc per fervorem spiritus gladiis stravit (Exod. XXXII, 27); quod Phinees, persequendo luxuriam, iram Domini gladio placavit (Num. XXV, 8); quod Petrus sibimet mentientes, verbo perculit et occidit (Act. V, 5, 10). Quod Paulus, negligentibus discipulis, virga minatur (I Cor. IV, 21).

12. Si vitae spiritus legentis animum ad servandam patientiam tangit, statim sequuntur et rotae, quia in sacris eloquiis invenit quod Moyses et Aaron, cum loquentes recta persecutionem populi passi sunt, ad tabernaculum cucurrerunt, pro ipso populo exorantes quem fugiebant (Num. XX, 6). Sancta autem eorum mens et tumorem superbientium pertulit, et tamen contra eos ad odium non erupit. Patientia enim vera est, quae et ipsum amat quem portat. Nam tolerare, sed odisse, non est virtus mansuetudinis, sed velamentum furoris. In eisdem quoque eloquiis (I Reg. VIII, 22) invenit quod Samuel de principatu dejectus orasse se etiam pro dejicientibus confitetur; quod nemo sanctorum ad coelestem gloriam nisi patientiam servando pervenit; quod ipse auctor generis humani sputa, colaphos, spineam coronam, crucem, lanceam pertulit, et tamen pro persecutoribus oravit.

13. Si vitae spiritus legentis animum ad studium praedicationis excitat, statim sequuntur et rotae, quia in sacris eloquiis invenit S. Moyses, jubente Domino, contra Aegypti regem in quantis se praedicationis liberae verbis erexit (Exod. V, 10); quod S. Stephanus Judaeis perfidiantibus diceret: Vos semper Spiritui sancto restitistis (Act. VII, 51), nec inter lapides timuit (Ibid., 57); quod S. Petrus, fustibus caesus, ne in nomine Jesu loqueretur, cum magna libertate respondit: Obedire oportet Deo magis quam hominibus (Ibid., V, 28, 29); quod S. Paulus catenarum vinculis stringitur (Philip. I, 14), sed tamen verbum Dei non est alligatum (II Tim. II, 9).

14. Si vitae spiritus ad poenitentiae lamenta compungit, sequuntur protinus et rotae, cum Scripturae sacrae verba S. David poenitentem proferunt; quod et reprehensus a propheta, quia subjectus coelesti Regi non fuit, subjecto increpanti non erubuit confiteri quod fecit (II Reg. XII, 13); quod publicanus, qui reatum suae nequitiae cognovit, etsi injustus ad templum venit, justificatus a templo rediit (Luc. XVIII, 13, 14); quod S. Petrus negationis maculas lacrymis lavit (Matth. XXVI, 75); quod latro qui in cruce cognovit culpam, in ipsa jam morte invenit veniam (Luc. XXIII, 43). De quibus adhuc rotis eadem propheta replicat, atque subjungit: VERS. 21. — Cum euntibus ibant, et cum stantibus stabant; et cum elevatis a terra pariter elevabantur et rotae, sequentes ea, quia spiritus vitae erat in rotis.

15. Haec, sicut nostis, fratres charissimi, ex maxima parte jam dicta sunt, sed iterata descriptione narrantur. Nec nos itaque pigeat eadem breviter exponendo repetere, quae spiritus per prophetam dignatus est replicando narrare. Hoc enim solum in his verbis novum additur, quod dictum est: Cum stantibus stabant. Sunt autem quidam qui usque ad hoc proficiunt, ut terrena quae acceperunt bene dispensare noverint, misericordiae operibus intendant, oppressis subveniant. Hi videlicet vadunt, in eo quod se ad proximi utilitatem tendunt. Cum his ergo rotae gradiuntur, quia sacra eloquia dictorum suorum passus in eorum itinere disponunt. Et sunt alii qui in fide quam acceperunt ita ad tenendum fortes sunt, ut adversis quibusque resistere valeant, et non solum minime ad perversitatem trahantur perfidiae, sed etiam perversa loquentes impugnent, eosque ad rectitudinem pertrahant. Cum istis stantibus stant etiam et rotae, quia eis rectitudinem suam sacri eloquii verba confirmant, cum in eis audiunt: State et tenete traditiones quas didicistis (II Thess. II, 15). Et rursum: Adversarius vester diabolus, tanquam leo rugiens, circuit quaerens quem devoret, cui resistite fortes in fide (I Petr. V, 8, 9). Et sunt alii qui omnia terrena despiciunt, nulla quae praetereunt, possidere dignantur, et in Dei se, ut praedictum est, contemplatione suspendunt. Cum his ergo elevatis et rotae pariter levantur, quia in quantum quisque ad alta profecerit, intantum ei et sacra eloquia de altioribus loquuntur. Vadunt ergo animalia ad utilitatem proximi, stant ad custodiam sui, elevantur ad contemplationem Dei.

16. Sed et rotae pariter vadunt, stant, elevantur, quia quaesita sacra lectio talis invenitur, qualis et fit ipse, a quo quaeritur. Ad activam enim vitam profecisti, ambulat tecum. Ad immobilitatem atque constantiam spiritus profecisti, stat tecum. Ad contemplativam vitam per Dei gratiam pervenisti, volat tecum. Et rursum subditur: Quia spiritus vitae erat in rotis. Quod idcirco secundo dicitur vitae spiritus in rotis esse, quia Scripturae sacrae duo sunt Testamenta, quae utraque Dei spiritus scribi voluit, ut nos a morte animae liberaret. Vel certe quia duo sunt praecepta charitatis, dilectio videlicet Dei, et dilectio proximi, per quae utraque nos sacrae Scripturae dicta vivificant. Secundo ergo dicitur quod spiritus vitae erat in rotis, quia dilectionem Dei et proximi capimus in eloquiis divinis. Per praecepta enim Scripturae sacrae reviviscimus, qui mortui in culpa jacebamus. Unde omnipotenti Domino per Psalmistam dicitur: In aeternum non obliviscar justificationes tuas, quia in ipsis vivificasti me (Psal. CXVIII, 93). Justificationes enim praecepta Domini dicuntur, in quibus nos corrigendo justificat. De quibus Psalmista apertius dicit: In tuis justificationibus meditabor, non obliviscar sermones tuos (Ibid., 16). In eis itaque nos vivificat, quia per haec nobis spiritualem vitam demonstrat, eamque per afflatum spiritus nostris mentibus infundit. Quod quia quotidie per donum gratiae in electorum mentibus agitur, recte dicitur: Spiritus vitae erat in rotis.

17. Haec nobis Scriptura in tenebris vitae praesentis facta est lumen itineris. Hinc etenim Petrus ait: Cui benefacitis intendentes, quasi lucernae lucenti in caliginoso loco (II Petr. I, 19). Hinc Psalmista dicit: Lucerna pedibus meis verbum tuum, Domine, et lumen semitis meis (Psal. CXVIII, 105). Scimus tamen quia et ipsa nobis nostra lucerna obscura est, nisi hanc nostris mentibus veritas illustret. Unde iterum Psalmista ait: Quoniam tu illuminas lucernam meam, Domine, Deus meus, illumina tenebras meas (Psal. XVII, 29). Quid enim lucerna ardens, nisi lumen est? Sed lumen creatum nobis non lucet, nisi illuminetur a lumine non creato. Quia ergo omnipotens Deus ad salutem nostram sanctorum Testamentorum dicta et ipse creavit, et ipse aperuit, spiritus vitae erat in rotis. Sequitur: VERS. 22. — Et similitudo super capita animalium firmamenti, quasi aspectus crystalli horribilis, extenti super capita eorum desuper.

18. Haec, largiente Domino, duobus modis exponemus, ut lectoris judicio quid eligendum censeat relinquamus. Possunt enim firmamenti nomine coelestes potestates intelligi. Quod firmamentum recte quasi aspectus crystalli dicitur, quia videlicet crystallum forte quidem nimis est, sed ex aqua solidatur. Et natura angelica, quando creata est, liberum arbitrium accepit, utrum vellet in humilitate persistere, et in omnipotentis Dei conspectu permanere, an ad superbiam laberetur, et a beatitudine caderet, per similitudinem aqua fuit. Sed quia cadentibus aliis, sancti angeli in sua beatitudine perstiterunt, atque hoc acceperunt in munere, ut jam cadere omnino non possint, in eis natura sua, quia jam duci mutabiliter non potest, quasi in magnitudinem crystalli durata est. Quod crystallum horribile et extensum super capita animalium dicitur, quia illae potestates angelicae, quae omnipotentis Dei conspectui assistunt, nobis adhuc in hac corruptione positis, terribiles atque pavendae sunt. Quarum nunc gaudia, quia sensum nostrarum mentium excedunt, super capita animalium esse memorantur. Quis enim in carne corruptibili positus comprehendere valeat quae sit illa angelorum ineffabilis et sine fine laetitia? quae beatitudo, sine defectu vultum videre creatoris, atque in ejus delectatione sine immutatione persistere?

19. Potest autem firmamenti nomine ipse per figuram noster Redemptor intelligi, verus Deus super omnia, et factus inter omnia homo perfectus, in quo nostra natura apud Patrem confirmata est. De quo etiam per Psalmistam prophetando dicitur: Fiat manus tua super virum dexterae tuae, et super filium hominis quem confirmasti tibi (Psal. LXXIX, 18). Humana etenim natura priusquam a creatore omnium susciperetur, terra erat; nam firmamentum non erat. Peccatori quippe homini dictum est: Terra es, et in terram ibis (Genes. III, 19). At postquam assumpta est ab auctore omnium, atque in coelis sublevata, et super angelos ducta, firmamentum facta est, quae terra fuit. Sed firmamentum quod aspicitur, cujus habeat similitudinem, subinfertur, cum dicitur: Quasi aspectus crystalli horribilis. Crystallum, sicut dictum est, ex aqua congelascit, et robustum fit. Scimus vero quanta sit aquae mobilitas. Corpus autem Redemptoris nostri, quia usque ad mortem passionibus subjacuit, aquae simile juxta aliquid fuit, quia nascendo, crescendo, lassescendo, esuriendo, sitiendo, moriendo, usque ad passionem suam per momenta temporum mobiliter decucurrit. Cujus cursum Propheta intuens, ait: Exsultavit ut gigas ad currendam viam (Psal. XVIII, 6). Sed quia per resurrectionis suae gloriam ex ipsa sua corruptione in incorruptionis virtutem convaluit, quasi crystalli more ex aqua duruit, ut in illo et haec eadem natura esset, et in ipsa quae jam fuerat corruptionis mutabilitas non esset. Aqua ergo in crystallum versa est, quando corruptionis ejus infirmitas per resurrectionem suam ad incorruptionis est firmitatem mutata.

20. Sed notandum quod hoc crystallum horribile, id est pavendum, dicitur. Quis autem nesciat cujus pulchritudinis sit crystallum? Et mirum quomodo in hoc crystallo conveniat pulchritudo cum pavore. Sed omnibus vera scientibus constat quia Redemptor humani generis cum judex apparuerit, et speciosus justis, et terribilis erit injustis. Quem enim mansuetum aspiciunt electi, hunc eumdem pavendum atque terribilem conspiciunt reprobi. Sed hunc ideo tunc electi terribilem non videbunt, quia modo terrorem illius considerare non cessant. Studiose enim considerant quam terribilis ad judicium veniat, culpas anteactas deflent, imminentes declinant; pavorem illius quotidie ante oculos mentis ponunt, et quam tremendus appareat sine cessatione suspecti sunt, atque quotidie timendo agunt ne quando venerit pertimescant. Similitudo ergo super capita animalium firmamenti quasi aspectus crystalli horribilis. Et quia ipse pavor ejus, quem in suis cogitationibus tenent, eorum mentes protegit, recte subjungitur: Extenti super capita eorum desuper. Firmamentum hoc quod in similitudinem crystalli super capita eorum animalium apparet, et horribile et extentum est, quia bonorum mentes unde terret, inde protegit. Si enim pavendus in eorum cordibus non esset, protector et modo a peccatis et post a suppliciis non fuisset. Quia autem semper considerant qui pavor ex judicio immineat, virtutum pennas in rectitudine conservant. Unde et apte mox subditur: VERS. 25. — Sub firmamento autem pennae eorum rectae alterius ad alterum. 21. Tunc pennae virtutum sub firmamento rectae sunt, quando bonum quod alter habet, hoc alteri impendit, ut qui terrenam substantiam accepit, indigentis proximi inopiam sublevet; qui doctrinae gratia plenus est, ignorantis proximi tenebras verbo suae praedicationis illustret, qui temporali potestate subnixus est, oppressos a violentiis relevet; qui prophetiae spiritu plenus est, a vita proximi mala imminentia, bona suadendo, declinet; qui gratiam curationis accepit, intercessione sua saluti infirmantium pie et humiliter impendat; qui, a terrenis actibus liber, soli Deo vacare meruit, pro delinquentibus proximis exoret. Fit autem saepe ut qui terrena substantia nimis occupatur orationi non quantum debet invigilet. Et fit plerumque ut is qui ad exorandum Dominum cunctis mundi oneribus exutus vacat sustentationem vivendi non habeat. Sed dum dives porrigit alimentum atque vestimentum pauperi, et dum pauper orationem suam animae divitis impendit, pennae animalium rectae alterius ad alterum tenduntur. Nam dum ille mihi verbum praedicationis exhibet, et lumine veritatis ex corde meo ignorantiae tenebras expellit, dumque illi ego, quia fortasse a mundi hujus potente opprimitur, solatium meae defensionis impertior, atque hunc de violentis manibus evello, vicissim nobis pennas nostras tendimus, ut nos affectu et ope vicaria ex bono quod accepimus tangamus. Unde bene primus pastor admonet, dicens: Omnium finis appropinquavit. Estote itaque prudentes, et vigilate in orationibus; ante omnia mutuam in vobismetipsis charitatem continuam habentes, quia charitas operit multitudinem peccatorum. Hospitales invicem sine murmurationibus. Unusquisque sicut accepit gratiam, in alterutrum illam administrantes (I Petr. IV, 7, seq.). Quod ergo apud Ezechielem penna, hoc apud Petrum apostolum accepta gratia dicitur. Et quod ille ait: Rectae pennae alterius ad alterum, hoc Ecclesiae pastor dicit: Unusquisque sicut accepit gratiam, in alterutrum illam administrantes (Ibid., 10). Pennae enim nostrae rectae jam non sunt, si ad utilitatem nostram solummodo reflectuntur. Sed tunc rectae fiunt, cum in utilitatem proximi dirigimus quod habemus. Quia enim bona nostra non a nobis sunt, sed ab eo haec accepimus a quo factum est ut essemus, tanto ea nobis non debemus retinere privata, quanto ea nobis conspicimus ab auctore nostro ad communem utilitatem data. Unde recte Petrus apostolus in exhortatione hujus rei subdit, dicens: Sicut boni dispensatores multiformis gratiae Dei (I Petr. IV, 10). Atque adhuc adjicit: Si quis loquitur, quasi sermones Dei; si quis ministrat, tanquam ex virtute quam administrat Deus (Ibid., 11). Ac si aperte dicat: Humiliter impendite bonum proximis, quia scitis vobis non a vobis esse quod habetis. Quaelibet enim penna virtutis cum ad proximum impertiendo tenditur, recta non erit, si humilitate caruerit. Sequitur: IBID. — Unumquodque duabus alis velabat corpus suum, et alterum similiter velabatur.

22. Quia per corpus actio, per alas vero virtutes signentur, supra jam diximus (Hom. 4, n. 5). Et cum dicat: Sub firmamento autem pennae eorum recte alterius ad alterum, quaerendum est qualiter subditur: Unumquodque duabus alis velabat corpus suum. Qua in re hoc patenter indicatur, quia et pennas alius ad alterum tendebant, et tamen duabus alis corpus proprium velabant. Quid est hoc, nisi quia sic debemus virtutes quas accepimus, aliis impendere, ut ea in quibus peccavimus, non desinamus caute cogitare, et reatum nostrum quotidie per timorem et poenitentiam plangere? Duas enim alas superius, quibus corpus velatur, timorem et poenitentiam diximus. Sic ergo in charitate crescamus, ut pennas tendamus in proximos; et nunquam desinamus cogitare et plangere nosmetipsos. Pennae tendantur juxta, pennae cooperiant corpora, ut et de bonis actibus praebeamus exempla, et mala quae egimus abscondant a judicio timor et poenitentia. In translatione autem veteri de his alis dicitur: Singulis duae conjunctae, et tegentes corpora eorum. In quibus verbis intelligitur quia et ipsae erant pennae quae jungebantur alterius ad alterum, et ipsae quae eorum corpora cooperiebant. Quod per figuram bene accipitur, quia illae nos virtutes apud omnipotentem Deum protegunt, quas ex charitate proximis impertimur atque conjungimus; cum quibus dum concorditer vivimus, mala quae fecimus velamus. Possunt ergo etiam per has alas duo praecepta charitatis intelligi, amor scilicet Dei, et proximi. Amando enim Deum, nostra in nobis mala persequimur, id est corpus velamus. Diligendo autem proximum, ei in quo prodesse possumus festinamus, id est alas ad alterum tendimus.

23. Hoc autem quod subditur, Et alterum similiter velabatur, in translatione veteri non habetur. Et quaeri potest cur postquam dictum est: Unumquodque duabus alis velabat corpus suum, subjungitur: Et alterum similiter velabatur. Translationem autem Septuaginta interpretum, Aquilae, Theodotionis, et Symmachi sollicite perscrutantes, nihil ex his verbis invenimus; sed beati Hieronymi scripta relegentes agnovimus quia hanc sententiam in Hebraea veritate ita positam, non quidem juxta verbum, sed juxta sensum invenerit. Quaeri etenim potest cur postquam dictum est: Unumquodque velabat corpus suum, statim subditur: Et alterum similiter velabatur. Si enim diceret unum et alterum, loquendi ratio staret. Postquam vero dictum est Unumquodque, cur adjicitur alterum, cum in unoquoque omnes comprehenduntur? Sed si et perfectorum vitam, et proficientium merita distinguimus, et unumquodque et alterum non irrationabiliter positum videmus. Qui enim et sua deflent, et virtutum pennas ad proximos in exemplum tendunt, procul dubio perfecti sunt. Sunt autem plerique parvulorum qui eorum lacrymas conspiciunt et imitantur. Et qui nudi in suis pravitatibus esse potuissent, sanctos vigilantioresque viros considerant; moxque suis pravitatibus irati, accenduntur ut plangant, et inflammantur ad poenitentiam. Atque ut velare sanctos corpora sua conspiciunt, ita ipsi quoque lacrymarum suarum alis velantur. Seipsos enim magnis increpationibus feriunt; cur qui virtutes non habent peccata sua minime deplorant, si adhuc et illi plangere non desinunt, qui jam virtutum pennas per exempla ad proximos tendunt.

24. In quibus verbis necesse est ut nos qui parvuli adhuc sumus perfectorum semper et virtutes et lacrymas ante mentis nostrae oculos ponamus. Imitemur quae in fillis aspicimus, ut dum coeperimus per incrementa crescere, possimus ab illo districto examine mala quae fecimus velare. In assiduis enim fletibus, in quotidiana nostra poenitentia habemus sacerdotem in coelis, qui interpellat pro nobis. De quo etiam per Joannem dicitur: Si quis peccaverit, advocatum habemus apud Patrem, Jesum Christum justum, et ipse est propitiatio pro peccatis nostris (I Joan. II, 1). Ecce exsultat animus cum advocati nostri potentiam audimus. Sed exsultationem nostram iterum remordet timor, quia ipse qui nobis advocatus est dicitur justus. Nos enim causas injustas habemus, justus vero advocatus injustas causas nullo modo suscipit, nec verba dare pro injustitia consentit. Quid ergo agimus, charissimi fratres mei? Sed ecce occurrit animo quid agamus. Mala quae fecimus, et deseramus, et accusemus. Scriptum est: Justus in principio accusator est sui (Prov. XVIII, 17). Quilibet etenim peccator conversus in fletibus jam justus esse inchoat cum coeperit accusare quod fecit. Cur enim justus non sit qui contra suam injustitiam jam per lacrymas saevit? Justus igitur advocatus noster justos nos defendet in judicio, quia nosmetipsos et cognoscimus et accusamus injustos. Non ergo in fletibus, non in actibus nostris, sed in advocati nostri allegatione confidamus, qui vivit et regnat cum Patre in unitate Spiritus sancti Deus, per omnia saecula saeculorum. Amen.

HOMILIA VIII

A versu 24 quae supersunt capitis primi explicantur, cum initio capitis secundi; et de Christi divinitate, de verbi Incarnatione, de praedicatione, de Ecclesiae congregatione, multiplicatione, unitate, plurimis disseritur.

Quod per exempla justorum multi proficiunt, superioris locutionis fine tractatum est. Atque hoc ipsum propheta nobis certius aperit cum his quae dixerat adjungit: VERS. 24. — Et audiebam sonum alarum, quasi sonum aquarum multarum.

1. Solent in sacro eloquio per aquas, populi designari. Unde per Joannem dicitur: Aquae vero sunt populi (Apoc. XVII, 15). Idcirco autem aquis populus designatur, quia et in vita sonum habet ex tumultu carnis, et quotidie defluit ex decursu mortalitatis. Ut autem saepe jam diximus, alae sunt animalium, virtutes sanctorum. Quid est ergo quod propheta alarum sonum audit quas sonum aquarum multarum, nisi quod omnipotentis Dei pietate illae alae virtutum, quae in paucis prius sanctis sonabant, etiam nunc praedicatione diffusa, in multarum populorum conversatione resonant? Incarnato enim, passo, ac resurgente Domino, pauca pennata animalia fuerunt, quia rari valde exstiterunt, qui coelestia desiderarent, et virtutum pennis se in alta suspenderent. Sed postquam divinitatis ejus praedicatio in mundo diffusa est, quanti jam parvuli, quanti graviores, quanti fortes juvenes, quanti imbecilles, quantae conversae peccatrices, quantae anus virgines per fidem, per spem, per amorem ad coelestia evolant, quis dicere, quis aestimare sufficiat? Ecce alarum sonitus, qui prius in paucis animalibus fuit, jam nunc in populis resonat, jam nunc mundi multitudinem ad coeleste desiderium pennae virtutum levant. Bene ergo dicitur: Et audiebam sonum alarum, quasi sonum aquarum multarum, quia, sicut praefati sumus, ille virtutum sonus qui in aurem Dei prius ex paucis sanctis factus est, postmodum ex aquis multis id est ex innumerabilibus est populis multiplicatus. De quo sono adhuc bene additur: IBID. — Quasi sonum sublimis Dei.

2. Quid est quod alarum sonus in sanctis animalibus quasi sonus sublimis Dei dicitur, nisi quod omnipotens Deus et ipse implet mentes sanctorum coelesti desiderio, et ipse exaudit impletas? Ipse etenim creat in sanctorum cordibus amorem, et ipse ex amantibus cordibus precem suscipit. Negationem suam Petrus flevit amare, sed tamen illic praemittitur quia Jesus respexit Petrum (Luc. XXII, 61, 62). Venit Maria Magdalene post multas maculas culpae, ad pedes Redemptoris nostri cum lacrymis (Ibid., VII, 38); sed quis illam infudit intus, nisi qui benigne suscepit foris? Quis illam ad lacrymas urgebat per compunctionis spiritum, nisi qui hanc exterius coram simul recumbentibus recipiebat ad veniam? Redemptor igitur noster peccatricis mulieris mentem extrahebat cum de culpa compungeret, suscipiebat ut a culpa liberaret. Bene ergo iste alarum sonus quasi sonus sublimis Dei dicitur, quia quidquid in sanctorum virtutibus agitur, ejus est gratiae qui merita largitur:

3. Qui recte per prophetam sublimis Deus esse memoratur. In Scriptura etenim sacra aliquando Deus nuncupative, aliquando vero essentialiter dicitur. Nuncupative enim dicitur, sicut scriptum est: Ecce constitui te deum Pharaonis (Exod. VII, 1). Et sicut Moyses ait: Si quis hoc vel illud fecerit, applica illum ad deos, videlicet ad sacerdotes (Exod. XXII, 8). Qui rursum dicit: Diis non detrahes (Ibid., 28), id est sacerdotibus. Et sicut Psalmista ait: Deus stetit in synagoga deorum, in medio autem deos dijudicat (Psal. LXXXI, 1). Essentialiter autem Deus dicitur, sicut ipse ad S. Moysen dicit: Ego sum Deus patris tui, Deus Abraham, Deus Isaac, Deus Jacob (Exod. III, 6). Unde Paulus apostolus volens nuncupativum Dei nomen ab essentiali discernere, de Redemptore nostro locutus est, dicens: Quorum patres, ex quibus Christus secundum carnem, qui est super omnia Deus benedictus in saecula (Rom. IX, 5). Qui enim nuncupative dicitur Deus, inter omnia; qui vero essentialiter, Deus super omnia est. Ut ergo ostenderet Christum naturaliter Deum, non hunc Deum tantummodo, sed Deum super omnia esse memoravit, quia et electus quisque, sicut praemisimus, vel in exemplo justitiae praerogando positus dici Deus potest, sed inter omnia, quoniam nuncupative deus; Christus autem Deus est super omnia, quia naturaliter Deus. Quem ergo Paulus Deum super omnia, hunc Ezechiel propheta Deum sublimem nominat. Postquam vero dictum est: Audiebam sonum alarum, quasi sonum aquarum multarum, quia adhuc additur: Quasi sonum sublimis Dei, etiam hoc intelligere possumus quod futurum electis omnibus scimus. Alarum etenim sonitus, sicut diximus, fuit in praedicatoribus sanctis: aquarum sonitus, in conversis et sequentibus populis. Sed idem ipse sonitus erit quandoque sonus sublimis Dei, quia multitudo, quae nunc ad fidem per sanctos doctores trahitur, quandoque in coelestem patriam congregabitur, ut ibi omnes electi sine fine laudent, cum viderint sine fine quem laudent. Et quia tunc perfecte corpus Redemptoris efficitur omnis multitudo sanctorum, juxta Pauli vocem dicentis: Quia et ipsa creatura liberabitur a servitute corruptionis in libertatem gloriae filiorum Dei (Rom. VIII, 21); eique ita tunc inhaerent, ut eis de corruptione, quae per resurrectionem vincitur, jam nihil in suo sancto amore contradicat, sed unita gloriae sui Redemptoris fiat; recte dicitur: Quasi sonum sublimis Dei.

4. Notandus est ordo describentis, quia prius sonus ex alis animalium, qui postmodum quasi sonus aquarum multarum, ad extremum vero quasi sonus sublimis Dei dicitur. Quod enim prius praedicaverunt sancti, hoc postmodum crediderunt atque tenuerunt conversi ad fidem populi, qui ad extremum quoque liberatori omnium reddent laudem in coelestia sublevati. Sonus itaque animalium fit quasi sonus aquarum, et sonus aquarum fit quasi sonus sublimis Dei, quia laudem omnipotentis Domini, quam prius in mundo pauci, hanc postmodum multi clamaverunt. Et quam nunc multi clamant, cum adhuc eis in semetipsis sua corruptio repugnat, hanc in coelestem patriam electi omnes suo jam capiti uniti resonabunt. Adhuc autem sanctorum animalium opera virtutesque describuntur, cum subditur: IBID. — Cum ambularent, quasi sonus erat multitudinis, ut sonitus castrorum.

5. Si per sonitum sublimis Dei laus nostri creatoris in coelesti patria designatur, mirandum non est quod rursus ad sanctorum opera in hac adhuc vita viventium propheticus sermo refunditur, quia sanctus Spiritus in corde prophetarum, quod simul ostendit intus, non simul ejicit per linguam foras. Aqua quippe scientiae qua prophetantis animus repletur, in contemplatione vehementer exuberat. Sed quia angustum est spiritui omne os hominis, id est foramen carnis, ad explendam illam immensitatemquae conspicitur, proferendo lingua variatur. Postquam ergo sonum alarum quasi sonum sublimis Dei esse conspexit in coelis, rursus ad terras redit, et pennata animalia quid hic agant loquitur, ut illic summo mereantur, dicens: Cum ambularent, quasi sonus erat multitudinis, ut sonitus castrorum. Cum praedicatores sancti mundum praedicando et trahendo circumeunt, animalia ambulant. Et quia hi etiam quos colligunt, statim ut crediderint, in laudem nostri creatoris exsurgunt, fit sonus quasi sonus multitudinis. Et quia in praedicatione eadem bellum contra aereas potestates sumunt, recte subjungitur: Ut sonitus castrorum. Cum enim sanctis praedicatoribus fideles populi conjunguntur, contra malignos spiritus in procinctu fidei multitudines castrorum fiunt. Et dum quotidie fideles quique coelestibus desideriis replentur, terrena despiciunt, dura sibi pro amore supernae patriae proponunt, contra potestates aereas castra fiunt, quia armati fide et bonis operibus muniti gradiuntur. Quasi enim quibusdam castris spiritalis exercitus per Paulum dicitur: Induite vos armaturam Dei, ut possitis stare adversus insidias diaboli, quia non est nobis colluctatio adversus carnem et sanguinem, sed adversus principes et potestates, adversus mundi rectores tenebrarum harum, contra spiritalia nequitiae in coelestibus (Eph. VI, 11, 12).

6. Sanctorum ergo multitudines castra sunt; quae bellum contra potestates aereas susceperunt. Unde et sancta universalis Ecclesia ita sub specie dilectae describitur, ut dicatur: Pulchra es, amica mea, suavis et decora sicut Jerusalem, terribilis ut castrorum acies ordinata (Cant. VI, 3). Quia enim Jerusalem pacis visio interpretatur, cujus nomine patria coelestis exprimitur, sancta Ecclesia suavis et decora ut Jerusalem dicitur, quia ejus vita et desiderium, visioni jam pacis intimae comparatur, ut in eo quod auctorem suum diligit, quod ejus speciem videre concupiscit, de quo scriptum est: In quem desiderant angeli prospicere (I Petr. I, 12), per ipsa jam amoris sui desideria angelis similis dicatur: quae quanto Deo amabilis efficitur, tanto agit ut malignis spiritibus terribilis fiat. Qualiter autem sit terribilis, subjuncta comparatione ostenditur, id est, Ut castrorum acies ordinata (Cant. VI, 5). Quid est quod sancta Ecclesia hostibus suis ut castrorum acies sit timenda? Non enim a magno intellectu vacat ista comparatio, et idcirco est subtiliter intuenda. Scimus enim et constat quia castrorum acies tunc hostibus terribilis ostenditur, quando ita fuerit constipata atque densata, ut in nullo loco interrupta videatur. Nam si ita disponitur, ut locus vacuus per quem hostis possit ingredi dimittatur, profecto jam suis hostibus terribilis non est. Et nos ergo cum contra malignos spiritus spiritalis certaminis aciem ponimus, summopere necesse est ut per charitatem semper uniti atque constricti, et nunquam interrupti per discordiam inveniamur, quia quaelibet bona in nobis opera fuerint, si charitas desit, per malum discordiae locus aperitur in acie, unde ad feriendos nos valeat hostis intrare.

7. Antiquus vero inimicus castitatem in nobis, si sine charitate fuerit, non timet, quia ipse nec carne premitur, ut in ejus luxuria dissolvatur. Abstinentiam non timet, quia ipse cibo non utitur, qui necessitate corporis non urgetur. Distributionem terrenarum rerum non timet, si eidem operi charitas desit, quia divitiarum subsidiis nec ipse eget. Valde autem in nobis charitatem veram, id est amorem humilem quem nobis vicissim impendimus timet, et nimis concordiae nostrae invidet, quia hanc nos tenemus in terra, quam ipse tenere nolens amisit in coelo. Bene ergo dicitur: Terribilis ut castrorum acies ordinata (Cant. VI, 9), quia electorum multitudinem eo maligni spiritus pertimescunt, quo eos per charitatis concordiam unitos contra se et conglobatos aspiciunt.

8. Quanta autem sit concordiae virtus ostenditur, cum sine illa virtutes reliquae, virtutes non esse monstrantur. Magna enim est virtus abstinentiae; sed si quis ita ab alimentis abstineat, ut caeteros in cibo dijudicet, et alimenta eadem quae Deus creavit ad percipiendum cum gratiarum actione fidelibus etiam damnet (Rom. XIV, 3, 6), quid huic virtus abstinentiae facta est nisi laqueus culpae? Unde Psalmista quoque nullam esse abstinentiam sine concordia designans, ait: Laudate eum in tympano et choro (Psal. CL, 4). In tympano enim corium siccum resonat, in choro autem voces concorditer cantant. Quid ergo per tympanum nisi abstinentia, et quid per chorum nisi charitatis concordia designatur? Qui itaque sic abstinentiam tenet, ut concordiam deserat, laudat quidem in tympano, sed non laudat in choro. Et sunt nonnulli qui dum plus sapere quam necesse est student, a proximorum pace resiliunt, dum eos velut habetes stultosque contemnunt. Unde per se Veritas admonet, dicens: Habete in vobis sal, et pacem habete inter vos (Marc. IX, 49), ut quisquis habere sal sapientiae studet, curet necesse est quatenus a pace concordiae nunquam recedat. Quod vero de his duabus virtutibus diximus, hoc de caeteris omnibus sentiendum est. Unde Paulus terribiliter admonet, dicens: Pacem sequimini cum omnibus, et sanctimoniam, sine qua nemo videbit Deum (Hebr. XII, 14).

9. Quia autem nil sine concordia Deo placeat. ipsa per se Veritas demonstrat, dicens: Si offers munus tuum ad altare, et ibi recordatus fueris quia frater tuus habet aliquid adversum te, relinque ibi munus tuum ad altare, et vade prius reconciliari fratri tuo, et tunc veniens offeres munus tuum (Matth. V, 23, 24). Ecce a discordantibus accipere non vult sacrificium, holocaustum suscipere recusat. Hinc ergo perpendite, quantum sit malum discordiae, propter quod et illud abjicitur, per quod culpa laxatur. Quia vero electi semper in charitate conjuncti sunt, et haec eadem eorum charitas sonum laudis reddit auctori, malignis vero spiritibus, id est antiquis suis hostibus poenam incutit timoris, recte nunc de pennatis animalibus dicitur: Cum ambularent, quasi sonus erat multitudinis, ut sonitus castrorum.

10. Libet autem ab exortu sanctae Ecclesiae fidei oculo usque ad finem mundi tendere, et haec eadem castra quomodo ambulent videre. Castra enim multitudines appellantur exercitus, cum in procinctu pergunt, aut in certo quolibet loco in itinere demorantur. Castris ergo via est vita praesentis saeculi, omnibus concorditer viventibus sanctis. Alia autem sunt castra praedicantium, qui huc illucque pro colligendis animabus in sancti operis procinctu laborant. Alia castra continentium, atque ab hoc mundo recedentium, qui contra malignorum spirituum bella quotidie in corde se praeparant. Alia castra bonorum conjugatorum, qui viventes in amore omnipotentis Dei concorditer, sic vicissim sibi carnis debitum solvunt, ut tamen quid Deo de bonis operibus debeant, nullatenus obliviscantur. Sed et si qua ut homines delinquunt, haec incessanter piis actibus redimunt. Quia ergo distincti fidelium ordines, ab exortu sanctae Ecclesiae usque ad finem mundi concorditer viventes, contra potestates aereas dimicant, castra ambulant; et fit quasi quidam castrorum sonitus, quia in eis ad laudem omnipotentis Dei et virtutum gladii et arma miraculorum sonant. De sanctis vero animalibus adhuc subditur: IBID. — Cumque starent, demittebantur pennae eorum.

11. Stant sancta animalia quando ea quae Dei sunt intenta contemplatione considerant. Sed eorum pennae deponuntur, quia dum alta Dei judicia aspiciunt, suae eis virtutes vilescunt. Quod aperte exponitur cum statim subditur: VERS. 25. — Nam cum fieret vox super firmamentum quod erat super caput eorum, stabant et submittebant alas suas.

12. Firmamentum superius sub intellectu duplici judicavimus exponendum. Possunt enim, sicut dictum est (Hom. 1, n. 18, 19), firmamenti nomine coelestes potestates intelligi. Et potest firmamenti nomine incarnatus Unigenitus, per hoc quod in eum natura nostra ad aeternitatem firmata est, designari. Prius ergo quid sentimus de angelis, et postmodum de Domino angelorum, loquamur. Ecce enim dicitur: Cum fieret vox super firmamentum, stabant, et submittebant alas suas. Quo in loco, hoc primo sciendum est, quia submittere, non ab inferiori ad superiora tendere, sed a superiori ad inferiora alas deponere debet intelligi, propter hoc quod praemissum est: Cum starent demittebantur pennae eorum. Quaerendum itaque nobis est quae sit vox quae super firmamentum fit. Sed eamdem vocem melius intelligimus, si, ab imis ad superiora gradientes, quasi quibusdam passibus ascendamus. Sicut auditus corporis excitatur voce, ita sensus mentis excitatur intellectu, qui de interioribus agitur. Vox ergo est in mente, quasi quidam sonus intelligentiae. Sed sciendum est quia nostris sensibus aliquando vox carnis loquitur, aliquando vox animae, aliquando vox firmamenti, aliquando vox quae super firmamentum est.

13. Ponamus enim ante oculos quod quispiam sit laesus a proximo, qui ex humana ratione cogitat ut vicem laesioni reddat, malum pro malo retribuat, huic vox carnis loquitur in mente, quia cum divina mandata praecipiant bene nos facere his qui nos oderunt (Matth. V, 44), quisquis malefacere se odientibus cogitat, in ejus animo vox carnis sonat. Multa terrena quotidie agimus, post haec ad orationem redimus. Accenditur ad compunctionem animus, sed earum rerum quas egimus imagines versantur in mente, et intentionem compunctionis praepediunt in oratione; et quod volentes foris egimus, hoc interius patimur inviti, ut quaedam cogitationum phantasmata mentem per imagines corporeas dispergant, ne stricte totam in oratione se colligat. Haec quoque vox carnis est.

14. Cum vero et ista subigimus, atque ab oculis mentis cunctas corporeas imagines effugamus, ipsam in nobismetipsis naturam animae quaerentes, qualis sit quae carnem vivificare potest, sed semetipsam stringere in bonis cogitationibus sicut desiderat non potest, invenimus quemdam intellectualem spiritum per creatoris potentiam viventem, corpus quod sustinet vivificantem, sed tamen oblivioni subditum, mutabilitati subjectum, quem saepe timor afficit, laetitia extollit. Ipse itaque intellectus animae vox ejus est, quia sonat quod est, quae tamen adhuc vox sub firmamento est.

15. Sed transcendentes animam, vocem de firmamento quaerimus, cum illa sanctorum angelorum innumera multitudo in omnipotentis Domini conspectu qualis sit investigamus, quae sit in eis sine fine festivitas visionis Domini, quae laetitia sine defectu, qui amoris ardor non crucians, sed delectans; quantum in eis sit desiderium visionis Dei cum satietate, et quanta satietas cum desiderio. In quibus nec desiderium poenam generat, nec satietas fastidium parit. Quomodo inhaerendo beatitudini sint beati, quomodo contemplando semper aeternitatem sint aeterni, quomodo conjuncti vero lumini facti sint lux, quomodo aspicientes semper incommutabilem mutati sint in incommutabilitatem. Sed cum ista de angelis cogitamus, adhuc vox de firmamento est, non super firmamentum.

16. Transeat ergo animus, et ab ipsis transcendat omne quod creatum est. In solo creatoris sui lumine fidei oculos figat, quod unus vivificet omnia qui creavit Deus; quod ubique est et ubique totus est; quod incircumscriptus et incomprehensibilis sentiri potest, et videri non potest; quod nusquam deest, et tamen ab iniquorum cogitationibus longe est; quod nec ibi deest, ubi longe est, quia ubi non est per gratiam, adest per vindictam; quod omnia

tangit, nec tamen aequaliter omnia tangit. Quaedam enim tangit ut sint, nec tamen ut vivant et sentiant, sicut sunt cuncta insensibilia. Quaedam tangit ut sint, vivant, et sentiant, nec tamen ut discernant, sicut sunt bruta animalia. Quaedam tangit ut sint, vivant, et sentiant, et discernant, sicut est humana et angelica natura. Et cum ipse nunquam sibimetipsi sit dissimilis, dissimiliter tamen tangit dissimilia. Quod ubique praesens est, et inveniri vix potest; quod stantem sequimur, et apprehendere non valemus. Ponamus ergo ante oculos mentis quae illa natura sit quae tenet omnia, implet omnia, circumplectitur omnia, superexcedit omnia, sustinet omnia. Nec alia ex parte sustinet, atque alia superexcedit; neque alia ex parte implet, atque alia circumplectitur; sed circumplectendo implet, implendo circumplectitur, sustinendo superexcedit, superexcedendo sustinet. Hujus naturae potentiam cum strictus in ea cogitat animus, vox super firmamentum fit, quia ejus intellectum concipit, qui et angelorum sensum sua incomprehensibilitate transcendit.

17. Cum ergo vox super firmamentum fit, stant animalia, et submittunt alas suas, quia sanctorum mentes cum creatoris sui potentiam intenta contemplatione considerant, vilescunt eorum animo virtutes quas habent; et tanto fiunt apud se humiles, quanto eis illud altum est quod super angelos sonat. Fortasse enim doctores sunt; sed cum coeperint tacita mente cogitare quae sit ineffabilis Dei sapientia, quae mentes hominum sine strepitu verborum docet, et quomodo haec eadem sapientia si auditorum mentes non doceat, vox docentium vacue laborat, sua eis doctrina protinus vilescit, quia neque qui plantat est aliquid, neque qui rigat, sed qui incrementum dat Deus (I Cor. III, 7). Fortasse prophetae sunt; sed cum tacita mente considerant quia prophetiae suae oculo simul omnia Divinitatis mysteria penetrare non possunt, quoniam sicut ait Apostolus: Ex parte cognoscimus, et ex parte prophetamus (I Cor. XIII, 9), in illa immensitate secretorum vident quia parum est omne quod vident, atque ex ipsa immensa altitudine luminis considerant quam minus sit illud quod intento oculo quasi per rimas viderunt. Deponant ergo alas suas, cum vox super firmamentum fit, id est humilientur in eo quod apprehendunt cum superna conspiciunt quae ab eis comprehendi non possunt.

18. Saepe etiam sanctorum cogitationibus ipsa quae habent bona blandiuntur, ut eorum mentes in aliqua sui fiducia elevent; sed protinus ad occulta Dei judicia, recurrunt, quomodo alii ex virtutibus ad infernum per elationem corruunt, alii ex vitiis correcti ad coelum per humilitatem levantur. Unde nos ad humilitatem revocans Propheta terret et admonet, dicens: Venite, et videte opera Domini, quam terribilis in consiliis super filios hominum (Psal. LXV, 5). Quis enim digne considerare valeat quantus super nos terror sit consiliorum Dei, quando et alter ex virtutibus in finem tendit ad vitia, et alter ex vitiis in virtutibus concludit finem? Quia juxta Salomonis vocem: Sunt justi atque sapientes, et opera eorum in manu Dei. Nec tamen scit homo utrum amore vel odio dignus sit, sed omnia in futuro servantur incerta (Eccle. IX, 1), Et: Est via quae videtur hominibus recta, et novissimum ejus ducit ad mortem (Prov. XIV, 12). Haec itaque occulti judicii profunda cogitare, quid est aliud quam alas deponere, id est de nulla jam virtute confidere, sed sub magno timore trepidare? Sive enim omnipotentis Dei naturam considerent, sive ejus judicia perpendant, trepidant, pertimescunt. Eis ergo quasi alas deponere est virtutes quas habent humiliare.

19. Sic Abraham alas deposuit, qui quando loqui cum Deo coepit, pulverem et cinerem se esse cognovit dicens: Loquar ad Dominum meum, cum sim pulvis et cinis (Genes. XVIII, 27)? Sic Moyses alas deposuit, qui eruditus omni scientia Aegyptiorum (Act. VII, 22), mox ut verba Domini audivit, verba se non habere deprehendit, dicens: Obsecro, Domine, non sum eloquens ab heri et nudiustertius. Ex quo enim locutus es ad servum tuum, impeditioris et tardioris linguae sum (Exod. IV, 10). Ac si aperte diceret: Postquam a te verba vitae audio, confusum me in verbis prioribus agnosco. Sic Isaias, cujus vita Domino ad praedicandum placuerat, cum, eumdem Dominum contemplatus, carbone de altari in ore tactus est, ait: Vae mihi quia tacui, quia vir pollutus labiis ego sum (Isai. VI, 3). Ecce ad superiora sublevatus, sibimetipsi de labiorum pollutione displicuit. Nisi enim coelestis munditiae alta conspiceret, esse se judicabilem non invenisset. Sic loquente Domino Jeremias clamat: A, a, a, Domine Deus, ecce nescio loqui, quia puer ego sum (Jerem., I, 6). Juxta enim ea verba quae audiebat verba se non habere cognoverat. Sic Daniel sublimem visionem videns, per plurimos dies elanguit et aegrotavit (Dan. VIII, 27), quia hi qui in virtutibus fortes sunt, cum altiora Dei conspiciunt, in sua sibimet aestimatione infirmi atque imbecilles fiunt. Sic beatus Job, de quo Dominus amicis illius dixit: Non estis locuti coram me rectum, sicut servus meus (Job. XLII, 7), cum verba Dei colloquentis audiret, respondit, dicens: Insipienter locutus sum, et quae ultra modum excederent scientiam meam (Ibid., 3). Et paulo post: Idcirco ipse me reprehendo, et ago poenitentiam in favilla et cinere (Ibid., 6). Qui enim quantum ad homines sapienter locutus fuerat, loquentem sibi Deum audiens, insipienter se locutum fuisse reprehendit, quia in contemplatione verae sapientiae sua ei sapientia viluit. Ad vocem ergo desuper venientem animalia alas deponunt, quia virtutem Dei sive in natura sua contemplari requiramus, sive in occultis judiciis investigare cogitemus, pro eo quod ejus alta nobis impenetrabilia sunt, nostra nobis si qua inesse bona credebantur vilescunt. Et qui in quantulacunque scientia volare credebamur, invisibilem super nos naturam, et impenetrabilia ejus judicia perpendentes, submissis alis humiliter stamus. Sequitur: VERS. 26. — Et super firmamentum quod erat imminens capiti eorum, quasi aspectus lapidis sapphiri, similitudo throni; et super similitudinem throni, similitudo quasi aspectus hominis desuper.

20. Quid per thronum nisi illae virtutes angelicae designantur, quae ipsos quoque angelos dignitate loci superioris excedunt? Nam cum angeli nuntii dicantur, et saepe angeli ad annuntianda quaedam hominibus veniant, throni missi ad ministerium nuntii nusquam leguntur, quia eis longe sublimius creator omnium praesidet. Unde Paulus apostolus ordines coelestium agminum, quos ad tertium coelum raptus viderat, describens, ait: Sive throni, sive dominationes, sive principatus, sive potestates, omnia per ipsum, et in ipso creata sunt (Col. I, 16). Thronos igitur ante eos angelorum ordines dixit, quibus illos praelatos esse cognovit. Bene autem thronus lapidi sapphiro comparatur, quoniam lapis sapphirus aereum habet colorem. Virtutes ergo coelestium lapide sapphiro designantur, quia hi spiritus, quibus Deus omnipotens altius praesidet, superioris loci in coelestibus dignitatem tenent. Super thronum vero similitudo hominis, quia et super illas virtutes, quae et ipsos angelos antecedunt, nostri est gloria Redemptoris. Notandum ergo qui ordo servatur. Super animalia enim firmamentum, super firmamentum thronus, super thronum homo esse describitur, quia et super sanctos homines adhuc in hac corruptione corporis viventes angeli, et super angelos superiores et Deo proximae angelicae potestates, super potestates vero Deo proximas elevatus est Mediator Dei et hominum homo Christus Jesus.

21. Sin vero, ut praediximus, firmamenti nomine Mediator Dei et hominum pro assumpta humanitate debet intelligi, quia sub unius nominis appellatione solent per prophetiae spiritum multa signari, vox super firmamentum facta est, quae super baptizatum Dominum de coelo sonuit, dicens: Tu es Filius meus dilectus, in te complacui (Luc. III, 22). Vel sicut per evangelistam alium dicitur: Hic est Filius meus dilectus, in quo mihi complacui (Matth. III, 17). Quaeramus igitur quomodo hanc vocem animalia audiunt, et alas deponunt. Habacuc propheta requisitus dicat: Domine, audivi auditum tuum, et timui; consideravi opera tua, et expavi (Habac. III, 1). Quid est autem quod Pater de Filio loquitur, dicens: In quo mihi complacui? Omnis enim qui poenitendo corrigit aliqua quae fecit, eo ipso quod poenitet, se sibi displicuisse indicat, quia emendat quod fecit. Et quia omnipotens Pater, sicut intelligi ab hominibus poterat, humano modo de peccatoribus locutus est, dicens: Poenitet me fecisse hominem super terram (Genes. VI, 6), quasi sibimetipsi displicuit in peccatoribus quos creavit. In solo autem sibi unigenito Domino nostro Jesu Christo complacuit, quia hunc inter homines hominem creasse eum non poenituit, in quo peccatum nullum omnimodo invenit, sicut de illo per Psalmistam dicitur: Juravit Dominus et non poenitebit eum, tu es sacerdos in aeternum secundum ordinem Melchisedech (Psal. CIX, 4). In solo ergo sibi Redemptore nostro complacuit Pater, quia in eo solo non invenit culpam, in qua se reprehendat quasi per poenitentiam.

22. Sancta itaque animalia vocem super firmamentum audiant, et pertimescant, quia si solus sine peccato est, in ejus innocentia aspiciunt in quantis ipsa quotidie delinquant, quae necesse est ut incessanter defleant. Considerent quoque quia et ipse auctor vitae sine passionis dolore ex hac vita non exiit. Et haec ergo vox super firmamentum facta est, quia omnipotentis Patris sententia etiam de morte ac resurrectione Unigeniti processit. Sed cum vox super firmamentum fit, stant animalia, et submittunt alas suas, quia sancti quique cum ipsum quoque Unigenitum flagellatum in hoc mundo conspiciunt, deponunt si quid de suis meritis praesumunt. Nam si ipse hinc sine flagello non exiit, qui venit sine peccato, quomodo flagellis digni non erunt, qui huc cum peccato venerunt? Ipsum ergo firmamentum, quod est super caput animalium, id est quod transcendit mentes sanctorum, habet super se vocem, quia Redemptor noster eam quam cum Patre disposuit ex divinitate sententiam pertulit in carne, quam audientes justi terrentur, et omnem de suis viribus praesumptionem deponunt. Quibuslibet etenim virtutibus polleat, quid digna est vita peccatorum, si et ejus vita pro nobis flagello subjacuit, quae subdita nulli peccato fuit?

23. Sed ecce gravis nobis quaestio oritur, cum dicitur quia super firmamentum quod erat imminens capiti eorum, quasi aspectus lapidis sapphiri, similitudo throni. Si enim per firmamentum Dominus, et per lapidem sapphirum, et similitudinem throni summae illae potestates angelicae figurantur, quomodo super firmamentum, id est super Dominum esse credendae sunt, cum et mox subditur: Et super similitudinem throni, similitudo quasi aspectus hominis desuper? Nam si ita, ut dictum est, per firmamentum exprimitur Dominus, et rursus homo accipitur Dominus, qua ratione potest intelligi et ipse super thronum, et ipse sub throno? Sed astrictos hujus quaestionis nodos ipse solvit, de quo loquimur, qui afflatu sancti Spiritus ea quae clausa sunt aperit. Incarnatus enim Unigenitus Patris per hoc quod homo factus est, infra angelos fuit, sicut de eo scriptum est: Minuisti eum paulo minus ab angelis (Psal. VIII, 6). Resurgens autem et ascendens in coelos, omnibus angelicis potestatibus praesidet, sicut de eo illic rursum scriptum est: Omnia subjecisti sub pedibus ejus (Ibid., 7). Et sicut ipse ait: Data est mihi omnis potestas in coelo et in terra (Matth. XXVIII, 18). Firmamentum ergo sub throno, et homo super thronum est, quia per humanae assumptionem naturae et ipse est sub angelis natus, et ipse super angelos exaltatus. Qui et priusquam per resurrectionis exaltaretur gloriam, divinitate super angelos fuit; sed tamen ab angelis, ut dictum est, humanitate minoratus, ex qua morti subjacuit. At postquam mortem resurgendo calcavit, humanitatem suam etiam majestatibus archangelorum superposuit. Prius itaque thronus super firmamentum, et post homo super thronum visus esse describitur, quia humani generis Redemptor humanitatem, quam descendendo sub angelis assumpsit, ascendendo super angelos exaltavit. Sic vero factum eum sub angelis dicimus, sicut factum sub lege, praedicante Apostolo, audivimus (Philip. II, 9). Assumptam ergo humanitatem sub angelis accipimus pro ea minoratione in qua dignatus est apparere.

24. Nam mox ut Verbum caro factum est, mox Deus homo potestate super angelos fuit. De ipso quippe ante passionem scriptum est: Ecce angeli accesserunt, et ministrabant ei (Joan. I, 15; Matth. IV, 11). Sed tamen ut humanitatis ejus infirmitas monstraretur, rursum de eo scriptum est: Apparuit illi angelus de coelo, confortans eum (Luc. XXII, 43). In documento ergo utriusque naturae huic et angeli ministrare, hunc et angelus confortare describitur. Unus quippe in utraque natura, quoniam qui Deus ante saecula exstitit, homo factus est in fine saeculorum. Cui tamen ante passionem suam et angeli ministrant, et hunc angelus confortat. Post passionem vero atque resurrectionem ejus, huic angeli ministrare possunt, sed jam hunc confortare non possunt, quia, ut praedictum est, etsi prius firmamentum sub throno apparuit, jam tamen homo super thronum est. In cujus persona, ut propheta sanctus adunationem utriusque naturae se vidisse ostenderet, protinus adjunxit: VERS. 27. — Et vidi quasi speciem electri.

25. Quid est quod aspectus hominis videtur in throno quasi species electri, nisi quod in electro, sicut longe superius diximus (Supra hom. 2, n. 14), aurum argentumque miscetur, ut res una ex metallis duobus fiat? In qua et per argentum auri claritas temperatur, et per auri claritatem species clarescit argenti. In Redemptore autem nostro utraque natura, id est divinitatis et humanitatis inconfuse ac inseparabiliter unita sibimet atque conjuncta est ut et per humanitatem divinitatis ejus claritas nostris posset oculis temperari, et per divinitatem humana in eo natura claresceret, atque exaltata fulgorem ultra hoc quod creata fuerat haberet. Ipse vero aspectus hominis super thronum, et species electri quam vidit qualis ei apparuerit adhuc describens subjungit: IBID. — Velut aspectus ignis intrinsecus per circuitum, a lumbis ejus et desuper; et a lumbis ejus usque deorsum vidi quasi speciem ignis splendentis in circuitu.

26. Quid est quod Mediator Dei et hominum homo Christus Jesus a lumbis et desuper aspectum ignis intrinsecus per circuitum habere describitur, et a lumbis et deorsum speciem ignis splendentis in circuitu? Investigandum namque est quare a lumbis et desuper ignem intrinsecus, nec tamen splendentem ignem habere narratur; a lumbis vero et deorsum habere ignis speciem dicitur, non tamen hunc habere intrinsecus memoratur, quia et splendentem et in circuitu hunc habere describitur. Quid enim lumborum nomine, nisi propago mortalitatis exprimitur? Propter quod etiam de Levi dicitur quia adhuc in lumbis patris erat cum Melchisedech occurrit Abrahae (Hebr. VII, 10). De lumbis vero Abrahae virgo Maria exiit, in cujus utero Unigenitus Patris per Spiritum sanctum incarnari dignatus est. Ex qua incarnatione universo innotuit mundo Deus, sicut per Psalmistam dicitur: Accingere gladium tuum circa femur tuum, potentissime (Psal XLIV, 4). Gladium etenim circa femur potentissimus sumpsit, quia sermo praedicationis illius ex incarnatione convaluit. Quid vero iste ignis designat, nisi ardorem sancti Spiritus, qui corda quae repleverit incendit? De quo ipsa Veritas dicit: Ignem veni mittere in terram (Luc. XII, 49). Quid est ergo quod in hoc aspectu hominis qui prophetae apparuit a lumbis superius intrinsecus per circuitum ignis ardet, a lumbis vero inferius non ignis intrinsecus, sed in circuitu resplendet, nisi quod ante incarnationem unigeniti Redemptoris nostri, sola intra se Judaea ardorem amoris ejus habuit; post incarnationem vero illius in circuitu ejus ignis resplenduit, quia in universo mundo gentibus claritatem sancti Spiritus effudit? Prius ergo ignis intrinsecus erat, sed splendor non erat, quia Spiritus sanctus in multis quidem patribus Judaeam replebat, sed ad notitiam gentium necdum ejus lumen emicuerat. A lumbis vero ejus et deorsum ignis in circuitu splendet, quia postquam de Virgine carnem sumpsit, in humano genere longe lateque sancti Spiritus dona dilatavit. Et notandum quod ignis iste a lumbis superius per circuitum esse describitur, non extrinsecus sed intrinsecus, quia amoris flamma, sicut dictum est, in electis atque spiritalibus viris ubique in suis finibus Judaeam replevit. Nec tamen exibat extrinsecus, quia sese in multitudinem gentium non dilatabat. Quae ardoris flamma visa est postmodum in circuitu splendere, quia per mundi cardines in universis gentibus omnipotentis Dei coepit amor excrescere.

27. Erat ergo prius ignis intrinsecus, cum Jacob diceret: Salutare tuum exspectabo, Domine (Genes. XLIX, 18). Quod enim salutare dicimus Latine, hoc verbo Hebraico Jesus dicitur. In quo verbo beati Jacob mens ostenditur quomodo Jesu desiderio ardebat, quem se moriens exspectare perhibebat. Ardebat ignis cum Moyses diceret: Si inveni gratiam in conspectu tuo, ostende mihi temetipsum, ut videam te (Exod. XXXIII, 13). Ardebat ignis in mente cum David diceret: Sitivit anima mea ad Deum vivum; quando veniam et parebo ante faciem Dei mei? (Psal. XLI, 3.)? Qui incarnationem Verbi desiderans, ait: Ostende nobis, Domine, misericordiam tuam, et salutare tuum da nobis (Psal. LXXXIV, 8). Ardebat ignis cum Simeon, de corruptione vitae praesentis exire desiderans, audivit non prius visurum se mortem, nisi videret Christum Domini (Luc. II, 26). Sed ecce jam ignis iste quasi sub lumbis exterius resplendet, quia universa gentilitas incarnati Dei est amore succensa.

28. Quod tamen intelligi et aliter potest, quia Redemptor noster Deus Dominus Jesus Christus per humanitatem suam hominibus innotuit, qui per divinitatem notus angelis et ante incarnationem fuit. Nobis ergo a lumbis inferius resplendet in circuitu, cujus ignis intrinsecus a lumbis superius ardet in coelo, quia illi coelestes spiritus eum in divinitate sua conspiciunt, et amoris ejus ignibus accenduntur. Nos vero, qui hunc ex assumpta humanitate diligimus, adhuc in hac corruptibili vita positi, splendorem ignis illius foris habemus. Unus itaque super thronum est, qui et super lumbos ignem intrinsecus habet in angelis, et sub lumbis ignem in circuitu habet in hominibus, quia in omne quod ab angelis amatur, per omne quod ab hominibus desideratur, unus est qui in cordibus ardet amantium. Hinc est enim quod magnae illae potestates angelicae Seraphin, id est incendium, nominantur. Hinc de ipso omnium Creatore scriptum est: Deus noster ignis consumens est (Hebr. XII, 29; Deut. IV, 24). Ignis enim Deus dicitur, quia flammis amoris sui incendit mentes quas replet. Et idcirco seraphin incendium dicuntur, quia potestates ei proximae in coelis inaestimabili amoris ejus igne succensae sunt. Ex hoc igne succensa ardent in terra corda justorum. Hoc igne calefacta redeunt ad poenitentiam corda peccantium, quae inflammata vehementer timorem in amorem vertunt. Nam quae prius tabescere metu coeperant, postmodum igne amoris flagrant. Et quia ejus membra sunt electi angeli in coelo, ejus membra sunt conversi homines in terra; unus homo est qui et super lumbos ardet intrinsecus, et sub lumbis inferius ignis sui splendorem in circuitu emittit, quia et angelos ad amorem suum per divinitatem tenuit, et homines ad sancti ardoris sui desiderium ex humanitate revocavit. Sequitur: VERS. 28. — Velut aspectus arcus, cum fuerit in nube in die pluviae.

29. Arcum omnipotens Deus inter se atque homines in signo posuit, ut ultra mundum diluvio non deleret, dicens: Arcum meum ponam in nubibus, et erit signum foederis inter me et inter terram. Cumque obduxero nubibus coelum, apparebit arcus meus in nubibus, et recordabor foederis mei vobiscum (Genes. IX, 13). Unde et in arcu eodem color aquae et ignis simul ostenditur, quia et ex parte est coeruleus, et ex parte rubicundus, ut utriusque judicii testis sit, unius videlicet faciendi, et alterius facti, sed quia mundus quidem judicii igne cremabitur, sed jam non ulterius faciendi, aqua jam diluvii non deletur (II Petr. III, 7). Quid est autem quod splendentem ignem a lumbis hominis throno praesidentis, sicut aspectus arcus cum fuerit in nube in die pluviae, propheta conspexit? Quia enim per ignem, sicut dictum est, ardor sancti Spiritus designatur, quae similitudo est arcus et spiritus ut ignis qui apparuit quasi aspectus arcus apparuisse diceretur? Sed si ipsi quam praediximus visioni arcus intendimus, quomodo arcus significet spiritum videmus. In arcu quippe, sicut praefatus sum, aqua et ignis apparent. Et post Mediatoris adventum, eo virtus Spiritus sancti in humano genere claruit, quo electos Dei et aqua baptismatis lavit, et igne divini amoris incendit. Quasi enim admisto colore aquae simul et ignis quidam arcus in nube ad propitiationem ponitur, cum Veritas dicit: Nisi quis renatus fuerit ex aqua et Spiritu sancto, non potest introire in regnum Dei (Joan. III, 5). Qui arcus in nube est in die pluviae, quia in dominica incarnatione, et in effusione praedicationis ostenditur, ut ad veniam corda credentium, Domino parcente, revocentur. Nubem enim Redemptoris carnem non inconvenienter accipimus, de qua per Psalmistam dicitur: Qui ponit nubem ascensum suum (Psal. CIII, 3). Nubem quippe ascensum suum posuit, quia is qui divinitate ubique est, carne ad coelestia ascendit. Expleta vero omni mystica visione, subjungit: IBID., ET CAP. II, VERS. 1. — Hic erat aspectus splendoris per gyrum, et haec visio similitudinis gloriae Domini.

30. Quid enim in universo mundo sancti Spiritus gratia agat aspiciens, ait: Hic erat aspectus splendoris per gyrum. Quae vero interius ejusdem sancti Spiritus gloriae maneat, considerare volens, sed sicut erat non valens, subjungit: Et haec visio similitudinis gloriae Domini. Non enim ait: Visio gloriae, sed similitudinis gloriae, ut videlicet ostendatur quia quantalibet se intentione mens humana tetenderit, etiamsi jam phantasias imaginum corporalium a cogitatione compescat, si jam omnes circumscriptos spiritus ab oculis cordis amoveat, adhuc tamen in carne mortali posita videre gloriam Dei non valet sicut est. Sed quidquid de illa est quod in mente resplendet, similitudo, et non ipsa est. Unde et ille praedicator qui raptus usque ad tertium coelum fuerat dicebat: Videmus nunc per speculum in aenigmate (I Cor. XIII, 12).

31. Qua in re non despicienda nobis quaestio oritur, quomodo Joannes evangelista, cum erga miracula Redemptoris nostri Judaeorum perfidiam etiam ex verbis propheticis descripsisset, adjungit, dicens: Haec dixit Isaias quando vidit gloriam ejus, et locutus est de eo (Joan. XII, 41). [a 1Kb] Et si Ezechiel non gloriam, sed gloriae similitudinem vidit, quid est quod iste similitudinem gloriae, et ille ejus gloriam vidisse describitur? Sed cum Joannes evangelista prius miracula Redemptoris nostri narravit, atque infidelitatem Judaeorum postmodum subdidit, hanc ejusdem Redemptoris nostri gloriam, quae in mundo apparuit, Isaiam vidisse manifestat. Omne enim quod in terra mirum divinitus agitur gloria omnipotentis Dei est, et ejus gloria in omnibus factis videtur. Isaias ergo ejus gloriam in terra vidit; Ezechiel vero ejus gloriam in coelo, sicuti est, videre non potuit, quia aliter est gloria ejus in rebus factis, atque aliter in semetipso. Haec ergo ejus gloria quae in rebus est videri potest, illa vero quae in ipso est videri modo nisi per similitudinem non potest. Sed hanc eamdem similitudinem gloriae quia propheta vel sublevatus portare non potuerit cognoscamus. Sequitur: IBID. — Et vidi, et cecidi in faciem meam.

32. Quid ergo de hoc viro fieret, si ita ut est ejus gloriam vidisset, qui similitudinem gloriae illius videns, sed ferre non valens, cecidit? Qua in re cum magno moerore pensare et considerare cum lacrymis debemus in quantam miseriam et infirmitatem cecidimus, qui et ipsum bonum ferre non possumus ad quod videndum creati sumus. Est tamen et aliud quod de prophetae facto consideremus in nobis. Propheta enim mox ut gloriae Domini similitudinem vidit, in faciem suam cecidit. Cujus similitudinem gloriae quia nos per spiritum prophetiae videre non possumus, hanc assidue cognoscere et sollicite contemplari in sacro eloquio, in coelestibus monitis, in praeceptis spiritualibus debemus. Qui cum aliquid de Deo conspicimus, in faciem nostram cadimus, quia ex malis erubescimus, quae nos meminimus perpetrasse. Ibi enim cadit homo, ubi confunditur. Unde et Paulus quasi quibusdam in facie jacentibus dicebat: Quem ergo fructum habuistis tunc in illis, in quibus nunc erubescitis (Rom. VI, 21)?

33. Ecce coelestis gratiae dono largiente, obvolutum mysteriis libri initium in Ezechiel propheta discussimus, et dicta mystica mortaliter disserentes, volantem prophetiae theoriam ad terram traximus, ut quae prius parvulorum animis mihique similium volabat, sed non elevabat, jam nunc ab eis legatur et cognoscatur, et volet et levet. Agamus ergo gratias Redemptori nostro, qui spiritali semper alimento nos reficit, qui panis vivus descendit de coelo, et dat vitam mundo (Joan. VI, 33). Qui vivit et regnat cum Patre in unitate Spiritus sancti Deus, per omnia saecula saeculorum. Amen.

Ezechielis caput secundum explanatur; qua in expositione non solum multa moraliter explicantur, sed etiam non pauca de gratiae praevenientis necessitate, de liberi arbitrii consensu et cooperatione, de sacrae Scripturae obscuritate et interpretatione doctissime edisseruntur.

1. Initium libri in Ezechiel propheta magnis obscuritatibus clausum, et quibusdam mysteriorum nodis ligatum, in homiliis octo, Domino nostro Jesu Christo largiente, discussimus. Jam nunc planiora sunt, et minus difficilia quae sequuntur. Charitati itaque vestrae colloquimur, eidem omnipotenti Deo gratias referentes, quia post tot opaca silvarum, tandem laeti ad campos exivimus, in quibus liberis gressibus locutionis nostrae intrepidum pedem ponamus. Ecce enim postquam propheta similitudinem gloriae Domini contemplatus, in faciem suam cecidit, adjungit: — EZECH. II, 1. — Et audivi vocem loquentis, et dixit ad me: Fili hominis, sta super pedes tuos, et loquar tecum. Ubi adhuc subditur: VERS. 2. — Et ingressus est in me spiritus, postquam locutus est mihi, et statuit me super pedes meos. 2. Ecce divina vox jacenti prophetae jussit ut surgeret. Sed surgere omnino non posset, nisi in hunc omnipotentis Dei spiritus intrasset, quia ex omnipotentis Dei gratia ad bona opera conari quidem possumus, sed haec implere non possumus, si ipse non adjuvat qui jubet. Sic Paulus cum discipulos admoneret, dicens, Cum metu et tremore vestram ipsorum salutem operamini (Philip. II, 12), illico quis in eis haec ipsa bona operaretur adjunxit, dicens: Deus est enim qui operatur in vobis et velle et perficere pro bona voluntate (Ibid., 13). Hinc est quod ipsa Veritas discipulis dicit: Sine me nihil potestis facere (Joan. XV, 5). Sed in his considerandum quia sic bona nostra si omnipotentis Dei dona sunt ut in eis aliquid nostrum non sit, cur nos quasi pro meritis aeternam retributionem quaerimus? Si autem ita nostra sunt ut dona Dei omnipotentis non sint, cur ex eis omnipotenti Deo gratias agimus? Sed sciendum est quia mala nostra solummodo nostra sunt; bona autem nostra, et omnipotentis Dei sunt, et nostra, quia ipse aspirando nos praevenit ut velimus, qui adjuvando subsequitur ne inaniter velimus, sed possimus implere quae volumus. Praeveniente ergo gratia, et bona voluntate subsequente, hoc quod omnipotentis Dei donum est fit meritum nostrum. Quod bene Paulus brevi sententia explicat, dicens: Plus illis omnibus laboravi (I Cor. XV, 10). Qui ne suae videretur virtuti tribuisse quod fecerat, adjunxit: Non autem ego, sed gratia Dei mecum (Ibid.). Quia enim coelesti dono praeventus est, quasi alienum se a bono suo opere agnovit, dicens: Non autem ego. Sed quia praeveniens gratia liberum in eo arbitrium fecerat in bonum, quo libero arbitrio eamdem gratiam est subsecutus in opere, adjunxit: Sed gratia Dei mecum (Ibid.). Ac si diceret: In bono opere laboravi, non ego, sed et ego. In hoc enim quod solo Domini dono praeventus sum, non ego; in eo autem quod donum voluntate subsecutus, et ego. His igitur breviter contra Pelagium et Coelestium dictis, ad exponendi ordinem redeamus. Fili hominis, sta super pedes tuos, et loquar tecum (Ezech. II, 1).

3. Notandus nobis est ordo locutionis et operis, quia prius similitudo gloriae Domini apparet ut dejiciat, postmodum alloquitur ut elevet, deinde superabundantis gratiae spiritum mittit et levat, ac supra pedes statuit. Nisi enim aliquid de aeternitate in mente videremus, nunquam in faciem nostram poenitendo caderemus. Sed jam jacentes vox Domini consolatur ut in opere surgamus, quod tamen nos facere nostra virtute non possumus. Ipsius ergo non spiritus implet et levat, et super pedes nostros statuit, ut qui proni in poenitentia pro culpa jacuimus, recti postmodum in bono opere stemus. Sed stans propheta quid audierit adjungit, dicens: VERS. 2, 3. — Et audivi loquentem ad me, et dicentem: Fili hominis, mitto ego te ad filios Israel, ad gentes apostatrices, quae recesserunt a me.

4. Sic propheta describit sua, ut significet nostra. Nam quid est hoc (I p., dist. 30) quod ei jacenti dicitur: Sta super pedes tuos, et loquar tecum? Qui enim jacenti loquebatur, cur non se nisi stanti promittit esse locuturum? Sed sciendum quia alia sunt quae jacentes, alia quae stantes audire debeamus. Jacenti enim dicitur ut surgat, stanti autem praecipitur ut ad praedicationem proficisci debeat. Adhuc enim in infirmitatis confusione jacentibus praeberi non debet auctoritas praedicationis. Sed cum jam in bono opere surgimus, cum jam recti stare coeperimus, dignum est ut ad lucrandos alios in praedicationem mitti debeamus. Stans ergo propheta visionem spiritalem vidit, et cecidit; cadens vero jam monitionis verbum suscepit ut surgeret, surgens autem praeceptum audivit ut praedicaret. Nam qui adhuc ex superbiae vertice stamus, cum jam de aeternitatis timore aliquid sentire coeperimus, dignum est ut ad poenitentiam cadamus. Et cum infirmitatem nostram subtiliter cognoscentes humiliter jacemus, per divini verbi consolationem surgere ad fortia opera jubemur. Et cum jam in bonorum operum soliditate persistimus, necesse est ut unde nosmetipsos correximus, inde jam praedicantes et alios levemus. Jacenti ergo non praecipitur ut ad praedicationem pergat, ne infirmus quisque hoc quod verbo aedificare potest opere destruat. Unde recte quoque per Psalmistam dicitur: Eduxit me de lacu miseriae, et de luto faecis; statuit supra petram pedes meos, et direxit gressus meos; et immisit in os meum canticum novum, hymnum Deo nostro (Psal. XXXIX, 3, 4). Prius enim de luto pravitatis educitur, ut ejus pedes per fidem in petra solidentur. Sed quia rectam fidem recta subsequi debet operatio, gressus ejus directi sunt, ut post directionem gressuum, id est post perfectionem boni operis, in ore acciperet etiam novum canticum praedicationis. Sic Saulus, dum superbus Damascum pergeret (Act. IX, 6), Redemptoris voce prostratus jacuit. Et qui praedicator futurus erat, non tamen mox ut praedicaret quod viderat audivit, sed ei jacenti dicitur: Ingredere in civitatem, et dicetur tibi quid te oporteat facere (Ibid., 7). Jacens ergo hoc solum audire potuit, ut surgens disceret quod audiret; surgens vero hoc didicit, ut quae cognoverat praedicaret.

5. Sed quaerendum nobis est cur Ezechiel et Paulus in faciem cadunt, et de ascensore equi, id est de eo qui in hujus mundi gloria elatus est, dicitur: Ut cadat ascensor ejus retro (Genes. XLIX, 17)? Rursumque de persecutoribus Domini scriptum est: Abierunt retrorsum, et ceciderunt in terram (Joan. XVIII, 6). Quid est hoc, quod electi in faciem, et reprobi retrorsum cadunt, nisi quod omnis qui post se cadit ibi procul dubio cadit, ubi non videt; qui vero ante se ceciderit, ibi cecidit, ubi videt? Iniqui ergo quia in invisibilibus cadunt, post se cadere dicuntur, quia ibi corruunt, ubi quid eos tunc sequatur modo videre non possunt. Justi vero, quia in istis visibilibus semetipsos sponte dejiciunt, ut in invisibilibus erigantur, quasi in faciem cadunt, quia, timore compuncti, videntes humiliantur.

6. Notandum vero quod dicitur: Mitto ego te ad filios Israel, ad gentes apostatrices, quae recesserunt a me. Sicut enim duobus modis a Deo receditur, ita duobus modis a Deo apostatae homines fiunt. Nam unusquisque a conditore suo aut fide recedit, aut opere. Sicut ergo qui a fide recedit apostata est, ita qui ad perversum opus quod deseruerat redit, ab omnipotente Deo apostata absque ulla dubietate deputatur, etiamsi fidem tenere videatur. Unum enim sine altero nil prodesse valet, quia nec fides sine operibus, nec opera adjuvant sine fide, nisi fortasse pro fide percipienda fiant; sicut Cornelius ante pro bonis operibus meruit audiri quam fidelis existeret (Act. X, 4). Qua ex re colligitur quia bona opera pro fide percipienda faciebat. Nam cui ab angelo dicitur: Orationes tuae et eleemosynae tuae ascenderunt in memoriam in conspectu Dei (Ibid.), et mox pro eadem ascensione praecipitur ut ad Simonem mittat, qui ei veniens praedicare debeat, constat quia hoc petiit, unde meruit exaudiri. Sequitur: VERS. 3, 4. — Patres eorum praevaricati sunt pactum meum usque ad diem hanc, et filii dura facie et indomabili corde sunt, ad quos ego mitto te.

7. Ecce est una culpa superbiae, quia praevaricati sunt pactum. Ecce altera obstinationis, quia usque ad diem hanc. Ecce in iniquitate filiorum culpa gravis imprudentiae, quia dura facie, quoniam mala quae faciunt, jam non erubescunt, et nunquam vel post culpas ad poenitentiam redeunt, quia indomabili corde sunt. Cum vero tantae pravitatis, tantaeque obstinationis sint hi ad quos propheta mittitur, quis jam non videat, quia persona prophetae a tam perversis hominibus despici valeat? Sed ecce auctoritas personae tribuitur, cum subditur: VERS. 4. — Et dices ad eos: Haec dicit Dominus Deus. Ac si aperte diceretur: Quia ex te despicieris, ex mea voce necesse est ut loquaris. Ne contemnaris ipse qui mitteris; verba mea proferens, ostende qui misit. Sequitur: VERS. 5. — Si forte vel ipsi audiant, et si forte quiescant, quia domus exasperans est.

8. Dum constat quod omnipotens Deus omnia sciat, mirandum valde est cur dicatur: Si forte audiant, et si forte quiescant. Quapropter sciendum nobis est quia ista dubitatio locutionis Dei non ex ignorantia, sed ex aliqua significatione descendit. Nam quis nesciat quod qui fecit et videt omnia, omnia sciat? Et per semetipsam in Evangelio Veritas de Antichristi praedicatoribus dicit: Dabunt signa magna et prodigia, ita ut in errorem inducantur, si fieri potest, etiam electi (Matth. XXIV, 24). Cur hoc sub dubitatione dicitur, cum quid futurum sit a Domino praesciatur? Unum vero e duobus est, quia si electi sunt, fieri non potest; si autem fieri potest, electi non sunt. Et tamen dicitur: Ut in errorem inducantur, si fieri potest, etiam electi. Ista ergo Dominici sermonis dubitatio, ex electorum cordibus designatio tentationis fuit, quia qui electi sunt ad persistendum, per signa praedicatorum Antichristi tentabuntur ad cadendum. Per hoc ergo quod dicitur, Si fieri potest, hoc exprimitur, quod electi in corde tentabuntur. Nutant enim, sed non cadunt. Dicitur ergo, Si fieri potest, quia trepidabunt; et tamen dicuntur electi, quia non cadent. Dubitatio itaque sermonis a Domino in electis exprimit trepidationem mentis. Quos et electos nominat, quia cernit quod in fide et bono opere persistant. Unde hic quoque dicitur: Si forte audiant, et si forte quiescant. Per hoc enim quod dicitur, Si forte, quia ex magna multitudine pauci audituri sint demonstratur. Per dubitationem ergo sermonum Dei quid significatur aliud, nisi paucitas auditorum?

9. Notandum vero quod postquam mala parentum defunctorum dixerat, mittens prophetam ad filios dicat: Si forte vel ipsi audiant, et si forte quiescant. Quid est dicere Vel ipsi, nisi quia eorum patres qui in culpa defuncti sunt audire noluerunt? Pensemus, rogo, quae virtus sit in hoc dominici sermonis defectu, ut dicat: Si forte vel ipsi audiant. Nobis hoc nobis aperte dicitur, qui afflicti, obsessi, conclusi, omnia quae in hoc mundo habuimus bona perdidimus. Urbes erutas, eversa castra, depopulatos agros, suffossas Ecclesias videmus; et tamen adhuc parentes nostros ad iniquitates sequimur, ab eorum elatione quam vidimus non mutamur. Et illi quidem inter gaudia, nos vero, quod est gravius, et inter flagella peccamus. Sed ecce omnipotens Deus iniquitates judicans, jam priores nostros abstulit, jam ad judicium vocavit. Nos adhuc ad poenitentiam exspectat, nos ad revertendum sustinet. Et qui in illis jam judicium exercuit, nobis suae patientiae longanimitatem praerogat, ne cum nostris nos prioribus perdat, dicens: Si forte vel ipsi audiant, et si forte quiescant, quia domus exasperans est.

10. Omnis anima etiam post acceptam fidem in perversitate sua aut permanens, aut revertens, domus exasperans vocatur, quia eum quem per fidem susceperat repellit a se pravis moribus habitatorem Deum. Nam domus inhabitatur a domino. Si ergo domus, quare exasperans? Si vero exasperans, quare domus, quae utique jam non habitatur? Sed domus, quia in ea Deus per fidem habitare coeperat; exasperans vero est, quia ab ea pravis moribus repulsus exiit, ut vacua remaneat, quam prius coelestis inhabitator replebat. Unde etiam, sicut Veritatis voce cognovimus nequissimus spiritus cum septem aliis rediens, domum scopis mundatam invenit (Matth. XII, 45), quia mentem a virtutibus alienam replet. Sequitur: IBID. — Et scient quia propheta fuerit in medio eorum.

11. Malis scire bonos, aut ad adjutorium salutis proficere, aut ad testimonium damnationis solet. Sciant ergo quia in medio eorum propheta fuerit, ut audita praedicatione aut adjuventur ut surgant, aut sic damnentur ut excusatione careant. Sequitur: VERS. 6. — Tu ergo, fili hominis, ne timeas eos, neque sermones eorum metuas, quoniam increduli, et subversores sunt tecum, et cum scorpionibus habitas.

12. Patet ad quam perversos in praedicatione mittitur, qui ne timeat admonetur. Et quia pravi quique bona sibi loquentibus alia iniqua faciunt, et adhuc alia minantur, propter illa quae faciunt dicitur: Ne timeas eos; et propter hoc quod minatur, adjungitur: Neque sermones eorum metuas. Vel certe quia reprobi et mala bonis ingerunt, et eorum semper actibus derogant, propheta missus admonetur, ne eorum vel crudelitatem metuat, vel verba pertimescat. In hoc itaque quod dicitur: Ne timeas, prophetae datur auctoritas praedicationis. Et quia omnes qui in Deo vivimus organa veritatis sumus, ut saepe per alium mihi, saepe vero aliis loquatur per me; sic nobis boni verbi inesse auctoritas debet, ut et is qui praeest dicat recta libere, et is qui subest inferre bona humiliter non recuset. Bonum enim quod majori a minore dicitur tunc vere bonum est, si humiliter dicatur. Nam si rectitudo sentiendi humilitatem loquendi perdiderit, radicem sensus in ramo linguae vitiavit. Quod videlicet vitium jam non ex ramo, sed ex radice est, quia nisi cor intumesceret, lingua minime superbiret. Inesse ergo ad loquendum priori humilis auctoritas, inesse autem minori libera humilitas debet. Sed saepe in hominibus ipse loquendi ordo confunditur, sicut et longe superius diximus. Nam aliquando quis per tumorem elationis loquitur, et loqui se per auctoritatem libertatis existimat; et aliquando alius per stultum timorem tacet, et tacere se per humilitatem putat. Ille locum sui regiminis attendens, non metitur sensum tumoris; iste, locum suae subjectionis considerans, timet dicere bona quae sentit, et ignorat quantum charitati reus efficitur tacendo.

13. Sic vero sub auctoritate superbia, et humanus timor sub humilitate se palliat, ut saepe nec ille valeat considerare quid Deo, nec iste quid debeat proximo. Nam ille dum eos qui sibi subjecti sunt conspicit, et ei cui omnes subjacent non intendit, in elatione attollitur, et de elatione sua velut de auctoritate gloriatur. Iste vero nonnunquam dum timet ne majoris gratiam amittat, atque per hoc aliquid temporalis damni sustineat, recta quae intelligit occultat, atque apud se tacitus ipsum timorem quo constringitur humilitatem nominat. Sed eum cui nil vult dicere, tacendo in cogitatione dijudicat; fitque ut unde se humilem existimat, inde gravius sit superbus. Discernenda ergo semper sunt libertas et superbia, humilitas et timor, ne aut timor humilitatem, aut superbia se libertatem fingat. Ezechiel itaque quia non solum populo, sed etiam senioribus loqui mittebatur, ne incautum timorem humilitatem crederet, ut timere non debeat admonetur, dum dicitur: Ne timeas eos. Ac ne forte derogationis eorum verba pertimescat, adjungitur: Neque sermones eorum metuas.

14. Cur autem linguas derogantium timere non debeat, etiam causa subjungitur, cum protinus subinfertur: Quoniam increduli et subversores sunt tecum, et cum scorpionibus habitas. Timendi enim essent hi quibus loqui mittebatur, si in fide et opere Deo omnipotenti placuissent. Quia autem increduli et subversores sunt, in suis sermonibus derogantes, timendi non sunt, quia stultum valde est si illis placere quaerimus quos non placere Domino scimus. Debent autem haberi in metu et reverentia judicia justorum, quia membra omnipotentis Dei sunt, et hoc ipsi in terra reprehendunt, quod Dominus redarguit e coelo. Nam perversorum derogatio vitae nostrae approbatio est, quia jam ostenditur nos aliquid justitiae habere, si illis displicere inspicipimus qui non placent Deo. Nemo etenim potest in una eademque re omnipotenti Domino atque ejus hostibus gratus existere. Nam Deo se amicum denegat, qui ejus placet inimico. Et inimicis veritatis adversabitur, qui eidem veritati in mente subjugatur. Unde sancti viri in vocis liberae increpatione succensi, eos ad sua odia excitare non metuunt, quos Deum non diligere cognoscunt. Quod Propheta ardenter exhibens, creatori omnium quasi in munere obtulit, dicens: Nonne qui oderunt te, Deus, oderam illos, et super inimicos tuos tabescebam (Psal. CXXXVIII, 21)? Perfecto odio oderam illos, et inimici facti sunt mihi (Ibid., 22). Ac si aperte dicat: Pensa quantum te diligo qui tuorum hostium excitare contra me inimicitias non pertimesco. Hinc etenim dicit: Qui retribuunt mala pro bonis detrahebant mihi, quoniam subsecutus sum justitiam (Psal. XXXVII, 21). Bonum valde est quod justus tribuit, quando male agentibus libera voce contradicit. Sed perversi mala pro bonis retribuunt cum justis derogant, quia contra eos justitiae defensionem servant. Non enim justi humana judicia, sed aeterni judicis examen aspiciunt, atque ideo derogantium verba contemnunt. Hinc etenim derogantibus Corinthiis Paulus dicebat: Mihi autem pro minimo est ut a vobis judicer, aut ab humano die (I Cor. IV, 3). Qui nec in corde suo unde se reprehendere potuisset inveniens, adjungit: Sed neque meipsum judico. Videns autem quia ei ad perfectionem sanctitatis nec suum judicium sufficeret, subdidit: Sed non in hoc justificatus sum. Cur vero nec sibimetipsi de seipso credidit, causam reddidit cum subjungit: Qui autem judicat me Dominus est (Ibid., 4). Ac si aperte dicat: Nec meo de me judicio credendum existimo, quia ille me judicat, cujus ego judicium non comprehendo. Hinc beatus Job cum per amicorum derogantium linguas inter dolores vulnerum pateretur jacula verborum, cogitatione protinus ad conscientiam recurrit, atque ubi mentem solidam haberet, aspexit dicens: Ecce enim in coelo testis meus, et conscius meus in excelsis (Job. XVI, 20). Qui etiam subdidit: Verbosi amici mei, ad Deum stillat oculus meus (Ibid., 21).

15. In omne enim quod de nobis dicitur, semper taciti recurrere ad mentem debemus, interiorem testem et judicem quaerere. Quid enim prodest si omnes laudent cum conscientia accuset? Aut quid poterit obesse si omnes nobis derogent, et conscientia sola nos defendat? Beatus ergo Job inter linguas derogantium inflexa mente persistens, quia in terra se impugnari falsis sermonibus vidit, in coelo testem quaesivit. Hinc Isaias ait: Popule meus, qui beatificant te, ipsi te decipiunt, et viam gressuum tuorum dissipant (Isai. III, 12). Qui videlicet populus ne verba suae laudis attenderet, et in culpis altius periret, statim dicitur quem aspiciat, cujus judicium pertimescat, cum subditur: Stat ad judicandum Dominus, stat ad judicandos populos (Ibid., 13). Ac si aperte diceretur: Judicia humana cur sequeris, qui stare super te coelestem judicem scis.

16. Hinc est quod Joannem Baptistam Veritas esse arundinem vento agitatam negat, dicens: Quid existis videre in desertum? Arundinem vento agitatam? (Matth. XI, 7, seq.) Quod quia negando dixerit, non affirmando, subjuncta verba testantur. Ait enim: Sed quid existis videre in deserto? Hominem mollibus vestitum? Ecce qui mollibus vestiuntur in domibus regum sunt. Arundo autem vento agitata modo flatibus erigitur, modo flatibus inclinatur. Omnis autem infirmus animus, qui vel derogatione dejicitur, vel laudibus exaltatur, arundo vento agitata est. Quod Joannes non erat, quia inflexibilem mentis verticem inter laudes hominum et derogationes tenebat.

17. Sed magna inquisitione res indiget, cum recti operis viam tenemus, utrum semper despicere derogantium verba debeamus, an certe aliquando compescere. De qua re sciendum est quia linguas detrahentium sicut nostro studio non debemus excitare ne ipsi pereant, ita per suam malitiam excitatas debemus aequanimiter tolerare, ut nobis meritum crescat; aliquando autem etiam compescere, ne, dum de nobis mala disseminant, eorum qui audire nos ad bona poterant corda innocentium corrumpant. Hinc est enim quod Joannes obtrectatoris sui linguam redarguit, dicens: Is qui amat primatum gerere in eis Diotrepes non recipit nos; propter hoc si venero, commoneam ejus opera quae facit, verbis malignis garriens in nos (III Joan., 9). Hinc

Paulus iterum de detrahentibus Corinthiis loquitur, dicens: Epistolae, inquiunt, graves sunt et fortes, praesentia autem corporis infirma, et sermo contemptibilis; hoc cogitet qui hujusmodi est, quia quales sumus verbo per epistolas absentes, tales et praesentes in opere (II Cor. X, 10).

18. Hi etenim quorum vita in exemplum imitationis est posita debent, si possunt, detrahentium sibi verba compescere, ne eorum praedicationem non audiant qui audire poterant, et, in pravis moribus remanentes, bene vivere contemnant. Sed hac in re, subtili inquisitione necesse est ut semetipsum animus investiget, ne fortasse suae laudis gloriam quaerat, et animarum lucra se quaerere nostra cogitatio simulet. Saepe enim sui nominis laude animus pascitur, et quasi sub obtentu lucrorum spiritalium, cum de se bona dici cognoverit laetatur. Et saepe suae gloriae defensione contra detrahentes irascitur, et fingit sibimet quod hoc ex eorum zelo faciat quorum corda a bono itinere detrahentis sermo perturbat. Illi ergo debent magnopere curare ne contra eorum opinionem detrahentium verba praevaleant, qui suam conscientiam subtiliter discutientes, se in ea inveniunt de amore privatae gloriae nihil habere.

19. Hinc est enim quod justi atque perfecti aliquando virtutes suas praedicant, bona quae divinitus acceperunt narrant, non ut ipsi apud homines sua ostensione proficiant, sed ut eos quibus praedicant exemplo suo ad vitam trahant. Unde Paulus apostolus quoties fustibus caesus, quoties lapidatus, quoties naufragium pertulit, quanta pro veritate sustinuit, quod ad tertium coelum raptus, quod in paradisum ductus sit, Corinthiis narrat (II Cor. XI, 25), ut eorum sensum a falsis praedicatoribus avertat, ut dum se innotesceret qualis esset, illi eis vilescerent, quos ab eis cognoverat inique venerari. Quod perfecti cum faciunt, id est cum virtutes proprias loquuntur, in hoc quoque omnipotentis Dei imitatores sunt, qui laudes suas hominibus loquitur, ut ab hominibus cognoscatur. Nam cum per Scripturam suam praecipiat, dicens: Laudet te alienus, et non os tuum (Prov. XXVII, 2), quomodo facit ipse quod prohibet? Sed si virtutes suas omnipotens Deus taceret, eum nullus agnosceret; si eum nullus agnosceret, nullus amaret; si nullus amaret, nullus ad vitam rediret. Unde et per Psalmistam de eo dicitur: Virtutem operum suorum annuntiabit populo suo, ut det illis haereditatem gentium (Psal. CX, 6). Virtutes ergo suas annuntiant, non ut laudibus suis ipse proficiat, sed ut hi qui hunc ex sua laude cognoverint ad perpetuam haereditatem veniant. Justi itaque atque perfecti non solum cum vituperationis suae verba reprehendunt, sed etiam cum virtutes quas habent infirmis loquuntur reprehensibiles non sunt, quia per suam vitam quam referunt aliorum animas ad vitam quaerunt.

20. De quibus tamen sciendum est quia nunquam bona sua detegunt, nisi eos, ut dixi, aut proximorum utilitas, aut certe nimia necessitas cogat. Unde Paulus apostolus cum virtutes suas Corinthiis enumerasset, adjunxit: Factus sum insipiens, vos me coegistis (II Cor.XII, 11). Fit vero aliquando, ut necessitate compulsi, in bonis quae de se referunt, non aliorum utilitatem, sed suam requirant, sicut beatus Job facta sua enumerat, dicens: Oculus fui caeco, et pes claudo, pater eram pauperum, et causam quam nesciebam, diligentissime investigabam (Job. XXIX, 15, 16). Et multa alia quae saepe egisse se commemorat. Sed quia, in vulnere doloris positus, ab amicis increpantibus ipse impie egisse, et violentus proximis atque oppressor pauperum fuisse dicebatur, vir sanctus, inter flagella Dei et humanae increpationis verba deprehensus, mentem suam graviter concuti atque ad desperationis foveam conspexit impelli; qui jamjamque cadere poterat, nisi ad memoriam sua bene acta revocasset, ut ad spem animus reduceretur, ne oppressus verbis et vulneribus in desperatione periret. Quod ergo bona sua enumerat, non innotescere aliis quasi ex laude desiderat, sed ad spem animum reformat. Justi itaque sicut sine arrogantia loquuntur aliquando bona quae agunt, ita sine zelo privatae gloriae detrahentium sibi linguas redarguunt, quia noxia loquuntur. Cum vero linguae derogantium corrigi nequeunt, aequanimiter sunt per omnia tolerandae. Nec obtrectationis sermo timendus est, ne dum vituperatio perversorum metuitur, recti operis via deseratur. Unde nunc Ezechieli prophetae dicitur: Sermones eorum ne metuas, quia increduli et subversores sunt tecum.

21. Minus autem mali essent, si hi qui sunt increduli subversores minime fuissent. Quia enim ipsi vel coelestis regni praemia, vel gehennae esse supplicia non credunt, in suis pravitatibus dimissi, a fide et opere etiam alios subvertunt, ut regnum quod ipsi appetere non volunt, nec alter assequatur. Hi namque cum teneriores quosdam bona incipere, mala jam devitare cognoverint, modo irridendo quod in coelis promittitur, modo despiciendo quod Deus omnipotens de inferni suppliciis minatur, modo laudando bona temporalia, et delectationes praesentis saeculi callida persuasione pollicendo, deflectunt mentes innocentium, eorumque itinera pervertunt. Gaudent si quos potuerint a vita revocare, ad mortem trahere; laetantur in pravitatibus suis, exsultant et in alienis. His nimirum poena sua non sufficit, qui agunt ne soli moriantur. At si fortasse justum quempiam tantae jam virtutis invenerint, ut ei loqui contraria non praesumant, quia subversores esse non possunt, statim scorpiones fiunt. Scorpio enim palpando incedit, sed cauda ferit; nec mordet a facie, sed a posterioribus nocet. Scorpiones ergo sunt omnes blandi et malitiosi, qui bonis quidem in faciem non resistunt, sed mox ut recesserint derogant, alios quos valuerint inflammant, quaeque possunt noxia immittunt, mortifera inferre occulte non desinunt. Scorpiones ergo sunt qui blandi et innoxii in facie videntur, sed post dorsum portant unde venenum fundant. Qui enim in occulto feriunt quasi mortem latenter trahunt. Unde etiam per Psalmistam dicitur: Circumdederunt me sicut apes, et exarserunt sicut ignis in spinis (Psal. CXVII, 12). Apes enim in ore mel habent, in aculeo caudae vulnus. Et omnes qui lingua blandiuntur, sed latenter ex malitia feriunt, apes sunt, quia loquendo dulcedinem mellis proponunt, sed occulte feriendo vulnus inferunt. Ista vero facientes exardescunt sicut ignis in spinis, quia per flammas detrahentium non justorum vita comburitur, sed si quae in eis esse poterant peccatorum spinae, concremantur. Dicatur ergo: Increduli et subversores sunt tecum, et cum scorpionibus habitas. Increduli scilicet Deo, subversores vero infirmantibus proximis, scorpiones autem etiam fortibus et robustis. Quibus etsi in facie contradicere non praesumunt, ex occulto tamen vulnus derogationis inferunt. Increduli quippe simul et subversores et scorpiones sunt, quia et audita ea quae Dei sunt non credunt, et eos quos praevalent a bonis moribus subvertunt, et quos inflectere non valent occultis machinationibus feriunt.

22. Qua in re hoc quoque notandum est, quia cum prophetae dicitur: Increduli et subversores sunt tecum, et cum scorpionibus habitas, nobis consolationis medicamentum profertur, quos saepe taedet vivere, dum nolumus cum malis habitare. Querimur etenim cur non omnes boni sunt qui nobiscum vivunt. Mala proximorum ferre nolumus, omnes sanctos jam debere esse decernimus, dum esse nolumus quod ex proximis portemus. Sed hac in re luce clarius patet, dum malos portare renuimus, quam multum adhuc ipsi de bono minus habeamus. Neque enim perfecte bonus est, nisi qui fuerit et cum malis bonus. Hinc beatus Job de semetipso asserit, dicens: Frater fui draconum, et socius struthionum (Job. XXX, 29). Hinc Paulus apostolus discipulis dicit: In medio nationis pravae et perversae, inter quos lucetis sicut luminaria in mundo (Philip. II, 15). Hinc Petrus gregis dominici pastor dicit: Justum Lot oppressum a nefandorum injuria conversatione eripuit. Aspectu enim et auditu justus erat, habitans apud eos qui de die in diem animam justi iniquis operibus cruciabant (II Petr. II, 7). Saepe vero cum de vita proximorum querimur, mutare locum conamur, secretum vitae remotioris eligere; videlicet ignorantes quia si desit spiritus, non adjuvat locus. Idem enim Lot de quo loquimur, in Sodomis sanctus exstitit, in monte peccavit (Genes. XIX, 2, 30, seq.). Quia autem loca mentem non muniunt, ipse humani generis primus testatur parens, qui et in paradiso cecidit (Genes. III, 7). Sed minus sunt omnia quae loquimur ex terra. Nam si locus salvare potuisset, Satan de coelo non caderet. Unde Psalmista ubique in hoc mundo tentationes esse conspiciens, quaesivit locum quo fugeret, sed sine Deo invenire non potuit munitum. Ex qua re et ipsum sibi locum fieri petiit, propter quem locum quaesivit dicens: Esto mihi in Deum protectorem, et in locum munitum, ut salvum me facias (Psal. XXX, 3). Tolerandi ergo ubique sunt proximi, quia Abel fieri non valet quem Cain malitia non exercet.

23. Unum vero est pro quo vitari societas debet malorum, ne si fortasse corrigi non valent, ad imitationem trahant; et cum ipsi a sua malitia non mutantur, eos qui sibi conjuncti fuerint pervertant. Unde Paulus ait: Corrumpunt bonos mores colloquia mala (I Cor. XV, 33). Et sicut per Salomonem dicitur: Noli esse amicus homini iracundo, nec ambules cum viro furioso, ne forte discas semitas ejus, et sumas scandalum animae tuae (Prov. XXII, 24). Sicut ergo perfecti viri perversos proximos non debent fugere, quia et eos saepe ad rectitudinem trahunt, et ipsi ad perversitatem nunquam trahuntur, ita infirmi quique societatem declinare debent pravorum, ne mala quae frequenter aspiciunt, et corrigere non valent, delectentur imitari. Sic enim verba proximorum audiendo quotidie sumimus in mente, sicut flando atque respirando aerem trahimus corpore. Et sicut malus aer assiduo flatu tractus inficit corpus, ita perversa locutio assidue audita, infirmantium inficit animum, ut tabescat delectatione pravi operis, et assidui iniquitate sermonis. Sequitur: IBID. — Verba eorum ne timeas, et vultus eorum ne formides, quia domus exasperans est.

24. Ideo boni timendi sunt ne offendantur, ne forte per eos ille provocetur ad iram, qui eorum corda semper inhabitat. Nam, sicut superius dictum est, si malos offendimus, timere minime debemus, quoniam illis nostra actio displicet, quibus nec justitia creatoris placet. Quid ergo timendum est, si nobis ingrati sunt, qui Deo amabiles non sunt? Unde recte nunc dicitur: Verba eorum ne timeas, et vultus eorum ne formides, quia domus exasperans est. Ac si aperte diceretur: Timendi essent, nisi me in suis actibus exasperarent. De quibus adhuc subditur: VERS. 7. — Loqueris ergo verba mea ad eos, si forte audiant, et quiescant, quia irritatores sunt.

25. Omnis qui peccat, quid aliud quam conditoris sui in se iracundiam irritat? Et scimus quia quoties actu, quoties verbo, quoties cogitatione delinquimus, Deum contra nos toties irritamus. Sed tamen sustinet, et clementer exspectat, per se patientiam, per praedicatores autem suos verbum nobis exhortationis praerogat. Omnis autem qui recta praedicat, si auditur, iram irritati creatoris super praevaricatorem populum placat. Unde necesse est ut ipse non debeat agere malum, quod solet in populo furorem conditoris sui irritare. Propter quod etiam subditur: VERS. 8. — Tu autem, fili hominis, audi quaecunque loquor ad te, et noli esse exasperans, sicut domus exasperatrix est.

26. Id est, mala quae fieri conspicis, ipse non facias, ne hoc quod prohibere mitteris ipse committas. Omnis etenim praedicator intenta semper debet mente pensare ne qui missus est lapsos erigere ipse in pravitate operis cum lapsis cadat, et Pauli hunc sententia feriat dicentis: In quo alterum judicas teipsum condemnas (Rom. II, 1). Unde Balaam Dei spiritu repletus ad loquendum, sed tamen in carnali vita suo spiritu detentus, de semetipso loquitur, dicens: Dixit auditor sermonum Dei, qui novit doctrinam Altissimi, et visiones omnipotentis videt, qui cadens apertos habet oculos (Num. XXIV, 14, 16). Cadens apertos oculos habuit, qui rectum quod diceret vidit, sed recte vivere contempsit. Cadens videlicet in perverso opere, et apertos habens oculos in sancta praedicatione.

27. Est tamen aliud quod possit intelligi cur beatus Ezechiel, qui ad praedicationem mittitur, esse exasperans prohibetur. Nisi enim ad loquenda verba cum mittebatur obediret, omnipotentem Dominum sicut populus de perverso opere, sic propheta de suo silentio exasperasset. Nam sicut mali ideo Deum exasperant quia loquuntur vel faciunt mala, ita nonnunquam boni exasperant, quia reticent bona. Illis itaque culpa est perversa agere, istis recta reticere. In hoc ergo cum malis etiam boni simul Deum exasperant, quia cum perversa non increpant, eis per suum silentium proficiendi licentiam praestant. Sequitur: IBID. — Aperi os tuum, et comede quaecunque do tibi.

28. Aperimus os nostrum cum recta loquimur; et comedimus quae a Deo accipimus, quia et tribuitur et augetur in nostris sensibus cibus vitae, cum praedicare coeperimus. Unde propheta alius dicit: Os meum aperui, et attraxi spiritum (Psal. CXVIII, 131). Non enim spiritum attraheret, nisi os aperiret, quia nisi ad praedicandum proximis se impenderet, spiritalis doctrinae in eo gratia non crevisset. Sequitur: VERS. 9. — Et vidi, et ecce manus missa ad me, in qua erat involutus liber; et expandit illum coram me, qui erat scriptus intus et foris.

29. Sicut per prophetam praedicatorum ordo, sic per librum quem accepit Scripturae sacrae paginae designantur. Liber autem involutus est Scripturae sacrae eloquium obscurum, quod profunditate sententiarum involvitur, ut non facile sensu omnium penetretur. Sed coram propheta liber expanditur, quia coram praedicatoribus sacri eloquii obscuritas aperitur. Involutum librum manus Dei porrexerat, cum apostolis dicebat: Simile factum est regnum coelorum homini qui seminavit bonum semen in agro suo. Cum autem dormirent homines, venit inimicus ejus, et superseminavit zizania in medio trilici, et abiit. Cum autem crevisset herba, et fructum fecisset, tunc apparuerunt et zizania (Matth. XIII, 24, seq.), et reliqua quae charitas vestra etiam me reticente reminiscitur. Sed librum quem involutum ostenderat expandit cum hoc quod per aenigmata loquebatur exposuit dicens: Qui seminat bonum semen, est filius hominis. Ager autem est mundus. Bonum vero semen hi sunt filii regni; zizania autem filii sunt nequam. Inimicus autem qui seminavit ea est diabolus. Messis vero consummatio saeculi, messores autem angeli sunt. Sicut ergo colliguntur zizania, et igni comburuntur, sic erit in consummatione saeculi (Matth. XXIII, 37, seq.). Involutus itaque liber expanditur, quando hoc quod obscure prolatum fuerat, per latitudinem intellectus aperitur. Hunc involutum librum Veritas expandit quando in discipulis egit quod scriptum est: Tunc aperuit illis sensum, ut intelligerent Scripturas (Luc. XXIV, 43).

30. De quo adhuc libro subditur: Qui erat scriptus intus et foris. Liber enim sacri eloquii intus scriptus est per allegoriam, foris per historiam. Intus per spiritalem intellectum, foris autem per sensum litterae simplicem, adhuc infirmantibus congruentem. Intus, quia invisibilia promittit; foris, quia visibilia praeceptorum suorum rectitudine disponit. Intus, quia coelestia pollicetur, foris autem quia terrena contemptibilia qualiter sint, vel in usu habenda, vel ex desiderio fugienda, praecipit. Alia namque de secretis coelestibus loquitur, alia vero in exterioribus actionibus jubet. Et ea quidem quae foris praecipit patent, sed illa quae de internis narrat plene apprehendi nequeunt. Unde scriptum est: Extendens coelum sicut pellem, qui tegis in aquis superiora ejus (Psal. CIII, 2). Quid enim coeli nomine nisi sacra Scriptura signatur? De qua nobis et sol sapientiae, et luna scientiae, et ex antiquis Patribus stellae exemplorum atque virtutum lucent. Quod sicut pellis extenditur, quia, per scriptores suos carnis lingua formatum, ante oculos nostros per verba doctorum exponendo displicatur. Quid vero aquarum nomine, nisi sanctissimi angelorum signantur chori? De quibus scriptum est: Et aquae quae super coelos sunt laudent nomen Domini (Psal. CXLVIII, 4). Hujus coeli superiora Dominus in aquis tegit, quia alta sacri eloquii, id est ea quae de natura divinitatis vel de aeternis gaudiis narrat, nobis adhuc nescientibus, solis angelis in secreto sunt cognita. Coelum ergo hoc et coram nobis extenditur, et tamen in aquis superiora ejus conteguntur, quia et quaedam sacri eloquii jam nobis per apertionem spiritus patent, et quaedam quae solis angelis possunt esse manifesta nobis adhuc servantur occulta. De quibus tamen occultis jam partem per spiritalem intelligentiam sentimus, jam sancti Spiritus pignus accepimus, quia haec et plene necdum cognovimus, et tamen medullitus amamus, et in multis spiritalibus sensibus, quos jam cognovimus, veritatis pabulo pascimur.

31. Dicat ergo: Qui erat scriptus intus et foris, quia in sacro eloquio et dictis occultioribus atque sublimioribus satiantur fortes, et praeceptis apertioribus nos parvuli nutrimur. Unde scriptum est: Montes excelsi cervis, petra refugium herinaciis (Psal. CIII, 18). Habeant enim montes intelligentiae, qui jam contemplationis saltus dare noverunt. Sed petra sit refugium herinaciis, quia nos parvuli et peccatorum nostrorum spinis cooperti, etsi intelligere alta non possumus, in petrae nostrae refugio, id est, in Christi fide salvamur. Unde et quibusdam dicitur: Nihil me judicavi scire inter vos nisi Christum Jesum, et hunc crucifixum (II Cor. II, 2). Ac si diceret: Quia vos capere divinitatis ejus mysteria non posse pensavi, sola vobis humanitatis ejus infirma locutus sum. Sequitur: IBID. — Et scriptae erant in eo lamentationes, carmen, et vae.

32. Carmen aliquando in bono, aliquando vero in malo dici dubium non est, quia et laetum carmen, et lugubre carmen dicere possumus. Sed nos Scripturae sacrae usum sequentes, quae pene semper carmen ponere in prosperis solet, hoc in loco pro bona parte dictum carmen accipimus. Nam cum omnipotens Deus populum suum de mari Rubro liberasset, scriptum est: Tunc Moyses et filii Israel cecinerunt carmen Domino (Exod. XV, 1). Et cum David victoriam de hostibus fecisset, scriptum est: Locutus est David Domino verba carminis hujus (II Reg. XXII, 1). Salomon quoque ait: Acetum in nitro, et qui cantat carmina cordi pessimo (Prov. XXV, 20). Acetum quippe si mittatur in nitro, fervescit nitrum protinus et ebullit. Et perversa mens quando per increpationem corripitur, aut praedicationis dulcedinem bona suadetur, de correptione fit deterior; et inde in murmurationis iniquitate succenditur, unde debuit ab iniquitate compesci. Per Heliu quoque de ingrato ac sese desperante dicitur: Et non dixit, Ubi est qui fecit me, qui dedit carmina in nocte? (Job. XXXV, 10). Carmen quippe in nocte est laetitia in tribulatione. Carmen in nocte accipimus, quando in pressuris praesentibus de futuris gaudiis consolamur. Carmen nobis in nocte ostendebat apostolus cum dicebat: Spe gaudentes, in tribulatione patientes (Rom. XII, 12). Carmen in nocte se David habere indicat, dicens: Tu es mihi refugium a pressura quae circumdedit me; exsultatio mea, redime me a circumdantibus me (Psal. XXXI, 7). Qui enim circumdari se pressuris narrat, et tamen Deum sibi esse exsultationem nominat, procul dubio carmen in nocte cantat. Quia igitur pene semper in bono carmen ponere Scriptura sacra consuevit, ita a nobis etiam in hoc loco debet intelligi.

33. Vae autem in Scriptura sacra saepius de aeterno luctu quam praesenti solet intelligi. Unde scriptum est: Vae impio in malo; retributio enim manuum ejus fiet ei (Isai. III, 11). Et beatus Job loquitur, dicens: Si impius fuero, vae mihi est; si autem justus, non levabo caput, saturatus afflictione et miseria (Job. X, 15). Justorum enim afflictio temporalis est. Vae ergo quod dixit, a temporali afflictione distinxit, qui et justum afflictionem, et impium vae habere perhibuit. Per semetipsam quoque Veritas dicit: Vae mundo a scandalis (Matth. XVIII, 7), et, Vae vobis qui ridetis, quoniam flebitis (Luc. VI, 25). Et, Vae praegnantibus et nutrientibus in illis diebus (Ibid., XXI, 23). Pensandum ergo nobis est quomodo haec tria in sacro volumine scripta sint, lamentationes, carmen, et vae.

34. Lamentationes videlicet, quia in eo scripta est poenitentia peccatorum. Carmen vero, quia ibi praenuntiantur gaudia justorum. Vae autem, quia illic expressa est damnatio reproborum. Ut ergo peccata punias, lege quae in hoc volumine scripta sunt lamenta: Scindite corda vestra, et non vestimenta vestra (Joel. II, 13). Et rursus: Miseri estote, et lugete; risus vester in luctum convertatur, et gaudium in moerorem (Jac. IV, 9). Ut autem de promissione gaudii sequentis hilarescas, cognosce quae in hoc volumine scripta sunt carmina laudis aeternae: Beati qui habitant in domo tua, Domine, in saeculum saeculi laudabunt te (Psal. LXXXIII, 5). Et sicut per quemdam sapientem de coelesti Jerusalem dicitur: Et lapide pretioso et mundo omnes plateae ejus sternentur, et per omnes vicos ejus alleluia cantabitur (Tobiae XIII, 22). Hoc nobis carmen coelestis patriae nuntiare cives ejus venerant, qui concorditer clamabant: Gloria in excelsis Deo, et in terra pax hominibus bonae voluntatis (Luc. II, 14). Sed si adhuc praesenti saeculo mente inhaeres, si adhuc terrenis voluptatibus delectaris, amare non potes gaudia aeterna quae audis. Cognosce ergo in hoc volumine vae quod in eo scriptum est, atque ab animo per timorem expelle quod diligis, ut possis ex judicio carmen amare quod legis. Ibi quippe sub unius damnati specie multitudo omnis exprimitur reproborum, cum voce Veritatis dicitur: Ligatis pedibus ejus ac manibus, mittite eum in tenebras exteriores; illic erit fletus et stridor dentium (Matth. XXII, 13). Tunc enim reprobi in exteriores tenebras cadunt, quia nunc in interioribus sua se sponte dejecerunt, ut veritatis lumen nec credendo nec bene operando sequerentur. In quibus ligatis pedibus ac manibus mitti praecipiuntur, quia nunc dum tempus operandi atque currendi est, habere manus et pedes liberos in bona actione noluerunt. Ibi vae reproborum scriptum est: Vermis eorum non morietur, et ignis eorum non exstinguetur (Isai. LXVI, 24). Ibi damnatis ac repulsis dicitur: Discedite a me, maledicti, in ignem aeternum, qui paratus est diabolo et angelis ejus (Matth. XXV, 41). In hoc itaque volumine cuncta quae aedificant, omnia quae erudiunt, scripta continentur. Peccasti enim, et jam te poenitet illicita perpetrasse, ut ad agendam poenitentiam docearis, ibi invenis lamenta. Spe coelestium gaudiorum mentem relevare desideras, ibi ad consolationem tuam invenis carmen. Sin vero et mala perpetrasti, et haec te perpetrasse non poenitet, sed cervicem mentis erigis, ad nullas poenitentiae lamentationes inclinaris, nulla coelestium gaudiorum exspectatione corrigeris, velis nolis, ibi scriptum auditurus es vae, ut quem nec timor ad poenitentiam humiliat, nec spes ad superna praemia exaltat, damnationis suae jam nunc poenam prospiciat, et sine excusatione in aeternum supplicium cadat.

35. Quid igitur, fratres, quid agendum est miseris nobis, nisi ut evigilemus ad hujus verba voluminis, et mala quae nos egisse meminimus fletibus puniamus, ut per lamenta poenitentiae perveniamus ad carmen vitae? Ne si affligi modo poenitendo nolumus, vae postmodum sine fine sentiamus. Nec nos nostrorum vulnerum multitudo in desperationem deprimat, quia major est potentia medici, quam magnitudo languoris nostri. Quid est enim quod reparare ad salutem non possit, qui potuit omnia ex nihilo creare? Unigenitus quippe est omnipotenti Patri coaeternus, qui cum eo vivit et regnat in unitate Spiritus sancti Deus per omnia saecula saeculorum. Amen.

HOMILIA X

In explicatione priorum versuum capitis tertii usque ad quintum decimum commendat maxime Scripturam sacram, ejus assiduam lectionem, meditationem, et praedicationem.

1. Solent quidam scripta sacri eloquii legentes, cum sublimiores ejus sententias penetrant, minora mandata quae infirmioribus data sunt tumenti sensu despicere, et ea velle in alium intellectum permutare. Qui si recte in eo alta intelligerent, mandata quoque minima despectui non haberent, quia divina praecepta sic in quibusdam loquuntur magnis, ut tamen in quibusdam congruant parvulis, qui per incrementa intelligentiae quasi quibusdam passibus mentis crescant, atque ad majora intelligenda perveniant. Unde nunc sancto prophetae dicitur: EZECH. III, 1. — Fili hominis, quodcunque inveneris comede.

2. Quidquid enim in sacra Scriptura invenitur edendum est, quia et ejus parva simplicem componunt vitam, et ejus magna subtilem aedificant intelligentiam. Sequitur: IBID., ET VERS. 2. — Comede volumen istud, et vadens loquere ad filios Israel. Et aperui os meum, et cibavit me volumine illo.

3. Scriptura sacra cibus noster et potus est. Unde etiam Dominus per prophetam alium minatur: Mittam famem in terram, non famem panis, neque sitim aquae, sed audiendi verbum Domini (Amos. VIII, 11). Qui ergo, subtracto suo eloquio, fame ac siti nos dicit atteri, quia ejus verba et cibus noster et potus sint demonstrat. Sed notandum quod aliquando cibus, aliquando potus sunt. In rebus enim obscurioribus quae intelligi nequeunt nisi exponantur, Scriptura sacra cibus est, quia quidquid exponitur ut intelligatur, quasi manditur ut glutiatur. In rebus vero apertioribus potus est. Potum enim non mandendo glutimus. Apertiora ergo mandato bibimus, quia etiam non exposita intelligere valemus. Pro eo autem quod multa Ezechiel propheta obscura atque perplexa auditurus erat, nequaquam ei de sacro volumine dicitur, bibe, sed comede. Ac si aperte diceretur: Pertracta et intellige, id est prius mande, et tunc degluti. Sed in verbis sacri eloquii iste debet studii nostri ordo servari, ut haec ideo cognoscamus, quatenus de iniquitate nostra compuncti, cognoscentes mala quae fecimus, vitemus ne alia faciamus.

4. Et cum jam ex magno usu lacrymarum de peccatorum remissione coeperit esse fiducia, per verba Dei quae intelligimus ad vitam quoque et alios trahamus. Ad hoc enim intelligenda sunt, ut et nobis prosint, et intentione spiritali aliis conferantur. Unde bene nunc dicitur: Comede volumen istud, et vade, loquere ad filios Israel. Ac si ei de sacro cibo diceretur: Comede et pasce, saturare et eructa, accipe et sparge, confortare et labora.

5. Et notandum quod propheta subjungit, dicens: Et aperui os meum et cibavit me volumine illo. Os in corde esse alius Propheta testatur, dicens: Labia dolosa in corde, et corde locuti sunt mala (Psal. XI, [Col.0887C] 3). Os ergo aperimus, quando sensum ad intelligentiam sacri verbi praeparamus. Itaque ad vocem Domini propheta os aperit, quia ad spiramentum dominici praecepti cordis nostri desideria inhiant, ut de cibo vitae aliquid sumant. Sed tamen hoc ipsum sumere nostrarum virium non est, nisi ipse cibaverit qui ut comedatur jussit. Ille etenim cibatur, qui per se edere non potest. Et quia ad capienda verba coelestia idonea nostra infirmitas non est, ipse nos cibat, qui nobis in tempore mensuram tritici temperat, quatenus in sacro verbo dum hodie intelligimus quod hesterno die nesciebamus, cras quoque comprehendamus quod hodie nescimus, per divinae dispensationis gratiam quotidiano alimento nutriamur. Omnipotens etenim Deus quasi toties ad os cordis nostri manum porrigit, quoties nobis intellectum aperit, et cibum sacri eloquii in nostris sensibus mittit. Cibat ergo nos volumine, cum sensum nobis Scripturae sacrae dispensando aperit, et ejus dulcedine nostras cogitationes replet. Unde et subditur: VERS. 3. —

Et dixit ad me: Fili hominis, venter tuus comedet, et viscera tua replebuntur volumine isto quod ego do tibi.

6. In translatione veteri non habetur, Venter tuus comedet, sed, Os tuum comedet, et viscera tua replebuntur. Os enim nostrum comedit, dum verbum Dei legimus; viscera vero nostra complentur, cum intelligimus atque servamus ea in quibus legendo laboramus. In posteriori autem translatione, quam et veraciorem credimus, scriptum est: Venter tuus comedet, et viscera tua replebuntur. In sacro vero eloquio nonnunquam venter pro mente poni consuevit. Unde per Jeremiam dicitur: Ventrem meum, ventrem meum doleo (Jerem. IV, 19). Quod quia de spiritali et non corporeo ventre dixerat, adjunxit: Sensus cordis mei conturbati sunt (Ibid.). Neque enim ad salutem populi pertinebat, si propheta ventrem corporeum se dolere praedicaret. Sed ventrem doluit qui mentis afflictionem sensit. Sed cur exemplum prophetae proferimus, cum testimonium Domini apertius habeamus? Et necesse est ut cum per semetipsam Veritas loquitur, propheta taceat, quia lucerna claritatem non habet in sole. Ait enim: Qui credit in me, sicut dicit Scriptura, flumina de ventre ejus fluent aquae vivae (Joan. VII, 38). Quia enim de mente fidelium sanctae praedicationes defluunt, quasi de ventre credentium aquae vivae flumina decurrunt. Ventris autem viscera quid sunt aliud nisi mentis interna, id est recta intentio, sanctum desiderium, humilis ad Deum, pia ad proximum voluntas? Unde nunc recte dicitur: Venter tuus comedet, et viscera tua replebuntur, quia cum mens nostra pabulum veritatis acceperit, interna nostra non jam vacua remanent, sed alimento vitae satiata.

7. Pensemus, charissimi fratres mei, quam sit pia ista promissio, qua dicitur: Venter tuus comedet, et viscera tua replebuntur volumine isto quod ego do tibi. Multi etenim legunt, et ab ipsa lectione jejuni sunt. Multi vocem praedicationis audiunt, sed post vocem vacui recedunt. Quorum etsi venter comedit, viscera non replentur, quia etsi mente intellectum sacri verbi percipiunt, obliviscendo et non servando quae audierint, haec in cordis

visceribus non reponunt. Hinc est enim quod per prophetam alium quosdam Dominus increpat, dicens: Ponite corda vestra super vias vestras. Seminastis multum, et intulistis parum; comedistis, et non estis satiati; bibistis, et non estis inebriati (Aggae. I, 6). Multum cordi suo seminat, sed parum infert, qui de mandatis coelestibus vel legendo, vel etiam audiendo multa cognoscit, sed negligenter operando pauca fructificat. Comedit et non satiatur, qui, verba Dei audiens, lucra vel gloriam saeculi concupiscit. Bene autem non satiari dicitur, quia aliud mandit, et aliud esurit. Bibit et non inebriatur, qui ad vocem praedicationis aurem inclinat, sed mentem non mutat. Solet enim per ebrietatem bibentium sensus mutari. Qui ergo ad cognoscendum Dei verbum devotus est, sed ea quae sunt hujus saeculi adipisci desiderat, bibit, et debriatus non est. Si enim debriatus esset procul dubio mentem mutasset, ut jam terrena non quaereret, jam vana et transitoria quae amaverat non amaret. De electis namque per Psalmistam dicitur: Inebriabuntur ab ubertate domus tuae (Psal. XXXV, 9). Quia tanto omnipotentis Dei amore repleti sunt, ut mutata mente sibimetipsis extranei esse videantur, implentes quod scriptum est: Qui vult post me venire, abneget semetipsum (Matth. XVI, 24). Semetipsum abnegat qui mutatur ad meliora, et incipit esse quod non erat, et desinit esse quod erat.

8. Saepe autem quosdam videmus ad vocem praedicationis, quasi ex conversione compunctos, habitum, non animum mutasse, ita ut religiosam vestem sumerent, sed anteacta vitia non calcarent; irae stimulis immaniter agitari, malitiae dolore in proximi laesionem fervescere, de ostensis quibusdam bonis ante humanos oculos superbire, praesentis mundi lucra inhianter quaerere, et de solo exterius habitu quem sumpserunt, sanctitatis fiduciam habere. Quibus quid aliud dicendum est, nisi hoc quod magister egregius quibusdam legis exteriora servantibus loquitur, dicens: Quia in Christo Jesu neque circumcisio aliquid valet, neque praeputium, sed nova creatura (Gal. V, 6)? Non enim magni est meriti, si quid foris erga nos agatur in corpore, sed magnopere pensandum est quid agatur in mente.

9. Nam praesentem mundum despicere, transitoria non amare, mentem medullitus in humilitate Deo et proximo sternere, contra illatas contumelias patientiam servare, et, custodita patientia, dolorem malitiae a corde repellere, egenis propria tribuere, aliena minime ambire, amicum in Deo diligere, propter Deum et eos qui inimici sunt amare, de afflictione proximi lugere, de morte ejus qui inimicus est non exsultare, haec est nova creatura, quam idem magister gentium apud alios discipulos vigilanti oculo requirit, dicens: Si qua igitur in Christo nova creatura, vetera transierunt, ecce facta sunt omnia nova (II Cor. V, 17).

10. Ad veterem quippe hominem pertinet praesentem mundum quaerere, transitoria ex concupiscentia amare, mentem in superbiam erigere, patientiam non habere, ex dolore malitiae de proximi laesione cogitare, sua indigentibus non dare, atque ad multiplicandum aliena quaerere, nullum pure propter Deum diligere, inimicitias inimicitiis reddere, de afflictione proximi gaudere. Cuncta haec vetusti sunt hominis, quae videlicet de radice trahimus corruptionis. Sed qui jam ista exsuperat, et ad praecepta dominica mentem in benignitatem commutat, de hoc recte dicitur: Quia vetera transierunt, ecce facta sunt omnia nova.

11. Tunc ergo in nostris mentibus nova fiunt, cum a nobis vetusti hominis vitia transeunt; et tunc vitia vetusti hominis transeunt, quando sacri verbi praeceptum venter comedit, et viscera medullitus replentur. Saepe enim quosdam vidimus tota se mente ad sanctae lectionis studium contulisse, atque, inter verba dominica recognoscentes in quantis deliquerint, semetipsos in lacrymis mactare, moerore continuo affici, in nullis hujus mundi prosperitatibus delectari, ita ut eis vita praesens oneri et lux ipsa fastidio fieret; vix ad colloquendum communia admittere, atque a rigore disciplinae animum difficile relaxare, pro amore conditoris, luctu

solummodo et silentio gaudere. Horum venter sacrum volumen comedit, et viscera repleta sunt, quia praecepta vitae quae sensus capere potuit memoria non amisit, sed haec collectus in Deo animus lugendo semper et recolendo servavit.

12. Et fit plerumque ut tales quique ex dono caelestis gratiae etiam verbum doctrinae percipiant, atque de veritatis pabulo quod ipsi intrinsecus dulciter ruminant et proximos suaviter pascant. De quorum profecto ore praedicatio tanto audientibus dulcis est, quanto eorum actio contraria suis praedicationibus non est, quia de propria vita sumunt quod per linguam proximis conferunt. Unde recte hic quoque propheta subjungit: IBID. — Et comedi illud, et factum est in ore meo sicut mel dulce.

13. Liber qui viscera replevit dulcis in ore sicut mel factus est, quia ipsi de omnipotenti Domino sciunt suaviter loqui, qui hunc didicerint in cordis sui visceribus veraciter amare. In ejus quippe ore Scriptura sacra dulcis est, cujus vitae viscera mandatis illius replentur, quia ei suavis est ad loquendum, cui interius impressa ad vivendum fuerit. Nam sermo dulcedinem non habet, quem vita reproba intra conscientiam remordet. Unde necesse est ut qui verbum Dei loquitur prius studeat qualiter vivat, ut pos ex vita colligat quae et qualiter dicat. Ad praedicandum namque plus conscientia sancti amoris aedificat, quam exercitaio sermonis, quia amando coelestia intra semetipsum praedicator legit quomodo persuadeat ut despici debeant terrena. Qui enim vitam suam interius pensat, et exemplo suo foris admonendo alios aedificat, quasi in corde linguae calamum tingit, in eo quod manu verbi proximis exterius scribit. Unde admirabilis praedicator cum multa discipulis exhortando dixit, quia nullam intra semetipsum de conscientia contrarietatem pertulit, securus adjunxit: Si qua virtus, si qua laus disciplinae, haec cogitate; quae et didicistis, et accepistis, et audistis, et vidistis in me, haec agite, et Deus pacis erit vobiscum (Phil. IV, 8, 9).

Sequitur: VERS. 4. — Et dixit ad me: Fili hominis, vade ad domum Israel, et loqueris verba mea ad eos.

14. In eo quod Dominus prophetae dicit, Loqueris verba mea ad eos, quid aliud quam ejus ori frenum moderaminis imponit, ne quae prius intus non audierit, foris dicere praesumat? Nam prophetae falsi sua et non Dei verba loquebantur, de quibus scriptum est: Nolite audire verba prophetarum, qui prophetant vobis, et decipiunt vos; visionem cordis sui loquuntur, non de ore Domini (Jerem. XXIII, 16). Et rursum: Non loquebar ad eos, et ipsi prophetabant (Ibid., 21). Qua ex re quoque colligendum est quia et quisquis expositor in explanatione sacri eloquii, ut fortasse auditoribus placeat, aliquid mentiendo componit, sua et non Domini verba loquitur, si tamen placendi vel seducendi studio mentiatur. Nam si in verbis dominicis virtutem requirens, ipse aliter quam is per quem prolata sunt senserit, etiamsi sub intellectu alio aedificationem charitatis requirat, Domini sunt verba quae narrat, quia ad hoc solum Deus per totam nobis sacram Scripturam loquitur, ut nos ad suum et proximi amorem trahat. Sequitur: VERS. 5-7. — Non enim ad populum profundi sermonis et ignotae linguae tu mitteris, ad domum Israel; neque ad populos multos profundi sermonis et ignotae linguae quorum non possis audire sermones. Et si ad illos mittereris, ipsi audirent te. Domus autem Israel nolunt audire te, quia nolunt audire me.

15. In ipso jussionis exordio quo propheta ad praedicandum mittitur, aperte et vocatio gentium et Israelitarum repulsio designatur. Nam cum dicitur: Non ad populos multos profundi sermonis et ignotae linguae mitteris quorum non possis audire sermones, atque statim subditur: Et si ad illos mittereris, ipsi audirent te, aperte declaratur obedientia gentium, quae quandoque praedicatorum voces essent sine tarditate secuturae. Et cum subditur: Domus autem Israel nolunt audire te, quia nolunt audire me, Judaeae duritia designatur, quae verba praedicantium et cognovit, et sequi noluit. Ignota autem lingua gentium ad obediendum moram non fecit, quamvis extranea ab eloquio legis fuit. Bene autem dicitur: Nolunt audire te, quia nolunt audire me, secundum hoc quod scriptum est: Qui vos spernit, me spernit (Luc. X, 16). Causa quoque cur non audiant subinfertur, cum dicitur: VERS. 7. — Omnis quippe domus Israel attrita fronte est, et duro corde.

16. Cum domus Israel attrita fronte esse perhibetur, quid aliud sentiendum, quidve cogitandum est, nisi quod frontem cordis in impudentia atterit culpa frequens, ut quo crebrius committitur, eo de illa committentis animus minus verecundetur? Atque ideo ad tantam cordis duritiam quandoque peccator pervenit, ut jam in correptione sensibilis non sit, quia qui usu peccandi induruit nullo modo corripientis verbum, id est manum palpantis, sentit, sicut Judaeae quoque crebrius delinquenti dicitur: Frons mulieris meretricis facta est tibi, noluisti erubescere (Jerem. III, 5). Vel certe attrita frons est in hujus mundi actibus assueta, quia sicut sunt nonnulli qui quietem cunctis mundi praemiis atque honoribus praeponunt, ita nonnulli ut in hoc mundo aliquid esse videantur terrenis laboribus insudant, insistunt causis, permiscentur jurgiis. Et quamvis se corpore deficere inter labores sentiant, amore tamen terrenarum rerum devicti, delectabiliter fatigantur. Quibus per prophetam dicitur: Ephraim vitula docta diligere trituram (Osee X, 11). Vitula etenim in tritura areae assueta, etiam si relaxatur a labore, sponte redit. Sic quibusdam pravis mentibus nihil est laboriosius quam si eis praecipitur ut in hujus mundi actibus non laborent. Nam saepe quidam repulsi ab actione terrena deprecantur ut redeant, rogant ut premantur, grave se incurrisse periculum quietem putant. Attrita ergo fronte sunt, qui non solum labores non fugiunt, sed neque importuni videri in laboribus qui sibi negantur erubescunt. Sequitur: VERS. 8. — Ecce dedi faciem tuam valentiorem faciebus eorum, et frontem tuam duriorem frontibus eorum.

17. Sicut verecundia laudabilis est in malo, ita reprehensibilis est in bono. Erubescere enim malum sapientiae est; bonum vero erubescere, fatuitatis. Unde scriptum est: Est confusio adducens peccatum, et est confusio adducens gloriam (Eccli. IV, 25). Qui enim erubescit poenitendo mala quae fecit, ad vitae libertatem pervenit. Qui vero erubescit bona facere, a statu rectitudinis cadit, atque ad damnationem tendit, sicut per Redemptorem dicitur: Qui me erubuerit et meos sermones, hunc Filius hominis erubescet, cum venerit in majestate sua (Luc. IX, 26). Et sunt quidam qui bona jam in mente concipiunt, sed necdum malis aperte contradicunt. Hi nimirum quia boni sunt in mente, sed auctoritatem non habent in locutione, apti ad veritatis defensionem non sunt. Ille enim esse veritatis defensor debet, qui quod recte sentit loqui nec metuit, nec erubescit. Unde nunc in magno munere prophetae promittitur: Ecce dedi faciem tuam valentiorem faciebus eorum, et frontem tuam duriorem frontibus eorum. Quid est autem peccator, nisi vulneratus? et qui praedicator, nisi medicus? Si ergo non erubescit peccator qui jacet in vulnere, cur erubescat medicus qui per medicamenta providet salutem? Saepe vero contingit ut praedicator reverenter audiatur; nonnunquam vero a perversis ita despicitur, ac si eis nihil utilitatis loquatur. Unde recte nunc dicitur: VERS. IX. — Ut adamantem et ut silicem dedi faciem tuam.

18. Adamas et silex utraque dura; sed unum horum pretiosum est, alterum vile. Adamas ad ornamentum sumitur, silex ab itinerantibus calcatur. Et saepe contingit ut hos quos correptionem suam conspicimus nimis humiliter audire, verecundemur eis aliqua dicere. Nonnunquam vero evenit ut eos quos increpationem suam videmus postponere, et despectui habere, trepidemus eis verbum praedicationis inferre. Sed si recte sapimus, et ad eos a quibus nos honorari conspicimus, et ad eos a quibus nos despici videmus, auctoritatem exhortationis vel increpationis sumimus, ut nec illorum humilitatem debeamus erubescere, nec horum superbiam formidare. Dicatur ergo: Dedi faciem tuam ut adamantem, id est, si ab auditoribus honoraris; Dedi faciem tuam ut silicem, si ab auditoribus conculcaris atque despiceris, ut nec per illatum honorem refrenetur lingua ex verecundia, nec per despectum taceat ex infirmitate. Sequitur: IBID. — Ne timeas eos, neque metuas a facie eorum, quia domus exasperans est.

19. Hoc jam superius dictum est. Sed notandum quam aspera domus habetur, cujus asperitas tam crebro replicatur. Increpandus itaque peccator est, et nunquam timendus, quia domus exasperans est. Timeri enim homo debuerat, si ipse auctorem omnium ut homo timuisset. Nam qui rationis sensum ad timorem Dei non habuit, tanto in nullo timendus est, quanto hoc quod esse debuit, non est. Sequitur: VERS. 10, 11. — Et dixit ad me: Fili hominis, omnes sermones meos quos loquor ad te, assume in corde tuo, et auribus tuis audi; et vade, ingredere ad transmigrationem filiorum populi tui.

20. Vigilanter intuendum est quod voce Domini ad Prophetam dicitur ut prius sermones ejus audiat, et postmodum loquatur. Audimus enim verba Dei, si facimus. Et tunc ea proximis recte loquimur, cum prius ipsi fecerimus. Quod bene Marcus evangelista confirmat, cum factum Domini miraculum narrat, dicens: Adducunt ci surdum et mutum, et deprecabantur eum ut imponat illi manum (Marc. VII, 32). Cujus ordinem curationis insinuat, subdens: Misit digitos suos in auriculas, expuensque tetigit linguam ejus, et suspiciens in coelum ingemuit, et ait illi: Ephphetha, quod est adaperire. Et statim apertae sunt aures ejus, et solutum est vinculum linguae ejus, et loquebatur recte (Ibid., 33, seq.). Quid est enim quod creator omnium Deus cum surdum et mutum sanare voluisset, in aures illius suos digitos misit, et expuens linguam ejus tetigit? Quid per digitos Redemptoris, nisi dona sancti Spiritus designantur? Unde cum in alio loco ejecisset daemonium, dixit: Si in digito Dei ejicio daemonia, profecto pervenit in vos regnum Dei (Luc. XI, 20). Qua de re per evangelistam alium dixisse describitur: Si ego in spiritu Dei ejicio daemones, igitur pervenit in vos regnum Dei (Matth. XII, 28). Ex quo utroque loco colligitur quia digitus

Dei spiritus vocatur. Digitos ergo in auriculas mittere, est per dona Spiritus sancti mentem surdi ad obediendum aperire. Quid est vero quod exspuens linguam ejus tetigit? Saliva nobis est ex ore Redemptoris accepta sapientia in eloquio divino. Saliva quippe ex capite defluit in ore. Ea ergo sapientia quae ipse est dum lingua nostra tangitur, mox ad praedicationis verba formatur. Qui suspiciens in coelum ingemuit; non quod ipse necessarium gemitum haberet, qui dabat quod postulabat, sed nos ad eum gemere qui coelo praesidet docuit, ut et aures nostrae per dona Spiritus sancti aperiri, et lingua per salivam oris, id est per scientiam divinae locutionis solvi debeat ad verba praedicationis. Cui mox Ephphetha, id est adaperire dicitur; et statim apertae sunt aures ejus, et solutum est vinculum linguae ejus. Qua in re notandum est quia propter clausas aures dictum est Adaperire. Sed cui aures cordis ad obediendum apertae fuerint, ex subsequenti procul dubio etiam linguae ejus vinculum solvitur, ut bona quae ipse fecerit etiam facienda aliis loquatur. Ubi et bene additur: Et loquebatur recte. Ille enim recte loquitur qui prius obediendo fecerit quae loquendo admonet esse facienda.

21. Quod vero ad transmigrationem populi admonendam propheta mittitur, non solum ea transmigratio debet intelligi quae ejus populi erat in corpore, sed etiam quae facta fuerat in mente. A Jerusalem quippe ad Babyloniam venerat. Et quid Jerusalem nisi visio pacis, quid Babylonia nisi confusio vocatur? Quisquis vero a rectis operibus in perversis actibus cadit, quoniam a bono studio ad vitia defluit, quasi ab Jerusalem ad Babyloniae civitatem venit. Culmen enim bonae contemplationis deseruit, atque in transmigratione confusionis jacet. Quod illis solet saepe evenire qui cum bona agunt, in his de sua virtute gloriantur. Unde Psalmista ne a visione pacis, id est a bonis actibus captivus ad Babyloniam emigraret, Domino supplicans, dicit: Adjutor meus, non emigrabo (Psal. LXI, 7). Si enim in se confideret, a justitiae operibus cadendo migrasset.

22. Sed neque hi qui a statu rectitudinis in pravam actionem ceciderunt desperandi sunt, quia ecce propheta ad transmigrationem Babyloniae mittitur. Et per prophetam alium Dominus dicit: Et venies usque Babylonem, et ibi liberaberis (Mich. IV, 10). Saepe enim quis postquam in confusionem vitiorum ceciderit, erubescens mala quae perpetravit, ad poenitentiam redit, seque a suis lapsibus bene vivendo erigit. Quid ergo iste nisi usque ad Babylonem venit, et ibi liberatus est? Qui postquam, confusus mente, perversa perpetravit, haec ipsa erubescens mala quae fecit, se contra se erigit, et bene operando ad statum rectitudinis redit. In Babylone itaque liberatus est, qui per divinam gratiam ostenditur etiam de confusione salvatus. Propheta ergo ad transmigrationem loquitur, cum illos increpat qui a statu rectitudinis ad erroris vitia transmigrando ceciderunt. Sequitur: VERS. 11. — Et loqueris ad eos, et dices: Haec dicit Dominus Deus: si forte audiant, et quiescant.

23. Quod toties divinis vocibus difficultas audiendi repetitur, ut dicatur, Si forte audiant, quid aliud quam transmigrati populi duritia designatur? In quibus verbis magna est nostra consolatio, quia si omnipotens Deus prophetam mittens a perverso populo verba sua denuntiat difficile audiri, cur nos miseri contristamur, cum saepe a fratribus in nostra admonitione contemnimur? Nam crebro delinquentes alloquimur, frequenter increpamus, saepe cum eis blandis sermonibus agimus, et tamen si alter audit, alter audire contemnit; alter ex parte verbum exhortationis suscipit, et ex parte recipere recusat; ita ut quotidie impleri videamus hoc quod per prophetam alium Dominus narrat quae fecerit iratus, cum dicit: Plui super civitatem unam, et super alteram non plui. Pars una compluta est, et pars quae compluta non est aruit (Amos IV, 7). Cum enim sanctae exhortationis verba alia mens suscipit, alia suscipere recusat, super unam civitatem Dominus pluit, et super alteram non pluit. Cum vero et ipse proximus qui audit ab aliis se vitiis corrigit, atque ab aliis emendare se contemnit, una eademque civitas et ex parte compluitur, et ex parte arida remanet, in qua a se praedicationis pluviam repellit. Sunt etenim quidam qui exhortationis verba omnino non audiunt, hi penitus suscipere pluviam nolunt. Et sunt quidam qui audiunt, sed tamen hanc medullitus non sequuntur, quia alia in se vitia resecant, sed in aliis graviter perdurant. Saepe enim quosdam videmus qui per praedicationis verbum a semetipsis avaritiae aestum repellunt, et non solum jam aliena non rapiunt, sed et propria indigentibus largiuntur; nec tamen irae stimulos edomant, nec patientiae moderamina per mentis tranquilitatem servant. Et saepe alii ad exhortationis verbum in semetipsis jam carnis immunditiam vincunt, corpus in castitate custodiunt, nec tamen adhuc animum, sicut debent, proximis inclinant, sed per rigorem superbiae in cogitatione se elevant. In istis pars una compluta est, quia fructum fecit, et pars quae compluta non est aruit, quia exhortationis verbum non plene suscipiens, a bono opere sterilis remansit. Sequitur: VERS. 12. — Et assumpsit me spiritus, et audivi post me vocem commotionis magnae; Benedicta gloria Domini de loco suo.

24. Quid est hoc, quod propheta postquam ad transmigrationem filiorum populi mittitur, vocem post se magnae commotionis audit, dicentem: Benedicta gloria Domini de loco suo? Conversus quippe ad peccatores Babyloniae fuerat, et vocem gloriae Domini de loco suo post tergum audiebat. Locus enim est Dei Jerusalem, id est visio pacis, quia nimirum illa corda vident ea quae Dei sunt, quae ad transmigrationem Babyloniae, hoc est ad confusionis vitia, non descendunt. Ibi enim inhabitat Deus ubi vera pax quaeritur, internae contemplationis gloria amatur. Nam qui ad perversitatem defluunt, locus Dei esse contemnunt. Locus ergo gloriae Dei est vel sancta quaeque anima, vel unusquisque in coelestibus permanens angelicus spiritus. Et gloria Domini de loco suo benedicitur, cum vel ab electis hominibus, vel a sanctis angelis auctori omnium laus aeterna cantatur. In eo ergo quod justi de convertendis peccatoribus cogitant, quia eorum vitia considerando ad carnales actus oculum ducunt, quasi ad Babyloniam intendunt. Qui tamen pro statu suae rectitudinis, quia in laudem Dei bona sanctorum considerare nunquam desinunt, quamvis per cogitationem alio intendant, quasi post se vocem gloriae Domini a Jerusalem, id est de loco suo audiunt.

25. Sed cur in istis immoramur, qui haec prophetae verba, largiente Domino, per sensum alterum et subtilius intelligere, et apertius dicere valemus? Ait enim: Et assumpsit me spiritus. Praedicatorem spiritus assumit, cum ejus mentem in amorem Dei omnipotentis elevatam a terrenis jam desideriis alienam reddit, ut nihil ei agere libeat, nisi ea quibus lucra spiritalia congreget, et ad regna coelestia quotidiani sui operis fructum portet. Unde et nobis praedicatoribus jubetur: Operamini non cibum qui perit, sed qui permanet in vitam aeternam (Joan. VI, 27).

26. Bene autem subditur: Et audivi post me vocem commotionis magnae. Propheta, sancto Spiritu repletus, quasi transacta narrat, quae facienda praevidet, quia et in praedestinatione jam facta sunt, quae adhuc in opere sequuntur. Unde et in translatione veteri per Isaiam dicitur: Qui fecit quae futura sunt (Isai. XLV, 11, sec. LXX). Quid est ergo quod post se propheta vocem audivit commotionis magnae, nisi quod post sermonem praedicationis, qui fit ad corda peccantium, lamenta poenitentium sequuntur?

27. Perversi etenim quique dum prava agunt, et a justis recta non audiunt, nesciunt quam sint gravia quae committunt, atque ex ipsa sua ignorantia, in suo stupore securi sunt; et jacentes in culpis, quasi molliter quiescunt, sicut de quodam peccatore et securo populo dicitur: Requievit in faecibus suis, quia securus jacuit in peccatis (Jerem. XLVIII, 11).

28. Cum vero audire perversi verbum praedicationis coeperint, quae sint supplicia aeterna cognoscere, qui terror judicii, quam subtilis examinatio de singulis quibusque peccatis, illico contremiscunt, implentur gemitibus, et non se capientibus suspiriis anxiantur, atque, magno pavore concussi, in luctu et fletibus erumpunt. Prophetam ergo vox magnae commotionis sequitur; quia post verbum praedicationis, conversorum atque poenitentium luctus audiuntur. Qui enim prius quieti jacebant in vulnere, tacti postmodum manu medicinae, cum dolore redeunt ad salutem. De hac commotione poenitentium per prophetam alium dicitur: Pedes ejus steterunt, et commota est terra (Zach. XIV, 4), quia cum veritatis vestigia in mente audientium figuntur, ipsa mens in sui consideratione turbata commovetur. Hinc Psalmista pro peccatoribus exorat, dicens: Qui sedes super cherubim, moveatur terra (Psal. XCVIII, 2). Hinc pro afflictis et poenitentibus deprecans, ait: Commovisti terram, et conturbasti eam, sana contritiones ejus, quia mota est (Psal. LIX, 4). Terra quippe commota et turbata, est peccator de cognitione reatus sui anxius, et ad poenitentiae lamenta perductus. Peccanti etenim homini dictum est: Terra es, et in terram ibis (Genes. III, 19). Exoret ergo ut sanetur contritio terrae, quia mota est, quatenus peccator qui de culpis suis affligitur, de coelestis misericordiae gaudio consoletur. Haec est itaque vox commotionis magnae, quando unusquisque sua acta dijudicans, in afflictione poenitentiae perturbatur.

29. Sed quid vox ipsa dicat audiamus: Benedicta gloria Domini de loco suo. Locus enim maligni spiritus fuerant corda peccantium; sed cum sibimetipsis irati per poenitentiam redeunt ad vitam, gloriae Domini locus fiunt. Jam enim se contra se erigunt, jam poenitentiae lacrymis insequuntur mala quae commiserunt. Inde ergo auditur benedictio gloriae in laude Domini, unde prius sonabat Creatoris injuria de amore praesentis saeculi. Et corda poenitentium fiunt jam Domino locus suus, quae prius in peccatis posita, fuerant locus alienus. Ipsi autem qui a peccatis suis ad Dominum convertuntur, non solum delent lacrymis perversa quae fecerunt, sed etiam miris operibus ad alta proficiunt, ut sancta animalia Dei omnipotentis fiant, ut signis et virtutibus ad alta evolent, ut terram funditus deserant, et acceptis donis sese ad coelestia per desiderium suspendant. De quibus adhuc subditur: VERS. 13. — Et vocem alarum animalium percutientium alteram ad alteram.

30. Audit post se propheta vocem commotionis magnae, quia, sicut dictum est, verbum praedicantium luctus poenitentium sequitur. Audit post se vocem alarum animalium, quia ex ipso luctu poenitentium oriuntur virtutes sanctorum, ut tanto magis in sancta actione proficiant, quanto se ante cognitionem vitae nequiter egisse meminerunt. Sed est in his verbis magna dubitatio, quia non aperte per prophetam dicitur utrum unumquodque animal alas suas in semetipsis percutiat, an certe haec eadem sancta animalia alis suis se vicissim feriant, ut ala hujus alterum, et ala alterius istud animal tangat.

31. Sed quia plerumque in sacro eloquio ideo aliquid obscure dicitur, ut dispensante mirabiliter Deo multipliciter exponatur, nos charitati vestrae utraque exponere largiente Domino debemus. Saepe jam alas animalium virtutes diximus esse sanctorum. Quomodo ergo unumquodque animas alas suas excutiens alteram ad alteram percutit, nisi quod aperte datur intelligi qua, si sancta animalia efficimur, virtus in nobis virtutem excitat, dum una alteram ad perfectionem pulsat? Ecce etenim quis habet jam verbi Dei scientiam, discit ut viscera etiam misericordiae habeat. Per scientiam quippe verbi Dei discit: Date eleemosynam, et ecce omnia munda sunt vobis (Luc. XI, 41). Cumque jam esse misericors in eleemosynis coeperit, verba sanctae auctoritatis legit; et quidquid in eis de misericordia dicitur, ulterius per experimentum intelligit. Ibi enim scriptum est: Pater eram pauperum (Job. XXIX, 16). Quod fortasse antea legebat, et praeteribat. Sed cum in ejus corde jam misericordia coeperit imitari naturam, quid sit patrem esse pauperum, legit et recognoscit, quia introrsus rediens, in semetipso intelligit quod foris audit. Aliud namque est eleemosynam ex praecepto facere, atque aliud ex charitate. Ex praecepto enim facere bonum, inchoantium est; ex charitate autem facere bonum, perfectorum, qui non solum quia jubetur faciunt, sed etiam diligunt faciendo quod jubetur. Hinc est enim quod in magna virtute per Psalmistam dicitur: Vide quia mandata tua dilexi, Domine, in tua misericordia vivifica me (Psal. CXVIII, 159). Mandata enim Dei pro jussione facere servientis et obedientis est, diligendo autem facere obedientis et amantis est. Quia ergo et per scientiam charitatis misericordia discitur, et per charitatem misericordiae in corde compuncto scientia multiplicatur, ala in nobis alam percutit, quia virtus virtutem excitat. Sic qui castitatis bonum in suo corpore custodit contra luxuriantes zelo accenditur, ut ab immunditiae maculis expientur. Et saepe dum quosdam in lapsibus invenit, edomat, affligit, atque ad castitatis munditiam restringit. Cujus si forte mens de immunditia luxuriae fuerit tentata, ex ipso zelo quo alios correxit semetipsam convenit, et erubescit immunda cogitare, quae se in aliis recolit correxisse. In hoc ergo ala alam percutit, dum virtus virtutem pulsat, et ab immunditia custodit.

32. Sin vero, ut praefati sumus, vicissim se alis suis animalia feriunt, et altera ad alteram ala percutitur singulorum, hujus quoque descriptionis, largiente Domino, sensus patet. Quid est ergo quod haec pennata animalia vicissim alas alteram ad alteram feriunt, nisi quod omnes sancti se invicem suis virtutibus tangunt, et sese ad provectum excitant ex consideratione virtutis alienae? Non enim uni dantur omnia, ne in superbiam elatus cadat, sed huic datur quod tibi non datur, et tibi datur quod illi denegatur, ut dum iste considerat bonum quod habes et ipse non habet, te sibi in cogitatione praeferat; et rursum dum tu habere illum conspicis quod ipse non habes, te illi in tua cogitatione postponas, et fiat quod scriptum est: Superiores sibi invicem arbitrantes (Philip. II, 3). Ut enim pauca ex multis loquar, isti mirae abstinentiae virtus tribuitur, et tamen verbum scientiae non habet. Illi autem datur verbum scientiae; et tamen virtutem perfectae abstinentiae apprehendere conatur, et non valet. Huic libertas vocis tribuitur, ut, oppressis quibusque protectionis solatia impendens, ad defensionem justitiae libere loquatur; sed tamen adhuc multa in hoc mundo possidens, relinquere omnia vult, et non valet. Illi vero jam datum est omnia terrena relinquere, ut nihil in hoc mundo cupiat habere; sed tamen adhuc auctoritatem vocis contra peccantes quosque non praesumit exercere. Et qui ideo plus loqui libere debuit, quia jam non habet mundo teneatur, loqui contra alios libere recusat, ne ipsam vitae suae quietem perdat. Isti virtus prophetiae data est, multa jam quae ventura sunt praevidet; sed tamen praesentis proximi aegritudinem conspiciens atque compatiens, non valet curare. Illi data est curationis gratia, atque a corpore proximi molestiam quae in praesenti est orationibus repellit, sed tamen quid seipsum paulo post sequatur ignorat. Mira itaque dispensatione omnipotens Deus sic in electis suis sua dona dispensat, ut et isti det quod illi denegat, et alteri majus quod alteri minus tribuat, quatenus dum vel iste habere illum conspicit quod ipse non habet, vel ille hunc majus accepisse considerat quod sibi minus adesse pensat, dona Dei alter in altero, id est vicissim, omnes admirentur, atque ex hac ipsa admiratione humilietur alter alteri, et quem videt habere quod non habet, eum divino judicio sibi praelatum putet. Alis ergo suis vicissim se animalia feriunt cum sanctae mentes alternis se virtutibus tangunt, et tangendo excitant, atque excitata ad provectum volant.

33. Videamus Paulum quomodo apostolorum alis tactus, atque ad poenitentiam excitatus fuerat, qui, mala praeteritae persecutionis suae et apostolorum innocentem vitam considerans, dicebat: Ego enim sum minimus apostolorum, qui non sum dignus vocari apostolus, quia persecutus sum Ecclesiam Dei (I Cor. XV, 9). Consideravit quippe apostolorum innocentiam, et propter praecedentem malitiam vilis in ejus oculis facta est omnis quam exhibebat in Ecclesia sollicitudo sua; et quam multos ex accepto intellectu praecederet non attendit, quia, illorum innocentiam pensans, persecutorem aliquando fuisse se doluit. Sed videamus si quis ex apostolis eum qui Paulo datus est intellectum miratur. Ipse nobis apostolorum primus requirendus est, qui discipulos admonens ait: Sicut et charissimus frater noster Paulus secundum datam sibi sapientiam scripsit vobis; sicut in omnibus epistolis, loquens in eis de his in quibus sunt quaedam difficilia intellectu, quae indocti et instabiles depravant (II Petr. III, 15). Miratur itaque in apostolis omnibus Paulus innocentiam, miratur apostolorum primus in Paulo sapientiam. Alis ergo se tangunt qui inde se vicissim ad provectum excitant, unde volant.

34. Hoc itaque omnipotens Deus agit in cordibus hominum, quod facit in regionibus terrarum. Poterat namque unicuilibet regioni fructus omnes tribuere; sed si una quaelibet regio alterius regionis fructibus non indigeret, communionem cum altera non habuisset. Unde fit ut huic vini, alii vero olei abundantiam tribuat; hanc multitudine pecudum, illam vero ubertate abundare faciat frugum, ut cum illa defert quod ista non habet, et ista reddit quod illa non detulit, per communionem gratiae sibi simul etiam divisae terrae conjunctae sint. Sicut ergo regiones terrarum, ita sunt mentes sanctorum, quae dum vicissim sibi conferunt quod acceperunt, quasi fructus suos regiones regionibus impendunt ut in una omnes charitate jungantur.

35. Sed inter haec sciendum est quia sicut electi quique hoc semper in aliis attendunt quod a Deo melius acceperunt quam ipsi, ut eos sibi in cogitatione praeferant, seque illis in humilitate substernant, ita reproborum mens nunquam considerat quid alter boni amplius quam ipsa, sed quid boni ipsa amplius quam alter habeat. Neque enim pensant quae bona spiritus alter acceperit et ipsis desint, sed quae bona ipsi, et quae mala adsint alteri. Et dum omnipotens Deus ad hoc virtutes singulis dividat, ut alterum alteri in cogitatione humiliet, ad hoc reprobi pertrahunt bonum quod acceperunt, ut ex eo in elatione perdantur, dum semper considerant bona quae ipsi habent et alii non habent, et nunquam perpendere student quanta bona alii habeant et ipsi non habeant. Quod ergo divina pietas in augmentum disponit humilitatis, hoc mentes reprobae in augmentum vertunt elationis; et ex diversitate munerum a bono deficiunt, unde crescere humilitatis bono debuerunt.

36. Propter hoc ergo necesse est, fratres charissimi, ut in vobis hoc semper debeatis aspicere quod minus habetis, in proximis vero hoc quod vobis amplius acceperunt, quatenus dum super vosmetipsos eos pro bono quod ipsi habent et vos non habetis aspicitis, ad hoc quoque obtinendum etiam vos ex humilitate crescatis. Si enim et vos in illis accepta bona perpenditis, et illi in vobis considerant dona quae habetis, vicissim vos alis tangitis, ut excitati semper ad coelestia voletis. Sequitur: VERS. 13. — Et vocem rotarum sequentium animalia, et vocem commotionis magnae.

37. In rotis sacri eloquii Testamenta signari superius diximus. Vox igitur rotarum est sermo Testamentorum. Post vocem itaque alarum animalium auditur etiam vox rotarum, quia praedicantium sermone suscepto, dum virtutes sanctorum ad altiora agenda evolant, seque vicissim ad provectum pulsant, sanctae Ecclesiae status erigitur, ut per universum mundum sacrorum Testamentorum paginae legantur. Ubique etenim jam sanctum Evangelium ubique apostolorum dicta, ubique lex et prophetae resonant. Post alarum ergo vocem vox rotarum sequitur, quia post sanctorum miracula verba sacri eloquii intra sanctam Ecclesiam libere licenter audiuntur. Quae rotae animalia sequuntur, quia, ut superius dictum est, postquam in honorem venit vita sanctorum, veneranda quoque apparuerunt hominibus eloquia Testamentorum.

38. Vel certe animalia sequuntur, quia in sanctorum Patrum vita cognoscimus quid in sacrae Scripturae volumine intelligere debeamus. Illorum quippe actio nobis aperit hoc quod in suis praedicationibus pagina Testamentorum dicit. Sed quaerendum nobis est cur postquam superius dictum est, Audivi post me vocem commotionis magnae, post vocem

quoque alarum atque rotarum subditur: Et vocem commotionis magnae. Quod si diligenter aspicitur, inveniri potest quia non otiose repetitur.

39. Duae quippe sunt commotiones magnae, quibus corda nostra commoventur. Una quippe commotio ex timore est, altera ex charitate; una fit ex luctu poenitentium, alia ex fervore amantium. Post praedicationis ergo verbum prima commotio est, cum plangimus mala quae fecimus; post vocem vero alarum et rotarum, secunda commotio est, dum magnis fletibus quaerimus coelestia bona quae audimus. Ecce enim quia intra sanctam Ecclesiam de multis Patribus virtutum exempla cognoscimus, quasi alarum sonitum quotidie audimus, quia ubique sacra eloquia personant, quasi rotarum vocibus excitamur. Et quia per eadem sacra eloquia ad amorem nostri conditoris accendimur, magni fervoris ignibus ardentes, esse nos longe adhuc ab omnipotentis Dei facie plangimus. Post primam ergo vocem commotionis magnae ad extremum quoque vox magnae commotionis fit, quia qui cognoscendo Deum coepimus peccata plangere, jam diligendo quem cognovimus non cessamus eum cum fletibus desiderare. Post rotarum itaque vocem vox magnae commotionis sequitur, quia cum Testamenta Dei in aure cordis sonare coeperint, audientium spiritus ex amore compunctus ad lamenta commovetur. Hinc est enim quod Scripturae sacrae verba fiunt in corde legentium sapida, hinc est quod ab amantibus plerumque in silentio quasi furtive et tacite leguntur. Unde per prophetam quoque alium dicitur: Praecidisti in alienatione capita potentium, movebuntur in ea gentes, adaperient ora sua sicut pauper edens in occulto (Habac. III, 14). Omnipotens enim Deus in alienatione capita potentium praecidit, quia Judaeorum superbiam a semetipso alienando repulit. In qua alienatione gentes motae sunt, quia dum Judaei a fide caderent, ad cognitionem fidei corda gentilium cucurrerunt. Quae videlicet gentes in sacrae lectionis pabulo os cordis aperiunt, et in occulto sicut pauper comedunt, quia cum festinatione et silentio verba vitae legentes sumunt.

40. Sed sciendum est quia quanto auditores in charitate atque intellectu proficiunt, tanto sanctis praedicatoribus major gratia spiritus datur. Unde cum prius propheta dixisset: Assumpsit me spiritus, et audivi post me vocem commotionis magnae, post vocem commotionis magnae alarum atque rotarum, atque iterum commotionis magnae, illico subjungit: VERS. 14. — Spiritus quoque elevavit me, et assumpsit me.

41. Cur qui se assumptum jam a spiritu dixerat iterum elevatum et assumptum narrat? Sed ad altiora mens praedicantium proficit cum per eos sensus audientium ad omnipotentis Dei desiderium commovetur. Qui videlicet praedicatores sancti idcirco proficiunt, ut per eorum ministerium dona gratiae in sancta Ecclesia multiplicentur, sicut de hac eadem sancta Ecclesia scriptum est: Rivos ejus inebrians multiplica generationes ejus, in stillicidiis suis laetabitur cum exorietur (Psal. LXIV, 11). Rivi quippe Ecclesiae sancti praedicatores sunt, qui terram nostri cordis infundunt. Sed cum inebriantur rivi, generationes Ecclesiae multiplicantur, quia cum uberiorem gratiam spiritus praedicatores accipiunt, fidelium numerus augetur. Quae sancta Ecclesia in suis stillicidiis laetatur. In stillicidio enim aqua de tecto in terram cadit, quae de coelo ceciderat in tectum. Tectum vero Ecclesiae sancti praedicatores sunt, qui nos intercedendo et admonitionibus muniendo protegunt. Sed quia illorum cor divinitus in praedicatione infunditur, quasi aqua de coelo venit in tectum. Quia vero nos eorum verbis irrigamur, quasi aqua de tecto defluit in terram. Sancta itaque Ecclesia, dum exoritur, in stillicidiis suis laetatur, quia cum in fide et bonis operibus nascitur, ea quae accepit dona considerat, et in verbis praedicantium exsultat. Quia ergo auditoribus ad meliora surgentibus, eorum quoque praedicatoribus gratia multiplicatur, propheta dicit: Spiritus quoque elevavit me, et assumpsit me. Inde enim praedicator magis ac magis elevatur et assumitur, unde auditor ad meliorem vitam mutatur.

42. Sed quaerendum nobis est, cum spiritus mentem non elevet nisi assumpserit, cur prius elevavit et postmodum dicitur assumpsit? Sed hoc loco assumpsit dictum est constanter tenuit. Nam sunt nonnulli quos elevat sed non assumit, quorum et intellectus ad spiritalia emicat, sed tamen vita in factis carnalibus remanens, intellectui non concordat. Balaam namque per prophetiae spiritum elevatus erat, sed assumptus non erat, quia et veraciter potuit longe post futura prospicere, et tamen a terrenis desideriis mentem noluit separare (Num. XXIV, 4, 5). Sed quia propheta sanctus scientia elevatus est, et vita pariter assumptus, jam qualis in praedicationem pergat audiamus: IBID. — Et abii amarus in indignatione spiritus mei.

43. Pensate, fratres charissimi, cui dona sancti Spiritus creverant cur amarus abibat? An omne cor quod idem spiritus assumit amarum in indignatione sui spiritus facit? Unde sciendum est quia cui adhuc praesens vita dulcis est, etiamsi verbum Dei loqui videatur, elevatus et assumptus praedicator non est. Mentem enim quam Spiritus sanctus replet in amaritudinem temporalium delectatione aeternorum commovet. Dulce enim est esse in rebus humanis, sed ei qui adhuc de coelestibus gaudia nulla gustavit, quia quanto minus aeterna intelligit, tanto delectabilius in temporalibus requiescit. At si quis jam cordis ore gustaverit quae sit illa dulcedo coelestium praemiorum qui illi hymnidici angelorum chori, quae incomprehensibilis visio sanctae Trinitatis, huic quanto illud dulce fit quod intus videt, tanto in amaritudinem vertitur omne quod foris sustinet. Rixatur secum de his quae male egisse se recolit, et sibimetipsi displicet, cum ei ille placere jam coeperit qui omnia creavit. Reprehendit se de cogitationibus, insequitur de verbis, et punit flendo de factis. Supernis inhiat, terrena jam omnia per mentis despectum calcat. Et quandiu illud quod desiderat adhuc per speciem non habet, flere dulce habet, seseque continuis lamentis affligere. Et quia necdum se esse in patria ad quam creatus est videt, in hujus vitae exsilio nil ei plus aliud quam sua amaritudo placet. Dedignatur etenim subjacere temporalibus, et ardenter suspirat aeternis. Unde recte quoque per Salomonem dicitur: Eo quod in multa sapientia multa sit indignatio, et qui apponit scientiam apponit dolorem (Eccle. I, 18). Coelestia etenim cognoscentes, terrenis animum subdere dedignamur. Et dum plus sapere incipimus de his quae male egimus, nobis ipsis irascimur, et fit in multa sapientia multa indignatio, quia quanto plus proficimus in cognitione, tanto nobis indignamur amplius de perverso opere. Atque cum scientia dolor crescit, quia quanto magis aeterna cognoscimus, tanto magis esse nos in hujus exsilii miseria dolemus. Vel sicut in translatione alia dicitur: Et qui addit scientiam addit laborem. Quo enim scire incipimus quae sint coelestia gaudia, eo magis ut errorum nostrorum laqueos possimus evadere, flendo laboramus. In multa ergo sapientia multa est indignatio, quia si aeterna jam sapimus, concupiscere temporalia dedignamur. Si aeterna jam sapimus, nosmetipsos despicimus egisse hoc quod nos potuit ab aeternitatis amore separare. Reprehendit semetipsam conscientia, accusat quod egit, damnat per poenitentiam quod accusat, fit rixa in animo, parturiens pacem cum Deo.

44. Sic Achab, rex iniquus, a propheta reprehensus, cum contra se divinam sententiam audisset, pertimuit, et magno moerore depressus est, ita ut prophetae suo Dominus diceret: Nonne vidisti humiliatum Achab coram me? Quia igitur humiliatus est mei causa, non inducam malum in diebus ejus (III Reg. XXI, 29). In quibus Domini verbis pensandum est quomodo ei in electis suis moeror amaritudinis placeat qui amittere timent Dominum, si sic ei et in reprobo poenitentia placuit qui timebat perdere praesens saeculum? Aut quomodo ei grata sit spontanea afflictio pro culpis in eis qui placent, si haec ad tempus placuit et in illo qui displicebat? Sed sciendum quia nullus haec pro amore omnipotentis Domini ex toto corde agere praevalet, nisi is cujus animum Spiritus sanctus assumpserit. Nam quando homo ex sua virtute sufficiat terrena despicere, coelestia amare, pacem cum Deo quaerere, secum rixam subire, in cogitatione semetipsum reprehendere, et gemitibus punire? Nullus haec agere nisi quem divina gratia roboraverit valet. Unde et subditur: IBID. — Manus enim Domini erat mecum, confortans me.

45. Ad bona quippe assurgere perfecte non possumus, nisi nos spiritus et praeveniendo elevet, et subsequendo confortet. Sed quaerendum est, cum superius de volumine quod acceperat scriptum sit: Et factum est in ore meo sicut mel dulce, qua ratione postmodum dicitur: Abii amarus in indignatione spiritus mei? Mirum quippe valde est si dulcedo simul et amaritudo conveniant. Sed juxta superiorem sensum sciendum est quia cui sermo Dei in ore cordis dulcis esse coeperit, hujus procul dubio contra semetipsum animus amarescit. Quo enim in illo subtiliter discit qualiter reprehendere se debeat, eo se durius per amaritudinem poenitentiae castigat, qui tanto sibi magis displicet, quanto in sacro volumine amplius de omnipotente Deo videt quod amet. Sed quia ad ista proficere sua virtute non valet homo, recte nunc dicitur: Manus Domini erat mecum, confortans me. Manus enim Domini in sacro eloquio aliquando etiam unigenitus Filius appellatur, quia omnia per ipsum facta sunt (Joan. I, 3). Et de cujus ascensione per Moysen Pater omnipotens loquitur, dicens: Tollam in coelum manum meam (Deut. XXXII, 40). Haec manus quae electorum suorum corda confortat, discipulis dicebat: Sine me nihil potestis facere (Joan. XV, 5). In omne ergo quod cogitamus, in omne quod agimus, semper orandum est, ut et ipso aspirante cogitemus, et ipso adjuvante faciamus, qui vivit et regnat cum Patre in unitate Spiritus sancti Deus in saecula saeculorum. Amen.

HOMILIA XI

Explanationem capitis III Ezechielis prosequitur a versu 15 ad 20, ubi de officio pastorali, de peccatis praelatorum et subditorum invicem connexis, ac de mentis obcaecatione praesertim disseritur. Inter caetera prophetiae miracula hoc quoque mirandum habent libri prophetarum, quod sicut in eis verbis res, ita nonnunquam verba rebus exponuntur, ut eorum non solum dicta, sed etiam res gestae prophetiae sint. Unde nunc dicitur: EZECH. III, VERS. 15. — Veni ad transmigrationem ad acervum novarum frugum, ad eos qui habitabant juxta flumen Chobar.

1. Cum causa exigeret ut indicare debuisset quia ad transmigrationem veniret, quae dicendi necessitas fuit ut per fruges locum quoque exprimeret, dicens: Ad acervum novarum frugum, nisi quod saepe per res et loca causae signantur? Multi quippe Ezechiele prophetante jam captivitatis anni defluxerant, atque ex his qui in captivitatem ducti fuerant plures jam in morte carnis obierant, ad quorum filios loqui propheta veniebat. Unde et ei superius dicitur: Fili hominis, mitto ego te ad filios Israel, ad gentes apostatrices, quae recesserunt a me. Patres eorum praevaricati sunt pactum meum usque ad diem hanc, et filii dura cervice et indomabili corde sunt, ad quos ego mitto te (Ezech. II, 3, seq.). Ex quibus quia multi fuerant credituri, atque per obedientiam ad fertilitatem boni operis perventuri, acervus frugum vocantur. Quia enim bonae animae fruges appellantur Dei, propheta alius testatur, dicens: Sanctus Israel Domino, primitiae frugum ejus (Jerem. II, 3). Fruges etenim Domini etiam conversae ad fidem gentes postmodum factae sunt. Sed quia prius Israel Domino credidit, recte hunc propheta frugum ejus primitias appellavit. Quia ergo propheta missus non priori populo, sed filiis ejusdem populi verba intulit, ad acervum frugum novarum venit. Quid vero per Chobar fluvium designetur, supra jam diximus (Hom. II, n. 6); quae nequaquam modo repetimus, ne repetendo fastidium generemus. Sequitur: VERS. 15. — Et sedi ubi illi sedebant, et mansi ibi septem diebus moerens in medio eorum.

2. Notandum captivo populo propheta sanctus quanta compassione se copulat, eorumque se moeroribus consedendo et moerendo conjungit, quia radix verbi virtus est operis. Et ille sermo ab audiente libenter accipitur, qui a praedicante cum compassione animi profertur. Sic ferrum cum ferro jungitur, liquatur prius, ut postmodum vicissim a semetipso teneatur. Si enim prius minime mollescit, postmodum tenere se fortiter non sufficit. Sic propheta captivo populo consedit, et moerens in medio eorum exstitit, ut dum per charitatis gratiam condescendendo se ei molliorem redderet, eum statim per verbi fortitudinem teneret. Sin vero Israeliticus populus, qui domus exasperans vocatur, quia culpas nec inter flagella cognovit, nullo moerore animum depressit, propheta inter gaudentes moerens sedere studuit, ut tacendo ostenderet quod loquendo venerat docere. Et priusquam verba faceret, in hoc quod moerens tacuit formam verborum sumpsit. Sequitur: VERS. 16. — Cum autem pertransissent septem dies, factum est verbum Domini ad me, dicens.

3. In eo quod septem diebus moerens sedit, et post diem septimum verba dominicae jussionis accepit ut loqui debuisset, aperte indicat quia eisdem diebus moerens tacuerat. Missus autem ad praedicandum fuerat, et tamen septem diebus sedens tacebat. Quid est hoc quod nobis propheta sanctus in hoc suo silentio innuit, nisi quia ille loqui veraciter novit, qui prius bene tacere didicerit? Quasi enim quoddam nutrimentum verbi, est censura silentii. Et recte per excrescentem quoque gratiam sermonem accipit, qui ordinate ante per humilitatem tacet. Hinc enim per Salomonem dicitur: Tempus tacendi, et tempus loquendi (Eccle. III, 7). Non enim ait, Tempus loquendi, et tempus tacendi, sed prius tacendi praemittit tempus, et postmodum subdit loquendi, quia non loquendo tacere, sed tacendo debemus loqui discere. Si ergo propheta sanctus qui missus ad loquendum fuerat diu prius tacuit, ut postmodum recte loqueretur, pensandum nobis est quanta ei culpa sit non tacere, quem nulla cogit necessitas loqui. Sequitur: VERS. 17. — Fili hominis, speculatorem dedi te domui Israel.

4. Notandum quod eum quem Dominus ad praedicandum mittit speculatorem esse denuntiat. Cui enim aliena cura committitur, speculator vocatur, ut in mentis altitudine sedeat, atque vocabulum nominis ex virtute actionis trahat. Non est enim speculator qui in imo est. Speculator quippe semper in altitudine stat, ut quidquid venturum est longe prospiciat. Et quisquis populi speculator ponitur, in alto debet stare per vitam, ut possit prodesse per providentiam. Hinc propheta alius speculatorem admonet, dicens: Super montem excelsum ascende tu, qui evangelizas Sion (Isai. XL, 9). Ut videlicet qui praedicationis locum suscepit ad altitudinem bonae ascendat actionis; ad excelsa transeat, et eorum qui sibi commissi sunt opera transcendat; quatenus subjectorum vitam tanto subtilius videat, quanto et terrenis rebus quas despicit animum non supponit.

5. O quam dura mihi sunt ista quae loquor, quia memetipsum loquendo ferio, cujus neque lingua, ut dignum est, praedicationem tenet, neque inquantum tenere sufficit vita sequitur linguam. Qui otiosis verbis saepe implicor, et ab exhortatione atque aedificatione proximorum torpens et negligens cesso. Qui in conspectu Dei factus sum mutus et verbosus, mutus in necessariis, verbosus in otiosis. Sed ecce sermo Dei de speculatoris vita compellit ut loquar. Tacere non possum, et tamen loquendo me ferire pertimesco. Dicam, dicam, ut verbi Dei gladius etiam per memetipsum ad configendum cor proximi transeat. Dicam, dicam, ut etiam contra me sermo Dei sonet per me. Ego reum me esse non abnego, torporem meum atque negligentiam video. Erit fortasse apud pium judicem impetratio veniae ipsa cognitio culpae.

6. Et quidem in monasterio positus, valebam et ab otiosis linguam restringere, et in intentione orationis pene continue mentem tenere. At postquam cordis humerum sarcinae pastorali supposui, colligere se ad semetipsum assidue non potest animus, quia ad multa partitur. Cogor namque modo Ecclesiarum, modo monasteriorum causas discutere, saepe singulorum vitas actusque pensare; modo quaedam civium negotia sustinere, modo de irruentibus barbarorum gladiis gemere, et commisso gregi insidiantes lupos timere; modo rerum curam sumere, ne desint subsidia eis ipsis quibus disciplinae regula tenetur, modo raptores quosdam aequanimiter perpeti, modo eis sub studio servatae charitatis obviare. Cum itaque ad tot et tanta cogitanda scissa ac dilaniata mens ducitur, quando ad semetipsam redeat, ut totam se in praedicatione colligat, et a proferendi verbi ministerio non recedat? Quia autem necessitate loci saepe viris saecularibus jungor, nonnunquam mihi linguae disciplinam relaxo. Nam si in assiduo censurae meae rigore me teneo, scio quia ab infirmioribus fugior, eosque ad hoc quod appeto nunquam traho. Unde fit ut eorum saepe et otiosa patienter audiam. Sed quia ipse quoque infirmus sum, in otiosis sermonibus paulisper tractus, libenter jam ea loqui incipio, quae audire coeperam invitus; et ubi taedebat cadere, libet jacere. Quis ergo ego vel qualis speculator sum, qui non in monte operis sto, sed adhuc in valle infirmitatis jaceo? Potens vero est humani generis creator et redemptor indigno mihi et vitae altitudinem, et linguae efficaciam donare, pro cujus amore in ejus eloquio nec mihi parco.

7. Esse ergo speculatoris vita et alta debet semper, et circumspecta. Ne enim terrenarum rerum amori succumbat, alta sit; ne occulti hostis jaculis feriatur, ex omni latere circumspecta. Neque hoc speculatori sufficit, ut altum vivat, nisi et loquendo assidue ad alta auditores suos pertrahat, eorumque mentes ad amorem coelestis patriae loquendo succendat. Sed tunc haec recte agit, cum lingua ejus ex vita arserit. Nam lucerna quae in semetipsa non ardet, eam rem cui supponitur non accendit. Hinc enim de Joanne Veritas dicit: Ille erat lucerna ardens et lucens (Joan. V, 35). Ardens videlicet per coeleste desiderium, lucens per verbum. Ut ergo servetur veritas praedicandi, teneatur necesse est altitudo vivendi. Unde recte quoque sanctae Ecclesiae sponsi voce in Cantico canticorum dicitur: Nasus tuus sicut turris Libani (Cant. VII, 4). Quae ergo laus est, fratres mei, ut sponsae nasus turri comparetur? Sed quia per nasum semper odores fetoresque discernimus, quid per nasum nisi speculatorum discretio designatur? Qui nimirum nasus et sicut turris esse, et Libani dicitur, quia videlicet praepositorum discretio et munita semper debet esse circumspectione, et in altitudine vitae consistere, id est in valle infirmi operis non jacere. Sicut enim turris in monte idcirco ad speculandum ponitur, ut hostes qui veniunt longius videantur, sic praedicatoris vita semper in alto debet fixa permanere, ut more narium discernat fetores vitiorum odoresque virtutum. Incursus malignorum spirituum longe prospiciat, et commissas sibi animas per suam providentiam cautas reddat. Sequitur: IBID. — Et audies ex ore meo verbum, et annuntiabis eis ex me.

8. Ecce iterum monetur propheta ne praesumat loqui quod non audierit, sed prius aurem cordis aperiat vocicreatoris, et postmodum os sui corporis aperiat auribus plebis. Unde propheta alius dicit: Inclinabo ad similitudinem aurem meam, aperiam in psalterio propositionem meam (Psal. XLVIII, 5). Qui enim recte praedicat prius, sicut dictum est, aurem cordis locutioni intimae inclinat, ut postmodum os corporis in propositione admonitionis aperiat. Sequitur: VERS. 18. — Si dicente me ad impium, Morte morieris, non annuntiaveris, neque locutus fueris, ut avertatur a via sua impia, et vivat; ipse impius in iniquitate sua morietur, sanguinem autem ejus de manu tua requiram.

9. In quibus verbis quid nobis notandum est, quid sollicite cogitandum, nisi quia nec subjectus ex culpapraepositi moritur, nec praepositus sine culpa est quando, verba vitae non audiens, ex sua culpa moritur subjectus? Impio etenim mors debetur, sed ei a speculatore via vitae nuntianda est, et ejus impietas increpanda. Si vero speculator taceat, ipse impius in iniquitate sua morietur, quia impietatis ejus meritum fuit, ut dignus non esset ad quem speculatoris sermo fieret. Sed sanguinem ejus Dominus de manu speculatoris requirit, quia ipse hunc occidit, quia eum tacendo morti prodidit. In quibus utrisque pensandum est quantum sibi connexa sunt peccata subditorum atque praepositorum, quia ubi subjectus ex sua culpa moritur, ibi is qui praeest, quoniam tacuit, reus mortis tenetur. Pensate ergo, fratres charissimi, pensate, quia et quod nos digni pastores non sumus etiam ex vestra culpa est, quibus tales praelati sumus. Et si quando vos ad iniquitatem defluitis, etiam ex nostro hoc reatu est, quos obsistentes atque reclamantes in pravis desideriis non habetis. Vobis ergo et nobis parcitis, si a pravo opere cessatis. Vobis et nobis parcimus, quando hoc quod displicet non tacemus. O quam liber a commissorum sibi sanguine fuerat praedicator egregius qui dicebat: Mundus sum a sanguine omnium; non enim subterfugi quominus annuntiarem omne consilium Dei vobis (Act. XX, 26). Si enim non annuntiasset, mundus a sanguine non esset. Sed quibus omne consilium Dei annuntiare studuit, ab eorum sanguine mundus fuit. In qua voce nos convenimur, nos constringimur, nos rei esse ostendimur, qui sacerdotes vocamur, qui super ea mala quae propria habemus alienas quoque mortes addimus, quia tot occidimus, quot ad mortem ire quotidie tepidi et tacentes videmus.

10. Cum vero dicitur: Sanguinem autem ejus de manu tua requiram, si hoc in loco sanguinis nomine mors corporis designatur, valde nobis de nostro silentio augetur metus, quia si in subjectis suis is qui praelatus ad speculandum est etiam de morte corporis quandoque morituri tam graviter reus tenetur, quo reatu de morte animae subjectorum constringitur, quae potuisset semper vivere, si verba correptionis audisset? Sed melius possunt sanguinis nomine peccata signari. Unde quidam, cum peccata carnis defleret, dixit; Libera me de sanguinibus, Deus, Deus salutis meae (Psal. L, 16). Sanguis ergo morientis de manu speculatoris requiritur, quia peccatum subditi culpae praepositi, si tacuerit, reputatur. Est ergo quod faciat, ut etiam moriente subdito se liberum reddat. Surgat, invigilet, malis actibus contradicat, sicut scriptum est: Discurre, festina, suscita amicum tuum, ne dederis somnum oculis tuis, nec dormitent palpebrae tuae (Prov. VI, 3). Unde hic quoque additur: VERS. 19. — Si autem tu annuntiaveris impio, et ille non fuerit conversus ab impietate sua, et a via sua impia; ipse quidem in impietate sua morietur, tu autem animam tuam liberasti.

11. Tunc enim subjectus moritur sine te, quando in causa mortis contradictorem pertulerit te. Nam morti, cui non contradicis, adjungeris. Et notandum quae sunt quae debeant a speculatore praedicari, nimirum fides et operatio. Nam ait: Si autem tu annuntiaveris impio, et ille non fuerit conversus ab impietate sua, et a via sua impia. Impietas quippe ad infidelitatem pertinet, via vero impia ad pravam actionem. Et omnis speculator hoc habere debet studii, ut prius ad pietatem fidei, postmodum ad piam viam, id est ad bonam actionem trahat.

12. Sed quia de exhortatione sermo se intulit, innotescere breviter debemus in ore pastoris quantus esse debeat ordo atque consideratio locutionis. Pensare etenim doctor debet quid loquatur, cui loquatur, quando loquatur, qualiter loquatur, et quantum loquatur. Si enim unum horum defuerit, locutio apta non erit. Scriptum quippe est: Si recte offeras, recte autem non dividas, peccasti (Genes. IV, 7, sec. LXX). Recte autem offerimus cum bono studio bonum opus agimus; sed recte non dividimus, si habere discretionem in bono opere postponamus. Considerare etenim debemus quid loquamur, ut juxta Pauli vocem, Sermo noster semper in gratia sale sit conditus (Coloss. IV, 6).

13. Pensandum vero nobis est cui loquamur quia saepe increpationis verbum quod haec admittit persona, altera non admittit. Et saepe ipsa eadem persona secundum factum fit altera. Unde Nathan propheta David post adulterium forti increpationis sententia percussit. Qui cum de raptore ovis diceret: Filius mortis est vir qui fecit hoc, ei protinus respondit, dicens: Tu es ille vir (II Reg. XII, 5). Cui tamen cum de Salomonis regno loqueretur (Ibid., 7), quia culpa defuit, ei se humiliter in adoratione prostravit. In una ergo eademque persona quia causa dispar exstitit, etiam sermo propheticus dissimilis fuit.

14. Pensandum quoque est quando loqui debeamus, quia saepe etsi differtur increpatio, postmodum benigne recipitur. Et nonnunquam languescit, si hoc quo ante proferri debuit tempus amiserit. Nam et sapiens mulier Nabal ebrium videns (I Reg. XXV, 36, 37), increpare de culpa tenaciae noluit, quem digesto vino increpationis suae verbis utiliter percussit. Et Propheta adulantium linguas non esse in subsequenti tempore differendas annuntiat, qui ait: Confundantur statim erubescentes, qui dicunt mihi, Euge, euge (Psal. LXIX, 4). Adulatio etenim si vel ad tempus patienter suscipitur, augetur, et paulisper demulcet animum, ut a rigore suae rectitudinis mollescat in delectatione sermonis. Sed ne crescere debeat, statim est et sine mora ferienda.

15. Pensandum quoque nobis est qualiter loquamur. Nam saepe verba quae hunc ad salutem revocant, alium vulnerant. Unde Paulus quoque apostolus qui Titum admonet, dicens: Argue cum omni imperio (Tit. II, 15), Timotheum exhortatur, dicens: Argue, obsecra, increpa in omni patientia et doctrina (II Tim. IV, 2). Quid est quod uni imperium, et alii patientiam praecipit, nisi quod unum lenioris, alterum vero ferventioris spiritus esse conspexit? Leni per auctoritatem imperii injungenda erat severitas verbi, is autem qui per spiritum fervebat per patientiam temperandus fuerat, ne si plus justo infervesceret, non ad salutem vulnerata reduceret, sed sana vulneraret.

16. Curandum quoque quantum loquamur, ne si ei qui multa ferre non valet verbum vel exhortationis vel increpationis longius trahimus, auditorem nostrum ad fastidium perducamus. Unde idem praedicator egregius Hebraeis loquitur, dicens: Obsecro vos, fratres, ut sufferatis verbum solatii, etenim perpaucis scripsi vobis (Hebr. XIII, 22). Hoc tamen infirmis praecipue congruit, ut pauca quidem, et quae praevalent capere, audiant, sed quae eorum mentem in poenitentiae dolorem compungant. Nam si eis uno in tempore exhortationis sermo fuerit multipliciter dictus, quia multa retinere non valent, simul amittunt omnia. Unde et medici corporum pannos quos infirmantibus stomachis ponunt, apto quidem medicamine, sed subtiliter liniunt, ne si repleti multo medicamine fuerint, infirmitatem stomachi non roborantes adjuvent, sed opprimentes gravent.

17. Sciendum tamen quia etsi quando modum suum sermo prolixior transeat, periculosum hoc auditoribus non est. Si autem qualiter quid dicatur, et quibus dicatur, non vigilanter conspicitur, valde periculosum est. Verecundae etenim mentes, si quas fortasse culpas admiserint, leniter arguendae sunt, quia si asperius increpentur, franguntur potius quam erudiantur. At contra mentes asperae atque impudentes, si increpatae leniter fuerint, ad majores culpas ipsa lenitate provocantur.

18. Quod bene in eodem egregio praedicatore discimus, qui cum Corinthios cognosceret pro amore personarum in schismate divisos, eorum verecundiae consulens, locutionem suam eis a gratiarum actione et laudibus coepit, dicens: Gratias ago Deo meo semper pro vobis in gratia Dei, quae data est vobis in Christo Jesu, quia in omnibus divites facti estis in illo, in omni verbo et in omni scientia, sicut testimonium Christi confirmatum est in vobis (I Cor. I, 4). Qui adhuc adjungit et dicit: Ita ut nihil desit vobis in ulla gratia, exspectantibus revelationem Domini nostri Jesu Christi (Ibid., 7). Quaeso te, Paule, si jam nihil deest, cur eis scribendo fatigaris? Cur in longinquo positus loqueris? Pensemus ergo, fratres charissimi, quantum laudat. Ecce eis gratiam Dei datam asserit, factos in omnibus divites dicit in omni verbo et in omni scientia; Christi testimonium, id est quod de semeptiso moriendo et resurgendo testatus est, in eorum vita confirmatum esse perhibet, et nihil eis deesse in ulla gratia testatur. Quis, rogo, credat quia paulo post eos corripiat, quos ita laudat? Nam post caetera subjungit: Obsecro autem vos, fratres, per nomen Domini nostri Jesu Christi, ut idipsum dicatis omnes, et non sint in vobis schismata (Ibid., 10). Quid enim potuit tam perfectis tanquam laudabilibus schisma subrepere? Significatum enim est mihi de vobis, fratres mei, ab his qui sunt Chloes, quia contentiones inter vos sunt. Hoc autem dico quod unusquisque vestrum dicit: Ego quidem sum Pauli, ego autem Apollo, ego vero Cephae, ego autem Christi (Ibid., 11 et 12). Ecce quos in omni verbo et in omni scientia laudaverat, quibus nihil deesse in ulla gratia dixerat, paulisper loquens, ad increpandum leniter veniens, divisos erga seipsos reprehendit; et quorum prius salutem narraverat, postmodum vulnera patefecit. Peritus enim medicus vulnus secandum videns, sed aegrum timidum esse conspiciens, diu palpavit, et subito percussit. Prius blandam manum laudis posuit, et postmodum ferrum increpationis fixit. Nisi enim verecundae mentes fuerint palpando reprehensae, ita ut ex aliis rebus audiant quod in consolationem sumant, per increpationem protinus ad desperationem cadunt.

19. Sed nunquid mentitus est Paulus, ut prius eis nil deesse in omni gratia diceret, quibus postmodum dicturus erat unitatem deesse? Absit hoc: quis de illo talia vel desipiens credat? Sed quia erant inter Corinthios quidam omni gratia repleti, et erant quidam in personarum favoribus excisi, coepit a laudibus perfectorum, ut modesta invectione ad reprehensionem pertingeret infirmorum. Et in hoc quoque ad medicinam cordis a medicina corporis usum trahens. Nam cum feriendum vulnus medicus aspicit, prius ea membra quae circa vulnus sana sunt palpat, ut post ad ea quae vulnerata sunt leniter palpando perveniat. Cum ergo Paulus perfectos in Corinthiis laudavit, sana membra juxta vulnus tetigit; cum vero infirmos de divisione reprehendit, vulnus in corpore percussit.

20. Videamus tamen hunc ipsum qui tanta modestia atque mansuetudine ad corripiendos Corinthios ducitur, qualiter contra Galatas, qui a fide discesserant, exercetur. Nulla enim modestiae patientia praemissa, nulla locutionis dulcedine praerogata, eos quos a fide discessisse cognovit, ab ipso epistolae suae exordio invehendo redarguit. Nam praemissa salutatione, sic coepit: Miror quod sic tam cito transferimini ab eo qui vos vocavit in gratia Christi (Galat. I, 6). Quibus etiam in aperta increpatione post caetera subjungit: O insensati Galatae, quis vos fascinavit (Ibid. III, 1)? Mentes etenim durae nisi aperta essent increpatione percussae, nullo modo malum cognoscerent quod egissent. Nam saepe hi qui impudentes sunt tantum se peccasse sentiunt, quantum de peccatis quae fecerint increpantur, ut minores culpas suas aestiment, quas minor invectio castigat, et quas vehementer objurgari viderint, majores esse deprehendant. Unde necesse est ut semper sermo praedicantis cum auditorum debeat qualitate formari, ne aut verecundis aspera, aut impudentibus lenia loquatur. Quid autem mirum si hoc verbi Dei erogator faciat, cum et agricola qui semina in terram mittit prius terrae qualitatem praevidet quibus seminibus apta videatur, et postquam qualitatem praeviderit, tunc semina spargit? Sed quia de qualitate doctrinae locutionem longius traximus, oportet ut ad eum quem coepimus exponendi ordinem redeamus. VERS. 20. — Sed etsi conversus justus a justitia sua fecerit iniquitatem, ponam offendiculum coram eo; ipse morietur, quia non annuntiasti ei. In peccato suo morietur, et non erunt in memoria justitiae ejus quas fecit; sanguinem vero ejus de manu tua requiram.

21. Quia justo qui in peccato cecidit praedicator tacuit, ejus sanguinis reus tenetur. Et qui sollicitus esse non studuit in praedicatione, factus est particeps in damnatione. Sed cum dicitur: In peccato suo morietur, et non erunt in memoria justitiae ejus quas fecit, hoc nobis maxime considerandum est, quia cum mala committimus, sine causa ad memoriam bona nostra transacta revocamus, quoniam in perpetratione malorum nulla debet esse fiducia bonorum praeteritorum. Sed quaeri potest utrum justo postquam ceciderit praedicandum sit, an et priusquam cadat? Invigilare praedicator debet, ne ad casum veniat, procul dubio et priusquam cadat. Nam sequitur: VERS. 21. — Si autem tu annuntiaveris justo ut non peccet justus, et ille non peccaverit, vivens vivet, quia annuntiasti ei; tu autem animam tuam liberasti.

22. Si ergo praedicator ideo animam suam liberavit quia justo ne peccaret denuntiavit, cum justus ad peccatum, praedicatore tacente, cecidit, praedicator quia tacuit, reus tenetur. Sed quis nostrum, rogo, ad haec sufficiat, ut non solum peccatores studiose corripiat, sed etiam justis invigilet ne cadant? Nos enim, infirmitatis nostrae conscii, cum justos viros conspicimus, admonere eos non praesumimus ut justitiae viam teneant, quam quia tenent videmus; et tamen praedicatoris est debitum etiam justos admonere. Unde praedicator egregius dicebat: Sapientibus et insipientibus debitor sum (Rom. I, 14).

23. In his vero omnibus quae de justo ad iniquitatem converso dicta sunt, hoc est laboriosum ad loquendum, hoc valde pertimescendum, quod Dominus dicit: Ponam offendiculum coram eo. Ait enim: Si conversus justus a justitia sua fecerit iniquitatem, ponam offendiculum coram eo. Nos enim dicimus quia si iniquitatem fecerit, offendit, et verum est omnino quod dicimus. Cur adhuc ei Deus omnipotens offendiculum ponit, quem jam impegisse et cecidisse per iniquitatem quam perpetraverit conspicit? Sed districta sunt omnipotentis Dei judicia; et qui peccatorem diu exspectat ut redeat, non redeunti atque contemnenti ponit adhuc ubi gravius impingat.

24. Peccatum quippe quod per poenitentiam citius non deletur, aut peccatum est et causa peccati, aut peccatum et poena peccati, aut peccatum simul et causa et poena peccati. Omne enim quod prius committitur peccatum est. Sed si citius poenitendo non tergitur, justo judicio omnipotens

Deus obligatam peccantis mentem etiam in culpam alteram permittit cadere, ut quae flendo et corrigendo noluit emendare quod fecerit, peccatum incipiat peccato cumulare. Peccatum ergo quod poenitentiae lamento non diluitur, peccatum simul est et causa peccati, quia ex illo oritur unde adhuc peccatoris animus altius obligetur. Peccatum vero quod ex peccato sequitur, peccatum simul est et poena peccati, quia, excrescente caecitate, ex retributione prioris culpae generatur, ut quasi jam quaedam sint in peccatore supplicia ipsa incrementa vitiorum. Fit vero nonnunquam ut unum idemque peccatum et peccatum sit et poena peccati, simul et causa peccati. Ponamus enim ante oculos quempiam rem proximi concupisse, quam quia aperte non valuit, furto diripuit, sed in furti accusatione positus, se hanc diripuisse jurejurando denegavit. Huic ergo concupiscentia peccatum fuit et causa peccati, quia per eam pervenit ad rapinam. Ipsum vero furtum quo rem concupitam diripuit, et peccatum ei factum est et poena peccati, quia ex retributione jam non repressae concupiscentiae factum est ut veniret ad furtum, et culpa cordis excresceret in opere ex ultione caecitatis. Sed quia furtum perjurio tegere curavit, ex peccato rursum peccatum genuit. Furtum ergo quod ex concupiscentia processit, et perjurium protulit, peccatum et poena peccati factum est culpae praecedenti, peccatum et causa peccati culpae subsequenti, quia de illa natum hanc genuit. Quod bene Paulus de quibusdam Deum intelligentibus, sed non honorantibus insinuavit, dicens: Cum cognovissent Deum, non sicut Deum glorificaverunt, aut gratias egerunt, sed evanuerunt in cogitationibus suis (Rom. I, 21). Ecce est peccatum et causa peccati. Ex qua causa quid sequatur adjungit: Et obscuratum est insipiens cor eorum. Dicentes enim se esse sapientes, stulti facti sunt; et mutaverunt gloriam incorruptibilis Dei in similitudinem imaginis corruptibilis hominis, et volucrum, et quadrupedum, et serpentium (Ibid., 22, 23). Ecce est peccatum, et poena peccati. Sed peccatum solummodo et poena peccati esset, si non adhuc ex hoc peccato et aliud sequeretur. Nam post infidelitatem eorum subditur: Propter quod tradidit illos Deus in desideria cordis eorum, in immunditiam, ut contumeliis afficiant corpora sua in semetipsis (Ibid., 24). Qui igitur cognoscentes Deum, non sicut Deum glorificaverunt, ex eo peccato et causa peccati ad hoc quoque perducti sunt, ut ad cultum serpentium et volucrum laberentur. Sed quia per hanc etiam caecitatem usque ad immunditiam et carnis contumelias ceciderunt, ipsa infidelitatis eorum caecitas praecedenti intellectui et peccatum est, et poena peccati, subsequenti vero immunditiae peccatum facta est et causa peccati. Sed quia de his in libris Moralibus diu tractatum est (Lib. XXV Moral., n. 23, 24), nobis nunc in eis diutius immorandum non est.

25. Hoc autem nobis cum tremore considerandum est quomodo justus et omnipotens Deus, cum praecedentibus peccatis irascitur, permittit ut caecata mens etiam in aliis labatur. Unde S. Moyses ait: Nondum completa sunt peccata Amorrhaeorum (Genes XV, 16). S. David quoque ait: Appone iniquitatem super iniquitatem ipsorum, ut non intrent in justitiam tuam (Psal. LXVIII, 28). Propheta etiam alius dicit: Maledictum, et mendacium, et homicidium, et furtum, et adulterium inundaverunt, et sanguis sanguinem tetigit (Osee IV, 2). Sanguis enim sanguinem tangit quando peccato peccatum additur, ut ante Dei oculos adjunctis iniquitatibus anima cruentetur. Paulus apostolus ait: Ut impleant peccata sua semper (I Thess. II, 16). Joanni quoque per angelum dicitur: Qui nocet, noceat adhuc; et qui in sordibus est, sordescat adhuc (Apoc. XXII, 11). Unde nunc etiam Dominus dicit: Si conversus justus a justitia sua fecerit iniquitatem, ponam offendiculum coram eo. Ac si aperte dicat: Quia videre poenitendo noluit ubi jam impegit, justo eum judicio deserens, ponam ei ut et alibi impingat. Quod tamen Domini ponere est nequaquam ad peccandum premere, sed nolle a peccato liberare; sicut de Pharaone dicitur: Ego indurabo cor ejus (Exod. VII, 3). Non enim cor peccantis Dominus obdurat, sed obdurare dicitur, cum ab obduratione non liberat. Misericors enim Deus tempus nobis ad poenitentiam relaxat; sed cum ejus gratiae patientiam nos ad augmentum vertimus culpae, hoc ipsum tempus quod ad parcendum pie disposuit districtius ad feriendum vertit, ut cum reverti quis etiam spatio temporis accepto noluerit, per hoc mala sua ad reatum augeat, per quod ea diluere potuit, si converti voluisset. Unde scriptum est: Ignoras quoniam benignitas Dei ad poenitentiam te adducit? Secundum duritiam autem tuam et cor impoenitens thesaurizas tibi iram in die irae et revelationis justi judicii Dei (Rom. II, 4). De benignitate ergo omnipotentis Dei iram sibi in die irae reprobus thesaurizat, quia dum ad poenitendum tempus accipitur, et ad peccandum exhibetur, ipsum remedium gratiae vertit in augmentum culpae. Unde et omnipotens Deus, quia collata remedia conspicit ad culpae augmentum trahi, ipsam benignitatem quam contulit in judicii districtionem vertit, ut inde post amplius feriat, unde modo amplius exspectat. Et quia homo deserere malum non vult ut vivat, auget unde moriatur. Sed sive justus in culpam, sive peccator in mortem corruat, speculatori timendum est ne hunc ex suo silentio reatus peccantium pariter involvat.

26. Sed interim dum loquor, avertere a memetipso oculos volo, et ecce iterum sermo divinus me impingit in memetipsum, ut meam negligentiam videam, et mihi dici haec quae audio pertimescam. Sicut enim superius dixi (Num. VI), cujus cor in curis innumeris exsparsum se ad se colligat? Quando etenim possum et ea quae circa me sunt sollicite omnia curare, et memetipsum adunato sensu conspicere? Quando possum pravorum nequitias insequendo corrigere, bonorum actus laudando et admonendo custodire, aliis terrorem atque aliis dulcedinem demonstrare? Quando valeo et de his quae sunt necessaria fratribus cogitare, et contra hostiles gladios de urbis vigiliis sollicitudinem gerere, ne incursione subita cives pereant, providere, et inter haec omnia pro animarum custodia plene atque efficaciter verbum exhortationis impendere? Loqui etenim de Deo quietae valde et liberae mentis est. Tunc namque bene lingua dirigitur in sermone, cum secure sensus quieverit in tranquillitate, quia nec concussa aqua imaginem respicientis reddit, sed tunc in ea vultus intendentis aspicitur, cum non movetur. Quam ergo exhortationem vobis speculator vester, fratres charissimi, faciat, quem tot rerum confusio perturbat? Certe is de quo loquimur propheta revelatione ultima templum videns, quae in eodem templo conspexerit inter caetera narrat, dicens: Terra usque ad fenestras, et fenestrae clausae (Ezech. XLI, 16). Paulus quoque apostolus dicit: Templum enim Dei sanctum est, quod estis vos (I Cor. III, 17; II Cor. VI, 16). In hoc autem templo fenestrae sacerdotes et speculatores sunt, qui in populo fidelium lumen sanctae praedicationis fundunt. Sed cum terra usque ad fenestras est, fenestrae clausae sunt, quia cum terrena cogitatio in sacerdotum cordibus excrescit, fenestrae lumen non fundunt, quia sacerdotes ab officio praedicationis obmutescunt.

27. Est et aliud valde in ordine sacerdotum grave, quia non sicut hi qui vitam quietam ac remotam ducunt fixi valent in sua cogitatione permanere. Hi enim, sicut superius diximus, qui a loco regiminis longe sunt possunt peccatorum suorum maculas et fletibus lavare, et post fletus in eodem mentis moerore persistere, sicut de bona quoque muliere scriptum est, quae ad tabernaculum oraverat, et ab intentione sua animum post compunctionis gratiam non mutabat, cum dicitur: Vultusque ejus non sunt, amplius in diversa mutati (I Reg. I, 18). In qua nobis considerandum est quia si sic planxit mulier quae quaerebat filium, quomodo debet plangere anima quae quaerit Deum? Sacerdos vero etiam post compunctionem ac lacrymas cogitur necessaria quaeque filiorum suorum cognoscere, et ea quae refugit animus patienter audire, atque post suspiria coelestium quorumlibet carnalium hominum onera portare, et saepe cum supervenientibus cor in diversas qualitates transfundere. Nam aliquando de lucris spiritalibus gaudet, sed cum quilibet moerens supervenerit, nisi ejus moerorem in se susceperit, tribulationi illius compatiens non est. Et aliquando de damnis animarum luget, et repente superveniunt qui de quibusdam suis prosperitatibus laetantur; quorum si laetitiae sacerdos non congaudet, minus amare creditur filios in quorum gaudio non exsultat, praecipue cum Paulus dicat: Gaudere cum gaudentibus, flere cum flentibus (Rom. XII, 15).

28. Nihil ergo tam onerosum ordini sacerdotum video quam rigorem mentis compatiendo flectere, et cum personis supervenientibus animum mutare; et tamen hoc valde est necessarium. Nam quando ex praedicatione ejus ad boni operis gratiam peccator reducitur, si ipse praedicator videtur ingratus? Unde per hunc quoque eumdem prophetam in extrema parte dicitur: Et cum sacerdotes intrinsecus ministrant, vestibus laneis non utantur (Ezech. XLIV, 17). De quibus subditur: Cumque egredientur atrium exterius ad populum, exuent se vestimenta sua in quibus ministraverant, et reponent ea in gazophylacio sanctuarii (Exod. XXVIII, 43; Ezech. XLIV, 19). Grossiora quippe vestimenta sunt lanea. Sed cum sacerdos ad sanctum ministerium accedit, cum intus per compunctionem ingreditur, subtiliori intellectu necesse est quasi lineo vestimento vestiatur. Sed cum ad populum foras egreditur, oportet ut vestimenta in quibus intrinsecus ministraverat reponat, atque populo aliis vestibus indutus appareat, quia si in compunctionis suae rigore se teneat, si in eo quem orationis tempore habuit moerore perduret, exteriorum rerum verba suscipere non admittit. Et quid grex de necessariis faciat, si audire atque perpendere et hoc quod praesens tempus exigit, Pastor recusat? Grossiora ergo vestimenta sacerdos exiens ante populum induat, ut mentis suae habitum pro utilitate filiorum etiam ad terrena toleranda componat. Pensate, rogo, fratres charissimi, quantus speculatori labor sit et ad sublimia cor tendere, et hoc repente ad ima revocare, et in sublimitate cognitionis intimae extenuare animum, et propter exteriores causas proximorum, ut ita dicam, subito in cogitatione crassescere.

29. Non ergo mihi modo necesse est prophetae verba exponere, sed meam coram vobis miseriam deflere. Unde peto ut vestra me oratio talem faciat qualis et mihi valeam et vobis prodesse. Potens est indigno mihi et infirmo ex vestra intercessione ista tribuere, qui ex sua pietate pro nobis dignatus est infirmari. Virtus enim Dei est atque sapientia (I Cor. I, 24), quae nostram infirmitatem sumpsit, ut ex sua nos firmitate roboraret, Jesus Christus Dominus noster, qui vivit et regnat cum Deo Patre in unitate Spiritus sancti, per omnia saecula saeculorum. Amen.

HOMILIA XII

Quod residuum est capitis tertii decurrit, et usque ad versum 4 capitis quarti suam explanationem perducit, quam ad varia sive praecepta sive consilia moralia pro praedicatoribus et auditoribus inflectit.

1. Servata veritate historiae, divina eloquia aliquando ex tempore, aliquando ex loco causas designant, quas aperto sermone non indicant. Ex tempore etenim, sicut praedicante Judaeis Domino per evangelistam dicitur: Hiems erat (Joan. X, 22). Inter illa enim mysteria quae Veritas loquebatur quid causae fuit ut nomen hiemis adderetur, nisi ut per qualitatem temporis ostenderet frigus cordis? Quia et cum verba veritatis acciperent, frigida Judaeorum corda remanebant. Aliquando vero ex loco, sicut carnali Israelitico populo, descendente de monte Moyse, lex in campestribus data est (Exod. XX, seq.); et sanctis apostolis Dominus in monte sedens summa et spiritalia praecepta locutus est (Matth. V, 1), ut ex locis videlicet monstraretur quia et illis tanquam carnalibus mandata minima dabantur in valle terrarum, et isti tanquam spiritales et sancti in monte mandata coelestia audirent, quatenus aperte monstraretur quod ascendentes corde ad coelestia infima mundi relinquerent, et in mentis culmine starent. Unde nunc Ezechiel propheta quid jubente Deo in locis egerit describit, ut per locorum qualitates indicet quid in posterum de prophetiae mysteriis sequeretur. Ecce enim ait: VERS. 22. — Facta est super me manus Domini, et dixit ad me: Surgens egredere in campum, et ibi loquar tecum.

2. Quid est hoc, quod prius Dominus in medio Israelitarum locutus ad prophetam suum fuerat, et tamen postmodum dicit: Egredere in campum, et ibi loquar tecum, nisi quod prophetiae suae gratiam et prius Judaeae infundere, et hanc postmodum dignatus est in latitudinem gentium demonstrare? Neque enim immerito per campum gentilitas designatur, quae longe lateque, id est in universo mundo distenditur. Ubi et subditur: VERS.

23. — Et surgens egressus sum in campum, et ecce ibi gloria Domini stabat, quasi gloria quam vidi juxta flumen Chobar.

3. In campo gloriam Domini propheta vidit, quam juxta flumen Chobar in medio Israelitarum viderat, quia ipsa ejus majestas gentibus apparuit, quae prius se electis in Judaico populo, revelante Spiritu, declaravit. Sequitur: IBID. — Et cecidi in faciem meam.

4. Visa gloria Domini in faciem suam propheta cadit, quia quamvis homo ad intelligenda sublimia elevetur, ex contemplatione tamen majestatis Dei infirmitatem suae conditionis intelligit; et quasi statum non habet, qui se ante Dei oculos esse cinerem et pulverem videt. Sequitur: VERS. 24. — Et ingressus est in me spiritus, et statuit me super pedes meos.

5. Cum nos humiliter Deo sternimus, cum esse nos pulverem cineremque cognoscimus, cum infirmitatem conditionis propriae pensantes, statum rigiditatis et superbiae non habemus, omnipotens Deus per suum nos spiritum levat, et super pedes nostros statuit, ut qui humiliter apud nos ex infirmitatis nostrae cogitatione jacuimus et jacemus, in bono post opere quasi super pedes ex rectitudine stemus. Quod cur in campo de propheta agitur, nisi ut specialiter designetur quia etiam electis gentium Spiritus sanctus dandus esset, qui eos quos assumeret, et prius a superbiae suae statu dejiceret, et postmodum super pedes suos, id est super bona opera solidaret? Sicut per Paulum dicitur: Remissas manus et dissoluta genua erigite, et gressus rectos facite pedibus vestris (Hebr. XII, 12). Sequitur: IBID. — Et locutus est mihi et dixit ad me: Ingredere et includere in medio domus tuae.

6. Quid est, quod de medio Israelitici populi propheta ad campum educitur, atque ad domum postea de campo revocatur, nisi quod praedicationis gratia a Judaico populo ablata, in latitudine gentilitatis sparsa est? Sed tamen in fine mundi dum Judaei ad fidem redeunt, quasi ad domum propheta reducitur, ut in suo populo rursus praedicatio inhabitet, quae modo velut in campo ita diversis gentibus fulget. Scriptum quippe est:

Donec plenitudo gentium subintraret, et sic omnis Israel salvus fieret (Rom. XI, 25). Quia et per prophetam alterum dicitur: Si fuerit numerus filiorum Israel quasi arena maris, reliquiae salvae fient (Isai. X, 22; Rom. IX, 27). Exeat ergo propheta de medio populi ad campum, de campo redeat ad domum, ut praedicatio quae Judaeae facta est, egrediatur ad gentes, et repletis fide, gentibus, recipiat Judaea spiritalis doctrinae dona, quae amisit. Includi autem propheta in medio domus suae praecipitur, quia Antichristi tempore ab eis gentibus quae in infidelitate remanserint plebs conversa Judaeorum duris persecutionibus angustatur. Unde scriptum est: Atrium autem quod est extra templum ejice foras, et ne metiaris illud, quoniam datum est gentibus, et civitatem sanctam calcabunt mensibus quadraginta duobus (Apoc. XI, 2). VERS. 25, 26. — Et tu, fili hominis, ecce data sunt super te vincula, et ligabunt te in eis, et non egredieris in medio eorum; et linguam tuam adhaerescere faciam palato tuo, et eris mutus, nec quasi vir objurgans, quia domus exasperans est.

7. Quae videlicet verba si per typicae expositionis ordinem sequimur, propheta in domo sua vincula suscipit et ligatur, quia in extremis, cum Judaea crediderit, gravissimas Antichristi tempore persecutiones sentit, ita ut praedicationes ejus ministri iniquitatis non recipiant, sed resistendo has vinculis dolorum premant. Et in medio eorum non egreditur, quia ad corda pravorum praedicatio non pervenit, dum lingua bonorum ligata tribulationibus tacet. Erunt etenim tunc multi ex Judaeis infidelibus qui eosdem ipsos qui ex Judaeis crediderint persequentur. Unde notandum est quod hic quoque dicitur, quia in domo sua vincula propheta sustineat: ut videlicet designetur quoniam et ex ipso suo genere Judaea cum fidelis fuerit tribulationem persecutionis portet. Dum enim Unigenitus summi Patris incarnatus ac mortuus resurrexisse atque ad coelos ascendisse non creditur, sicut per sacrae Scripturae paginas praedicatur, nimirum apud Judaeos prophetia ligata erit. Quae si ita ut dicta est in eorum intellectum decurreret, quasi gressus liberos suae praedicationis habuisset.

8. Reprobis ergo tunc praedicatorum scientia tacere compellitur. Unde et hic subditur: Et linguam tuam adhaerescere faciam palato tuo, et eris mutus, nec quasi vir objurgans, quia domus exasperans est. Sed quia, Enoch et Elia praedicante, multi ex his qui tunc ex Judaeis in infidelitate remanserint ad cognitionem veritatis redeunt, sicut de eodem Elia dicitur: Elias veniet, et ipse restituet omnia (Matth. XVII, 11; Marc. IX, 12; Malach. IV, 5), qui utrique per Zachariam duae olivae (Zach. IV, 3), et per Joannem duo candelabra nominantur (Apoc. XI, 4), recte hic quoque subjungitur: VERS. 27. — Cum autem locutus fuero tibi, aperiam os tuum, et dices ad eos: Haec dicit Dominus Deus.

9. Tunc enim velut in extremo os prophetae aperitur, cum in praedicatione Enoch et Eliae a Judaeis ad fidem redeuntibus prophetia sacri eloquii de Christo fuisse cognoscitur. Sed quia haec typice diximus, nunc verba eadem charitati vestrae moraliter disseramus.

10. Quid enim est, quod exire propheta ad campum jubetur, nisi quod unusquisque qui praedicat propter eos quos extra se positos corrigit, atque ab iniquitate compescit, loquendo ad campum exit? Ibique gloriam Domini videt, quia tanto largius doctrinae gratiam percipit, quanto se in labore praedicationis ex amore proximorum tendit. Foras ergo exeundo in altam visionem ducitur, quia unde in alienis cordibus ignorantiae caecitatem ministerio suae locutionis illuminat, inde eum superna gratia in altiorem intelligentiam exaltat. Sed quia semper praedicator debet ad mentem recurrere, humilitatem atque munditiam intrinsecus custodire, post campum necesse est ut ad domum redeat, quatenus in his quae dicit qualis etiam ipse sit intra conscientiam agnoscat. Si enim aut hoc quod loquitur minime custodit, aut de his quae loquitur temporalem gloriam requirit, loquendo quidem ad campum exit, sed non cogitando semetipsum ad domum redire contemnit. Accepto etenim spiritu, in medio domus includimur, quando per ejus gratiam ad discutienda mentis nostrae secreta revocamur, ut apud seipsum in Deo animus quiescat, et non jam per exteriores concupiscentias in appetitum laudis et gloriae cogitationis mobilitate discurrat.

11. De hac domo cordis cuidam sanato per semetipsam Veritas dicit: Tolle grabatum tuum, et vade in domum tuam (Joan. V, 8; Marc. II, 9). Per grabatum quippe in quo carnis est requies, ipsa caro signatur, per domum vero conscientia figuratur. Et quia cum mente mortui in vitiis jacemus, in carnis delectatione quiescimus, infirmi portamur in lecto; cum vero sanati fuerimus mente, ut jam pulsantibus carnis vitiis resistamus, necesse est ut et tentationum contumelias de nostra carne toleremus. Aegro itaque ad salutem reducto praecipitur: Tolle grabatum tuum, id est porta lectum in quo portatus es, quia necesse est ut sanatus quisque portet contumeliam carnis, in qua prius jacebat aegrotus. Quid est ergo dicere: Tolle grabatum tuum, et vade in domum tuam, nisi, porta tentationes carnis, in quibus hactenus jacuisti, ac revertere ad conscientiam tuam, ut videas quae fecisti? Propheta itaque post campum in domo includi praecipitur, ut praedicator semper, post gratiam doctrinae quam proximis ministrat, ad conscientiam redeat, seque ipsum subtili examinatione discutiat, ne de his quae foris praedicat aliquid ipse apud se intrinsecus transitoriae laudis quaerat.

12. Unde et per Salomonem dicitur: Bibe aquam de cisterna tua, et fluenta putei tui. Deriventur fontes tui foras, et in plateis aquas divide (Prov. V, 15); habeto eas solus, nec sint alieni participes tui (Ibid., 16). Valde autem contraria esse videntur quae dicit: Deriventur fontes tui foras, et in plateis aquas divide, cum protinus adjungit: Habeto eas solus, nec sint alieni participes tui. Quomodo enim aquam scientiae solus habere poterit, si hanc in plateis dividit? Quomodo alieni aquae ejus participes non sunt, si fontes illius foras derivantur? Sed cum praedicamus populis, nimirum in plateis aquas dividimus, quia in auditotorum multitudinem scientiae verba dilatamus. Cum vero nos, adjuvante divina gratia, intrinsecus custodimus, et ne maligni spiritus qui jure a nobis alieni sunt quia sortem beatitudinis perdiderunt, nobis in elatione subripiant, sollicitudine cauta circumspicimus, soli habemus aquas quas in plateis dividimus, ut nobis in eis alieni participes non sint. Hi nimirum, de quibus scriptum est: Alieni insurrexerunt in me, et fortes quaesierunt animam meam (Psal. LIII, 5). Aquas ergo et in plateis dividit, et solus habet, qui per hoc quod multis praedicat, se in cogitatione temporalis gloriae non exaltat. Tunc enim possidet homo quod docet, quando se non gaudet innotescere, sed prodesse. Ex campo ergo propheta ad domum reducitur, ut is qui ex Deo loquitur, postquam pro utilitate proximorum loquendo foras exierit, ex humilitate semper ad discutienda cordis sui secreta revocetur. Unde et subditur: VERS. 25. — Et tu, fili hominis, ecce data sunt super te vincula, et ligabunt te in eis, et non egredieris in medio eorum.

13. Cum enim praedicator quisque ad conscientiam domus suae reducitur, super eo vincula dantur, et ligatur in eis, quia quanto plus se in cogitatione discusserit, tanto amplius agnoscit justi anima quantis mortalitatis suae infirmitatibus sit ligata. Nisi enim se ligatum conspiceret Paulus, minime dixisset: Desiderium habens dissolvi, et cum Christo esse (Philip. I, 23). Hinc per Psalmistam dicitur: Ut audiret gemitum vinculatorum, et solvat filios interemptorum (Psal. CI, 21). Et rursus: Intret in conspectu tuo gemitus compeditorum (Psal. LXXVIII, 11). Saepe autem cum jam anima ad Redemptoris sui speciem contemplandam exire desiderat, cum coelestibus gaudiis interesse suspirat, ipsa mortalitatis suae vincula conspicit et gemit, quibus adhuc in praesenti mundo ligata retinetur. Hinc est enim quod subtile omnipotentis Dei judicium intuens Jeremias, ait: Circumaedificavit adversum me ut non egrediar, aggravavit compedem meam (Thren. III, 7). Habemus enim compedes, ipsam infirmitatem atque corruptionem mortalitatis nostrae; sed cum tribulatio nobis et gemitus additur, ipsae nostrae compedes aggravantur. Et quidem quandiu in hac vita justus moras patitur, loquendo bona, prodesse aliis festinat; sed cum duras mentes conspicit, easque considerat contentionibus occupari, praedicationis verbum retinet. Et in medio eorum non egreditur, quia a bonis quae loqui poterat obmutescit, sicut per Paulum dicitur. Nihil per contentionem (Philip. II, 3). Et rursus: Si quis vult contentiosus esse, nos talem consuetudinem non habemus (I Cor. XI, 16). Unde hic quoque apte subjungitur: VERS. 26. — Et linguam tuam adhaerescere faciam palato tuo, et eris mutus, nec quasi vir objurgans, quia domus exasperans est.

14. Aliquando vero etiam contra resistentium linguas praedicantium corda zelo sui Dominus accendit ne taceant, sed dicta fallacium verbis veritatis premant. Unde hic subditur: VERS. 27. — Cum autem locutus fuero tibi, aperies os tuum, et dices ad eos: Haec dicit Dominus Deus.

15. Sed haec quae breviter sub duplici intellectu discussimus placet ut juxta considerationem litterae leviter tangendo transeamus. Quid enim nobis amplius per ipsa verba historiae quam virtus obedientiae commendatur? Cum modo ad transmigrationem juxta fluvium Chobar pergere, modo ad campum egredi, modo ex campo ad domum redire propheta praecipitur? Ut prius ex jussione pergens, et paulo post exiens, atque iterum domum rediens, et semetipsum recludens, semper suae voluntatis arbitrium ad divini eloquii praeceptum frangat, quatenus, in coelesti jussione suspensus, non suam, sed conditoris sui voluntatem impleat? Cui dicitur: Et tu, fili hominis, ecce data sunt super te vincula, et ligabunt te in eis, et non egredieris in medio eorum. Qua in re notandum est quod adversa propheta praenoscit, ut contra omnia paretur. Minus enim mala contra mentem praevalent, quae inopinata non veniunt; et tamen dum contraria praenoscuntur, quanta sit in eo obedientiae virtus ostenditur, qui et cognoscit quod adversa passurus est, et tamen voci dominicae inobediens non est. Magna autem consideratione indigent verba quae protinus adduntur: Et linguam tuam adhaerescere faciam palato tuo, et eris mutus, nec quasi vir objurgans, quia domus exasperans est. Discernendum quippe nobis est utrum pro solis malis auditoribus, an aliquando etiam pro vitio praedicantis praedicationis sermo subtrahatur.

16. Quatuor enim qualitatibus res haec considerata distinguitur. Nam aliquando propter malos auditores bonis tollitur sermo doctoribus. Aliquando vero propter bonos auditores datur sermo doctoribus etiam malis. Aliquando autem propter docentium atque audientium justificationem bonis sermo doctoribus datur, ut et ipsi per meritum crescant, et auditores eorum in intellectu et vita proficiant. Aliquando vero quia nec hi digni sunt accipere quibus doctrinae sermo profertur, neque illi doctrinae verbum proferre qui locum docendi tenent, praedicationis sermo tollitur, ut utraque pars districte judicetur. Propter malos namque auditores bonis sermo doctoribus tollitur, sicut nunc ad Ezechielem dicitur: Linguam tuam adhaerescere faciam palato tuo, et eris mutus, nec quasi vir objurgans, quia domus exasperans est. Et sicut Paulo dicitur: Festina et exi velociter ex Jerusalem, quoniam non recipient testimonium tuum de me (Act. XXII, 18). Et sicut volentibus apostolis praedicare in Asia, scriptum est quia prohibuit eos spiritus Jesu (Act. XVI, 6). Propter bonos auditores etiam malis doctoribus sermo datur, sicut de Pharisaeis Dominus dicit: Omnia quaecunque dixerint vobis servate et facite, secundum vero opera eorum nolite facere; dicunt enim, et non faciunt (Matth. XXIII, 3). Propter docentium quoque meritum et audientium justificationem sermo doctrinae tribuitur, sicut sanctis apostolis dicitur: Euntes docete omnes gentes (Ibid., XXVIII, 19). Propter malos vero auditores et indignam vitam eorum qui docere debuerant, sermo doctrinae subtrahitur, sicut Heli ad corrigendos filios districtae increpationis verbum non habuit (I Reg. II, 29; III, 13) quia et ejus negligentia, et filiorum exigebat vita, ut cum eis et populus caderet, et arca Domini capta ad Allophylos transiret (Ibid., IV, 11, seq.) Magna enim omnipotentis Dei est gratia cum inique agentibus durus a doctoribus sermo increpationis profertur. Quo contra nunc dicitur: Et eris mutus, nec quasi vir objurgans. Delinquentes etenim objurgasset, si digni ipsa objurgationis gratia fuissent.

17. Sed cum in doctrina atque in silentio sit meritorum tanta diversitas, ut sciri facile non possit, utrum ex auditoris an ex ejus vitio qui doctrinae locum videtur tenere docendi sermo subtrahatur, quid aliud nobis quam servari semper in rebus dubiis humilitas jubetur? Ut et quando loqui possumus non extollamur, ne fortasse haec ipsa locutionis nostrae gratia non nobis, sed auditoribus nostris collata sit; et rursus quando loqui non possumus, hi qui nobis commissi sunt minime nos dijudicent, ne fortasse non ex nostro, sed ex peccato audientium loqui minime possimus. Ad hoc ergo nobis cuncta de meritis nostris incerta sunt, ut unam certam gratiam teneamus humilitatem, quatenus et nos cum loquimur, ex omnipotentis Dei dono hoc esse, vestrum meritum putemus. Et quando a locutione doctrinae obmutescimus, quamvis nostra culpa sit, vos tamen hanc esse vestram specialiter credatis, ut cum vicissim mala nobis tribuimus, et bona aliis, per ipsam humilitatis gratiam fiat ut doctrinae sermo, qui ablatus fuerat, redeat. Sequitur: VERS. 27. — Cum autem locutus fuero tibi, aperies os tuum, et loqueris ad eos: Haec dicit Dominus Deus: Qui audit, audiat; et qui quiescit, quiescat, quia domus exasperans est.

18. Saepe quidam verbum Dei audire desiderant, sed dum alios conspiciunt aurem avertere, etiam ipsi a salutis auditu deviant; et plerumque multi quiescere appetunt, atque a cunctis mundi hujus actibus vacare, nullis jam desideriis terrenis succumbere, sed dum vident alios inquiete agendo proficere, atque in hoc mundo divitiis et honoribus extolli, quia necdum in via rectitudinis firmi sunt, ad prava opera ex aliorum exemplo delabuntur. Hinc est enim quod in typo infirmantium Psalmista loquens, dicebat: Mei autem pene moti sunt pedes, pene effusi sunt gressus mei (Psal. LXXII, 2, 3), quia zelatus sum in peccatoribus, pacem peccatorum videns. Hinc iterum dicit: Dum superbit impius, incenditur pauper (Psal. X, 2), Hinc ad Jeremiam prophetam voce dominica de Juda et Israel dicitur: Nunquid vidisti quae fecerit aversatrix Israel? Abiit sibimetipsa super omnem montem excelsum, et sub omne lignum frondosum, et fornicata est ibi. Et dixi cum fecisset haec omnia: Ad me convertere, et non est reversa (Jerem. III, 6, 7). Ubi statim subditur qualiter ex aemulatione ejus etiam Juda cecidit, quae stare videbatur. Ait enim: Et vidit praevaricatrix soror ejus Juda, quia pro eo quod maechata esset aversatrix Israel, dimisissem eam, et dedissem ei libellum repudii; et non timuit praevaricatrix Juda soror ejus, sed abiit et fornicata est etiam ipsa (Ibid., et 8). Ecce misericors Deus contemnitur et vocat, aversantibus se signum misericordiae aperit, quia peccanti dicit: Ad me convertere, et tamen non est conversa (Ibid., 7). Sed quia omnipotentem Deum plebs Israelitica deseruit, reverti nolens, libellum repudii accepit. Deseruit videlicet peccando, sed libellum repudii accepit in suis iniquitatibus sine flagello remanendo. Anima enim quae peccat, recedit. Sed si eam post peccatum prosperitas sequitur, nulla disciplina, nulla districtionis increpatio revocat ad cor; in divisione quam inter se et Dominum fecit, etiam libellum repudii accepit, ut jam, velut aliena derelicta, faciat mala quae vult, zeli Dei flagella non sentiat, quatenus ad aeterna supplicia profundius descendat. Sed soror ejus Juda, quoniam dimissam Israeliticam plebem in suis voluptatibus vidit, ipsa quoque in immunditiam fornicationis exarsit. Quia enim aspexit adulteram in sua perversitate florere, etiam ipsa non timuit deterius peccare, atque a conjunctione Domini, quasi a viri legitimi cubili, recedere. Unde necesse est ut peccantes quosque tunc consideremus amplius miseros, quando eos conspicimus in culpa sua sine flagello derelictos. Hinc enim per Salomonem dicitur: Aversio parvulorum interficiet eos, et prosperitas stultorum perdet illos (Prov. I, 32). Qui enim a Deo avertitur et prosperatur, tanto perditioni fit proximus, quanto a zelo disciplinae invenitur alienus. Dicatur ergo: Qui audit audiat, et qui quiescit quiescat, quia domus exasperans est. Ac si aperte diceretur: Vos, qui jam et verba veritatis audire, et a prava coepistis actione quiescere, nolite illos imitari quorum me exasperari moribus videtis.

19. Quod tamen intelligere et aliter possumus. Quidam enim verbum audientes non audiunt, quoniam aurem ad sacrum eloquium ponunt, sed cor a mundi desideriis non evellunt. Et sunt nonnulli qui quiescentes minime quiescunt, quia a pravis quidem actibus otiosi sunt corpore, sed perversitates operum ex dilectione versant in mente. Hinc est enim quod de Judaea ad captivitatem perveniente scriptum est: Viderunt eam hostes, et deriserunt Sabbata ejus (Thren. I, 7). Hostes quippe Sabbata derident, quando maligni spiritus otiosae menti pravas cogitationes injiciunt, ut et si quiescit ab opere, non quiescat a malorum operum delectatione. Recte ergo nunc dicitur: Qui audit audiat, quatenus sic fiat sermo in aure corporis, ut sonet in aure cordis. Et qui quiescit quiescat, ut pravitatis desideria repellantur a cogitatione, cum jam repulsa videntur ab opere. Ubi ne malorum, sicut diximus, exempla sequamur, adjungitur: Quia domus exasperans est. Mali autem etsi diu tolerantur, subito corruunt, et eorum poenas infirmi conspiciunt, ne quorum culpas impunitas existimant imitentur. Unde hic quoque ejusdem Judaeae desolatio subjungitur, quae domus exasperans vocatur, cum protinus prophetae suo Dominus dicit: EZECH. IV, 1, 2, 3. — Et tu, fili hominis, sume tibi laterem, et pones eum coram te, et describes in eo civitatem Jerusalem, et ordinabis adversus eam obsidionem, et aedificabis munitiones, et comportabis aggerem, et dabis contra eam castra, et pones arietes in gyro. Et tu sume tibi sartaginem ferream et pones eam murum ferreum inter te et civitatem, et obfirmabis faciem tuam ad eam, et erit in obsidionem, et circumdabis eam. Signum est domus Israel.

20. In quibus videlicet verbis quid aliud juxta historiam nisi Jerosolymae urbis obsessio atque destructio designatur, et peccatoris populi afflictio exprimitur? Qui domus exasperans vocatur, cum aperte dicitur: Ordinabis adversus eam obsidionem, et aedificabis munitiones, et comportabis aggerem, et dabis contra eam castra, et pones arietes in gyro. Sed quia verba prophetiae sic plerumque narrant historica, ut per haec etiam mystica describantur, oportet ut haec eadem dicta quae protulimus spiritaliter disseramus, maxime quia in eis interponitur quod teneri posse ad litteram non videtur, cum dicitur: Et tu sume tibi sartaginem ferream, et pones eam murum ferreum inter te et civitatem, et obfirmabis faciem tuam ad eam, et erit in obsidionem. Nisi enim rebus historicis mystica miscerentur, quid sartago ferrea necessaria prophetae fuit, ut hanc inter se et civitatem poneret, quatenus se ab ejus obsidione separaret? Cum enim dicitur: Sume tibi sartaginem ferream, et pones eam murum ferreum inter te et civitatem, aperte declaratur quia per eamdem sartaginem ferream ab obsidione civitatis propheta se liberum reddat. Unde et quod praedixit subjungitur: Et obfirmabis faciem tuam ad eam, et erit in obsidionem. Ex qua re ostenditur quia propheta in eadem obsidione non erit, si sartaginem ferream inter se et civitatem murum ferreum ponit. Et certe sive in ea captivitate quae prius, sive in ea quae postmodum Israelitico populo contigit, nullus ab ejusdem captivitatis periculo liber fuit, sed omnes simul par calamitas involvit. Quid ergo intelligi juxta litteram potest, ut propheta inter se et civitatem quae obsidenda est sartaginem ferream ponat? Sed quamvis omne hoc quod in descriptione lateris sub signo Jerosolymorum civitatis legitur juxta litteram factum sit, nobis tamen sciendum est quia typicum aliquid per sartaginem figuratur, et obsessio Jerosolymorum vera describitur.

21. Ex quare instruimur, ut dum aliud completum juxta historiam scimus, et aliud juxta historiam a ratione vacare cognoscimus, in sacro verbo utraque teneamus, quatenus et obsessionem Jerosolymorum, quae juxta litteram postmodum facta est, in prophetae verbis et factis credamus esse figuratam, et tamen per eamdem obsidionem obsidio alia, id est interior, designetur. In qua jure quaerimus quid per sartaginem ferream, quae murus ferreus dicitur, valeat designari. Illam itaque obsidionem qua Jerosolymorum civitas destructa est, jam factam novimus; sed nunc aliam intrinsecus, quae quotidie agitur, requiramus. De qua per significationem dicitur: Et tu, fili hominis, sume tibi laterem, et pones eum coram te, et describes in eo civitatem Jerusalem.

22. Sed ante nobis inquirendum est cur Ezechiel propheta vel quoties sublimia conspicit, vel quoties agere aliqua mystica jubetur, prius filius hominis appellatur? Saepe enim sublevatur ad coelestia, et occultis ac invisibilibus rebus ejus mens pascitur. Necesse ergo est ut inter occulta quae penetrat, filius hominis vocetur, ut semper agnoscat quod est, et nunquam extollatur de his ad quae ducitur. Quid est enim prophetae ad spiritalia sublevato semper fili hominis dicere, nisi eum infirmitatis propriae memorem facere? Ut conscius conditionis infirmae, elevari in cogitatione non debeat de magnitudine contemplationis suae.

23. Quia vero idem propheta, ut supra jam diximus, typum praedicantium vel doctorum tenet, recte ei nunc dicitur: Sume tibi laterem, et pones eum coram te. Omnis enim doctor cum terrenum quempiam auditorem ad coelestis verbi doctrinam suscipit, laterem assumit. Cui dum loqui coeperit quae sit retributio coelestis patriae, quae visio pacis supernae, civitatem Jerusalem describit in latere. Quem coram se ponit, quia intenta mente qualitatem audientis considerat, id est provectum vel defectum conspicit, et juxta ejusdem intelligentiam praedicationis suae verba moderatur, ut describi in audientis mente civitas Jerusalem, id est visio pacis, possit. Dicatur ergo: Sume tibi laterem, videlicet proximi cor terrenum. Et pones eum coram te, scilicet ut vitam atque intellectum illius intenta mente custodias. Et describes in eo civitatem Jerusalem, ut ei quae sint superna gaudia de visione pacis innotescas. Quasi enim jam Jerusalem in latere descripta est, cum terrena mens coeperit quae sint illa internae pacis gaudia vera cognoscere, et ad conspiciendam gloriam patriae coelestis anhelare. Quasi in terra visio pacis describitur, quando mens, quae prius terrena sapuerat, per amorem jam ad contemplandam gloriam regni coelestis elevatur. 24. Sed mox ut animus amare coelestia coeperit, mox ut ad visionem pacis intimae tota se intentione collegerit, antiquus ille adversarius qui de coelo lapsus est invidet, et insidiari amplius incipit, et acriores quam consueverat tentationes admovet, ita ut plerumque sic resistentem animam tentet, sicut ante nunquam tentaverat quando possidebat. Unde scriptum est: Fili, accedens ad servitutem Dei, sta in justitia et timore, et praepara animam tuam ad tentationem (Eccli. II, 1). Unde et daemoniacus qui a Domino sanatur, ab exeunte daemone discerpitur, sicut scriptum est: Et clamans et multum discerpens eum, exiit ab eo (Marc. IX, 25). Quid est enim quod obsessum hominem antiquus hostis quem possessum non discerpserat, deserens discerpsit, nisi quod plerumque dum de corde expellitur, acriores in eo tentationes generat, quam prius excitaverat quando hoc quietus possidebat? Unde et Israelitae quoque ad Moysen et Aaron dicunt: Videat Dominus, et judicet, quoniam fetore fecistis odorem nostrum coram Pharaone et servis ejus, et praebuistis ei gladium, ut occideret nos (Exod. V, 21). In Moyse enim et Aaron lex et prophetae figuratae sunt. Et saepe apud se infirmus animus quasi contra sacra eloquia murmurat, quia postquam verba coelestia audire et sequi coeperit, regis Aegyptii adversitas, id est maligni spiritus tentatio, excrescit.

25. Debet ergo vigilanter doctor proficienti animae quae illam tentationes sequantur innotescere, ut cautam se valeat contra maligni spiritus insidias praeparare. Unde bene nunc, post descriptam civitatem Jerusalem in latere, dicitur prophetae: Et ordinabis adversus eam obsidionem, et aedificabis munitiones, et comportabis aggerem. In qua enim jam pacis visio describitur, ei necesse est ut tentationum bella nuntientur. Nam ut valeat ad illa pacis gaudia aeterna pertingere, hanc hic procul dubio oportet tribulationum certamina multa sustinere. De qua bene dicitur: Ordinabis adversus eam obsidionem. Praedicator quippe contra erudiendam animam obsidionem ordinat cum praemuniendo indicat quibus se modis vitia virtutibus opponant, quomodo luxuria castitatem feriat, qualiter ira tranquillitatem animi perturbet, quantum inepta laetitia vigorem mentis resolvat, qualiter multiloquium munitionem cordis destruat, quomodo invidia charitatem interficiat, quemadmodum superbia arcem humilitatis effodiat, qualiter fallacia cum veritatem in sermone corruperit, hanc etiam in cognitione corrumpat, ut qui verum dicere noluit quod intellexit jam nec intelligat, quod dicere valeat. Ordinatur ergo a praedicatore obsidio cum per sanctae admonitionis verba singulis quibusque virtutibus quae vel quibus modis vitia insidientur ostenditur. Et contra Jerusalem, quam describit in latere, praedicator munitiones aedificat quando mala quaeque quam munita contra mentem veniant demonstrat, ut sese vitia sub virtutum specie abscondant; quatenus, sicut saepe jam diximus, immoderata ira justitia videri appetat, et disciplinae remissio mansuetudo videri velit, et tenacia sese parcimoniam nominet, et inordinata rerum effusio se benevolentiam appellet. Quasi enim aedificatae contra mentem munitiones sunt, quando vitia sub virtutum specie excrescunt, et in alto se ostendunt per imaginem, quae in imo jacent semper per actionem. 26. Adhuc quoque additur: Et comportabis aggerem. Quo enim mens desiderare coelestia coeperit, eo in illam maligni spiritus tentationibus suis terrenas amplius cogitationes exaggerant. Propheta ergo aggerem comportat cum praedicator sanctus bonis mentibus qualiter terrena desideria subrepere solent denuntiat. Atque adhuc additur: Et dabis contra eam castra, et pones arietes in gyro. Quasi dat contra animam doctor castra, quando malignorum spirituum contra eam collectas atque adunatas insidias indicat, ut aliquando non solummodo ex uno, sed ex conjunctis vitiis simul tentent.

27. Nam sunt quaedam vitia quasi per quamdam sibi cognationem propinqua, sicut dissolutio spiritus, appetitus gulae, et immunditia luxuriae, sicut multiloquium, fallacia, atque perjurium. Ex dissolutione quippe spiritus mens ad ingluviem ventris rapitur, et dum cibis venter extenditur, ad luxuriam caro trahitur superbiendo captiva. Et rursum ex multiloquio fallacia generatur, quia valde difficile est ut qui multa loquitur non etiam mentiatur; et saepe mendacium etiam perjurio tegitur, ut ante humana judicia veletur. Superbia quoque esse sine invidia atque inani gloria nullatenus potest. Superbus etenim quisque honorem quem ipse ambit aliis invidet. Et cum hunc fortasse obtinuerit, in elationem gloriae temporalis attollitur, atque quod alios conspicit minime percipere potuisse, hoc se per inanem gloriam gaudet prae caeteris habere.

28. Sciendum quoque est quia saepe nonnulla vitia ad mentem non simul veniunt, sed supponuntur, ut unum alteri in tentatione succedat. Et aliud contra faciem venit, aliud vero in tentationem se ex latere subjicit, quatenus dum alteri resistitur, ab altero mens decepta capiatur. Ipsa enim quae superius diximus vitia plerumque se alia pro aliis furtive supponunt, sicut nonnunquam dum iram vincere in nobismetipsis conamur, plus quam necesse est lenitas mentem occupat, ut asperitatem peccantibus quam oportet minime proponat. Saepe vero dum nobis inesse incauta lenitas displicet, zelus se in furorem trahit, atque extra patientiae limitem animum captivum rapit. Quia ergo permista simul vitia atque adunata contra mentem veniunt, recte in praedicatoris ore contra descriptam Jerusalem castra proponuntur. Et quia aliquando singula hinc inde sensum feriunt, in gyro arietes ordinantur. Ponit ergo praedicator arietes in gyro, dum caute denuntiat quam blande luxuria percutit, quam aspere impatientia occidit, quam laboriose avaritia accendit et interimit, quam tumide superbia exstinguit. In gyro itaque arietes ponere est praedicando ostendere qui undique soleant animam mucrones vitiorum ferire.

29. Sequitur: Et tu sume tibi sartaginem ferream, et pones eam murum ferreum inter te et civitatem. Quia ferrum forte metallum est, et in sartagine cibus frigitur, quid per sartaginem ferream, nisi spiritalis zeli fortis frixura signatur? Omnis quippe spiritalis zelus doctoris animam frigit, quia valde cruciatur dum infirmos quosque aeterna deserere et rebus temporalibus delectari conspicit. Quam bene Paulus sartaginem ferream sumpserat, cum zelo animarum cruciatus dicebat: Quis infirmatur, et ego non infirmor? Quis scandalizatur, et ego non uror (II Cor. XI, 20)? Ipsum suum cor quod animarum zelo succenderat, quid aliud quam sartaginem fecerat, in quo amore virtutum contra vitia ardebat? Quod enim urebatur, sartago erat. Inardescebat enim et coquebat, quia incendebatur amaritudine, sed virtutum alimenta praeparabat ex sua afflicta cogitatione.

30. Sed quid est quod eamdem sartaginem propheta inter se et civitatem murum ferreum ponit, nisi quod idem fortis zelus qui nunc in mente doctoris agitur in die extremi judicii inter eum et animam quam a vitiis zelat testis est? ut etsi audire is qui docetur noluerit, doctor tamen pro zelo quem exhibet de auditoris negligentia reus non sit. Murum ergo ferreum inter se et civitatem ponit, quia ultionis tempore inde doctor a damnationis periculo munitur, unde nunc per zelum custodiae cordis frixuram patitur. Nullum quippe omnipotenti Deo tale est sacrificium, quale est zelus animarum. Hinc enim Psalmista ait: Zelus domus tuae comedit me (Psal. LXVIII, 10). Quantum vero frixura cordis quae spiritali zelo agitur omnipotentem Dominum Deum placat, aperte ostenditur cum offerri per legem simila in sacrificium jubetur. De qua scriptum est: In sartagine oleo conspersa frigetur, offeretque eam calidam in odorem suavissimum Domino sacerdos qui patri jure successerit, et tota cremabitur in altari (Levit. VI, 21, 22). Tunc enim simila in sartagine frigitur, cum munda mens justi per zeli sancti ardorem crematur. Quae conspergi oleo praecipitur, id est claritatis misericordiae misceri, quae in conspectu omnipotentis Domini ardet et lucet. Conspergatur ergo oleo mens quae in sartagine frigitur, quia sancti zeli districtio necesse est ut ex misericordiae virtute et ardeat et clarescat. Amat enim eumdem ipsum quem insequi videtur. Unde et calida in odorem suavissimum Domino offerri praecipitur, quia si amorem zelus non habet, ea quae de sartagine offertur calorem simila amisit. Et notandum quis eam offerre praecipitur, videlicet sacerdos qui patri jure successerit. Ille enim sacerdos patri jure succedit, qui esse se omnipotentis Domini filium demonstrat moribus, atque a nobilitate intima operum suorum ignobilitate non discrepat. Quae in altari tota cremari praecipitur, ut videlicet holocaustum fiat. Holocaustum enim totum incensum dicimus. Unde et in translatione altera hoc in loco haec eadem simila quae in sartagine frigitur holocaustum fieri jubetur. Hoc autem inter holocaustum et sacrificium distat, quia omne quidem holocaustum sacrificium est, non autem omne sacrificium holocaustum. Sunt enim multa bona quae aguntur sacrificia, sed holocausta non sunt, quia totam mentem in amorem spiritalem minime incendunt. Qui enim sic operantur ea quae Dei sunt, ut tamen et quaedam quae sunt saeculi non relinquant, nimirum sacrificium et non holocaustum offerunt. Qui autem cuncta quae mundi sunt deserunt, et totam mentem igne divini amoris incendunt, hi nimirum omnipotenti Domino sacrificium et holocaustum fiunt. Simila itaque in sartagine est munda mens justi in zeli spiritalis afflictione; quae per sollicitudinem animarum frigitur, et non solum sacrificium, sed etiam holocaustum Domino esse deputatur. Sumamus ergo sartaginem ferream, et ponamus eam murum ferreum inter nos et civitatem, id est assumamus zelum fortem, ut inter nos et auditoris nostri animam inveniamus hanc postmodum fortem munitionem. Tunc enim hunc murum ferreum inventuri sumus, si nunc eum fortiter tenemus, videlicet docendo, custodiendo, suadendo, increpando, mulcendo, terrendo, aliquando leniter, aliquando vero etiam severius agendo. De qua severitate recte subditur: Et ob firmabis faciem tuam ad eam, et erit in obsidionem.

31. Quid est obfirmare faciem ad Jerusalem in latere descriptam, nisi ut ei animae cui coelestis pacis visionem doctor denuntiat, si adhuc eam infirmari in suis actibus conspicit, remissiorem et clementiorem se minime ostendat? Unde scriptum est: Filiae tibi sunt? serva corpus illarum, et non ostendas hilarem faciem tuam ad illas (Eccli. VII, 26). Infirmae quippe animae atque ad appetitum mundi deditae, aliquando melius ex severitate servantur, ut obfirmata facies, id est per severitatis custodiam ab omni spe frivolae remissionis abducta, inconstantem animam terreat, atque a delectatione vitiorum districtionis vigore constringat. Quod cum a doctore agitur, semper necesse est ut dulcedo et humilitas in corde teneatur, quatenus et multum amet, et nunquam contra eum per elationem superbiat, cui tamen amorem suum et humilitatem pro utilitate ejus prodere recusat.

32. Sequitur: Et circumdabis eam. Circumdat doctor auditoris animam, cum in omne quod in hac vita agitur tentationum laqueos apponi posse denuntiat, ut dum ubique fit mens pavida, ubique circumspecta, quanto timidior, tanto vigilantior vivat.

33. Sequitur: Signum est domus Israel. Si ad historiam obsidionis quae juxta litteram facta est, signum est domus Israel quod propheta fecit; si ad mysterium quod quotidie erga uniuscujusque animam a doctore agitur, signum est domus Israel et hoc quod egit, et hoc quod agendo nuntiavit, quia sicut domus Israel obsidionem corporaliter pertulit, ita unaquaeque anima quae jam servire omnipotenti Deo incipit obsidentes se insidias malignorum spirituum sentit. A quibus si vere eripi appetit, scire debet quia eripi sua virtute non possit; sed ejus necesse est ut adjutorium speret qui nos, et in carne corruptibili viventes, per redemptionis suae mysterium potest etiam super spiritus qui sunt sine carne roborare, Jesus Christus

Dominus noster, qui vivit et regnat cum Patre in unitate Spiritus sancti Deus, per omnia saecula saeculorum. Amen.

LIBER SECUNDUS

HOMILIA I

In explicatione trium priorum versuum cap. XL Ezechielis, et quarti inchoati, de Christo et Ecclesia, de electis et de occultis erga eos Dei judiciis, praesertim disseritur. EZECH. XL, 1. — In vigesimo et quinto anno transmigrationis nostrae, in exordio anni, decima mensis, quarto decimo anno postquam percussa est civitas, ipsa hac die facta est super me manus Domini, et adduxit me illuc.

1. Dicturus mystica, narrationem historicam praemittit, ut figat ex tempore, quod credatur ex revelatione. Notandum vero quod in exordio libri hujus quo anno prophetare coeperit indicavit; in fine vero inseruit quo extremam visionem vidit, ita ut cognosci valeat in quot annis prophetiae suae librum duxerit. Tempus namque quo prophetare coepit, in locutionis suae initio posuit, dicens: Aperti sunt coeli, et vidi visiones Domini in quinta mensis; ipse est annus quintus transmigrationis regis Joachin (Ezech. I, 1). Nunc vero loquitur, dicens: In vigesimo et quinto anno transmigrationis nostrae. Idem namque propheta in captivitate prima cum Joachin rege fuerat in Babyloniam transductus (IV Reg. XXIV, 25). Nam de secunda Jerosolymorum captivitate subjungit: Quarto decimo anno postquam percussa est civitas. Undecim quippe annis Sedecias post captivitatem primam, in qua Ezechiel propheta cum Joachin rege ductus est in Babylonem, in Jerosolymorum urbe regnaverat. Post captivitatem vero ejusdem Sedeciae, quae jam secunda erat urbis captivitas, quarto decimo anno propheta visionem ultimam videbat. Undecim itaque et quatuordecim simul juncti faciunt viginti et quinque. Si igitur visionem primam quinto captivitatis prioris anno locutus est, atque hanc ultimam vigesimo et quinto anno factam fuisse describit, profecto patet quod in viginti annis locutionis suae moras usque ad ultimae visionis suae verba tetenderit. Nec moyere quempiam debet quod in medio prophetiae suae volumine, cum de Babylonico rege loqueretur, vigesimi ac septimi anni memoriam facit. Quo in loco cum nihil de tempore suae captivitatis interserit, aperte demonstrat, quia ejus regis tempora describat, de quo ut prophetaret acceperat. Quod vero ait: In exordio anni, decima mensis, tempus simpliciter exprimit, ut ex ipso quoque tempore in corda audientium juxta litteram verbi radicem figat, ex qua spiritales fructus postmodum proferat.

2. Notandum vero quod ait: Quartodecimo anno postquam percussa est civitas, ipsa hac die. Quid est enim quod per hanc visionem ultimam omnipotens Deus ea ipsa die dignatus est promissionis suae misericordiam facere, qua die in percussa civitate iram justitiae implevit, nisi quod illa divinitatis vis, quae in diversitatis motum et mutabilitatem non ducitur, ea ipsa luce justitiae afflictos ac poenitentes vivificat, qua superbientes ac rigidos percutit? Praemisso itaque visionis suae tempore, subjungit: VERS. 1, 2. — Facta est super me manus Domini, et adduxit me illuc in visionibus Dei: adduxit me in terram Israel, et dimisit me super montem excelsum nimis, super quem erat quasi aedificium civitatis vergentis ad Austrum.

3. Cujus videlicet civitatis aedificium accipi juxta litteram nullatenus potest. Nam paulo post subdit hoc ipsum aedificium calamo sex cubitorum et palmo, portam vero ejusdem aedificii quatuordecim cubitis mensuratam, cujus portae frontes esse perhibet sexaginta cubitorum. Quae cuncta stare juxta litteram nullatenus valent. Quomodo enim totum simul aedificium calamo, id est sex cubitis et palmo mensuratur, et portae aedificii in quatuordecim cubitis, frontes vero portarum in sexaginta cubitis extenduntur? Porta enim in civitate est, frontes vero in portis. Et nulia recipi ratio permittit, quia minus est hoc quod continet ab eo quod continetur. In Scriptura autem sacra et ea quae accipi secundum historiam possunt, plerumque spiritaliter intelligenda sunt, ut et fides habeatur in veritate historiae, et spiritalis intelligentia capiatur de mysteriis allegoriae. Sicut illud quoque novimus quod Psalmista ait: Quoniam videbo coelos tuos, opera digitorum tuorum, lunam et stellas, quas tu fundasti (Psal. VIII, 4).

Ecce enim in exteriori descriptione stat sermo rationis, quia et coeli opera Dei sunt, et luna ac stellae ab eo creatae atque fundatae sunt. Sed si hoc Psalmista juxta sola exteriora opera, et non etiam secundum intellectum mysticum asserit, qui coelos opera Dei esse professus est, dicturus lunam et stelias, cur non etiam solem, quem scimus quia ejus opus est (Genes. I, 16), pariter enumeravit? Si enim juxta solam litteram loquebatur, dicturus luminare minus, prius luminare majus dicere debuit, ut ante solem, et post lunam atque stellas fundatas esse perhiberet. Sed quia juxta intellectum mysticum loquebatur, ut lunam sanctam Ecclesiam, et stellas sanctos omnes accipere deberemus, solem nominare noluit, quia videlicet ipsi aeterno Soli loquebatur, de quo scriptum est: Vobis autem qui timetis Dominum, orietur sol justitiae (Malac. IV, 2). De quo reprobi in fine dicturi sunt: Sol justitiae non ortus est nobis. Dicendo ergo, Lunam et stellas quas tu fundasti (Sap. V, 6), et tamen tacendo solem qui factus est, indicavit quia illi Soli locutus est qui non solum solem et lunam atque stellas corporaliter, sed etiam lunam Ecclesiam atque stellas sanctos omnes spiritaliter fecit. Si ergo cum aliquid deest historiae, aperta ratione ducimur ad intellectum allegoriae; quanto magis illa spiritaliter accipienda sunt, in quibus juxta rationem litterae nihil historicum sonat? Facta est super me manus Domini, et adduxit me illuc in visionibus Dei; adduxit me in terram Israel. Quod dixerat, Adduxit me illuc, hoc replicans subdidit: Adduxit me in terram Israel. Ait enim: Facta est super me manus Domini, et adduxit me illuc in visionibus Domini. Manus etenim virtutem potestatis, visiones vero ipsam quam acceperat revelationem significant. Manus quippe in visione est virtus in contemplatione. Quibus verbis quid aperte indicat, nisi quia nihil de civitate quam viderat juxta litteram dicat? Nam spiritaliter de ea loquitur quam spiritaliter contemplatur.

4. Et dimisit me super montem excelsum nimis. Quem ergo significat mons excelsus nisi Mediatorem Dei et hominum hominem Christum

Jesum? Qui de terra quidem, sed ultra terram est, quia caro ejusdem Redemptoris nostri de imis habet materiam, sed in summis praeeminet ex potestate. Quem minus erat ut excelsum diceret, nisi adderet nimis, quia non solum homo, sed ex ejusdem humanitatis conceptione quae ab eo assumpta est Deus homo, non solum homo ultra homines, sed homo etiam super angelos factus. Hinc enim de illo per Isaiam dicitur: In die illa erit fructus terrae sublimis (Isai. IV, 2). Creator etenim noster, quia pro nobis incarnatus est, fructus terrae factus est nobis. Sed jam fructus terrae sublimis est, quia homo natus in terra super angelos regnat in coelo, quia juxta David et Pauli vocem, Omnia subjecit sub pedibus ejus (Psal. VIII, 8; Hebr. II, 8). In eo enim quod ei subjecit omnia, nihil demisit non subjectum ei. Mons ergo iste est et excelsus, et nimis, quia etsi de terra est per substantiam humanitatis, incomprehensibilis tamen est ex altitudine divinitatis. Hinc est enim quod eumdem Dominum cum Isaias propheta prospiceret in carne esse venturum, per prophetiae spiritum sublevatus, ait: Et erit in novissimis diebus praeparatus mons domus Domini in vertice montium (Isai. II, 2). Domus enim Domini Israeliticus populus fuit. Mons itaque domus Domini ille appellatus est, qui ex Israelitico populo incarnari dignatus est. Fuerunt autem in eodem populo sancti viri qui montes jure vocarentur, quia per vitae meritum ad coelestia propinquaverunt. Sed incarnatus unigenitus istis montibus aequalis non fuit, quia naturam, vitam, merita omnium ex sua divinitate transcendit. Unde et recte mons super verticem montium dicitur, quia excelsus ex divinitate sua inventus est, etiam super cacumina sanctorum, ut hi qui multum in Deo profecerant, ejus vestigia vix potuissent tangere ex vertice cogitationis. Qui ergo illic mons super verticem montium dicitur, ipse hic mons excelsus nimis esse perhibetur. Sequitur:

5. Super quem erat quasi aedificium civitatis vergentis ad Austrum. Notandum est quod non dicitur, Super quem erat aedificium, sed quasi aedificium, ut videlicet ostenderetur quod non de corporalis, sed de spiritalis civitatis aedificio cuncta dicerentur. Qui enim non se aedificium, sed quasi aedificium vidisse perhibet, cor audientium ad spiritalem fabricam mittit, sicut per Psalmistam dicitur: Jerusalem quae aedificatur ut civitas (Psal. CXXI, 3). Quia etenim illa internae pacis visio ex sanctorum civium congregatione construitur, Jerusalem coelestis ut civitas aedificatur. Quae tamen in hac peregrinationis terra dum flagellis percutitur, tribulationibus tunditur, ejus lapides quotidie quadrantur. Et ipsa est civitas, scilicet sancta Ecclesia, quae regnatura in coelo adhuc laborat in terra. Cujus civibus Petrus dicit: Et vos tanquam lapides vivi superaedificamini (I Pet. II, 5). Et Paulus ait: Dei agricultura, Dei aedificatio estis (I Cor. III, 9). Quae videlicet civitas habet hic in sanctorum moribus magnum jam aedificium suum. In aedificio quippe lapis lapidem portat, quia lapis super lapidem ponitur; et qui portat alterum, portatur ab altero. Sic itaque, sic in sancta Ecclesia unusquisque et portat alterum, et portatur ab altero. Nam vicissim se proximi tolerant, ut per eos aedificium charitatis surgat. Hinc enim Paulus admonet, dicens: Invicem onera vestra portate, et sic adimplebitis legem Christi (Galat. VI, 2). Cujus legis virtutem denuntians, ait: Plenitudo legis charitas (Rom. XIII, 10). Si enim ego vos portare negligo in moribus vestris, et vos me tolerare contemnitis in moribus meis, charitatis aedificium inter nos unde surgit, quos vicaria dilectio per patientiam non conjungit? In aedificio autem, ut praediximus, lapis qui portat portatur, quia sicut ego jam mores eorum tolero qui adhuc in conversatione boni operis rudes sunt, ita ego quoque ab illis toleratus sum, qui me in timore Domini praecesserunt et portaverunt, ut portatus portare discerem. Sed ipsi quoque a majoribus suis portati sunt. Lapides vero qui in summitate atque extremitate fabricae ponuntur, ipsi quidem portantur ab aliis, sed alios nequaquam portant, quia et hi qui in fine Ecclesiae, id est in extremitate mundi nascituri sunt, tolerantur quidem a majoribus, ut eorum mores ad bona opera componantur; sed cum non eos sequuntur qui per illos proficiant, nullos super se fidelis fabricae jam lapides portant. Nunc itaque alii portantur a nobis, nos vero portati sumus ab aliis. Omne autem pondus fabricae fundamentum portat, quia mores simul omnium solus Redemptor noster tolerat. De quo Paulus ait: Fundamentum enim aliud nemo potest ponere praeter id quod positum est, quod est Christus Jesus (I Cor. III, 11). Portat fundamentum lapides, et a lapidibus non portatur, quia Redemptor noster omnia nostra tolerat, sed in ipso malum non fuit quod tolerari debuisset. Unde bene nunc dicitur: Dimisit me super montem excelsum nimis, super quem erat quasi aedificium civitatis, quia mores et culpas nostras solus ille sustinet, qui totam sanctae Ecclesiae fabricam portat. Qui per prophetae vocem de perverse adhuc viventibus dicit: Laboravi sustinens (Jerem. VI, 11). Non autem sustinendo Dominus laborat, cujus divinitatis potentiam nulla fatigatio contingit; sed, verbis humanis loquens, ipsam suam circa nos patientiam laborem vocat.

6. Et notandum quod eamdem civitatem quam propheta conspexit ad Austrum vergentem vidit. Auster enim ventus quia in sancti Spiritus typo poni soleat, hi qui in sacro eloquio studiosi sunt recognoscunt; sicut e contrario per Aquilonem saepe diabolus designatur, quia et ille relaxat in calore, et iste constringit in frigore. Et Veritas dicit: Abundabit iniquitas, et refrigescet charitas multorum (Matth. XXIV, 12). Propheta quoque de Judaea asserit, dicens: Sicut frigidam facit cisterna aquam, sic frigidam fecit malitiam suam (Jerem. VI, 7). Hinc enim diabolus, propheta eodem attestante, dixisse perhibetur: Sedebo in monte Testamenti, in lateribus Aquilonis (Isai. XIV, 13). At contra haec civitas ad Australem partem vergit, quia torporem mentis sancti Spiritus gratia relaxat. Hinc Psalmista ait: Converte, Domine, captivitatem nostram, sicut torrens in Austro (Psal. CXXV, 4). Captivitas enim nostra, quae torporis frigore ad sequendum Deum pigra remanserat, per calorem sancti Spiritus relaxatur, ut currat in amorem Dei. Unde et nunc dicitur quod civitas quae in monte constituta est ad Austrum vergit, quia electorum Ecclesia cogitationes suas in afflatu sancti Spiritus aperit, atque, ab omni superbiae suae vertice descendens, in Deo, cui credit, amoris calorem concipit, ut nihil ei libeat, nisi ejus gratiae submitti, dilectione calefieri, ejus afflatus semper munere repleri. Unde et valido amore succensus contemplator dicebat: Anima mea exsultabit in Domino, et delectabitur super salutari ejus (Psal. XXXIV, 9). Qui enim Latine salutaris, ipse Hebraice Jesus dicitur. Propheta igitur quia vias ejus atque miracula redemptionis quoque nostrae mysterium per prophetiae spiritum contemplabatur, exsultare se in Domino et delectari super Jesu perhibet, quia inde gaudium in mente conceperat unde per amorem fortiter ardebat. Pensemus itaque si mentes spiritalium patrum in illo delectatae sunt qui necdum venerat, sed praevidebatur, cujus reatus sit ejus vias, ejus exempla, ejus monita, postquam venit et redemptionem exhibuit, non amare. Haec ergo civitas ad Austrum vergere dicitur, ac si aperte diceretur quod prior illa civitas, scilicet Synagoga, in infidelibus suis ad Aquilonem stetit, quae in frigore perfidiae duravit. Sancta vero Ecclesia, quae charitatem fidei concepit, per calorem ad Austrum vergit, et quasi calido vento innititur, quia non in sui fiducia, sed in dono spiritalis gratiae laetatur. Sequitur: VERS. 3. — Et introduxit me illuc.

7. Coelestis civitatis aedificium ille intrat, qui in sancta Ecclesia bonorum vias imitando considerat. Intrare quippe est aedificium super montem, electos sanctae Ecclesiae in virtutum culmine constitutos qualiter in Domino proficiant amando considerare. Iste enim vitam conjugio ligatam ducit, propriis rebus contentus est, aliena non diripit, de suo quidquid praevalet indigentibus largitur, peccata sine quibus quotidiana vita a conjugatis duci non potest flere non negligit. Pro eo enim quod ipsa familiaris cura animum conturbat, sese ad lacrymas excitat. Ille vero jam cuncta quae sunt mundi deseruit, nil ejus habere appetit, solius contemplationis exercitatione pascitur, spe praemiorum coelestium cum

fletibus laetatur, transcendit ipsa etiam quae haberi concessa sunt, quotidianum cum Domino habere secretum quaerit, nulla ejus animum praetereuntis mundi cura perturbat, mentem semper in exspectatione coelestium gaudiorum dilatat. Alius vero jam hujus mundi cuncta deseruit, ejusque mens in contemplationem coelestium sublevatur; sed tamen pro aedificatione multorum, locum regiminis tenens, qui rebus praetereuntibus ex desiderio non succumbit, ad eas aliquando propter proximorum compassionem reflectitur, ut ex earum cura indigentibus misereatur; verbum vitae auditoribus praedicat, animabus simul et corporibus necessaria ministrat. Et qui propter se ad coeleste desiderium jam per contemplationem evolat, adhuc tamen pro provectu et utilitate proximorum in rebus temporalibus desudat. Quisquis ergo in sancta Ecclesia considerare sollicite studet, ut aut in bonorum conjugatorum vita, aut in arce continentium et omnia quae sunt hujus mundi derelinquentium, aut etiam in praedicatorum summitate proficiat, jam civitatis in monte positae aedificium intravit. Nam qui considerare meliorum vitam ut proficiat negligit, adhuc extra fabricam stat. Et si honorem quem jam sancta Ecclesia in mundo habet admiratur, quasi aedificium foris conspicit et obstupescit. Et quia exterioribus solis intentus est, intus ingressus non est. Sequitur: IBID. — Et ecce vir, cujus erat species quasi species aeris.

8. Ipse signatur in viro, qui figuratur in monte. Vir autem iste metiri aedificium dicitur. Et recte Dominus per virum signatur et montem, quia et ipse omnia intra sanctam Ecclesiam judicando disponit, et ipse eamdem sanctam Ecclesiam portat, et portando ad coelestia sublevat. Sic in sancto quoque Evangelio idem Redemptor noster loquitur, dicens: Qui intrat per ostium, pastor est ovium (Joan. X, 1). Et paulo post: Ego sum ostium (Ibid., 7). Atque iterum post pauca subjungit: Ego sum pastor bonus (Ibid., 11). Si igitur ipse pastor, et ipse ostium, et intrat pastor per ostium, cur non hoc loco et ipse mons, et ipse vir intelligitur, qui aedificium metitur in monte? 9.

Sed quaerendum nobis est cur de hoc viro dicitur, Cujus species erat quasi species aeris. Cuncti autem novimus, fratres, metallum aeris valde esse durabile, atque omnimodo sonorum. Quid est ergo quod aspectus Mediatoris Dei et hominum speciei comparatur aeris, nisi hoc quod aperte novimus, quia unigenitus Filius, formam servi accipiens, fragilitatem carnis humanae per resurrectionis suae gloriam vertit in aeternitatem, quia in eo caro facta est jam sine fine durabilis? Nam surgens a mortuis jam non moritur, mors ei ultra non dominabitur (Rom. VI, 9). Quid est autem, quod ipsa ejus incarnatio sonoro metallo comparatur, nisi quod per eamdem assumptionem humanitatis nostrae insonuit omnibus gloria majestatis suae? Et quasi aspectum aeris habet in corpore, quia Deus mundo innotuit ex carne. Unde et per Joannem dicitur: Habebat in vestimento et in femore suo scriptum: Rex regum, et Dominus dominantium (Apoc. XIX, 16). Quid enim vestimentum ejus est, nisi corpus quod assumpsit ex Virgine? Nec tamen aliud ejus vestimentum est, atque aliud ipse. Nam nostrum quoque vestimentum caro dicitur, sed tamen ipsi nos sumus caro, qua vestimur. Hoc autem vestimentum illius longe ante Isaias aspiciens per crucem passionis sanguine cruentatum, dixit: Quare rubrum est indumentum tuum, et vestimenta tua quasi calcantium in torculari? (Isai. LXIII, 2.) Cui ipse respondit: Torcular calcavi solus, et de gentibus non est vir mecum (Ibid., 3). Solus enim torcular in quo calcatus est calcavit, qui sua potentia eam quam pertulit passionem vicit. Nam qui usque ad mortem crucis passus est, de morte cum gloria surrexit. Bene autem dicitur: Et de gentibus non est vir mecum (Ibid.), quia hi pro quibus pati venerat passionis ejus esse participes debebant, qui pro eo quod illo tempore necdum crediderant, de ipsis in passione queritur, quorum vita in illa passione quaerebatur. Per femur vero propagatio carnis est. Quia ergo per propagationem generis humani, sicut generationum ordines Matthaeo (Matth. I, 1, seq.), vel Luca (Luc. II, 7; III, 23, seq.) narrantibus describuntur, in hunc mundum venit ex virgine, et per incarnationis suae mysterium quia Rex esset et Dominus cunctis ubique gentibus indicavit, in vestimento et femore scriptum habuit: Rex regum, et Dominus dominantium (Apoc. XIX, 16). Unde enim in mundo innotuit, ibi de se lectionis scientiam infixit. Praedicatio ergo ejus ex carne, quasi quidam sonitus ex aere est. Dicatur igitur recte: Cujus species quasi species aeris. Sequitur: IBID. — Et funiculus lineus in manu ejus.

10. In Septuaginta interpretibus funiculus lineus non habetur, sed funiculus caementariorum. Quorum si in hoc versu translationem ad exponendum tenemus, quid aliud caementarios quam sanctos doctores accipimus, qui, loquendo spiritalia, ad coeleste aedificium vivos lapides, id est electorum animas, componunt? Quidquid enim antiqui patres, quidquid prophetae, quidquid apostoli, quidquid apostolorum successores locuti sunt, quid aliud fuit quam compositio lapidum in hac quae quotidie construitur fabrica sanctorum? In funiculo autem caementariorum hoc agi solet, ut cognosci aequalitas vel rectitudo surgentis parietis valeat; et si lapis intus est, foras ejiciatur; si exterius prominet, interius revocetur. Et certe quotidie hoc agit praedicatio doctorum, ut unaquaeque anima, cui regiminis onera suscipere fortasse non expedit, etiamsi foris apparere appetat, interius revocetur; et rursum quae latere vult et sui tantummodo curam gerere, si sibi ac multis esse utilis potest, etiam cum latere desiderat, exterius producatur ut appareat. Sicque fit ut sanctorum lapidum ordo teneatur, dum saepe et volens ad honorem venire repellitur, et honorem fugiens in sacri ordinis arce sublevatur. Sed quia, ut per interpretem nostrum didicimus, Hebraeorum historia non habet caementariorum, sed funiculus lineus in manu ejus, hoc quod apud nos certius habetur, exponere debemus. Scimus autem quod funiculus lineus subtilior est quam si funiculi fiant aliunde. Et quid in funiculo lineo, nisi subtiliorem praedicationem, id est spiritalem debemus accipere? Censura etenim legis funiculus fuit, sed lineus non fuit, quia rudem populum non subtili praedicatione coercuit, in quo per poenae sententiam non peccata cogitationis, sed operis resecavit. At postquam per semetipsum Dominus etiam cogitationes hominum praedicando religavit, et perfectum esse peccatum etiam in corde innotuit, funiculum lineum in manu tenuit. Ait enim: Audistis quia dictum est antiquis: Non moechaberis; ego autem dico vobis, quia qui viderit mulierem ad concupiscendum eam, jam moechatus est eam in corde suo (Matth. V, 27; Exod. XX, 14). Funiculus ergo lineus praedicatio est subtilis, quae mentem audientis ligat, ne se vel in misera cogitatione dissolvat. Et notandum quod dicitur, quia ei funiculus in manu est, id est praedicatio in operatione. In se enim ostendit omne quod docuit, sicut scriptum est: Quae coepit Jesus facere et docere (Act. I, 1). Et quia ipsa quae dixit etiam scripturae tradidit, ut ad posteros mandarentur, recte subjungitur: IBID. — Et calamus mensurae in manu ejus.

11. De sancta Ecclesia per prophetam alium Dominus pollicetur, dicens: Orietur in ea viror calami et junci (Isai. XXXV, 7). Quod in loco alio exposuisse me memini (Lib. XXIX Moral., n. 51), ut per calamum scriptores, per juncum vero debeant auditores intelligi. Sed quia ad humorem aquae et juncus et calamus nasci solet, et ex una eademque aqua utraque proficiunt, et calamus quidem ad scribendum assumitur, cum junco vero scribi non potest, quid in junco et calamo accipere debemus, nisi quod una est doctrina veritatis, quae multos auditores irrigat? Sed irrigati alii ad hoc usque proficiunt in verbo Dei, ut etiam scriptores fiant, videlicet tanquam calami; alii vero verbum vitae audiunt, bonae spei et rectorum operum viriditatem tenent, sed tamen ad scribendum proficere nullatenus possunt. Hi quid in aqua Dei nisi quidam, ut ita dicam, junci sunt? Qui quidem viridescendo proficiunt, sed litteras exprimere nequaquam possunt. Redemptor igitur noster, quia verba quae dixit etiam per doctorum studium scribi largitus est, in manu calamum tenuit. Qui calamus mensurae dicitur, quia in ipsa doctorum studia sub quadam occulti judicii dispensatione detinentur, ut et aliis legentibus prosint, et aliis legentibus prodesse non possint. Unde sancti apostoli, cum magistrum veritatis sibi apertius loquentem requirerent cur turbis in parabolis loqueretur, audierunt: Quia vobis datum est nosse mysterium regni coelorum, illis autem non (Matth. XIII, 11). Vel certe calamus mensurae est, quia in ipso sacro ejus eloquio, quod nobis conscriptum est, occultas esse dispensationes ejus agnoscimus. Nam per incomprehensibile ejus judicium et alter intra mensuram electorum mittitur, et alter foras relinquitur, ut nullo modo ad electorum numerum pertinere mereatur. Habet ergo funiculum, habet in manu calamum mensurae. Qui enim funiculo locum metitur, alibi funiculum trahit, aliunde retrahit, et huc ducit quem aliunde subducit. Sic nimirum, sic Redemptor noster in collectione hominum facit, dum alios a suis iniquitatibus educit, alios in sua iniquitate derelinquit. In his enim quos colligere dignatus est occultae mensurae funiculum traxit, et ab his quos derelinquendos esse judicavit, quid aliud nisi funiculum retraxit? ut et boni intra mensuram coelestis fabricae teneantur, et mali extra fabricam, in quibus bona quae aestimantur non sunt, quasi sine mensura remaneant.

12. Hunc funiculum et mensurae calamum in manu sua Redemptor noster tenuit, cum Paulum apostolum per apparentem virum Macedonem admonere dignatus est, ita ut idem Macedo vir diceret: Transiens adjuva nos (Act. XVI, 9). Et tamen volentes apostolos ad praedicandum ire in Asiam, non permisit Spiritus Jesu. Quid est quod sancti apostoli et ibi vocantur ire ubi fortasse pergere non cogitabant, et illuc ubi desiderabant pergere ire prohibentur, nisi quia occulti judicii funiculus et mensurae calamus tenetur in manu, ut et alii verba vitae audiant, et alii audire nullatenus mereantur? Funiculus ergo mensurae est, qui alio tractus est, aliunde retractus.

13. Sancto quoque Evangelio testante didicimus quod venit qui diceret: Magister, sequar te quocunque ieris (Matth. VIII, 19). Cui responsum est: Vulpes foveas habent, et volucres coeli nidos, Filius autem hominis non habet ubi caput suum reclinet (Ibid., 20). Venit alter qui diceret: Magister, sine me primum ire, et sepelire patrem meum. Cui dicitur: Sine mortuos sepelire mortuos suos, tu autem me sequere, et annuntia regnum Dei (Ibid., 21, 22). Quid est quod ille promittit se ire, et deseritur; iste domum vult redire, et tamen ut sequi debeat jubetur? Ille non suscipitur, iste nec ad horae momentum ab obsequio relaxatur. Interna ergo occulti judicii dispensatione funiculus et mensurae calamus ducitur, in quo et iste trahitur, et ille relinquitur, ut coelestis fabrica non sine pio et justo examine construatur.

14. Potest etiam calamus mensurae Scriptura sacra pro eo intelligi, quod quisquis hanc legit, in ea semetipsum metitur vel quantum in spiritali virtute proficit, vel quantum a bonis quae praecepta sunt longe disjunctus remansit; quantum jam assurgat ad bona facienda, quantum adhuc in pravis actibus prostratus jaceat. Sequitur: IBID. — Stabat autem in porta.

15. Quisquis in porta stat, ex quadam parte intus est, ex quadam vero foris, quia aliud ejus foris aspicitur, aliud intus absconditur. Redemptor itaque noster, pro nobis misericorditer incarnatus, ante humanos oculos quasi in porta stetit, quia et per humanitatem visibilis apparuit, et sese invisibilem in divinitate servavit. Hinc enim Judaei qui hunc ex prophetarum promissione sustinuerant perfidiae suae confusione turbati sunt, quia eum quem ad ereptionem suam venire crediderant, mortalem videbant. Qui igitur in porta stat, sicut superius dictum est, ex quadam parte foris, ex quadam vero parte intus videtur. Unde nec ipsa Judaeorum perfidia sine divinae virtutis ostensione est derelicta. Nam miracula ejus videntes trahebantur ut crederent, sed rursum passiones illius perpendentes, dedignabantur Deum credere, quem carne mortalem videbant; unde factum est ut de ejus cognitione dubitarent. Videbant enim esurientem, sitientem, comedentem, bibentem, lassescentem, dormientem, et purum hunc hominem esse aestimabant. Videbant mortuos suscitantem, leprosos mundantem, caecos illuminantem, daemonia ejicientem, et esse hunc ultra homines sentiebant. Sed ipsa ejus miracula in eorum corde cogitata humanitas perturbabat. Unde sancta Ecclesia sub sponsae voce hunc aperte jam videre desiderans, ait: En ipse stat post parietem nostrum (Cant. II, 9). Qui enim humanis oculis hoc quod de mortali natura assumpsit ostendit, et in seipso invisibilis permansit, in aperto se videre quaerentibus quasi post parietem stetit, quia videndum se manifestata majestate non praebuit. Quasi enim post parietem stetit, qui humanitatis naturam quam assumpsit ostendit, et divinitatis naturam humanis oculis occultavit. Unde et illic subditur: Respiciens per fenestras, prospiciens per cancellos (Ibid.). Quisquis enim per fenestras, vel per cancellos respicit, nec totus latet, nec totus videtur. Sic sic nimirum Redemptor noster ante dubitantium oculos factus est, quia si miracula faciens nil pertulisset ut homo, plene eis apparuisset Deus; et rursum humana patiens, si nulla fecisset ut Deus, purus putaretur homo. Sed quia et divina fecit, et humana pertulit, quasi per fenestras vel per cancellos ad homines prospexit, ut Deus et appareret ex miraculis, et lateret ex passionibus, et homo cerneretur ex passionibus, sed tamen esse ultra hominem ex miraculis agnosceretur. Sed quia vir iste stare in porta dicitur, quaerendum nobis est utrum facie interius, et tergo exterius? Qua in re si ea quae sunt praemissa et subjuncta conspicimus, citius qualiter steterit invenimus. Prius enim dicitur: Erat quasi aedificium civitatis vergentis ad Austrum, et introduxit me illuc. Et paulo post de eodem viro subditur: Stabat autem in porta. Statimque subjungitur: VERS. 4. — Et locutus est ad me idem vir.

16. Qui enim introducto prophetae in aedificium stans in porta locutus est, profecto constat quia facie interius, et tergo exterius stetit. Sed introductus propheta, cui vir stans in porta locutus est, procul dubio faciem ad portam tenebat, unde verba loquentis audiebat. Quid est ergo, quod vir interius aspicit, propheta foris? Quid est quod ejusdem viri facies ad aedificium, prophetae vero oculi ad portam sunt, nisi quod Unigenitus Patris

idcirco incarnatus est, ut nos ad spiritale aedificium, id est ad sanctae Ecclesiae fidem introduceret? Cujus oculi aedificium suum semper aspiciunt, quia quantum quisque in virtutibus proficiat indesinenter attendunt. Propheta vero ad portam respicit, quia qui verba Dei audit semper oculos cordis ponere ad exitum debet, et sine cessatione meditari quando a praesenti vita exeat, atque ad aeterna gaudia pertingat. Propter hoc quippe incarnatus est Deus, ut nos introducat ad fidem, et reducat ad speciem visionis suae. Unde quoque in sancto Evangelio Veritas loquitur, dicens: Per me si quis introierit, salvabitur, et ingredietur et egredietur, et pascua inveniet (Joan. X, 9). Ingredietur videlicet ad fidem, egredietur autem ad speciem, pascua vero inveniet in aeterna satietate. Hinc etiam Psalmista ait: Dominus custodiat introitum tuum, et exitum tuum (Psal. CXX, 8). Custodit enim Dominus uniuscujusque animae introitum, quo intrat ad fidem, et exitum quoque quo exit ad speciem, ut neque intrans Ecclesiam erroribus supplantetur, neque ab hac temporali ad aeternam exiens, ab antiquo hoste rapiatur. Propter hunc vero egressum nostrum quem quotidie debemus mente meditari, Apostolus de Redemptore nostro loquitur, dicens: Ut sanctificaret per suum sanguinem populum, extra portam passus est. Exeamus igitur ad eum extra castra, improperium ejus portantes. Non enim hic habemus manentem civitatem, sed futuram inquirimus (Heb. XIII, 12, 13, 14). Vir itaque qui apparuit in porta stetit, atque ita locutus est, quia Mediator Dei et hominum Christus Jesus in ipso quoque passionis suae tempore praecepta vitae discipulis dedit, ut hi qui in eum credunt ad portam semper respiciant, et, passionem ejus sollicita consideratione pensantes, a suo quoque exitu cordis oculos non avertant. Nos quoque cum jam claustra carnis despicere, mortalitatis nostrae angustias per immortalitatis desiderium transire, ad supernae lucis libertatem tendere, ad coelestis patriae gaudia anhelare coeperimus, ad portam oculos tenemus, quia dum a sacramentis temporalibus transire ad aeterna cupimus, quasi jam praesenti vitae terga dedimus, et cordis faciem in desiderio nostri exitus habemus. Scriptum quippe est: Corpus quod corrumpitur, aggravat animam, et deprimit terrena inhabitatio sensum multa cogitantem (Sap. IX, 15). Sic itaque per contemplationem jam mente extra carnis angustias tendimus, adhuc tamen in sacramentis quae cognovimus ipsa carnali angustia intra portam tenemur.

17. Saepe namque animus ita in divina contemplatione suspenditur, ut jam se percipere de aeterna illa libertate quam oculus non vidit, nec auris audivit (I Cor. II, 9), aliquid per quamdam imaginem laetetur; sed tamen, mortalitatis suae pondere reverberatus (Isai. LXIV, 4), ad ima relabitur, et quibusdam poenae suae vinculis ligatus tenetur. Portae igitur intendit, qui verae libertatis suae gaudia conspicit, jamque exire concupiscit, sed adhuc non valet. Hinc est quod Hebraicus populus, de Aegypti servitute liberatus, cum loquente Deo columnam nubis cerneret, unusquisque in tabernaculi sui foribus stabat, et adorabat (Exod. XXXIII, 10). De quibus paulo superius dicitur: Cum egrederetur Moyses ad tabernaculum, surgebat universa plebs, et stabat unusquisque in ostio papilionis sui (Ibid., 8). Ibi etenim stamus, ubi mentis oculos figimus. Unde Elias ait: Vivit Dominus, in cujus conspectu sto (III Reg. XVII, 1). Ibi utique stabat, ubi cor fixerat. Quid est autem populum columnam nubis aspicere, et in tabernaculi sui foribus stare atque adorare, nisi quod humana mens cum superiora illa atque coelestia utcunque in aenigmate conspicit, jam claustra habitationis corporeae per sublevatam cogitationem exit, atque illum humiliter adorat, cujus etsi videre substantiam non valet, jam tamen ejus potentiam per illuminationem spiritus miratur? Et cum Moyses tabernaculum ingreditur, ejus terga populus aspicit, et in papilionum suorum ostiis consistit, quia cum sanctus quisque praedicator alta de Deo loquitur, supernae habitationis jam utcunque tabernaculum ingreditur. Cujus praedicationis infirmi quique etsi virtutem plene pensare non possunt, tamen velut terga aspiciunt, quia postrema quae praevalent, per intellectum sequuntur. Sed et in ipsis quoque minimis quae capere sufficiunt jam de suis papilionibus quasi exeunt, atque in ostiis stant, quia et habitacula carnis relinquere et ad illa aeternae vitae gaudia quae audiunt progredi conantur. Hinc est etiam quod Elias, cum vocem Domini secum loquentis audiret (III Reg. XIX, 9), in speluncae suae ostio stetisse describitur, et faciem velasse, quia cum per contemplationis gratiam vox supernae intelligentiae fit in mente, totus homo jam intra speluncam non est, quia animam carnis cura non possidet, sed stat in ostio, quia mortalitatis angustias exire meditatur.

18. Sed jam qui in ostio speluncae consistit, et verba Dei in aure cordis percipit, necesse est ut faciem velet, quia dum per supernam gratiam ad altiora intelligenda ducimur, quanto subtilius levamur, tanto semper per humilitatem nosmetipsos in intellectu nostro premere debemus, ne conemur plus sapere quam oportet sapere, sed sapere ad sobrietatem (Rom. XII, 3); ne dum nimis invisibilia discutimus, aberremus; ne in illa natura incorporea corporei luminis aliquid quaeramus. Aurem enim intendere et faciem operire est vocem interioris substantiae audire per mentem, et tamen ab omni specie corporea oculos cordis avertere, ne quid sibi in illa corporale animus fingat, quae ubique tota et ubique incircumscripta est. Nos itaque, fratres charissimi, qui jam per Redemptoris nostri mortem ac resurrectionem, atque ad coelos ascensionem, gaudia aeterna didicimus, qui in testimonium divinitatis ejus apparuisse exterius cives nostros angelos illius scimus, concupiscamus Regem, desideremus cives quos cognovimus, atque in hoc sanctae Ecclesiae aedificio stantes oculos in porta teneamus; demus terga mentis huic corruptioni vitae temporalis, intendamus cordis faciem ad coelestis patriae libertatem. Sed ecce adhuc multa sunt quae nos de cura vitae corruptibilis premunt. Quia ergo perfecte exire non possumus, saltem in speluncae nostrae ostio stemus, exituri quandoque prospere per gratiam Redemptoris nostri, qui vivit et regnat cum Patre in unitate Spiritus sancti Deus, per omnia saecula saeculorum. Amen.

HOMILIA II

In duobus cap. XL versibus, quarto videlicet ac quinto, explicandis, de activa et contemplativa vita fuse disserit sanctus Doctor, et plurima, suo more, documenta moralia inspergit.

1. Ne quidam me fortasse tacita cogitatione reprehendant quod Ezechielis prophetae tam profunda mysteria a magnis expositoribus intentata discutere praesumo, qua mente id faciam agnoscant. Non enim hoc temeritate aggredior, sed humilitate. Scio enim quia plerumque multa in sacro eloquio quae solus intelligere non potui coram fratribus meis positus intellexi. Ex quo intellectu et hoc quoque intelligere studui, ut scirem ex quorum mihi merito intellectus daretur. Patet enim quia hoc mihi pro illis datur quibus mihi praesentibus datur. Ex qua re, largiente Deo, agitur ut et sensus crescat, et elatio decrescat, dum propter vos disco quod inter vos doceo, quia (verum fateor) plerumque vobiscum audio quod dico. Quidquid ergo in hoc propheta minus intellexero, meae caecitatis est; si quid vero intelligere apte potuero, ex divino munere vestrae venerationis est. Saepe autem per omnipotentis Domini gratiam in ejus eloquio quaedam intelliguntur melius cum sermo Dei secretius legitur, atque animus, culparum suarum conscius, dum recognoscit, quod audierit, doloris se jaculo percutit, et compunctionis gladio transfigit, ut nihil ei nisi flere libeat, et fluentis fletuum maculas lavare. Inter quae etiam aliquando ad sublimiora contemplanda rapitur, et in eorum desiderio suavi fletu cruciatur. Dolet se hic esse anima, ubi adhuc prostrata per infirmitatem jacet, atque illic adhuc non esse ubi illuminata fortiter vigeat, et jam mentis oculum ad mortalitatis tenebras non reducat. Hinc itaque, hinc ardor nascitur in mente, luctus oboritur ex ardore. Et quia inhaerere coelestibus necdum valet, fervore suo in lacrymis fessa requiescit. Sed aliud est cum de unius profectu res agitur, aliud cum de aedificatione multorum. Ea itaque doctrinae sermone, largiente Deo, proferenda sunt quae vitam audientium moresque componunt. Nunc ergo quidquid nos ad studium bonae operationis aedificet in prophetae verbis, sicut coepimus, exsequamur. EZECH. XL, 4. — Fili hominis, vide oculis tuis, et auribus is audi.

2. Ad testimonium spiritalium rerum deducto, quid est quod cum dicitur: Vide oculis, additur tuis, et cum subditur Audi auribus, adjungitur tuis? Sed sciendum quia oculi atque aures corporis adsunt etiam carnalibus, eisque sunt in usu rerum quae corporaliter videntur. Oculi vero atque aures cordis solummodo spiritalium sunt, qui invisibilia per intellectum vident, et laudem Dei sine sono audiunt. Has omnipotens Dominus aures quaerebat, cum diceret: Quis habet aures audiendi audiat (Luc. VIII, 8). Quis namque in illo populo esse tunc poterat, qui aures corporis non haberet? Sed cum dicitur: Qui habet aures audiendi audiat, aperte monstratur quod illas aures quaereret quas omnes habere non poterant. Dicatur ergo: Fili hominis, vide oculis tuis, et auribus tuis audi. In priori autem locutionum nostrarum parte jam diximus cur propheta, quoties ad videnda spiritalia ducitur, filius hominis appellatur. Sed ne hoc mente excesserit, breviter replico, quia hac appellatione memoratur semper quid est ex infirmitate, ne extollatur de contemplationis magnitudine. Et notandum quia diversa sunt ut dicatur, Oculis tuis vide, auribus tuis audi, et tamen filius hominis vocetur. Sed per haec verba quid ei aliud aperte dicitur, nisi, spiritalia spiritaliter aspice, et tamen carnales infirmitates tuas memorare?

3. Hinc est etiam quod plerumque qui plus in contemplatione rapitur, contingit ut amplius in tentatione fatigetur; sicut quibusdam saepe contingere bene proficientibus solet, quorum mentem dum aut compunctio afficit, aut contemplatio super semetipsam rapit, statim etiam tentatio sequitur, ne de his ad quae rapta est extollatur. Nam compunctione vel contemplatione ad Deum erigitur, sed tentationis suae pondere reverberatur ad semetipsam, quatenus tentatio aggravet, ne contemplatio inflet; et item contemplatio elevet, ne tentatio demergat. Si enim sic contemplatio

attolleret, ut tentatio funditus deesset, in superbiam animus caderet. Et si sic tentatio premeret ut contemplatio non elevaret, plene in culpam laberetur. Sed mira dispensatione, in quodam medio anima libratur, ut neque in bonis superbiat, neque in malis cadat. Unde et per beatum Job de Domino dicitur: Et aquas appendit mensura (Job XXVIII, 25; XIX, 25). Aquas quippe Deo mensura appendere est inter prospera et adversa, inter dona et tentationes, inter summa et infima animarum sensum in humilitate custodire. Sic Elias ignem de coelo deposuerat, aquas coelo ligaverat, et tamen pavore unius mulieris territus, per deserta fugiebat (Reg. XVIII, 38; XVII, 1; XIX, 3). Apparet fugienti angelus, cibum praebet, quia longum iter restat praedicit, et tamen timorem de corde non excutit (III Reg. XIX, 7, 8), quia in prophetae mente magna erat custodia fortitudinis, illa infirmitas timoris. Sequitur. VERS. 4. — Pone cor tuum in omnia quae ego ostendam tibi, quia ut ostendantur tibi adductus es huc. Annuntia omnia quae tu vides domui Israel.

4. Pone cor tuum. Ac si dicatur: Considera. Quia ut ostendantur tibi adductus es huc, et annuntia omnia quae vides. Id est, ideo adductus es ut videas, et ideo vides ut annunties, quia quisquis spiritalia videndo proficit, oportet ut haec loquendo etiam aliis propinet. Videt quippe ut annuntiet, qui in eo quod in se proficit etiam de profectu proximi praedicando curam gerit. Unde et alibi scriptum est: Qui audit dicat: Veni (Apoc. XXII, 17). Cui enim jam vox vocantis Dei efficitur in corde, necesse est ut proximis per praedicationis officium erumpat in voce; et idcirco alium vocet, quia jam ipse vocatus est. Unde et sponsus quoque in Canticis canticorum loquitur, dicens: Quae habitas in hortis, amici auscultant, fac me audire vocem tuam (Cant. VIII, 13). In hortis enim sancta Ecclesia, in hortis unaquaeque anima habitat, quae jam viriditate spei est et bonorum operum charitate repleta. Sicca quippe spes est hujus saeculi, quia omnia quae hic amantur cum festinatione marcescunt; et Petrus nos apostolus festinare admonet, dicens:

In haereditatem incorruptibilem, incontaminatam, immarcescibilem (I Petr. I, 4). Quae ergo jam in hortis habitat, oportet ut sponsum suum vocem suam audire faciat, id est canticum bonae praedicationis emittat, in qua ille delectetur quem desiderat, quia amici auscultant, videlicet omnes electi, qui, ut ad coelestem patriam reviviscant, verba vitae audire desiderant. Sed jam propheta ea nobis quae videt aperiat. Sequitur: VERS. 5. — Et ecce murus forinsecus in circuitu domus undique.

5. Plerumque in sacro eloquio ex protectionis suae munimine murus dici ipse incarnatus Dominus solet, sicut de sancta Ecclesia per prophetam dicitur: Ponetur in ea murus, et antemurale (Isai. XXVI, 1). Ipse enim nobis murus est, qui nos undique custodiendo circumdat. Antemurale autem muri nostri prophetae omnes fuerunt, qui priusquam Dominus appareret in carne, ad construendam fidem prophetando missi sunt. In sancta ergo Ecclesia Dominus murus nobis et prophetae ejus antemurale sunt positi, quia ad nos, quos ipse perfecte protegit, etiam prophetarum verba in fidei constructione venerunt. Unde et bene prius murus, et post antemurale ponitur, quia vocati ex gentibus, nisi prius Dominum cognosceremus, prophetarum illius dicta minime suscepissemus. Et notandum quod iste murus spiritalis aedificii esse forinsecus dicitur. Murus quippe qui ad munitionem aedificii construitur, non interius, sed exterius poni solet. Quid ergo necessarium fuit ut diceretur forinsecus, cum nunquam poni murus intrinsecus soleat? quia necesse est ut exterius positus ea quae intus sunt defendat. Sed in hoc verbo quid aperte nisi ipsa dominica incarnatio demonstratur? Murus enim nobis intus est Deus, murus vero foris est Deus homo. Unde ei per quemdam prophetam dicitur: Existi in salutem populi tui, ut salvos facias christos tuos (Habac. III, 13). Iste etenim murus incarnatus, videlicet Dominus, murus nobis non esset, si forinsecus non fuisset, quia intus nos non protegeret, si exterius non appareret. Sed neque hoc negligenter praetereundum est, quod idem murus positus dicitur in circuitu domus undique. Domus quippe Dei non solum angeli sancti, de quibus Psalmista ait: Domine, dilexi decorem domus tuae, et locum tabernaculi gloriae tuae (Psal. XXV, 8), sed etiam nos sumus, quorum mentes inhabitare dignatur. Et murus iste undique in circuitu domus est, quia Unigenitus Patris, qui sursum est firmitas angelorum, ipse deorsum factus est redemptio hominum. Illis fortitudo ne cadant, nobis adjutorium ut surgamus post casum.

6. Si vero per domum Dei hoc loco sola redemptorum hominum multitudo signatur, undique nobis Dominus et per circuitum murus est, quia, ut nos perfecte custodiret, omnia quae docuit ostendit, sicut scriptum est: Quae coepit Jesus facere et docere (Act. I, 1). Quia enim vocare nos ad coelestem patriam venit, nimirum despicere nos bona transitoria docuit, et mala temporalia non timere. Unde et opprobria non despexit, injurias pertulit, mortem non timuit, crucis patibulum non refugit; et cum hunc voluissent rapere, et regem constituere, statim fugit (Joan. VI, 15); quid nobis aliud his exemplis innuens, nisi ut debeamus hujus mundi et adversa non metuere, et prospera vitare? quia plus plerumque ejus bona occupant animum quam mala perturbant. Ante passionem vero suam contumelias audivit, nec tamen contumelias reddidit; traditorem suum diu tacitus pertulit, eique ficte salutanti dare osculum non recusavit; suscepit mortem, ne mori timeremus; ostendit resurrectionem, ut nos resurgere posse crederemus. Post passionem quoque suam de his qui se crucifixerant ad fidei gratiam vocavit, donum pro iniquitate reddidit. Qui ergo nos exemplo suo de omnibus instruxit, murus nobis per circuitum et undique factus est. Sequitur: IBID. — Et in manu viri calamus mensurae sex cubitorum et palmo.

7. Praeterita lectione (Hom. sup. n. 14) jam diximus quia per calamum Scriptura sacra signatur. Qui calamus mensurae esse dicitur, quia in ipsa omnem vitae nostrae actionem metimur, ut scilicet videamus vel quantum proficimus, vel quantum longe a profectu distamus. Nam saepe aliquid agentes, jam cujusdam meriti esse nos credimus; sed cum ad verba Dei recurrimus, praecepta sublimia audimus, ibi cognocimus quantum a perfectione minus habeamus. Calamus ergo mensurae est, quia per manus scribentium vita mensuratur auditorum. Qui calamus in manu viri esse dicitur, sive quia sacrum eloquium in potestate est Mediatoris Dei et hominum, hominis Christi Jesu, seu certe quia hoc quod scribi voluit operando complevit. Idem vero calamus sex cubitorum et palmo esse describitur. Duae etenim vitae sunt, in quibus eos omnipotens Deus per sacrum eloquium erudit, activa videlicet et contemplativa. Et per sex cubitos quid aliud quam activa vita exprimitur? quia sexto die perfecit Deus omnia opera sua (Genes. II, 1). Palmus vero, qui super sex cubitos esse dicitur, jam de septimo est, sed tamen cubitus non est. Activa ergo vita signatur per sex cubitos, contemplativa per palmum, quia illam opere perficimus, de ista vero etiam cum contendimus, vix parum aliquid attingere valemus.

videre quod amat, quia sicut fortissimus praedicator dicit: Videmus nunc per speculum in aenigmate, tunc autem facie ad faciem (I Cor. XIII, 12). Et, Nunc cognosco ex parte, tunc autem cognoscam sicut et cognitus sum (Ibid.). De septimo ergo cubito palmum tangimus, quia in hac vita positi contemplationis intimae sola initia degustamus. Activa enim vita quia perfecte teneri potest, et sexto die homo est conditus (Genes. I, 27), qui bona debet operari, sex cubitos calamus habet.

9. Bene has utrasque vitas duae illae mulieres signaverunt, Martha videlicet et Maria (Luc. X, 40): quarum una satagebat circa frequens ministerium, alia vero sedebat ad pedes Domini, et audiebat verba de ore ejus. Cumque contra sororem Martha quereretur quod se adjuvare negligeret, respondit Dominus, dicens: Martha, occuparis et satagis circa multa; porro unum est necessarium. Maria autem optimam partem elegit, quae non auferetur ab ea (Ibid., 41, 42). Ecce pars Marthae non reprehenditur, sed Mariae laudatur. Neque enim bonam partem elegisse Mariam dicit, sed optimam, ut etiam pars Marthae indicaretur bona. Quare autem pars Mariae sit optima, subinfertur cum dicitur: Quae non auferetur ab ea. Activa etenim vita cum corpore deficit. Quis enim in aeterna patria panem esurienti porrigat, ubi nemo esurit? Quis potum tribuat sitienti, ubi nemo sitit? Quis mortuum sepeliat, ubi nemo moritur? Cum praesenti ergo saeculo vita aufertur activa, contemplativa autem hic incipitur, ut in coelesti patria perficiatur, quia amoris ignis qui hic ardere inchoat, cum ipsum quem amat viderit, in amore ipsius amplius ignescet. Contemplativa ergo vita minime aufertur, quia subtracta praesentis saeculi luce perficitur.

10. Has utrasque vitas, sicut et ante nos dictum est (Ab August., l. XXII contra Faustum, c. 54, 55), duae beati Jacob mulieres signaverunt, Lia videlicet et Rachel (Genes. XXIX, 16). Lia quippe interpretatur laboriosa, Rachel vero ovis, vel visum principium. Activa autem vita laboriosa est, quia desudat in opere; contemplativa vero simplex ad solum videndum principium anhelat, videlicet ipsum qui ait: Ego principium, propter quod et loquor vobis (Joan. VIII, 25). Beatus autem Jacob Rachel quidem concupierat, sed in nocte accepit Liam, quia videlicet omnis qui ad Dominum convertitur, contemplativam vitam desiderat, quietem aeternae patriae appetit; sed prius necesse est ut in nocte vitae praesentis operetur bona quae potest, desudet in labore, id est Liam accipiat, ut post ad videndum principium in Rachel amplexibus requiescat. Erat autem Rachel videns, sed sterilis; Lia vero lippa, sed fecunda; Rachel pulchra et infecunda, quia contemplativa vita speciosa in animo est, sed dum quiescere in silentio appetit, filios non generat ex praedicatione. Videt et non parit, quia dum quietis suae studium diligit, minus se in aliorum collectione succendit; et quantum introrsus conspicit, aperire aliis praedicando non sufficit. Lia vero lippa et fecunda est, quia activa vita, dum occupatur in opere, minus videt, sed dum modo per verbum, modo per exemplum ad imitationem suam proximos accendit, multos in bono opere filios generat. Et si in contemplatione mentem tendere non valet, ex eo tamen quod agit exterius, gignere sequaces valet. Recte ergo in mensura calami prius sex cubiti, et postmodum palmus dicitur, quia ante activa agitur, ut ad contemplativam postmodum veniatur.

11. Sed sciendum est quia sicut bonus ordo vivendi est ut ab activa in contemplativam tendatur, ita plerumque utiliter a contemplativa animus ad activam reflectitur, ut per hoc quod contemplativa mentem accenderit, perfectius activa teneatur. Debet ergo nos activa ad contemplativam transmittere, et aliquando tamen ex eo quod introrsus mente conspeximus contemplativa melius ad activam revocare. Unde et idem Jacob post Rachelis amplexus ad Liae rediit, quia et post visum principium laboriosa vita boni operis non est funditus deserenda.

12. Est autem in contemplativa vita magna mentis contentio, cum sese ad coelestia erigit, cum in rebus spiritalibus animum tendit, cum transgredi nititur omne quod corporaliter videtur, cum sese angustat ut dilatetur. Et aliquando quidem vincit, et reluctantes tenebras suae caecitatis exsuperat, ut de incircumscripto lumine quiddam furtim et tenuiter attingat; sed tamen ad semetipsam protinus reverberata revertitur, atque ab ea luce, ad quam respirando transiit, ad suae caecitatis tenebras suspirando rediit. Quod bene sacra historia designat, quae beatum Jacob cum angelo luctatum narrat. Cum enim ad parentes proprios rediret, in via angelum invenit, cum quo in luctamine magnum certamen habuit (Genes. XXXII, 24). Is enim qui certat in luctamine, aliquando superiorem se, aliquando vero eum cum quo contenderit inferiorem invenit. Designat ergo angelus Dominum, et Jacob qui cum angelo contendit uniuscujusque perfecti viri et in contemplatione positi animam exprimit. Quae videlicet anima cum contemplari Deum nititur, velut in quodam certamine posita, modo quasi exsuperat, quia intelligendo et sentiendo de incircumscripto lumine aliquid degustat; modo vero succumbit, quia et degustando iterum deficit. Quasi ergo vincitur angelus, quando intellectu intimo apprehenditur Deus.

13. Sed notandum quod idem victus angelus nervum femoris Jacob tetigit, eumque marcescere statim fecit, atque ab eo tempore Jacob uno claudicavit pede, quia scilicet omnipotens Deus cum jam per desiderium et intellectum cognoscitur, omnem in nobis voluptatem carnis arefacit. Et qui prius quasi duobus pedibus innitentes, et Deum videbamur quaerere, et saeculum tenere, post agnitionem suavitatis Dei unus in nobis pes sanus remanet, atque alius claudicat, quia necesse est ut, debilitato amore saeculi, solus convalescat in nobis amor Dei. Si ergo tenemus angelum, uno claudicamus pede, quia dum crescit in nobis fortitudo amoris intimi, infirmatur procul dubio fortitudo carnis. Omnis quippe qui uno pede claudicat soli illi pedi innititur quem sanum habet, quia cui desiderium terrenum jam arefactum fuerit, in solo pede amoris Dei tota virtute se sustinet. Et in ipso stat, quia pedem amoris saeculi quem ponere in terra consueverat, jam a terra suspensum portat. Et nos ergo si ad parentes proprios, id est ad spiritales patres redimus, teneamus in via angelum, ut suavitate intima apprehendamus Deum. Contemplativae etenim vitae amabilis valde dulcedo est, quae super semetipsam animam rapit, coelestia aperit, terrena autem debere esse contemptui ostendit, et spiritalia mentis oculis patefecit, corporalia abscondit. Unde bene Ecclesia in Canticis canticorum dicit: Ego dormio, et cor meum vigilat (Cant. V, 2). Vigilanti etenim corde dormit, quia per hoc quod interius contemplando proficit, ab inquieto foris opere quiescit.

14. Sed inter haec sciendum est quia quandiu in hac mortali carne vivitur, nullus ita in contemplationis virtute proficit, ut in ipso jam incircumscripto luminis radio mentis oculos infigat. Neque enim omnipotens Deus jam in sua claritate conspicitur, sed quiddam sub illa speculatur anima, unde refota proficiat, et post ad visionis ejus gloriam pertingat. Sic namque Isaias cum se Dominum vidisse fateretur, dicens: Anno quo mortuus est rex Ozias, vidi Dominum sedentem super solium excelsum et elevatum, protinus adjunxit: Et ea quae sub eo erant implebant templum (Isai. VI, 1). Quando Ozias rex superbus ac praesumptor moritur, Dominus videtur, quia cum mundi hujus elatio a desiderio mentis occiditur, tunc ipsa mens Dei gloriam contemplatur. Et notandum quod Dominus super solium excelsum et elevatum sedet. Quid namque est ejus solium, nisi creatura angelica vel humana, cui per intellectum quem dedit praesidet? Quod videlicet solium excelsum et elevatum dicitur, quia et natura humana ad coelestem gloriam elevata proficit, et creatura angelica dum multis spiritibus cadentibus jam solidata est in coelo ne cadat, inde elevata est unde et confirmata. Templum vero ejus hoc est quod solium, quia aeternus Rex ibi habitat ubi sedet. Nos ergo templum illius sumus, in quorum mentibus habitare dignatur. Sed ea quae sub eo erant implebant templum, quia quidquid de illo modo conspicitur, adhuc non est ipse, sed sub ipso est.

Sic Jacob angelum vidit, et vidisse se Dominum fatetur (Genes. XXXII, 30), quia cum ministeria ejus conspicimus, jam multum est quod super nosmetipsos levamur. Notandum vero quod dicitur: Implebant templum, quoniam etsi angelus apparet, infirmae tamen mentis desiderio satisfacit, ut si adhuc majus non potest, jam tamen minus quod videt admiretur. Ea ergo quae sub eo sunt implent templum, quia, sicut dictum est, et cum mens in contemplatione profecerit, non jam quod ipse est, sed id quod sub ipso est contemplatur. In qua videlicet contemplatione jam quietis internae gustus contingitur. Cujus quia quaedam quasi pars est, et perfecta nunc esse non potest, recte in Apocalypsi scriptum est: Factum est silentium in coelo, quasi media hora (Apoc. VIII, 1). Coelum quippe est anima justi, sicut per prophetam Dominus dicit: Coelum mihi sedes est (Isai. LXVI, 1). Et, Coeli enarrant gloriam Dei (Psal. XVIII, 1). Cum ergo quies contemplativae vitae agitur in mente, silentium fit in coelo, quia terrenorum actuum strepitus quiescit a cogitatione, ut ad secretum intimum aurem animus apponat. Sed quia haec quies mentis esse in hac vita perfecta non potest, nequaquam hora integra factum in coelo silentium dicitur, sed quasi media hora, ut neque ipsa media hora plene sentiatur, cum praemittitur quasi, quia mox ut se animus sublevare coeperit, et quietis intimae lumine perfundi, redeunte citius cogitationum strepitu, de semetipso confunditur, et confusus caecatur. Vita igitur contemplativa quae illic hora quasi media dicitur, apud Ezechielem prophetam non cubitus, sed palmus appellatur. Ecce, fratres charissimi, dum uniuscujusque vitae causas exprimere cupimus, paulo latius per excessum locuti sumus. Sed bonis mentibus, quibus utraque eadem vita est ad agendum amabilis, esse non debet ad audiendum gravis. Sequitur: IBID. — Et mensus est latitudinem aedificii calamo uno, altitudinem quoque calamo uno.

15. Omnipotens Deus, qui nec in magnis tenditur, nec in minimis angustatur, sic de tota simul Ecclesia loquitur ac si de una anima loquatur.

Et saepe quod ab eo de una anima dicitur nil obstat si de tota simul Ecclesia intelligatur. Latitudo itaque aedificii ad charitatem pertinet, de qua Psalmista dicit: Latum mandatum tuum nimis (Psal. CXVIII, 96). 1330 Nil enim latius quam omnes in sinu amoris recipere, et nullas odii angustias sustinere. Sic quippe lata est charitas, ut in amplitudine dilectionis suae capere etiam inimicos possit. Unde et praecipitur: Diligite inimicos vestros, benefacite iis qui oderunt vos (Luc. VI, 27). Considerandum quoque nobis est quia latitudo in aequalitate, altitudo vero in sublimitate tenditur. Latitudo ergo pertinet ad charitatem proximi, altitudo ad intelligentiam conditoris. Sed latitudo et altitudo aedificii uno calamo mensuratur, quia videlicet unaquaeque anima quantum lata fuerit in amore proximi, tantum et alta erit in cognitione Dei. Dum enim se per amorem juxta dilatat, per cognitionem se superius exaltat; et tantum super semetipsam excelsa fit, quantum se juxta se in proximi amorem tendit. Et quia aedificium quod inhabitat Deus ex angelica simul et humana natura perficitur, per hoc quod angelica creatura sursum est, et humana adhuc deorsum, potest per latitudinem atque altitudinem aedificii utraque haec creatura significari, quia ista adhuc in imis degit, illa vero in sublimibus permanet. Sed uno calamo mensuratur utraque, quia humilitas hominum quandoque ad aequalitatem perducitur angelorum. Unde scriptum est: Neque nubent, neque nubentur, sed erunt sicut angeli Dei in coelo (Matth., XXII, 30). Et unde per Joannem dicitur: Mensura hominis quae est angeli (Apoc. XXI, 17). Quia usque ad illam altitudinem gloriae homo perducitur, in qua solidatos se angeli laetantur. Latitudo ergo aedificii tanta est, quanta et altitudo, quia electi quique qui modo in imis laborant, quandoque illis beatissimis spiritibus non erunt inaequales. Sed nos inter haec redeamus ad mentem, ac totis medullis cordis Deum diligamus et proximum. Dilatemur in affectu charitatis, ut exaltemur in gloria celsitudinis. Compatiamur per amorem proximo, ut conjungamur per cognitionem Deo. Condescendamus fratribus minimis in terra, ut coaequemur angelis in coelo, quia vir qui sua imagine Redemptorem signat, mensus est latitudinem aedificii calamo uno, altitudinem quoque calamo uno. Nunc igitur metitur mores, pensat opera, cogitationes considerat, ut sine fine postmodum retributionem reddat Jesus Christus Unigenitus Patris, qui cum eo vivit et regnat in unitate Spiritus sancti, per omnia saecula saeculorum. Amen.

HOMILIA III

In trium versuum explicatione potissimum describitur Ecclesiae aedificium ex omnibus sub utroque Testamento justis constructum.

1. Vir cui calamus mensurae in manu esse describitur. EZECH. XL, 6. — Venit ad portam quae respiciebat ad viam Orientalem. Quis vero alius portae hujus appellatione signatur, nisi ipse Dominus ac Redemptor noster, qui nobis janua factus est regni coelestis? Sicut ipse ait: Nemo venit ad Patrem, nisi per me (Joan. XIV, 6). Sed cum eumdem virum lineis indutum figuram Domini tenere dixerimus, quaerendum nobis est qua ratione conveniat ut idem Dominus et per virum designari valeat, et per portam, dum vir veniat ad portam? Nunquidnam ipse venit ad semetipsum? An ita est, quia et in Evangelio ipse testatur, dicens: Qui non intrat per ostium in ovile ovium, sed ascendit aliunde, ille fur est et latro. Qui autem intrat per ostium, pastor est ovium (Joan. X, 1, 2). Et paulo post dicit: Ego sum ostium (Ibid., 9). Atque iterum subjungit: Ego sum pastor bonus (Ibid., 14). Si ergo pastor intrat per ostium, et ipse est ostium, ipse pastor, ipse procul dubio intrat per semetipsum. Ecce dum Ezechielis sensum enodare cupimus, de Evangelio etiam quaestionem ligamus. Quaerendum nobis itaque est qualiter et ipse intret, et per semetipsum intret. Dominus enim ac Redemptor noster, cum sancta Ecclesia, quam redemit, secundum carnem una substantia est, Paulo attestante qui ait: Adimpleo ea quae desunt passionum Christi in carne mea pro corpore ejus, quod est Ecclesia (Coloss. I, 24). Hujus capitis corpus Ecclesia est, et hujus corporis caput Christus (Ephes. I, 22). De quo suo capite exsultat corpus, id est sancta Ecclesia, cum per Psalmistam dicit: Nunc autem exaltavit caput meum super inimicos meos (Psal. XXVI, 6). Quia enim quandoque ipsa etiam exaltanda est, jam nunc caput suum super inimicos suos exaltatum gaudet in coelis. Cum ergo electi quique ad vitam perveniunt, quia membra ejus per eum intrant ad eum, ipse per se intrat ad se. Ipse enim in suis membris est qui intrat, ipse caput ad quod intrantia membra perveniunt. Quod Ezechiel propheta multipliciter insinuat, qui virum venisse dicit ad portam, et quae eadem porta sit ostendit, dicens: Quae respiciebat ad viam Orientalem. Ipse etenim nobis est via, qui dixit: Ego sum via, veritas et vita (Joan. XIV, 6). Ipse etiam Orientalis via, de quo scriptum est: Ecce vir, Oriens nomen ejus (Zach. VI, 12). Porta ergo viam Orientalem respicit, quia illum signat qui nobis iter ad ortum fecit luminis.

2. Potest etiam portae nomine unusquisque praedicator intelligi, quia quisquis nobis januam regni coelestis ore suo aperit porta est. Unde et duodecim portae vel in Joannis Apocalypsi (Apoc. XXI, 21), vel in extrema hujus prophetae visione describuntur. Potest etiam portae nomine Scripturae sacrae scientia non inconvenienter intelligi, quae, dum nobis intellectum aperit, coelestis regni januam pandit. Possumus portae nomine et fidem accipere, quam primam contingimus, ut ad virtutum aedificia intremus. Unde hic aperte subjungitur: IBID. — Et ascendit per gradus ejus.

3. Quid enim gradus sunt hujus portae, nisi merita virtutum? Sive enim in cognitione Mediatoris Dei et hominum, hominis Jesu Christi, seu in scientia divini eloquii, seu in ipsa fide quam de illo accepimus, quibusdam gradibus ad altiora incrementa pervenimus. Nemo enim repente fit summus, sed in bona conversatione a minimis quisque inchoat, ut ad magna perveniat. De his gradibus per Psalmistam dicitur: Deus in gradibus ejus dignoscetur dum suscipiet eam (Psal. XLVII, 4). Dum enim sanctam Ecclesiam Dominus suscipit, in gradibus ejus dignoscitur, quia ejus gloria per illius incrementa declaratur. Quantum enim sancta Ecclesia ascendendo profecerit, tantum Deus hominibus ex ejus virtutibus innotescit. De his quoque gradibus beatus Job loquitur, dicens: Per singulos gradus meos pronuntiabo illum (Job. XXXI, 37). Omnipotentem quippe Dominum per singulos gradus suos pronuntiat, qui per incrementa virtutum quae accipit ei semper laudem suae pietatis reddit. Si quidam gradus in cordis ascensione non essent, Psalmista non diceret: Ambulabunt de virtute in virtutem (Psal. LXXXIII, 8).

4. Nec mirum si de virtute in virtutem gradus sunt, quando unaquaeque virtus quasi quibusdam gradibus augetur, et sic per incrementa meritorum ad summa perducitur. Aliud namque sunt virtutis exordia, aliud provectus, aliud perfectio. Si enim ipsa fides ad perfectionem suam non quibusdam gradibus duceretur, sancti apostoli minime dixissent: Adauge nobis fidem (Luc. XVII, 5). Et quidam venit ad Jesum, qui curari voluit filium suum, sed requisitus an crederet, respondit: Credo, Domine, adjuva incredulitatem meam (Marc. IX, 24). Pensate, rogo, quod dicitur. Si credebat, cur incredulitatem dicebat? Si vero incredulitatem habere se noverat, quomodo credebat? Sed quia per occultam inspirationem gratiae meritorum suorum gradibus fides crescit, uno eodemque tempore is qui necdum perfecte crediderat simul et credebat et incredulus erat.

5. Hos nimirum gradus Dominus sub messis nomine describit, dicens: Sic est regnum Dei, quemadmodum si jaciat homo semen in terram, et dormiat, et exsurgat nocte ac die, et semen germinet et crescat, dum nescit ille. Ultro enim terra fructificat primum herbam deinde spicam, deinde plenum frumentum in spica. Et cum se produxerit fructus, statim mittit falcem, quoniam adest tempus messis (Marc. IV, 26, seq.). Semen homo jactat in terram, cum cordi suo bonam intentionem inserit. Et postquam semen jactaverit dormit, quia in spe boni operis quiescit. Nocte vero exsurgit ac die, inter adversa et prospera proficit. Et semen germinat et crescit, dum nescit ille, quia et cum adhuc metiri incrementa sua non valet, semel concepta virtus ad provectum ducitur. Et ultro terra fructificat, quia, praeveniente se gratia, mens hominis spontanee ad fructum boni operis assurgit. Sed haec eadem terra primum herbam, deinde spicam, deinde plenum frumentum producit in spica. Herbam quippe producere est inchoationis bonae adhuc teneritudinem habere. Ad spicam vero herba pervenit, cum se virtus animo concepta ad profectum boni operis pertrahit. Plenum autem frumentum in spica fructificat, quando jam in tantum virtus proficit, ut esse robusti et perfecti operis possit. At cum se produxerit fructus, statim mittit falcem, quoniam adest tempus messis. Omnipotens enim Deus producto fructu falcem mittit, et messem suam desecat, quia cum unumquemque ad opera perfecta perduxerit, ejus temporalem vitam per emissam sententiam incidit, ut granum suum ad coelestia horrea perducat. Cum igitur desideria bona concipimus, semen in terram mittimus. Cum vero operari recta incipimus, herba sumus. Cum autem ad provectum boni operis crescimus, ad spicam pervenimus. Cumque in ejusdem boni operis perfectione solidamur, jam plenum frumentum in spica proferimus.

6. Herba etenim Petrus fuerat, qui, passionis tempore, per amorem Dominum sequens, hunc confiteri ante ancillae vocem timebat (Luc. XXII, 57). Erat enim jam viriditas in mente, quia credebat omnium Redemptorem, sed valde adhuc flexibilis pede conculcabatur timoris. Jam in spicam surrexerat quando eum quem moriturum confiteri timuerat, nuntiante Angelo, in Galilaea viventem videbat. Sed tunc plenum granum in spicam pervenerat, quando, veniente desuper Spiritu, et suam mentem in illius amore roborante, ita solidatus est, ut vires persequentium caesus despiceret, et Redemptorem suum libere inter flagella praedicaret (Act. V, 29). Nullus itaque qui ad bonum propositum adhuc in mentis teneritudine esse conspicitur, despiciatur, quia frumentum Dei ab herba incipit, ut granum fiat. Vir ergo vestitus lineis, venit ad portam, quia Dominus ac Redemptor noster membris suis intrantibus perducitur ad se. Et ascendit per gradus ejus, quia, nobis proficientibus, eo nobis amplius exaltatur, quo altus et incomprehensibilis esse cognoscitur. In virtutum quippe nostrarum gradibus ipse ascendere dicitur, quia tanto ipse sublimior nobis ostenditur, quanto noster animus a rebus infimis separatur. Sequitur: IBID. — Et mensus est limen portae calamo uno in latitudinem, id est limen unum calamo uno in latitudinem.

7. Cur postquam dictum est, Limen portae, statim subjungitur, Limen unum, nisi quia aperte innuit quod adhuc inferius limen aliud dicatur? Porta autem a limine surgit ut porta sit. Si igitur porta Dominus, quis hujus portae limen est, nisi illi antiqui patres, ex quorum progenie Dominus incarnari dignatus est? Sicut per Paulum dicitur: Quorum patres, ex quibus Christus secundum carnem, qui est super omnia Deus benedictus in saecula (Rom. IX, 5). Notandum vero est in hac Pauli sententia quod dii et caeteri hominum sunt vocati, sicut Moysi dicitur: Ponam te in deum Pharaoni (Exod. VII, 1). Et per Psalmistam dicitur: Ego dixi, dii estis (Psal. LXXXI, 6). Et rursum: Deus stelit in synagoga deorum (Ibid. 1). Sed aliud est nuncupative, aliud naturaliter dici Deum. Et si Moyses in deum Pharaoni est positus, sed deus intra omnia, non deus super omnia dicitur. Qui vero est intra uterum Virginis incarnatus, Deus super omnia vocatur. Itaque limen portae sunt antiqui patres, ex quibus ille natus est qui nobis aditum regni coelestis aperuit. Limen autem portae uno calamo mensuratur, quia ipsi antiqui patres, qui potuerunt Redemptorem nostrum et prophetando et bene vivendo praedicare, tanquam sex cubitos in perfectione operis, et palmum in inchoatione contemplationis habuerunt. Quia enim eorum vitam in unitatem fidei et perfecta operatio, et inchoata contemplatio sublimem reddidit, in uno calamo mensura liminis fuit. Sequitur: VERS. — Et thalamum uno calamo in longum, et uno calamo in latum.

8. Consideremus quid agi in thalamo soleat, atque exinde hoc quod in sancta Ecclesia agitur colligamus. In thalamo quippe sponsus et sponsa foederantur, sibique in amore junguntur. Quid ergo sunt in sancta Ecclesia thalami, nisi eorum corda in quibus anima per amorem sponso invisibili jungitur, ut ejus desiderio ardeat, nulla jam quae in mundo sunt concupiscat, praesentis vitae longitudinem poenam deputet, exire festinet, et amoris amplexu in coelestis sponsi visione requiescere? Mens itaque, quae jam talis est, nullam praesentis vitae consolationem recipit, sed ad illum quem diligit medullitus suspirat, fervet, anhelat, anxiatur. Vilis ei fit ipsa salus corporis, quia transfixa est vulnere amoris; unde et in Canticis canticorum dicit: Vulnerata charitate ego sum (Cant. II, 5, sec. LXX). Mala autem salus est cordis, quae dolorem hujus vulneris nescit. Cum vero anhelare jam in coeleste desiderium et sentire vulnus amoris coeperit, fit anima salubrior ex vulnere, quae prius aegrotabat ex salute.

9. Menti autem sponsum suum fortiter amanti, de mora vitae praesentis una solet esse consolatio, si per hoc quod ipsa ab ejus visione differtur, aliorum animae ejus verbo proficiant, et ad coelestem sponsum amoris facibus inardescant. Moeret, quia differri se conspicit; triste est ei omne quod aspicit, quia illum adhuc non videt, quem videre concupiscit. Sed est, ut dixi, non parva consolatio, si cum fervens anima differtur, per eam multae colliguntur, ut tarde eum cum multis videat, quem sola videre citius volebat. Unde rursus in Cantico canticorum sponsa dicit: Fulcite me floribus, et stipate me malis, quia amore langueo (Cant. II, 5). Quid namque sunt flores nisi animae bonum jam opus inchoantes et desiderium coeleste redolentes? Quid mala de floribus, nisi perfectae jam bonorum mentes, quae ad fructum perveniunt boni operis de initio sanctae propositionis? Quae ergo amore languet, fulciri quaerit floribus, et stipari malis, quia si illum quem desiderat, videre adhuc non permittitur, magna est ei consolatio si de aliorum provectibus laetetur. Anima ergo sancto amore languida, floribus malisque fulcitur, ut requiescat in bono opere proximi, quae adhuc contemplari non valet vultum Dei.

10. Pensemus, rogo, qualis thalamus Pauli mens fuerat, qui dicebat: Mihi vivere Christus est, et mori lucrum (Philip. I, 21); omnipotenti Deo in quantum se amore conjunxerat, qui sibi vitam Christum tantummodo, et mori lucrum esse deputabat? Hinc est quod iterum dicit: Desiderium habens dissolvi, et cum Christo esse multo magis melius (Ibid., 23). Sed ecce qui dissolvi desideras quo amore langueas videamus. Quia interim differri te conspicis, fulciri quaeso floribus non requiris? Quaeris plane, nam sequitur: Permanere autem in carne necessarium propter vos (Ibid. 24). Et proficientibus discipulis dicit: Quae est enim nostra spes, aut gaudium, aut corona gloriae? Nonne vos ante Dominum nostrum Jesum Christum? (I Thess. II, 19.)

11. Hinc est quod idem thalamus uno calamo in longum, et uno calamo in latum dicitur mensus. Longitudo quippe ad longanimitatem exspectationis pertinet, et latitudo ad amplitudinem charitatis. Tantum ergo unusquisque thalamus habet in longitudinem, quantum et in latitudinem habere potuerit, quia mens coelesti desiderio succensa, quantum amorem habuerit ad colligendum proximum, tantum et longanimitatem exhibet ad exspectandum Deum, et patienter portat moras longitudinis, quia se in provectu proximi dilatat amplitudo charitatis. Potest etiam ipsa longitudo longanimitatem patientiae quae exhibetur proximo designare. Et quia latitudo charitatem signat, quae sinum mentis aperit, et amicos simul atque inimicos in amorem recipit, tanta est longitudo thalami, quanta latitudo, quia quantum lata mens fuerit per amorem, tantum erit et patiens per longanimitatem. Nam tantum quisque portat proximum quantum amat. Si enim amas, portas; si desistis amare, desistis tolerare. Quem enim minus diligimus, minus etiam toleramus, quia, irruente fastidio, citius facta proximi adducuntur in gravedinem ponderis quae nobis non levigat penna charitatis. Sequitur: IBID. — Et inter thalamos, quinque cubitos.

12. Unum supra thalamum dixerat, et postmodum quinque cubitos esse inter thalamos narrat: ea videlicet ratione qua multi thalami unum faciunt, sicut et multae Ecclesiae una Ecclesia vocatur. Unde et in Joannis Apocalypsi septem Ecclesiis scribitur, per quas una catholica designatur. Hi itaque qui in sancta Ecclesia, sicut diximus, ferventi amore Deum videre sitiunt, eique jam per desiderium conjunguntur, thalami vocantur. Sed tamen sunt in ea quidam qui penetrare subtilia non valentes, et quinque adhuc corporis sensibus depressi, tanto minus amant eum qui fecit omnia, quanto amplius in his quae facta sunt illigantur. Et jam quidem exercere se in timore Domini, et amore proximi tendere student, bona opera corporaliter agere, eleemosynis peccata redimere; sed quia amore intimo ardere ad coeleste desiderium nesciunt, quasi adhuc devincti corporeis sensibus tenentur. Isti itaque thalami non sunt, sed tamen inter thalamos continentur, quia per eorum ducatum qui visionem Dei perfecte diligunt, et ipsi ad provectum mentis diriguntur. Inter thalamos ergo quinque sunt cubiti, quia hi qui ab exterioribus quinque sensibus adhuc ad intellectum mysticum non assurgunt, dum inter eos sunt qui spiritu amoris fervent, velut manentes inter thalamos in fidei constructione proficiunt, et a mensura coelestis aedificii disjuncti non sunt. Nam et paulisper se ab appetitu corporalium sensuum subtrahunt, et dilatato mentis spatio, imitantes charitatem quam conspiciunt, hinc inde ad thalamos extenduntur. Quod ergo non per sex cubitos, sed per quinque descripti sunt, ipsa adhuc eorum imperfectio designatur.

13. Sed tamen per bonum desiderium in mensura spiritalis aedificii esse memorantur, quia et voce sanctae Ecclesiae per Psalmistam dicitur: Imperfectum meum viderunt oculi tui, et in libro tuo omnes scribentur (Psal. CXXXVIII, 16). Hinc iterum idem Psalmista dicit: Benedixit omnes timentes se Dominus, pusillos cum majoribus (Psal. CXIII, 13). Hi itaque etsi imperfecti sunt et pusilli; in quantum tamen cognoscere praevalent, et Deum et proximum diligunt, atque ideo bona quae possunt non negligunt operari. Qui etsi necdum ad spiritalia dona proficiunt, ut vel ad perfectam operationem, vel ad succensam contemplationem animam exerant, tamen ab amore Dei et proximi, in quantum animo capere praevalent, non recedunt. Unde fit ut ipsi quoque etsi minori loco, in sanctae tamen Ecclesiae aedificatione sint positi, quia et si ad doctrinam, si ad prophetiam, si ad miraculorum gratiam, si ad contemptum mundi plenius exsequendum fortasse minores sunt, tamen in timoris et amoris fundamento sunt, in quo solidantur, quia etsi igne coelestis desiderii non ardent, in ipsis exterioribus quae exercere sufficiunt vapore charitatis animantur, et inter proximorum praecellentium aedificia continentur. Unde et recte sponsa in Canticis canticorum loquitur, dicens: Ferculum fecit sibi rex Salomon de lignis Libani, columnas ejus fecit argenteas, reclinatorium aureum, ascensum purpureum, media charitate constravit propter filias Jerusalem (Cant. III, 9, 10). Neque enim credendum est Salomonem tantae magnitudinis regem, qui sic immensis divitiis affluebat, ut pondus auri ejus aestimari non posset, et argentum in diebus illis pretium non haberet, quia ferculum sibi ligneum fecit. Sed est Salomon videlicet pacificus noster, qui sibi de lignis Libani ferculum fecit. Libani quippe ligna cedrina valde sunt imputribilia.

14. Ferculum itaque Regis nostri sancta Ecclesia est, quae de fortibus patribus, id est de imputribilibus mentibus est constructa. Quae recte ferculum dicitur, quia ipsa fert quotidie animas ad aeternum convivium conditoris sui. Cui ferculo columnae argenteae factae sunt, quia praedicatores Ecclesiae sanctae eloquii luce resplendent. Est autem cum columnis argenteis reclinatorium aureum, quia per hoc quod a sanctis praedicatoribus lucide dicitur, mentes audientium fulgorem claritatis intimae, in qua reclinentur, inveniunt. Per hoc enim quod luculente et aperte audiunt, in illud quod clarescit in corde requiescunt. Columnae ergo ejus argenteae et reclinatorium aureum factum est, quia per lucem sermonis invenitur apud animum claritas quietis. Ille quippe fulgor internus mentem irradiat, ut per intentionem ibi requiescat, ubi praedicationis gratia non quaeratur. De eadem quippe sancta Ecclesia scriptum est: Pennae columbae deargentatae, et posteriora dorsi ejus in specie auri (Psal. LXVII, 14). Quae enim hic spiritu mansuetudinis impleta quasi columba pennas deargentatas habet, in posteriora dorsi ejus speciem auri continet, quia hic praedicatores suos sermonis luce induit; in posteriori autem saeculo fulgorem in se claritatis ostendit. Sed ad hoc quod clarum intus ostenditur, qualis sit ascensus adjungit, cum de eodem ferculo protinus subdit: Ascensum purpureum (Cant. III, 10). Vera quippe purpura, quia de sanguine tingitur, non immerito in colore sanguinis videtur. Et quia maxima multitudo fidelium in exordio nascentis Ecclesiae per martyrii sanguinem pervenit ad regnum, Rex noster ascensum purpureum fecit in ferculo, quia ad clarum quod intus aspicitur per tribulationem sanguinis pervenitur.

15. Quid ergo nos miseri atque ab omni fortitudine destituti, quid acturi sumus? Ecce in hoc ferculo columnae esse non possumus, quia in nobis nec fortitudo operis, nec lumen emicat praedicationis. Reclinatorium aureum non habemus, quia necdum sicut oportet per intellectum spiritalem requiem internae claritatis aspicimus. Ascensus purpureus non sumus, quia pro Redemptore nostro fundere sanguinem non valemus. Quid ergo de nobis agendum est? Quae spes erit, si nullus ad regnum pervenit, nisi qui summis virtutibus praeditus fuerit? Sed adest quoque nostra consolatio. Amemus in quantum possumus Deum, diligamus et proximum, et simul quoque nos ad Dei ferculum pertinemus, quia sicut illic scriptum est: Media charitate constravit. Habe quippe charitatem, et ibi sine dubio pervenis, ubi et columnae argenteae eriguntur, et ascensus purpureus tenetur. Nam quia hoc propter nostram infirmitatem dicitur, aperte monstratur, cum illic protinus subdidit: Propter filias Jerusalem. Sermo etenim Dei qui non filios, sed filias dicit, quid aliud per sexum femineum quam mentium infirma signavit? Quod ergo illic inter columnas argenteas, reclinatorium aureum, et ascensum purpureum, inesse media charitas dicitur propter filias Jerusalem; hoc hic inter thalamos per quinque cubitos designatur, quia et qui in virtutibus infirmantur, si ipsi bona quae possunt facere cum charitate non negligunt, a Dei aedificio alieni non sunt. Sequitur: IBID. — Et limen portae juxta vestibulum portae intrinsecus, calamo uno.

16. Dum limen quod modo describitur juxta vestibulum portae intrinsecus esse memoratur, aperte ostenditur quia limen quod prius descriptum est extrinsecus fuit. Sed si porta est Dominus, quod sit limen portae intrinsecus et extrinsecus requiramus. Per limen etenim portam unusquisque ingreditur. Et quae sunt duo haec limina, nisi patres Testamenti Veteris, et patres Testamenti Novi? Non solum quippe hi de quibus Dominus incarnari dignatus est, sed omnes Testamenti Veteris patres portae hujus limen fuerunt, quia hi qui eum praedicere et in eo sperare meruerunt, cunctis ad eum venientibus aperuerunt aditum fidei; et omnes qui per hos crediderint Dominum, quasi jam portam hujus liminis intraverunt. Sed cur ante limen exterius et post limen interius dicitur, nisi quia prius Testamenti Veteris patres, et postmodum Novi Testamenti doctores fuerunt? Recte autem limen exterius Testamenti Veteris patres designat, quia per eorum praedicationem opera perversa punita sunt. Per dicta vero novorum patrum uniuscujusque animus etiam ab illicitis cogitationibus coercetur, dum reatus esse perfectus et in deliberatione cordis ostenditur. Illi quippe a flagitiis, a crudelitatibus, a rapinis auditorum animas prohibere curaverunt; isti vero dum non solum perversa opera, sed etiam illicita cogitationum resecant, quid nobis aliud nisi limen intrinsecus facti sunt? Unde et ipsa Veritas loquitur dicens: Audistis quia dictum est antiquis: Non occides, qui autem occiderit, reus erit judicio. Ego autem dico vobis, quia omnis qui irascitur fratri suo sine causa, reus erit judicio (Matth. V, 21, 22). Recte quoque exterius limen illos patres designat, qui ab ipsa incarnatione Redemptoris nostri per intervalla temporum longius constiterunt. Et quidem ab Abel sanguine passio jam coepit Ecclesiae, et una est Ecclesia electorum praecedentium atque sequentium. Sed tamen quia discipulis dicitur: Multi reges et prophetae voluerunt videre quae vos videtis, et non viderunt (Luc.

X, 24); antiquis patribus quasi foris stetisse est, Redemptoris nostri praesentiam corporaliter non vidisse. Exterius igitur, sed tamen non divisi a sancta Ecclesia fuerunt, quia mente, opere, praedicatione, ista jam fidei sacramenta tenuerunt, istam sanctae Ecclesiae celsitudinem conspexerunt, quam nos non adhuc praestolando, sed jam habendo conspicimus. Sicut enim nos in praeterita passione Redemptoris nostri, ita illi per fidem in eadem ventura sunt salvati. Illi ergo foris non extra mysterium, sed extra tempus.

17. Unde et in constructione tabernaculi, ut columnae argenteae interius starent, paxilli aerei figi per circuitum exterius jussi sunt, in quibus religatum tabernaculum teneretur. Columnae itaque argenteae interius, paxilli vero aerei exterius figuntur, atque in ipsis funes ligati sunt, ut tabernaculum fixum maneret, quia videlicet ut sancti apostoli in luce sermonis sui solidi starent, ut totum tabernaculum, id est sancta Ecclesia in fidei integritate consisteret, tanquam paxilli aerei patres Testamenti Veteris ac prophetae exterius fixi sunt, qui verborum suorum funibus praedicatorum mentes in soliditate stringerent, atque hoc Dei habitaculum in statu fidei ligarent. Extra ergo paxilli sunt, qui ante tempus hujus sanctae Ecclesiae fuerunt. Sed tamen eos ligant qui in ipsa sunt, quia dum coelestia mysteria ventura praedicant, haec postquam ostensa sunt, credibilia omnibus fecerunt. Ut ergo intus columnae immobiles stent, foris paxilli funes continent, quia ut sancti apostoli perfecte incarnationis dominicae mysterium crederent, illorum praedicatio obtinuit, qui hoc priusquam fieret, et videre et praedicere potuerunt. Unde recte quoque ipse primus apostolorum, magna scilicet columna veri tabernaculi, loquitur dicens: Habemus firmiorem propheticum sermonem, cui bene facitis intendentes, quasi lucernae lucenti in caliginoso loco (II Petr. I, 19). Quibus verbis indicat quia quamvis ad altiora surrexerit ex culmine, ibi religata persistat in fide. Quae tamen lucerna prophetici sermonis jam quidem intelligentibus lucet, sed adhuc non intelligentibus cooperta allegoriarum obscuritatibus permanet. Unde etiam per Psalmistam de eisdem dictis prophetarum dicitur: Tenebrosa aqua in nubibus aeris (Psal. XVII, 12), quia videlicet occulta est scientia in prophetis. Nec immerito columnae argenteae, paxilli vero aerei facti sunt, quia quod clare jam apostoli praedicant, hoc prophetae sub intellectu mystico obscure locuti sunt. Recte ergo per aeris metallum signati sunt, qui clari in suis praedicationibus non fuerunt. Sancti vero apostoli, quia de Redemptoris nostri mysterio lucem praedicationis habuerunt, argenteis columnis expressi sunt. Et notandum, quod argentum sonat et lucet, aes vero sonat et non lucet, quia praedicatores Novi Testamenti aperte locuti sunt quae etiam monstrare potuerunt. Praedicatores vero Testamenti Veteris quia per allegoriarum umbras de coelesti mysterio obscura dicta protulerunt, quasi sine luce sonitum dederunt. Quod ergo illic per paxillos et columnas, hoc hic per limen exterius et limen interius designatur.

18. Si vero portam Scripturam sacram hoc in loco accipimus, ipsa quoque duo limina habet, exterius et interius, quia in litteram dividitur et allegoriam. Limen quippe Scripturae sacrae exterius, littera; limen vero ejus interius, allegoria. Quia enim per litteram ad allegoriam tendimus, quasi a limine quod est exterius, ad hoc quod est interius venimus. Et sunt in ea permulta, quae ita juxta litteram mentem aedificant, ut per hoc quod exterius agitur audientis mens interius trahatur. Ibi quippe invenimus praedicamenta operis ex exempla virtutis; ibi jubetur quid agere etiam corporaliter debemus; ibi hoc quod ad operandum praecipitur in sanctorum virorum ac fortium actione monstratur, ut postquam nos apertiora praecepta atque exempla justorum ad bonam operationem instruunt, tunc ad limen interius, id est ad intellectum mysticum intimae contemplationis, tendamus, si possumus, pedem mentis. Studete, quaeso, fratres charissimi, Dei verba meditari, nolite despicere scripta nostri Redemptoris, quae ad nos missa sunt. Multum valde est quod per ea animus refricatur ad calorem, ne iniquitatis suae frigore torpescat.

19. Cum illa praecedentes justos fortiter egisse cognoscimus, et ipsi ad fortitudinem bonae operationis accingimur, sanctorum exemplorum flamma animus legentis incenditur. Videt quae fortia ab eis facta sunt, et valde indignatur sibi, quia talia non imitatur. Unde recte sponsi voce ad sponsam dicitur in Canticis canticorum: Sicut turris David collum tuum, quae aedificata est cum propugnaculis suis. Mille clypei pendent ex ea, omnis armatura fortium (Cant. IV, 4). In collo etenim guttur, in gutture vox est.

20. Quid ergo per collum sanctae Ecclesiae, nisi sacra ejus eloquia designantur? In qua dum mille clypei dependere memorantur, per hunc perfectum numerum numerus universus ostenditur, quia universa nostra munitio in sacro eloquio continetur. Ibi quippe sunt praecepta Dei, ibi exempla justorum. Si enim torpet animus a conditoris sui desiderio, audiat quod dicitur: Diliges Dominum Deum tuum ex tota mente tua, et ex tota virtute tua (Matth. XXII, 37). In odio fortasse labitur proximi? Audiat quod dicitur: Diliges proximum tuum, sicut te ipsum (Ibid., 39). Res alienas concupiscit? Audiat quod illic scriptum est: Non concupisces rem proximi tui (Exod. XX, 17). De injuria quae a proximi ore vel facto illata est, ad iram mens accenditur? Audiat quod dicitur: Non quaeres ultionem, nec memor eris injuriae civium tuorum (Levit. XIX, 18). In carnis concupiscentiam male sauciata mens accenditur? Ne sequatur oculus mentem, audiat quod paulo superius dictum est: Qui viderit mulierem ad concupiscendum eam, jam moechatus est eam in corde suo (Matth. V, 28). Contra inimicum forsitan quisquam animum suum relaxare disponit in odium? Audiat quod illic scriptum est: Diligite inimicos vestros, benefacite his qui oderunt vos (Luc. VI, 35). Sed is qui aliena jam non rapit, adhuc forsitan sua inordinate retinet? Audiat quod illic dicitur: Vendite quae possidetis, et date eleemosynam (Ibid., XII, 33). Infirmantis animus perfrui desiderat Deo simul et saeculo? Audiat quod illic scriptum est: Nemo potest duobus dominis servire (Matth. VI, 24). Alius non ad necessitatem stipendii, sed ad voluntatem desiderii possessa retinet? Audiat quod illic dicitur: Qui non renuntiaverit omnibus quae possidet, non potest esse meus discipulus (Luc. XIV, 33). Quidam enim relinquunt omnia, multi autem etiam possidendo renuntiant, quia sic ad usum possessa retinent, ut eis ex desiderio non succumbant. Torpere quisquam appetit, et laborem subire pro Domino etiam cum praevalet refugit? Audiat quod illic scriptum est: Qui mecum non colligit, spargit (Ibid. XI, 23). In collo ergo Ecclesiae, id est in sacri eloquii praedicatione, quod pro sua munitione et altitudine turri David simile dicitur, mille clypei dependent, quia quot illic praecepta sunt, tot etiam pectoris nostri munimina.

21. Ad servandam itaque innocentiam etiam laesi a proximo perdurare in humilitate festinamus? Abel ante oculos veniat (Genes. IV, 8), qui et occisus a fratre scribitur, et non legitur reluctatus. Mentis munditia etiam in conjugali copula eligitur? Enoch debet imitari, qui et in conjugio positus ambulavit cum Deo, et non inveniebatur, quia transtulit illum Deus (Ibid., V, 22). Praecepta Dei festinamus praesenti nostrae utilitati praeponere? Noe ante oculos veniat, qui, cura domestica postposita, ex jussione omnipotentis Domini, per centum annos ad arcae fabricam vixit occupatus (Ibid., VI, 14). Subire obedientiae virtutem nitimur? Aspicere Abraham debemus (Ibid., XII, 5), qui, relicta domo, cognatione, patria, obedivit exire in locum quem accepturus erat in haereditatem, et exiit nesciens quo iret (Hebr. XI, 8); qui paratus exstitit ut pro aeterna haereditate dilectum quem acceperat occideret haeredem. Et quia unicum Domino offerre non distulit, universam multitudinem gentium in semine accepit (Genes. XXII, 16, 17). Morum simplicitas placet? Isaac ad mentem veniat, quem in omnipotentis Dei oculis vitae suae tranquillitas ornavit (Ibid., XXIV, seq.). Laboriosa fortitudo, ut obtineri debeat, quaeritur? Jacob ad memoriam deducatur

(Ibid., XXIX, 20; XXX, 29), qui postquam scivit fortiter servire homini, ad eam quoque virtutem perductus est, ut non potuisset a luctante angelo superari (Ibid., XXXII, 25). Conamur carnis illecebram vincere? Joseph ad memoriam redeat, qui, tentante se domina, studuit carnis continentiam etiam cum vitae periculo custodire (Ibid., XXXIX, 12, 20). Unde factum est ut quia membra sua bene noverat regere, regendae quoque omni Aegypto praeficeretur. Mansuetudinem atque patientiam obtinere quaerimus? Moysen ante oculos deducamus (Num. XII, 3), qui, exceptis parvulis ac mulieribus, sexcenta millia armatorum regens, mitis fuisse describitur super omnes homines qui habitabant super faciem orbis terrae. Rectitudinis zelo contra vitia accendimur? Phinees ante oculos deducatur (Ibid., XXV, 7, 8, 11), qui coeuntes gladio transfigens, castitati populum reddidit, et iram Dei iratus placavit. De spe omnipotentis Dei praesumere in dubiis quaerimus? Josue ad memoriam revocemus (Josue III, 5, 8), qui, dum dubia certamina certa mente subiit, ad victoriam sine dubietate pervenit. Jam mentis inimicitias ponere cupimus in benignitate animum dilatare? Samuel in cogitationem deducatur (I Reg. VIII, 5), qui, de principatu dejectus a populo, cum idem populus peteret ut pro eo Domino preces effunderet, respondit dicens: Absit a me hoc peccatum in Domino, ut cessem orare pro vobis (Ibid., XII, 23). Culpam quippe vir sanctus perpetrare se credidit, si eis quos adversarios pertulerat usque ad dejectionem, benignitatem gratiae non reddidisset in prece. Qui rursus, cum, jubente Domino, mitteretur ut David ungeret in regem, respondit: Quomodo vadam? Inveniet enim me Saul, et occidet me (Ibid., XVI, 2). Et tamen quia iratum Deum eidem Sauli cognoverat, in tanto se luctu afflixerat, ut ei per se Dominus diceret: Quousque tu Saulem luges, cum ego illum abjecerim (Ibid., 1)? Pensemus ergo ejus animum quantus ardor charitatis incenderat, qui et illum flebat a quo timebat occidi. Cavere autem volumus quem timemus? Sollicita nobis mente pensandum est, ne si locum fortasse reperimus, malum pro malo reddamus ipsi quem fugimus. David ergo ad memoriam redeat, qui persequentem se regem et invenit ut potuisset occidere, et tamen, in ipsa feriendi potestate positus, elegit bonum quod ipse deberet facere, non autem malum quod ille merebatur pati, dicens: Absit a me ut mittam manum meam in christum Domini (Ibid., XXIV, 7; XXVI, 11). Et cum idem Saul post ab hostibus fuisset interemptus, eum, quem persecutorem dum viveret pertulit, flevit occisum (II Reg. I, 17). Errantibus hujus mundi potentibus libere loqui decernimus? Joannis auctoritas ad animum reducatur, qui, Herodis nequitiam reprehendens, pro verbi rectitudine occidi non timuit (Marc. VI, 18, 27). Et quia Christus est veritas, ipse ideo pro Christo, quia pro veritate, animam posuit. Carnem jam nostram pro Deo ponere in morte festinamus? Petrus ad mentem veniat (Act. V, 41), qui inter flagella gaudet, qui caesus principibus resistit, qui vitam suam pro vita despicit. Cum mortis appetitu disponimus adversa contemnere? Paulum ante oculos deducamus, qui non solum alligari, sed et mori paratus pro Christo, non facit pretiosiorem animam suam quam se (Act. XX, 22, 24). Succendi cor nostrum igne charitatis quaerimus? Joannis verba pensemus, cujus omne quod loquitur charitatis igne vaporatur (I Joan. I, seqq.).

22. Quia ergo in voce sacri eloquii cujuslibet dum quaerimus munimen virtutis invenimus, mille clypei pendent ex ea, omnis armatura fortium (Cant. IV, 4). Si enim pugnare contra spiritalia nequitiae volumus, in collo Ecclesiae, quae nobis sicut David turris erecta est, id est in divino eloquio protectionis arma requiramus, ut ex discretione praecepti, contra vitia sumatur virtus adjutorii. Ecce enim contra aereas potestates festinamus fortes existere? In hac turri armaturam nostrae mentis invenimus, ut inde praecepta conditoris, inde sumamus exempla praecedentium, per quae contra adversarios nostros inexpugnabiliter armemur. Dum enim quamlibet virtutem subire appetis, et hanc illic a patribus jam impletam vides, ibi armaturam tuam invenis, per quam contra spiritalia bella muniaris.

Dependent in ea quippe mille clypei: si quis pugnare appetit, assumat, et ex ea virtute pectus muniat, et verborum jacula emittat.

23. Et notandum quia aedificata cum propugnaculis suis dicitur. Hoc quippe agunt propugnacula, quod clypei, quia utraque pugnantem muniunt. Sed inter utraque hoc distat, quia clypeum pro nostro munimine ubicunque volumus movemus; propugnaculo autem defendere nos possumus, sed hoc movere non possumus. Clypeus in manu est, nam propugnaculum non tenetur. Quid ergo inter propugnacula et clypeos distat, nisi quod in sacro eloquio patrum praecedentium et miracula legimus, et virtutes bonorum operum audimus? Ibi namque cognoscimus quod alius potuit mare dividere, alius solem figere, alius mortuum suscitare, alius paralyticum verbo erigere, alius umbra aegrotos curare, alius per sua semicinctia febribus obviare (Act. XIX). Qui tamen omnes et patientiae longanimitate mites, et zelo rectitudinis ferventes fuerunt; verbi praedicatione divites, simul et misericordiae largitate. Hi itaque quam vera de Deo dixerint testantur miracula, quia talia per illum non facerent, nisi de illo vera narrarent. Et quam pii, quam humiles, quam benigni exstiterint, eorum testantur operationes. Si igitur de fide tentamur, quam ex illorum praedicatione concepimus, loquentium miracula conspiciamus, et in fide quam ab eis accepimus confirmamur. Quid ergo illorum miracula, nisi nostra sunt propugnacula? Quia et muniri per illa possumus, et tamen haec in manu nostri arbitrii non tenemus, nam talia facere non valemus. Clypeus vero in manu est, et defendit, quia virtus patientiae, virtus misericordiae, praecedente nos gratia, et in potestate est arbitrii, et a periculo protegit adversitatis. Turris itaque nostra cum propugnaculis suis aedificata est, in qua mille clypei dependent, quia in Scriptura sacra et sub miraculis patrum a jaculis adversitatis abscondimur, et conversationis sanctae munimina etiam in manu operis tenemus. Notandum vero quod limen portae uno calamo mensuratur. Calamus autem in sex cubitis et palmo tenditur, quia videlicet in Scriptura sacra et doctrina perfectae operationis et initium supernae contemplationis invenitur. Sin vero porta hoc loco unusquisque praedicator accipitur, limen exterius in porta est vita activa, limen vero interius vita contemplativa. Per illam quippe ambulatur in fide, per hanc vero festinatur ad speciem. Illa exterius ducit, ut unusquisque bene vivere debeat; ista interius perducit, ut ex bona vita ad gaudia aeterna pertingat. Haec nos hodie tractasse sufficiat. Quia enim, transeuntes ad alia, diu per excessum locuti sumus, ea quae subjuncta sunt lectioni alteri reservemus, reparandi per silentium, sperantes in Verbo, quod vivit et regnat cum Patre in unitate Spiritus sancti, per omnia saecula saeculorum. Amen.

1. Vir, cujus erat species quasi species aeris, — EZECH. XL, 9: — Mensus est vestibulum portae octo cubitorum, et frontem ejus duobus cubitis. Ac ne vestibulum extra portam esse crederemus, subditur: IBID. — Vestibulum autem portae erat intrinsecus. Quid autem per interius vestibulum, nisi aeternae vitae latitudo signatur, quae modo inter angustias vitae praesentis jam per spem mente concipitur? De qua per Psalmistam dicitur: Intrate portas ejus in confessione, atria ejus in hymnis confessionum (Psal. XCIX, 4). Cum enim peccata nostra per lacrymas confitemur, angustae vitae portam ingredimur. Sed cum post haec ad aeternam vitam perducimur, portae nostrae atria in confessionum laudibus intramus, quia ibi jam angustia non erit, cum nos laetitia perpetuae festivitatis exceperit. Propter confessionis nostrae angustiam Veritas dicit: Intrate per angustam portam (Matth. VII, 13). Et cum se Psalmista recipi in latitudinem gaudii aeterni praesumeret, dicebat: Statuisti in loco spatioso pedes meos (Psal. XXX, 9). Ad atrium ergo per portam tenditur, quia ad latitudinem solemnitatis pertingitur ab angustia confessionis. Illa itaque gaudia quae apud David atria, apud Ezechielem vestibulum intrinsecus vocantur. Unde et hoc ipsum vestibulum octo cubitis dicitur mensuratum. Ibi enim omnes recipiendi sunt, qui nunc et in exercitio operis laborant, et ad aeterna gaudia per contemplationis gratiam suspirant.

2. Nec immerito mensura vestibuli in octo cubitis ponitur, quia septem diebus universum tempus evolvitur. Aeterna etenim dies, quae expleta septem dierum vicissitudine sequitur, scilicet octava est. Unde etiam Psalmista, resurrectionis diem considerans, quia de extremi judicii districtione erat locuturus, praemisit titulum, dicens: In finem Psalmus S. David pro octava (Psal. VI, 1). Ut enim quam octavam diceret demonstraret diem illam tremendi terroris, in Psalmi inchoatione secutus est, dicens: Domine, ne in ira tua arguas me, neque in furore tuo corripias me (Ibid., 2). Modo enim quisquis per flagella corripitur, et correptionibus emendatur, in mansuetudine corripitur, non in ira. In districto autem illo examine omnis argutio atque correptio furor et ira est, quia venia post correptionem non est. Hujus octonarii numeri causa est, quod post Sabbatum Dominus voluit a morte resurgere. Dies quippe Dominicus, qui tertius est a morte dominica, a conditione dierum numeratur octavus, quia septimum sequitur. Unde et ipsa vera Redemptoris nostri passio, et vera resurrectio, figuravit aliquid de suo corpore in diebus passionis suae. Sexta enim feria passus est, Sabbato quievit in sepulcro, Dominico autem die resurrexit a morte. Praesens etenim vita nobis adhuc sexta est feria, quia in doloribus ducitur, et in angustiis cruciatur. Sed Sabbato quasi in sepulcro quiescimus, quia requiem animae post corpus invenimus. Dominico vero die, videlicet a passione tertio, a conditione ut diximus octavo, jam corpore a morte resurgimus, et in gloria animae etiam cum carne gaudebimus. Quod ergo mire Salvator noster fecit in se, hoc veraciter signavit in nobis, ut nos et dolor in sexta, et requies in septima, et gloria excipiat in octava. Hinc per Salomonem dicitur: Da partem septem, necnon et octo, quia ignoras quid mali futurum sit super terram (Eccle. XI, 2). Partem etenim septem simul et octo damus, quando sic ea quae septem diebus evolvuntur disponimus, ut per haec ad bona aeterna veniamus; ut dum modo caute agitur, postmodum venientis tremendi judicii ira devitetur. Octo itaque cubitis vestibulum mensuratur intrinsecus, quia per lucem quae post septem dies sequitur, latitudo nobis aeternitatis aperitur.

3. Sed nemo ad illam venit, nisi qui hic dilectionem Dei ac proximi devota mente tenuerit. Unde et subditur: Et frontem ejus duobus cubitis. Frons etenim portae est bonum meritum vitae praesentis. Sicut enim vestibulum intrinsecus aeterna requies debet intelligi, ita per frontem portae necesse est qualitatem visibilis vitae signari. Frons ergo portae duobus cubitis mensuratur, quia quisquis hic dilectionem Dei et proximi servare studuerit, ipse ad aeternitatis atrium pertinget. Vita igitur nostra ut duobus cubitis sit mensurata, tendi quotidie per charitatem debet in amorem Dei simul et proximi. Non est enim charitas vera, si minus a duobus cubitis habet. Unde Moyses cum per colores vestium, electorum virtutes exprimeret, in ornamento pontificis bis tinctum coccum jubet adhiberi (Exod. XXVIII, 5). Quid namque per coccum nisi charitas designatur, quae semper per flammam amoris accenditur? Sed coccus bis tingitur, quando non solum ex amore Dei, sed etiam proximi nostra charitas inflammatur. Nam quisquis sic amat Deum, ut commissi sibi proximi curam relinquat, adhuc in eo coccus semel tinctus est. Et quisquis sic amat proximum, ut imminuat desiderium quo flagrare debet ad Deum, non est adhuc in eo color tincturae geminatus. Debemus ergo et amare eos cum quibus vivimus, et ad illum totis desideriis anhelare in quo veraciter vivamus. Ecce etenim ad fidem atque ad audiendum verbum omnipotentis Domini nos qui religioso induti habitu videmur, ex diversa mundi qualitate convenimus, atque ex dissimilibus iniquitatibus in sanctae Ecclesiae concordiam congregati sumus, ita ut jam patenter factum esse videatur quod de promissione Ecclesiae per Isaiam dicitur: Habitabit lupus cum agno, et pardus cum haedo accubabit (Isai. XI, 6). Nam per sanctae charitatis viscera lupus cum agno habitat, quia hi qui in saeculo raptores fuerunt cum mansuetis ac mitibus in pace conquiescunt. Et pardus cum haedo accubat, quia is qui peccatorum suorum maculis varius fuit, cum eo qui se despicit et peccatorem fatetur humiliari consentit. Ubi et subditur: Vitulus et leo et ovis simul morabuntur (Isai. XI, 6), quia is qui per contritum cor ad quotidinaum se Deo sacrificium praeparat, et alius qui tanquam leo ex crudelitate severiter saeviebat, et alter qui velut ovis in innocentiae suae simplicitate perdurat, in caulis sanctae Ecclesiae convenerunt. Ecce qualis est charitas, quae diversitates mentium accendit, concremat, conflat, et quasi in unam auri speciem reformat. Sed in eo quod se electi sic amant, ad illum necesse est ut festinent, quem aeterno gaudio in coelis videre mereantur. Unus est etenim Dominus ac Redemptor noster, qui et hic electorum suorum corda ad unanimitatem ligat, et ad supernum amorem per interna desideria semper stimulat. Unde et illic subditur: Et puer parvulus minabit eos (Ibid.). Quis iste est puer parvulus, nisi de quo scriptum est: Puer natus est nobis, filius datus est nobis (Ibid., IX, 6)? Qui simul habitantes minat, quia ne in terrenis rebus corda nostra inhaereant, haec per internum desiderium quotidie inflammat. Et hoc ipsum ejus minare est ad suum nos amorem incessanter accendere, ne cum nos vicissim diligimus, mente in hoc exsilio remaneamus, ne quies hujus vitae sic placeat, ut ad oblivionem patriae perducat, ne delectata mens prosperis torpeat. Unde et donis suis flagella permiscet, ut nobis omne quod nos in saeculo delectabat amarescat, et illud incendium surgat in animo quod nos semper ad coeleste desiderium inquietet, excitet, atque, ut ita dicam, delectabiliter mordeat, suaviter cruciet, hilariter contristet. Puer ergo nos parvulus minat, quia is qui paulo minus quam angeli minoratus est per charitatem quam nobis tribuit, in hoc nos mundo mentem figere non permittit. Bis tinctus itaque in nobis coccus est, si et hic proximos nostros sicut nos diligimus, et ad auctorem omnium cum ipsis quos diligimus festinamus. Si igitur vita nostra de perfecta charitate bis tingitur, frons in nobis portae duobus cubitis mensuratur. Sive igitur doctor, seu sacrum eloquium, vel certe fides portae nomine signetur, in mensura utriusque cubiti charitas non inconvenienter accipitur, quam ille vere praedicat qui Dei ac proximi amorem docet; et ipsa est certa scientia, quam charitas aedificat; et fides robusta est, quae se in dilectione Dei ac proximi exercet. Sequitur: VERS. 10. — Porro thalami portae ad viam Orientalem, tres hinc, et tres inde, et mensura una trium.

4. Quid thalami, quid via Orientalis designet, jam superius diximus (Hom. 3, n. 8 et seqq.), nec replicare ea latius necessarium putamus. Sed quaerendum nobis est quid est quod dicitur, Tres hinc, et tres inde. Thalami quippe juxta viam Orientalem sunt corda ferventium in amore Dei. Et sive hi qui electi in testamento veteri fuerunt, sive qui in testamento novo secuti sunt, nimirum constat quia omnes ex amore Trinitatis accensi sunt. Neque enim vere Deum diligerent, si ejusdem Trinitatis, quae Deus est, gratiam non accepissent. Juxta viam ergo Orientalem tres hinc et tres inde sunt thalami, quia dum inter veteres et novos patres Dominus incarnari dignatus est, quasi in medio thalamorum via Orientalis apparuit, qui thalami ad veram virtutum speciem in Trinitatis sunt cognitione decorati. Sin vero ad virtutes electorum eumdem numerum referamus, tres sunt virtutes, sine quibus is qui aliquid operari jam potest, salvari non potest, videlicet fides, spes, charitas. Et quia eadem fides, spes, et charitas in antiquis patribus quae in novis doctoribus fuit, juxta Orientalem viam tres hinc, et tres inde thalami describuntur.

5. Vel certe quia tres patrum veterum distinctiones fuerunt, tres quoque novorum sub gratia sequuntur. Vetus quippe populus habuit patres ante legem, ac deinde in lege, et postmodum prophetas. In novo autem populo prius Hebraeorum primitiae crediderunt, postmodum plenitudo gentium in fide secuta est, ac deinde in fine saeculi Hebraeorum reliquiae salvantur (Rom. IX, 27). Quia ergo incarnatio Domini et ex superiori parte patres ante legem, patres in lege, atque ad extremum prophetas habuit, et ex posteriore fideles ex Hebraeis, fideles ex gentibus, ac postmodum Hebraeorum reliquias colliget, Orientalis via tres hinc et tres inde thalamos habere memoratur. Sed hoc quoque non inconvenienter accipimus, si tres esse fidelium ordines dicamus. Sive namque in veteri, seu in novo testamento, alius est ordo praedicantium, alius continentium, atque alius bonorum conjugum. Unde et idem propheta in superiori parte tres viros liberatos vidit: Noe, Daniel et Job (Ezech. XIV, 14); in quibus videlicet tribus praedicatores, continentes et conjugati signati sunt. Nam Noe arcam in undis rexit, atque ideo figuram rectorum tenuit (Genes. VII, 1, 2, seq.). Daniel in aula regia abstinentiae deditus fuit, et idcirco vitam continentium signavit (Dan. I, 16). Job vero in conjugio positus, et curam domus propriae exercens, placuit Deo, per quem digne bonorum conjugum ordo figuratur (Job. I, 8). Quia ergo etiam ante Mediatoris adventum, et praedicatores, et continentes, ac boni conjugati fuerunt, qui eumdem ejus adventum praestolati sunt, et magna hunc siti desiderii videre cupierunt, et postmodum praedicatores, et continentes, ac boni conjugati, sicut cernimus, existunt, qui Redemptorem nostrum non jam desiderant incarnandum, sed in majestatis suae gloria contemplandum, Orientalis via tres hinc, et tres inde thalamos habet, juxta Psalmistae vocem, qui de eadem via, videlicet Redemptore nostro, dicit: In circuitu ejus tabernacula ejus (Psal. XVII, 12).

6. Sed pensandum nobis est sollicita intentione quod dicitur, quia mensura una trium. Cum enim longe sit a continentibus et tacentibus excellentia praedicatorum, et valde a conjugatis distet eminentia continentium, quid est quod una mensura dicitur trium? Conjugati quippe quamvis et bene agant, et omnipotentem Deum videre desiderent, domesticis tamen curis occupantur, et necessitate cogente, in utroque mentem dividunt. Continentes autem ab hujus mundi actione remoti sunt, et voluptatem carnis etiam a licito conjugio restringunt, nulla conjugis, nulla filiorum cura, nullis noxiis ac difficilibus rei familiaris cogitationibus implicantur. Praedicatores vero non solum se a vitiis coercent, sed etiam alios peccare prohibent, ad fidem ducunt, in studio bonae conversationis instruunt. Quomodo ergo una eorum mensura est, quorum vitae aequalitas una non est? Sed mensura una trium est, quia etsi in eis meritorum magna est diversitas, tamen distantia in fide in qua tenduntur non est. Nam eadem fides quae istos solidat in maximis, illorum infirmitatem continet in parvis.

Vel certe trium una mensura est, quia in retributione ultima quamvis eadem dignitas omnibus non sit, una tamen erit omnibus vita beatitudinis. Unde et per semetipsum Dominus dicit: In domo Patris mei mansiones multae sunt (Joan. XIV, 2). Sed tamen qui in vineam ducti sunt, quamvis diversis horis venerint, unum denarium perceperunt (Matth. XX, 9). Qua itaque ratione conveniant mansiones multae cum uno denario, nisi quia diversae quidem beatorum civium dignitates erunt, sed tamen una quies aeternae retributionis? Nam etsi dispar erit meritum singulorum, non erit diversitas gaudiorum, quia etsi alter minus atque alius amplius exsultat, omnes tamen unum gaudium de conditoris sui visione laetificat.

7. Hoc quoque est, sive de veteribus, seu de novis patribus sentiendum, quia Orientalis via cum tres hinc et tres inde thalamos habeat, mensura una trium est, quoniam ipsa fides atque ipsum meritum tenuit corda praecedentium quae replevit corda sequentium sub testamento novo positorum, sicut et per Paulum dicitur: Habentes autem eumdem spiritum fidei, sicut scriptum est: Credidi, propter quod locutus sum (Psal. CXV, 1): et nos credimus, propter quod et loquimur (II Cor. IV, 13). Spiritales quippe illi patres omnipotentem Deum Trinitatem ita esse crediderunt, sicut eamdem Trinitatem novi patres aperte locuti sunt. Isaias namque audivit angelica agmina in coelo clamantia: Sanctus, sanctus, sanctus Dominus Deus sabaoth (Isai. VI, 3). Ut enim personarum trinitas monstraretur, tertio sanctus dicitur; sed ut una esse substantia Trinitatis appareat, non Domini sabaoth, sed Dominus Deus sabaoth esse perhibetur. Quod David quoque similiter sentiens, ait: Benedicat nos Deus, Deus noster, benedicat nos Deus (Psal. LXVI, 8). Qui cum tertio dixisset Deum, ut unum esse hunc ostenderet, subdidit: Et metuant eum omnes fines terrae. Paulus quoque loquitur dicens: Quoniam ex ipso, et per ipsum, et in ipso sunt omnia (Rom. XI, 36). Ex ipso, videlicet ex Patre; per ipsum, per Filium; in ipso autem, in Spiritu sancto. Qui cum ipsum tertio dixisset, adjunxit: Ipsi gloria in saecula saeculorum. Amen (Ibid.). Qui enim non dixit, ipsis, sed ipsi, dicendo ter ipsum, distinxit personas, et subjungendo Ipsi gloria, non divisit substantiam. Quia itaque una est veterum ac novorum patrum fides, recte thalamorum describitur mensura una trium. Quod verbis aliis replicatur cum subditur: IBID. — Et mensura una frontium ex utraque parte.

8. Ex utraque enim parte est una mensura frontium, quia patres nostri vel prius a veteri, vel nunc a novo testamento venientes, in una Mediatoris fide conveniunt. Qui pro eo quod charitate pleni sunt, carnem suam abstinentia edomant, corda audientium praedicationis lumine illustrant, signa faciunt, virtutes operantur, per hoc quod eorum bona nobis foris innotescunt, non immerito hujus coelestis aedificii frontes vocantur. Omne enim quod nunc in aperto ostenditur, frons est, ut illud sit vestibulum aedificii, quod nobis interius reservatur. Unde et sanctae Ecclesiae in Canticis canticorum dicitur: Sicut cortex mali punici genae tuae, absque occultis tuis (Cant. VI, 6). Genae quippe sunt sanctae Ecclesiae spirituales patres, qui nunc in ea miraculis coruscant, et velut in ejus facie venerabiles apparent. Cum enim videmus multos mira agere, ventura prophetare, mundum perfecte relinquere, coelestibus desideriis ardere, sicut cortex mali punici sanctae Ecclesiae genae rubent. Sed quid mistud est omne quod miramur in illius rei comparatione de qua scriptum est: Quod oculus non vidit, nec auris audivit, nec in cor hominis ascendit, quae praeparavit Deus diligentibus se (I Cor. II, 9; Isai. LXIV, 4)? Bene ergo, cum miraretur genas Ecclesiae, subdidit: Absque occultis tuis (Cant. VI, 6). Ac si aperte diceretur: Ea quidem quae in te non latent magna sunt, sed illa valde ineffabilia, quae latent. Sequitur: VERS. 11. — Et mensus est latitudinem liminis portae decem cubitorum, et longitudinem portae tredecim cubitorum.

9. Multa superius de portae significatione jam diximus, sed unum tenere aliquid debemus per quod possit et caetera lectoris prudentia penetrare. Dictum quippe est per portam Scripturam sacram posse figurari. Sed hoc nobis modo laboriose discutiendum est, cur latitudo liminis portae decem cubitis, et longitudo portae tredecim mensuratur. Hoc autem loco longitudo portae altitudo dicitur, sicut nos longae staturae dicimus quem altum videmus. Nam longitudo portae dici in transversum non potest, cujus latitudo per decem cubitos demonstratur. Quid ergo latitudo liminis portae, nisi lex testamenti veteris fuit, et longitudo portae, nisi gratia testamenti novi? Quia videlicet Scriptura sacra dum per testamentum vetus crimina operum compescuit, dari decimas praecepit (Deut. XII, 6), quasi per mandata humilia in liminis latitudine jacuit. Sed dum per testamentum novum cogitationes pravas coercuit, derelinqui omnia, et pro Deo vitam corporis jussit cum praesenti saeculo despici (Matth. XV, 19; Marc. VII, 21; Luc. IX, 24), quasi porta nostra in longitudinis altitudinem surrexit. Minora quippe praecepta Israelitico populo per legem data sunt: unde et eidem populo Moyses in campo locutus est (Exod. XIX, 7, seq.). Altiora Dominus sanctis apostolis dedit, unde et eos de mandatis vitae in monte docuit. Dum vero Redemptor noster per Evangelium dicit: Nolite putare quoniam veni solvere legem aut prophetas; non veni solvere, sed adimplere (Matth. V, 17). Adimplere enim venerat legem qui legis justitiae gratiam addidit, ut quod illa jubebat in minimis, ipse perfici adjuvaret in summis, et quod illa coercebat ab opere, ipse resecaret a corde. Intellecta ergo lex, quae in latitudine jacuit, in altitudinem surrexit. Ipsa enim Dei cognitio quae apud illam in spiritalibus patribus fuit, nota omni Hebraeorum populo non fuit. Nam omnipotentem Deum, sanctam videlicet Trinitatem, cum prophetae praedicarent, populus ignorabat; solum Decalogum tenebat in lege, fidem Trinitatis nesciens. Mensuratur ergo latitudo liminis portae decem cubitis, quia durus ille populus, subtilitatem fidei ignorans, mandatis serviebat Decalogi. Mensuratur vero longitudo portae tredecim cubitis, quia per testamentum novum in corde fidelis populi super mandata Decalogi, quae verius custodit, cognitio Trinitatis crevit. Et eo mandata legis perficit, quo Trinitatem esse omnipotentem Dominum credit.

10. Ubi et quaeri rationabiliter potest cur istam latitudinem liminis portae, quam superius dixerat uno calamo mensurari, inferius subjunxit quod decem cubitis mensuretur, ac deinde subditur quod longitudo portae tredecim sit cubitis mensurata. Unus etenim calamus, sicut jam saepe dictum est, sex cubitos habet et palmum, decem vero cubiti jam mensuram suam super calamum tenent, tredecim vero amplius quam decem. Quid est ergo quod prius uno calamo limen portae, postmodum latitudo ejus decem cubitis, ad extremum quoque longitudo portae tredecim mensuratur, nisi quod sancti patres, quos per sanctam Scripturam ante legem fuisse cognoscimus, unum quidem omnipotentem Deum, sanctam videlicet Trinitatem esse noverunt, sed eamdem Trinitatem quam cognoverunt aperte minime praedicaverunt? Qui ejus jussionibus obedientes, et vitae munditiam conservantes, quasi in sex cubitis calami habuerunt perfectionem operis, et saepe angelos videntes habuerunt palmum contemplationis. Data autem lege, rudis ille Hebraeorum populus mandata Decalogi servare conatus est, sed tamen de cognitione sanctae Trinitatis eruditus non est. Et quamvis hanc spiritales patres perfecte cognovissent, multitudo tamen magna Synagogae nec invenire mysterium Trinitatis potuit, nec quaerere scivit.

11. Superveniente autem gratia per testamentum novum, omnis fidelis populus unum Deum Trinitatem esse cognovit, et virtutem Decalogi in ejus agnitione complevit. Prius ergo limen portae mensuratur calamo uno, postmodum latitudo ejus cubitis decem, atque ad extremum longitudo portae cubitis tredecim, quia et sanctis patribus ante legem activa et contemplativa vita non defuit, et sub legis Decalogo populus divinae substantiae mysterium nesciens, in mandatorum latitudinem servivit. Et nunc sub gratia, custoditis verius Decalogi praeceptis, omnis qui ad fidem venerit sanctae Trinitatis mysterium cognoscit.

12. Qua in re hoc quoque nobis sciendum est quia et per incrementa temporum crevit scientia spiritalium patrum. Plus namque S. Moyses quam S. Abraham, plus prophetae quam S. Moyses, plus apostoli quam prophetae in omnipotentis Dei scientia eruditi sunt. Fallor si haec ipsa Scriptura non loquitur: Pertransibunt, inquit, plurimi, et multiplex erit scientia (Dan. XII, 4). Sed haec eadem quae de S. Abraham, S. Moyse, prophetis et apostolis diximus, ex ejusdem Scripturae verbis, si possumus, ostendamus. Quis enim nesciat quia S. Abraham cum Deo locutus est (Genes. XII, seq.)? et tamen ad S. Moysen Dominus dicit: Ego sum Deus Abraham, Deus Isaac, et Deus Jacob, et nomen meum Adonai non indicavi eis (Exod. VI, 3; Ibid., III, 6)? Ecce plus S. Moysi quam S. Abrahae innotuerat, qui illud de se S. Moysi indicat quod se S. Abrahae non indicasse narrabat. Sed videamus si prophetae plus quam S. Moyses divinam scientiam apprehendere potuerunt. Certe Psalmista dicit: Quomodo dilexi legem tuam, Domine? tota die meditatio mea est (Psal. CXVIII, 97). Atque subjunxit: Super omnes docentes me intellexi; quia testimonia tua meditatio mea est (Ibid., 99). Et iterum: Super seniores intellexi (Ibid. 100). Qui ergo legem meditari se memorat, et super omnes docentes se ac super seniores intellexisse testatur, quia divinam scientiam plus quam S. Moyses acceperat manifestat. Quomodo autem ostensuri sumus quia plus sancti apostoli edocti sunt quam prophetae? Certe Veritas dicit: Multi reges et prophetae voluerunt videre quae videtis, et audire quae auditis, sed non viderunt (Luc. X, 24). Plus ergo quam prophetae de divina scientia noverunt, quia quod illi solo spiritu viderunt, isti etiam corporaliter viderunt. Impleta itaque est ea, quam superius diximus, S. Danielis sententia: Quia pertransibunt plurimi, et multiplex erit scientia (Dan. XII, 4). Mensura ergo calami, qui est sex cubitorum et palmi, ducatur ad cubitos decem; et mensura decem cubitorum ad extremum surgat in tredecim, quia quanto mundus ad extremitatem ducitur, tanto nobis aeternae scientiae aditus largius aperitur. Sequitur: VERS. 12. — Et marginem ante thalamos cubiti unius.

13. Sicut saepe diximus, thalami corda electorum sunt, omnipotentis Dei amore ferventia. Quid ergo per marginem ante thalamos, nisi fides exprimitur? quia nisi prius ipsa teneatur, nullo modo ad spiritalem amorem pertingitur. Non enim charitas fidem, sed fides charitatem praecedit. Nemo enim potest amare quod non crediderit. Margo itaque est ante thalamos, fides ante ardorem charitatis, quia, sicut dictum est, nisi ea quae audis credideris, ad amorem eorum quae audieris nullatenus inflammaberis. Sed margo ante thalamos cubiti unius est, quia tunc fides corda audientium in amore Deo copulat, quando per errores et schismata divisa non est, sed in unitate perdurat, ut videlicet margo unius cubiti audientis animum ad thalamum perducat, quia coelestis sponsi speciem quam hic praedicat postmodum in coelestibus demonstrat. Ubi et bene subditur: IBID. — Et cubitus unus finis utrinque.

14. Utrinque autem dicitur, ac si dicatur utrique, scilicet limini et portae. Per latitudinem quippe liminis et longitudinem portae vetus ac novum testamentum diximus designari. Ad extremum vero additur quod cubitus unus sit finis utrinque, quia videlicet et testamentum vetus unum nobis Mediatorem Dei et hominum nuntiavit, et testamentum novum eumdem nobis nuntiat in aeterna claritate venturum, quem jam pro nobis cognovimus incarnatum. Cubitus ergo unus finis utrorumque est, quia et quem lex praedixit in carne apparuit, et ipse quem nunc Testamentum Novum loquitur, in gloria majestatis apparebit. Et tunc utrorumque finis erit, cum visus in divinitatis suae potentia, omnia quae sunt praedicta compleverit. Scriptum namque est: Finis legis Christus ad justitiam credenti (Rom. X, 4). Finis videlicet, non qui consumit, sed qui perficit. Tunc etenim legem perfecit, cum, sicut lex praedixerat, incarnatus apparuit. Sed adhuc de ejus judicio multa Novum Testamentum loquitur, adhuc multa de regno illius narrat, quae necdum videmus impleta. Ecce quotidie Evangelium legitur, ventura vita praedicatur. Tunc ergo erit et novi testamenti finis, cum ea quae de se promisit Dominus compleverit.

15. Finietur vero testamentum novum, quia perficietur. Nam cum ipse de quo loquitur visus fuerit, ejusdem testamenti verba cessabunt. Unde et sanctae Ecclesiae veri luminis diem quasi tempus vernale praestolanti, per sponsi vocem dicitur: Surge, propera, amica mea, columba mea, formosa mea, et veni. Jam enim hiems transiit, imber abiit et recessit, flores apparuerunt in terra (Cant. II, 10, 11). Sive enim sancta Ecclesia, seu unaquaeque electa anima, coelesti sponso est amica per amorem, columba per spiritum, formosa per morum pulchritudinem. Quae cum jam de corruptione carnis educitur, ei procul dubio hiems transit, quia praesentis vitae torpor abscedit. Imber quoque abit et recedit, quia cum ad contemplandum in sua substantia omnipotentem Deum educitur, jam verborum guttae necessariae non erunt, ut pluvia debeat praedicationis infundi. Nam quod minus audire potuit, amplius videbit. Tunc apparent flores in terra, quia cum de aeternae beatitudinis vita quaedam suavitatis primordia praegustare anima coeperit, quasi jam in floribus odoratur exiens, quod postquam egressa fuerit, in fructu uberius habebit. Unde et illic subditur: Tempus putationis advenit (Ibid., II, 12). In putatione quippe sarmenta sterilia reciduntur, ut ea quae praevalent uberius fructum ferant. Nostrae itaque putationis tempus tunc advenit quando infructuosam ac noxiam corruptionem carnis deserimus, ut ad fructum animae pervenire valeamus. Qui fructus nobis erit uberrimus, visio unius. Cubitus ergo unus est finis utrinque, quia unus est ille qui dixit: Singulariter sum ego donec transeam (Psal. CXL, 10). Qui solus cum Patre et sancto Spiritu praesidet in coelo, sicut passer unicus in aedificio (Psal. CI, 8). Quemadmodum implevit legem per mysterium incarnationis et perfectae humanitatis suae, ita testamenti novi promissa impleturus est per ostensam gloriam claritatis suae.

16. Hunc unum nobis cubitum mensura quoque arcae locuta est. Arca enim, quae trecentis cubitis fieri in longitudine jussa est, sexaginta vero in latitudine, triginta autem in altitudine (Genes. VI, 15), in uno est cubito consummata. Quid enim per arcam nisi sancta Ecclesia figuratur, quae inferius ampla est, superius angusta? Quae a trecentis, et sexaginta, ac triginta cubitis ad unum cubitum colligitur, quia ab ea latitudine quam sancta Ecclesia in membris suis adhuc infirmantibus habet paulisper angustata, et in altum proficiens, ad unum tendit. Ipsa enim ratio exigit ut credamus quod in illa arcae latitudine omnes bestiae, cuncta quadrupedia atque reptilia in inferioribus fuerunt, homines atque volatilia nimirum in superioribus. Juxta superiorem etenim partem fenestra fuit in latere, de qua corvum et columbam dimisit homo, ut si jam diluvii transissent aquae, cognosceret. Et quia arca eadem in uno fuit cubito consummata, homines et volatilia juxta cubitum fuerunt. Recte itaque per arcam universa Ecclesia designatur, quae adhuc in multis suis carnalibus lata est, in paucis spiritalibus angusta. Et quia ad unum hominem, qui est sine peccato, colligitur, quasi in uno cubito consummatur.

17. Videmus etenim multos intra ejusdem sanctae Ecclesiae sinum in superbia erigi, in carnis voluptate dissolvi, acquirendis terrenis rebus inhiare, imperante avaritia maria transire, deservire iracundiae, jurgiis vacare, proximos quos praevalent laedere. Sed quia eos adhuc sancta Ecclesia tolerat ut convertantur, quasi in arcae latitudine deorsum bestiae morantur. Videmus alios jam aliena non quaerere, illatam injuriam aequanimiter portare, rebus propriis esse contentos, humiliter vivere. Sed quia isti jam pauci sunt, angustatur arca. Alios autem conspicimus etiam possessa relinquere, nullum terrenis rebus studium dare, inimicos diligere, carnem a cunctis voluptatibus domare, motus omnes sub rationis judicio premere, per coeleste desiderium contemplationis penna sublevari. Sed quia tales quique valde rari sunt, jam arca juxta cubitum ducitur, ubi homines et volatilia continentur. Quaeratur tamen si quis in eis esse valeat sine peccato, et nullus invenitur. Quis itaque homo sine peccato est, nisi ille qui in peccatis conceptus non est? In uno ergo cubito consummatur arca, quia unus est auctor et Redemptor sanctae Ecclesiae sine peccato, ad quem et per quem omnes proficiunt, qui se esse peccatores noverunt. Dicatur itaque de limine et porta: Et cubitus unus, finis utrinque, quia cum unus Mediator Dei et hominum homo Christus Jesus in majestate su apparuerit, omnia utriusque testamenti quae praedicta et promissa sunt complebit.

18. Sin vero utraque hoc loco marginem ac thalamos memorat, neque hoc ab hac sententia abhorret, quia cum majestas Redemptoris nostri nobis fuerit ostensa, finitur fides, cum jam coeperit videre homo quod credidit. Et ad finem suum perveniunt thalami, quia corda fidelium incomparabiliter longe quam modo sunt, in amore illius perficiuntur. Cubitus ergo unus finis utrinque est, quia unius Domini et Salvatoris visio in electis suis fidem finit, et charitatem perficit.

19. Considerare libet qui nos sumus qui ista tractamus. Certe ex gentibus venimus, certe parentes nostri lignorum ac lapidum cultores fuerunt. Unde ergo hoc nobis, ut ea quae nunc usque Hebraei nesciunt Ezechielis prophetae tam profunda mysteria rimemur? Agamus ergo gratias uni, qui cuncta quae de eo in sacro eloquio scripta sunt opere implevit, ut quae intelligi audita non poterant, visa panderentur. Ibi quippe incarnatio, ibi passio, ibi mors, ibi resurrectio, ibi ascensio illius continetur. Sed quis nostrum haec audita crederet, nisi facta cognovisset? Signatum ergo librum, sicut in Joannis Apocalypsi legitur (Apoc. V, 3, 5), quem aperire et legere nemo poterat, leo de tribu Juda aperuit, quia omnia ejus nobis mysteria in sua passione ac resurrectione patefecit. Et per hoc quod infirmitatis nostrae mala pertulit, suae nobis potentiae et claritatis bona monstravit.

20. Caro enim factus est, ut nos spiritales faceret; benigne inclinatus est, ut levaret; exiit, ut introduceret; visibilis apparuit, ut invisibilia monstraret; flagella pertulit, ut sanaret; opprobria et irrisiones sustinuit, ut ab opprobrio aeterno liberaret; mortuus est, ut vivificaret. Agamus ergo gratias vivificanti et mortuo, et ideo amplius vivificanti, quia mortuo. Unde bene salutem nostram, et passionem illius Isaias contemplatus ait: Ut faciat opus suum, alienum opus ejus; ut operetur opus suum, peregrinum est opus ejus ab eo (Isai. XXVIII, 21). Opus etenim Dei est animas quas creavit colligere, et ad aeternae lucis gaudia revocare. Flagellari autem atque sputis illini, crucifigi, mori, atque sepeliri, non hoc in sua substantia opus Dei est, sed opus hominis peccatoris, qui haec omnia meruit per peccatum. Sed peccata nostra ipse pertulit in corpore suo super lignum (I Petr. II, 24). Et qui in natura sua manet semper incomprehensibilis, in natura nostra comprehendi dignatus est ac flagellari, quia nisi ea quae erant infirmitatis nostrae susciperet, nunquam nos ad suae fortitudinis potentiam sublevaret. Ut ergo faciat opus suum, alienum opus ejus; et ut operetur opus suum, peregrinum est opus ejus ab eo, quia incarnatus Deus, ut nos ad suam justitiam colligeret, dignatus est pro nobis tanquam peccator homo vapulare. Et alienum opus fecit ut faceret proprium, quia per hoc quod infirmans mala nostra sustinuit, nos qui creatura illius sumus, ad fortitudinis suae gloriam perduxit, in qua vivit et regnat cum Deo Patre in unitate Spiritus sancti Deus, per omnia saecula saeculorum. Amen.

HOMILIA V

Ab extrema duodecimi versus parte ad decimum septimum, Ezechielis cap. quadragesimum exponitur, ac de contemplatione praesertim disseritur.

1. Memoratis superius thalamis, propheta subjungit, quia thalami sex cubitorum erant hinc et inde. Qua in re magna nobis quaestio generatur, cur superius thalamum uno calamo mensuratum dixit, quem videlicet calamum sex cubitos et palmum habere perhibuit, atque inferius thalamos sex solummodo dicit cubitis mensurari. Si enim non calamo, sed sex cubitis mensurantur, palmus deest, qui superius in mensura calami dicebatur adesse. Sed si thalami sunt sensus atque cogitationes fidelium, in quibus castae animae conditori suo in amore junguntur, et per sex cubitos perfecta operatio, per palmum vero inchoatio contemplationis exprimitur, sanctae universalis Ecclesiae debemus membra conspicere, et citius invenimus quia sunt in ea thalami uno calamo, et sunt alii sex tantummodo cubitis mensurati. Nam fideles quidam in illa omnipotentem Deum ita amant, ut et in opere perfecti sint, et in contemplatione suspensi. Hi profecto calamum in mensura habent, quia et sex cubitos operationis, et palmum contemplationis possident. Quidam vero omnipotentem quidem Deum diligunt, et perfecte in bonis operibus exercentur, sed tamen contemplari ejus magnitudinem subtiliori intellectu nesciunt. Amant autem, sed investigare gaudia ejus claritatis ignorant. Hi itaque sex cubitos habent et palmum non habent, quia ei jam per amorem juncti sunt, sed ex contemplatione disjuncti. Qui tamen thalami post commemorationem cubiti unius hinc et inde esse referuntur, quia videlicet in amore auctoris ac Redemptoris nostri fideles animae et ex Judaico populo et ex gentilitate convenerunt.

2. Unde et idem Redemptor noster, cum, Asellum sedens, Jerusalem tenderet, sicut Evangelista testatur, multi vestimenta sua straverunt in via; alii autem frondes caedebant de arboribus, et sternebant in via; et qui praeibant et qui sequebantur clamabant, dicentes: Hosanna, benedictus qui venit in nomine Domini (Marc. XI, 7, seq.). Salvator enim noster asellum sedens Jerusalem tendit, quando uniuscujusque fidelis animam regens, videlicet jumentum suum, ad pacis intimae visionem ducit. Jumentum sedet etiam cum sanctae Ecclesiae universaliter praesidet, eamque in supernae pacis desiderium accendit. Multi autem vestimenta sua in via sternunt, quia corpora sua per abstinentiam domant, ut ei iter ad mentem parent, vel exempla bona sequentibus praebeant. Alii autem ramos vel frondes de arboribus caedunt et sternunt in via, quia in doctrina veritatis verba atque sententias patrum ex eorum eloquio decerpunt, et haec in via Dei ad auditoris animum venientes humili praedicatione submittunt. Quod indigni quoque et nos modo facimus. Nam cum patrum sententias in sermone exhortationis assumimus, frondes de arboribus caedimus, ut has in via Dei omnipotentis sternamus. Sed qui praeibant et qui sequebantur clamabant: Hosanna. Praecessit quippe Judaicus populus, secutus est gentilis. Et quia omnes electi, sive qui in Judaea esse potuerunt, sive qui nunc in Ecclesia existunt, in Mediatorem Dei et hominum crediderunt et credunt, qui praeeunt et qui sequuntur Hosanna clamant. Hosanna autem Latina lingua, salva nos dicitur. Ab ipso enim salutem et priores quaesierunt, et praesentes quaerunt; et benedictum qui venit in nomine Domini confitentur, quoniam una spes, una fides est praecedentium atque sequentium populorum. Nam sicut illi exspectata passione ac resurrectione ejus sanati sunt, ita nos praeterita passione illius ac permanente in saecula resurrectione salvamur. Quem enim priores nostri ex Judaico populo crediderunt atque amaverunt venturum, hunc nos et venisse credimus et amamus, ejusque desiderio accendimur, ut eum facie ad faciem contemplemur. Thalami ergo ejus hinc et inde sunt, quia corda amantium fidem quae in illo est et a priori parte saeculi et ab ultima complectuntur. Sequitur: VERS. 13. — Et mensus est portam a tecto thalami usque ad tectum ejus, latitudinem viginti et quinque cubitorum.

3. Saepe jam diximus, portam fidem, et per eamdem fidem ipsum Dominum ac Redemptorem nostrum, Mediatorem Dei et hominum Jesum Christum posse signari, quia per fidem quae in eo est introitus ad vitam patet. Sed etiam Scripturam sacram, quae nobis eamdem ipsam fidem in Redemptoris nostri intellectum aperit, non immerito portam accipimus, quia, ea ut oportet cognita, ad intelligenda invisibilia intramus. Si igitur hoc in loco, ut praediximus, porta Scriptura accipitur, quaerendum est quid per tectum thalami, quid per tectum portae signetur. Sed habet thalamus tectum, quia operta est mens amantium, et adhuc fervor amoris in occulto est. Habet quoque et porta tectum, quia Scriptura tota quidem propter nos scripta est, sed non tota intelligitur a nobis.

4. Multa quippe in illa ita aperte scripta sunt, ut pascant parvulos; quaedam vero obscurioribus sententiis velantur, ut exerceant fortes, quatenus cum labore intellecta plus grata sint. Nonnulla autem ita in ea clausa sunt, ut dum ea non intelligimus, agnoscentes infirma nostrae caecitatis, ad humilitatem magis quam ad intelligentiam proficiamus. Sunt enim quaedam quae ita de coelestibus loquuntur, ut solis illis supernis civibus in patria sua persistentibus pateant, necdumque nobis peregrinantibus reserentur. Nam si quis ad urbem incognitam pergens multa de illa in via audiat, quaedam quidem ex ratione colligit, quaedam vero, quia necdum videt, nullo modo cognoscit; ipsi vero cives qui in ea sunt, et quae de illa tacentur vident, et quae de illa dicuntur intelligunt. Nos igitur in via adhuc sumus, multa de illa coelesti patria audimus, alia jam per spiritum et rationem intelligimus, quaedam vero non intellecta veneramur. Unde et de eodem sacro eloquio scriptum est: Extendens coelum sicut pellem, qui tegis in aquis superiora ejus (Psal. CIII, 2). Coelum quippe sicut pellis extenditur, quia per ora mortalium Scriptura sacra nobis in expositionibus explicatur. Sed sunt aquae in coelo, superiores videlicet multitudines, id est angelorum agmina, in quibus ejusdem coeli teguntur superiora, quia ea quae in sacro eloquio altiora et obscuriora sunt, angelicis solummodo spiritibus patent, et nobis adhuc incognita perdurant. Habet ergo thalamus tectum, quia nescit adhuc proximus quantum amatur a proximo. Porta quoque, id est sacrum eloquium habet tectum, quia necdum omnia penetrare intellectu possumus quae de coelestibus audimus.

5. Restat ergo ut in his quae intelligimus in profectu quotidie charitatis ambulemus. Et quamvis in nobis proximi quoque nostri non videant quantum diligantur a nobis, atque in sacro eloquio ea quae necdum intelligimus humiliter veneremur, in his tamen ad quae intelligendo pervenimus, dilatari per bonam operationem debemus. Unde et dicitur: Et mensus est portam a tecto thalami, usque ad tectum ejus, latitudinem viginti et quinque cubitorum. Quinque enim carnis sensibus praediti sumus, videlicet visu, gustu, olfactu, auditu atque tactu. Idem vero quinarius numerus, per semetipsum multiplicatus, ad vigesimum et quia tum numerum surgit. Operari autem exterius quiddam de mandatis coelestibus sine istis corporeis quinque sensibus non valemus. His quippe officiis suis judex animus interius praesidet, et quid exterius agere juste vel misericorditer possit, quasi eisdem officiis renuntiantibus ac deservientibus agnoscit. Cum ergo timore omnipotentis Domini animus impletur, necesse est ut quinque nostri sensus nobis velut subjecta officia in bona operatione deserviant. Per quos cum aliquid agere misericorditer coeperimus, plus se quotidie ipsa misericordia aperit, et quasi quidam sinus boni operis expandit. Quinque igitur sensus multiplicantur in se, dum hoc quod per ipsos agitur in bono quotidie opere per profectum multiplicatur. Unde et latitudo esse viginti et quinque cubitorum dicitur, quia timor, tenacia et pigredo, angustia est. Quisquis enim ideo indigenti dare panem metuit, ne sibi desit, adhuc in angustia timoris est. Quisquis ideo vestimentum algenti non porrigit, quia hoc solus habere concupiscit, adhuc tenaciae suae angustia coarctatur. Quisquis ideo bonum non agit, quia tepore animi pigrescit, ipse ei suus torpor angustia est. Respicere autem inopem, exaudire precem, largiri stipem, praebere defensionem, atque pro ejusdem defensione pauperis adversantis cujuslibet inimicitias non timere, magna mentis latitudo est. Mensuretur ergo inter thalamum et portam ea quae interjacet latitudo, cubitis viginti et quinque, quia in exteriorum sensuum operatione probatur et cognoscitur quae intrinsecus largitas bonitatis habeatur. Nam quid jam de Scriptura sacra didiceris et quantum proximum tacitus ames, in latitudine boni operis ostendis.

6. Pateat itaque viginti et quinque cubitis latitudo inter thalamum et portam, quia inter charitatem et scientiam testis est bona operatio. Quae si fortasse defuerit, profecto certum est nec cognovisse te Deum, nec diligere proximum; id est, nec portam sacri eloquii, nec amoris thalamum habere. Et notandum est quod a tecto thalami usque ad tectum portae dicitur mensuratum. Per ea enim quae nobis in sacra Scriptura cooperta sunt, nostra humilitas approbatur, quia quidquid in illa non intelligimus, non superbe reprehendere, sed venerari humiliter debemus. Unde et de Domino scriptum est: Palpebrae ejus interrogant filios hominum (Psal. X, 5). Palpebrae quippe ejus judicia sunt, quae aliquid nobis claudunt, et aliquid aperiunt. Quae aperiendo nos interrogant si intelligendo non extollimur. Claudendo nos interrogant si non despicimus quae intelligere non valemus. Per ea autem quae de charitate nostra proximis nostris non loquimur, in conspectu Dei verius probamur. In quorumdam enim ore charitas ficta est, in quorumdam vero cordibus vera. Et saepe de charitate ostenditur quod non est, et non demonstratur quod est. Amorem itaque nostrum erga proximum plus bona operatio loquitur quam lingua, ut in ipso bono opere proximus noster amari se videat. Et cum tantum non possumus quantum volumus operari, omnipotenti Deo occulta amoris nostri sufficiant. A tecto ergo thalami usque ad tectum portae sit magna latitudo, ut ab occultis nostrae charitatis propter proximum usque ad humilitatem scientiae, et propter Deum, in quantum intelligimus et valemus, bona semper operemur.

7. Potest etiam porta ipse jam aditus regni coelestis intelligi. Habet nunc thalamus tectum, habet et porta tectum, quia et quanta sit nostra charitas in Deum et proximum, non cognoscitur, et quando de hoc saeculo ad aeternae vitae requiem introducamur ignoratur. Esse enim nobis conditor noster diem mortis nostrae incognitum voluit, ut, dum semper ignoratur, semper esse proximus credatur; et tanto quisque ferventior sit in operatione, quanto et incertus est de vocatione. Unde et latitudo viginti et quinque cubitorum a thalamo ad portam tenditur, quia per charitatem quam semel in Deo et proximo concepimus, usque ad ingressum regni debemus omne quod possumus multipliciter atque incessanter operari. A tecto itaque thalami usque ad tectum portae magna latitudo est, quia ex gratia qua inchoamus Deum diligere, usque ad ipsam dilectionem quae nobis aditum regni coelestis aperit, debemus nosmetipsos in magna bonorum operum actione dilatare, adversa patienter perpeti, bona libenter impendere, ipsos etiam quos patimur amare, habita tribuere, non habita non ambire, proximos sicut nosmetipsos diligere, eorum bona nostra credere, eorum mala quasi propria deflere. In tali ergo mente magna latitudo est, in qua angustia odiorum non est. Quam profecto latitudinem ex Dei et proximi amore concepimus, et per sacra mandata cognovimus. Nam et ipsos latitudinis viginti et quinque cubitos non inconvenienter intelligimus, si eos juxta sacrum eloquium discutere velimus. Sex enim cubitis mensuratos thalamos dixerat, et sexto die homo est conditus (Genes. I, 27); eo quoque die Dominus perfecisse opera sua describitur. Unde etiam pro perfectione poni senarius numerus solet. Et quia omnem operationem bonam per quatuor sancti Evangelii libros agnovimus, si sex quater ducimus, ad viginti et quatuor pervenimus. Cui monas additur, quia unus est per quem bene omnes operantur. Viginti ergo et quinque cubitis latitudo haec explicari debuit, quia omnis bona operatio per quatuor sancti Evangelii, ut diximus, libros agnoscitur, et in unius Dei cognitione et confessione completur. Sequitur: VERS. 13. — Et ostium contra ostium.

8. Hoc loco contra non ad adversitatem ponitur, sed ad rectitudinem. Ostium enim contra ostium est cum recto itinere ab exteriore ad interiorem aditum pervenitur. In cognitione vero omnipotentis Dei primum ostium nostrum fides est, secundum vero species illius, ad quam per fidem ambulando pervenimus. In hac etenim vita hanc ingredimur, ut ad illam postmodum perducamur. Ostium ergo contra ostium est, quia per aditum fidei aperitur aditus visionis Dei. Si quis vero utraque haec ostia in hac vita velit accipere, neque hoc a salubri intelligentia abhorret. Nam saepe volumus omnipotentis Dei naturam invisibilem considerare, sed nequaquam valemus; atque ipsis difficultatibus fatigata anima ad semetipsam redit, sibique de seipsa gradus ascensionis facit, ut primum semetipsam, si valet, consideret, et tunc illam naturam quae super ipsam est, in quantum potuerit, investiget. Sed mens nostra si in carnalibus imaginibus fuerit sparsa, nequaquam vel se vel animae naturam considerare sufficit, quia per quot cogitationes ducitur, quasi per tot obstacula caecatur.

9. Primus ergo gradus est ut se ad se colligat, secundus ut videat qualis est collecta, tertius ut super semetipsam surgat, ac se contemplationi auctoris invisibilis intendendo subjiciat. Sed se ad se nullatenus colligit, nisi prius didicerit terrenarum atque coelestium imaginum phantasmata ab oculis mentis compescere, quidquid de visu, quidquid de auditu, quidquid de odoratu, quidquid de tactu et gustu corporeo cogitationi ejus occurrerit, respuere atque calcare, quatenus talem se quaerat intus, qualis sine istis est. Nam haec quando cogitat, quasi quasdam umbras corporum introrsus versat. Abigenda ergo sunt omnia manu discretionis ab oculis mentis, quatenus talem se anima consideret, qualis sub Deo super corpus creata est, ut a superiore vivificata, vivificet inferius quod administrat. Quae et sic infusa est corpori, ut non per membrorum partes partibus sit divisa. Nam si in quolibet loco pars corporis percutitur, tota dolet. Miro autem modo una eademque vivificatione membris praesidens, cum ipsa per naturam non diversa sit, per corpus tamen agit diversa. Ipsa quippe est quae per oculos videt, per aures audit, per nares odoratur, per os gustat, per membra omnia tangit, et tangendo leue ab aspero discernit. Et cum tam diversa per sensus operatur, non haec diversa, sed una illa in qua creata est ratione disponit. Cum ergo seipsam sine imaginibus corporis cogitat anima, jam primum ostium intravit. Sed ab hoc ostio ad aliud tenditur, ut de natura Dei omnipotentis aliquid contempletur. Anima itaque in corpore vita est carnis, Deus vero qui vivificat omnia vita est animarum. Si igitur tantae est magnitudinis, ut comprehendi non possit vita vivificata, quis intellectu comprehendere valeat quantae majestatis sit vita vivificans? Sed hoc ipsum considerare atque discernere jam est aliquatenus intrare, quia ex sua aestimatione anima colligit quid de incircumscripto spiritu sentiat, qui ea incomprehensibiliter regit quae incomprehensibiliter creavit.

10. Conditor etenim noster longe incomparabiliter creaturae suae praesidet, et quaedam operatur ut sint, nec tamen vivant; quaedam vero ut sint et vivant, nec tamen discernere aliquid de vita valeant; quaedam autem ut sint, vivant, atque discernant. Et operatur unus omnia, sed in omnibus non divisus (I Cor. XII, 6). Est enim vere summus, et nunquam sibi dissimilis. Anima autem etsi per naturam sibimetipsi diversa non est, per cogitationem tamen diversa est. Eo enim momento et ictu quo de visu cogitat, de auditu cogitare obliviscitur; et eo momento et ictu quo de auditu vel gustu cogitat, de odoratu vel tactu cogitare non praevalet, quia per intentionem et oblivionem fit semper sibimetipsi dissimilis, ut nunc hoc, nunc illud cogitatione teneat. Omnipotens autem Deus, quia sibimetipsi dissimilis non est, ea virtute videt qua audit omnia, ea virtute creat qua judicat creata. Ejus ergo et videre simul omnia administrare est, et administrare conspicere. Nec alia cogitatione justos adjuvat, atque alia injustos damnat, sed una eademque vi naturae singularis sibi semper indissimilis dissimilia disponit. Cur autem hoc de potentia Creatoris admiremur, qui virtutis ejus vestigia et in creaturis conspicimus? Natura quippe luti et cerae diversa est. Solis vero radius non est diversus, et tamen cum diversus non sit, diversa sunt quae in luto operatur et cera, quia uno eodemque sui ignis calore lutum durat, et ceram liquat. Sed fortasse hoc in natura luti vel cerae est, non in ipsa solis substantia, quae in naturis diversis diversa videtur operari. Omnipotens autem Deus in semetipso habet sine immutatione mutabilia disponere, sine diversitate sui diversa agere, sine cogitationum vicissitudine dissimilia formare. Longe ergo dissimiliter operatur dissimilia nunquam sibi dissimilis Deus, qui et ubique est, et ubique totus est. Ait enim: Coelum mihi sedes est, terra autem scabellum pedum meorum (Isai. LVI, 1). Et de ipso scriptum est: Qui coelum metitur palmo, et terram pugillo concludit (Ibid., XL, 12).

11. Ex qua re considerare necesse est quia is qui coelo velut sedi praesidet, super et intus est. Et qui coelum palmo, et terram pugillo concludit, et exterius, superius, et inferius est. Ut ergo indicaret omnipotens Deus interiorem se esse, et superiorem omnibus, coelum ipse sibi sedem esse perhibuit. Ut vero se ostenderet omnia circumdare, coelum metiri palmo, et terram se asserit pugillo concludere. Ipse est ergo interior et exterior, ipse inferior et superior: regendo superior, portando inferior; replendo interior, circumdando exterior. Sicque est intus, ut extra sit; sic circumdat, ut penetret; sic praesidet, ut portet; sic portat, ut praesideat. Cum ergo elevata ad seipsam anima suum modulum intelligit, et quia corporalia omnia transcendat agnoscit, atque ab intellectu suo se ad auctoris intellectum tendit, quid jam haec nisi ostium quod est contra ostium aspicit? Unde et auctori omnium Propheta dicit: Mirabilis facta est scientia tua ex me (Psal. CXXXVIII, 6), quia quantumlibet intenderit, semetipsam anima perfecte non sufficit penetrare, quanto magis illius magnitudinem qui potuit et animam condere? Cumque in scientia Dei intellectu laboraret, lassescens ac deficiens subdidit: Confortata est, nec potero ad eam (Ibid.). Sed cum conantes atque tendentes quiddam jam de invisibili natura conspicere cupimus, lassamur, reverberamur, repellimur; et si interiora penetrare non possumus, tamen jam ab exteriore ostio interius ostium videmus. Ipse enim considerationis labor ostium est, quia ostendit aliquid ex eo quod intus est, etsi adhuc ingrediendi potestas non est. Sequitur: VERS. 14. — Et fecit frontes per sexaginta cubitos, et ad frontem atrium portae undique per circuitum.

12. Saepe jam diximus (Hom. 2, lib. II, n. 7, seq.) senario numero perfectionem boni operis designari, non illud sequentes quod conati sunt hujus saeculi sapientes astruere, dicentes idcirco senarium numerum esse perfectum, quia suo ordine numeratus perficitur, ut cum unus, duo, tres dicuntur, senarius numerus impleatur; vel quia in tribus partibus dividitur, id est sexta, tertia et dimidia, videlicet in uno, duobus et tribus; sed idcirco senarium numerum dicimus esse perfectum, quia, sicut paulo ante dictum est, sexto die perfecit Deus omnia opera sua (Genes. I, 21; II, 1). Quoniam vero peccatori homini legem dedit, quae in decem praeceptis scripta est, et sex decies ducta in sexagenarium surgunt, recte per sexaginta cubitos bonorum operum perfectio designatur. Quod aperte etiam Dominus in Evangelio designat, qui, cum parabolam seminantis exponeret, dixit: Aliud cecidit in terram bonam, et dabat fructum ascendentem et crescentem, et afferebat unum triginta, et unum sexaginta, et unum centum (Matth. XIII, 8; Marc. IV, 8; Luc. VIII, 8). Fructus etenim terrae bonae triginta affert, cum mens perfectionem fidei, quae est in Trinitate, conceperit. Sexaginta affert, cum bonae vitae opera perfecta protulerit. Centum vero affert, cum ad aeternae vitae contemplationem profecerit. Sinistra enim nostra est vita praesens, dextera vero est vita ventura. Et recte per centenarium numerum aeternae vitae contemplatio designatur, quia cum post triginta ac sexaginta ad centesimum numerum computando pervenimus, idem centenarius numerus in dexteram transit. Fides atque operatio adhuc in sinistra est, quia hic adhuc positi, et credimus quod non videmus, et operamur ut videamus. Cum vero jam se animus in contemplationem aeternae vitae suspenderit, quasi ad dexteram manum computus pervenit. Fecit itaque frontes per sexaginta cubitos. Quia enim per sexagenarium numerum perfectio, quid per frontes aedificii nisi ipsa opera designantur quae exterius videntur? Praedicationis enim verbum tribuere, alimenta esurientibus, vestimenta algentibus dare, et pro bono opere patienter adversa sustinere, quid aliud quam frontes sunt aedificii coelestis? quia pulchritudo operum exteriorum ornat habitaculum Dei, quod adhuc latet intrinsecus. Sed istae frontes habent atrium undique per circuitum, quia in hoc magna sunt opera, si haec in mente dilatat amplitudo charitatis. De charitate quippe scriptum est: Latum mandatum tuum nimis (Psal. CXVIII, 96). De hac iterum Psalmista ait: Statuisti in loco spatioso pedes meos (Psal. XXX, 9).

13. Sed ecce, dum loquor, animo occurrit quomodo lata est charitas. Si per charitatem pertingitur ad Deum, et per semetipsam Veritas dicit: Intrate per angustam portam (Matth. VII, 13). Et rursum Psalmistam audio dicentem: Propter verba labiorum tuorum ego custodivi vias duras (Psal. XVI, 4). Atque in Evangelio Dominus dicit: Jugum enim meum suave est, et onus meum leve (Matth. XI, 30). Quomodo ergo aut lata charitas, si angusta porta? aut quomodo jugum suave est et onus leve, si in praeceptis Dei viae durae sunt quae custodiuntur? Sed hanc nobis quaestionem citius ipsa charitas solvit, quia via Dei et inchoantibus angusta est, et perfecte jam viventibus lata. Et dura sunt quae contra consuetudinem spiritaliter animo proponimus, et tamen onus Dei leve est, postquam hoc ferre coeperimus, ita ut pro amore ejus etiam persecutio placeat, et omnis pro eo afflictio in mentis dulcedine veniat, sicut sancti quoque apostoli gaudebant cum pro Domino flagella tolerabant (Act. V, 41). Ipsa ergo angusta porta amantibus lata fit, ipsae viae durae spiritaliter currentibus molles et planae fiunt; dum enim scit animus se pro temporalibus doloribus gaudia aeterna recipere, et hoc incipit quod affligitur amare. Atrium ergo ante frontes ejus est in perfectione operis latitudo dilectionis.

14. Et notandum quod dicitur Undique per circuitum, ut videlicet homo per omne quod agit semper se in charitatis amplitudine dilatet, ne hunc aut timor aut odia angustent. Si quis ergo de verbo Dei loquitur, et charitatem quam praedicat in mente non servat, aedificii frontem habet, sed atrium ante frontem non habet. Si quis eleemosynam indigentibus largitur, et per hanc fortasse in corde extollitur, nec ex charitate proximi inopiae subvenit, sed se elatione tacita extollit, frontem quidem in aedificio ostendit, sed juxta frontem atrium non fecit. Si quis illatas a proximo contumelias tolerat, et mala objecta tacitus portat, magna est patientia quam demonstrat, sed si dolorem in corde non habeat, si lucrari ad tranquillitatem mansuetudinis etiam ipsum qui male excesserat quaerat. Nam si patientiam exterius adhibens intus dolorem tenet, nec amat eum quem sustinet, habet quidem frontem in aedificio, sed ante frontem atrium non habet, quia is qui se angustiae odiorum subdidit, profecto charitatis latitudinem amisit. Nam sicut in superiori parte jam diximus (Hom. 9, maxime n. 22, seq.), patientia ea vera est quae et ipsum amat quem portat. Nam tolerare, sed odisse, non est virtus mansuetudinis, sed velamentum furoris. Et notandum quod hoc ipsum atrium portae dicitur. Porta quippe nostra est aditus ad regnum. Et Deum ac proximum perfecte amare jam ad ingressum regni est tendere. In quantum enim quisque amat, in tantum ad ingressum propinquat. In quantum vero amare negligit, in tantum ingredi recusat, quia nec studet videre quod appetit. Tunc ergo habemus atrium portae, quando ex latitudine charitatis ad supernam vitam quam adhuc contingere minime possumus jam per desiderium intramus. Itaque cum bonum opus erga proximum agitur, restat ut ejusdem boni operis intentio discernatur, si non praesentis gratiae retributionem quaerit, sed spem suam animus ad futuram promissionem tendit, ut ex temporalibus aeterna, ex terrenis coelestia speret. Spes enim coelestium mentem solidat, ne concutiatur fluctibus tumultuum terrenorum. De qua et per Paulum dicitur: Quam sicut anchoram habemus animae tutam ac firmam, et incedentem usque ad interiora velaminis (Hebr. VI, 19). De quibus interioribus hic quoque subjungitur: VERS. 15. — Et ante faciem portae quae pertingebat usque ad faciem vestibuli portae interioris, quinquaginta cubitos.

15. Hoc quod hoc loco dicitur, Ante faciem portae, non exterior, sed interior ante portam locus describitur, dum usque ad faciem vestibuli portae interioris pertingere perhibetur. Unde et idem locus quinquaginta cubitis dicitur mensuratus. Per quinquagenarium enim numerum requies aeterna signatur. Habet enim septenarius numerus perfectionem suam, quia eo die dierum numerus est completus. Et per legem Sabbatum in requiem datum est (Exod. XX, 8, 10). Ipse autem septenarius numerus per semetipsum multiplicatus ad quadraginta et novem ducitur, cui si monas additur, ad quinquagenarium pervenitur, quia omnis nostra perfectio in illius unius contemplatione erit, in cujus nobis visione jam minus aliquid salutis et gaudii non erit. Hinc etiam jubilaeus, id est annus quinquagesimus, in requiem datus est, quia quisquis ad omnipotentis Dei gaudia aeterna pervenerit, laborem et gemitum ulterius non habebit.

16. Notandum vero quia locus qui describitur per quinquaginta cubitos tendi, ad faciem vestibuli portae interioris pertingere memoratur. Non ergo hoc loco propheta jam ipsum vestibulum portae interioris, sed locum interius qui tendit ad vestibulum portae interioris, narrat. Per quem locum utique, sicut diximus, spes nostra signatur, quae dum aeternam requiem quaerit, mentem ad vestibulum portae interioris ducit. Hoc ipsum enim, quod desideramus coelestia, quod ad promissa gaudia suspiramus, quod aeternae vitae requiem quaerimus, jam ad interioris vestibuli faciem propinquamus. Signetur ergo per portam fides, per atrium charitas, per locum vero qui ad faciem vestibuli portae interioris propinquat figuretur spes, sine quibus tribus virtutibus quisquis jam uti ratione potest, ingredi ad coeleste aedificium non potest. Habeatur ergo fides in porta, quae introducit ad intelligentiam, charitas in atrio, quae mentem dilatat in amorem; spes in loco qui quinquaginta describitur cubitis, quia per desideria atque suspiria introducit animum ad secreta gaudia quietis. De qua quiete etsi adhuc, sicut est, veritatis lumen non cernimus, jam tamen per rimas intelligentiae aliquid videmus. Unde et hic subditur: VERS. 16. — Et fenestras obliquas in thalamis.

17. In fenestris obliquis pars illa per quam lumen intrat angusta est, sed pars interior quae lumen suscipit lata, quia mentes contemplantium quamvis aliquid tenuitur de vero lumine videant, in semetipsis tamen magna amplitudine dilatantur. Quae videlicet et ipsa quae conspiciunt capere pauca vix possunt. Exiguum quippe valde est quod de aeternitate contemplantes vident, sed ex ipso exiguo laxatur sinus mentium in augmentum fervoris et amoris; et inde apud se amplae fiunt, unde ad se veritatis lumen quasi per angustias admittunt. Quae magnitudo contemplationis, quia concedi nonnisi amantibus potest, in thalamis obliquae fenestrae esse perhibentur, vel in his quae juxta thalamos non jam extrinsecus, sed esse intrinsecus dicuntur. Nam de eisdem fenestris subditur: IBID. — Et in frontibus eorum quae erant intra portam undique per circuitum.

18. Erant enim in thalamis, erant et in frontibus eorum, quae intra portam undique per circuitum fuerant constructa, quia qui cor intus habet, ipse quoque lumen contemplationis suscipit. Nam qui adhuc exteriora immoderatius cogitant, quae sint de aeterno lumine rimae contemplationis ignorant. Neque enim cum corporearum rerum imaginibus illa infusio incorporeae lucis capitur, quia dum sola visibilia cogitantur, lumen invisibile ad mentem non admittitur. Sed quisquis jam lumini contemplationis intendit, curare magnopere debet, ut mentem semper in humilitate custodiat, nunquam se de gratia qua infunditur extollat, et ipsas quae mentes contemplantium signant quales sint obliquae fenestrae consideret. Per obliquas etenim fenestras lumen intrat, et fur non intrat, quia hi qui vere speculatores sunt semper sensum in humilitate deprimunt, atque ad eorum mentes intelligentia contemplationis intrat, sed jactantia elationis non intrat. Et patent itaque fenestrae, et munitae sunt, quia et aperta est in mentibus eorum gratia qua replentur, et tamen ad se adversarium ingredi per superbiam non permittunt.

19. Notandum vero quod intra portam undique per circuitum fenestrae obliquae esse memorantur. Non enim contemplationis gratia summis datur et minimis non datur, sed saepe hanc summi, saepe minimi, saepius remoti, aliquando etiam conjugati percipiunt. Si ergo nullum est fidelium officium, a quo possit gratia contemplationis excludi, quisquis cor intus habet, illustrari etiam lumine contemplationis potest, quia intra portam undique per circuitum fenestrae obliquae constructae sunt, ut nemo ex hac gratia quasi de singularitate glorietur. Nullus se donum veri luminis aestimet habere privatum, quia in eo quod se habere praecipuum putat, saepe alter est ditior, quem habere apud se boni aliquid non putabat. Unde hic quoque adhuc apte subjungitur: IBID. — Similiter autem erant et in vestibulis fenestrae per gyrum intrinsecus.

20. Postquam dixit fenestras in frontibus, adjungit fenestras in vestibulis per gyrum intrinsecus, quia non solum alta sanctae Ecclesiae membra quae praeeminent habent contemplationis gratiam, sed plerumque hoc donum etiam illa membra percipiunt quae, etsi jam per desiderium ad summa emicant, tamen adhuc per officium in imo jacent. Nisi enim et his qui despecti videntur omnipotens Deus lumen contemplationis infunderet, fenestrae in vestibulis non fuissent. Videmus itaque alios in summis locis sanctae Ecclesiae constitutos alta de coelestibus loqui, miro studio, in quantum illustrata mens sufficit, supernae patriae secreta rimari: fenestrae sunt in frontibus. A ii vero in sanctae Ecclesiae sinu continentur, et despecti humanis oculis videntur, sed apud se sapientiae studiis vacant, ad coelestia anhelant, atque, in quantum praevalent, quae sint gaudia aeterna considerant: fenestrae itaque obliquae sunt, sed in vestibulis.

21. Bene autem dicitur per gyrum, quia omnis inquisitio secretarum rerum gyrum habet, dum in cogitatione sua dicit animus: Putasne hoc? putasne illud est? Quasi circuit, ut inveniat quod quaerit. Cui cum incircumscriptum lumen erumpere in cognitione coeperit, quasi per obliquam fenestram radius veritatis venit. Sic quippe in contemplatione nostra multa cogitationibus circumeundo proficimus, sicut exempla bonorum saepe quaerimus, ut in moribus proficiamus. Nam cum jam cogitat animus ad meliora transire, quidquid melius de aliis audire possit exquirit, nunc hujus, nunc sancti alterius vitam ventilat. Unde et electus quidam, qui in expanso sinu sanctae Ecclesiae per universum mundum mentis oculos miserat, bonorum vitam ad imitationem requirens, dicebat: Circuibo et immolabo in tabernaculo Dei hostiam jubilationis (Psal. XXVI, 6). Ecce ut immolaret jubilationis hostiam circuibat, quia nisi animum huc illucque ad bonorum vitam exquirendam mitteret, ipse usque ad jubilationis sacrificium non perveniret. Cum vero sancti viri intra sanctam Ecclesiam ad loca summa perducuntur, eorum vita quasi in speculo ponitur, ut cuncti videant bona quae debeant imitari. Unde et adhuc apte subjungitur: IBID. — Et ante frontes pictura palmarum.

22. Quid per palmas, nisi praemia victoriae designantur? Ipsae quippe dari vincentibus solent. Unde et de his qui in certamine martyrii antiquum hostem vicerant, et jam victores in patria gaudebant, scriptum est: Et palmae in manibus eorum, et clamabant voce magna, dicentes: Salus Deo nostro, qui sedet super thronum, et Agno (Apoc. VII, 9). Palmas quippe in manibus habere est victorias in operatione tenuisse. Cujus operationis palma ibi retribuitur, ubi jam sine certamine gaudetur. Unde et hic non dicitur: Palmae ante frontes, sed ante frontes pictura palmarum. Ibi enim victoriae palma videbitur, ubi jam sine fine gaudebitur. Nam hic plerumque sanctos viros aspicimus mira agere, virtutes multas facere, leprosos mundare, daemonia ejicere, tactu aegritudines corporum fugare, prophetiae spiritu ventura praedicere. Cuncta haec necdum palmae sunt, sed adhuc pictura palmarum, nam haec aliquando dantur et reprobis. Unde et per Evangelium Veritas dicit: Multi dicent mihi in die illa: Domine, Domine, nonne in nomine tuo prophetavimus, et in tuo nomine daemonia ejecimus, et in tuo nomine virtutes multas fecimus? Et tunc confitebor illis, quia nunquam novi vos; discedite a me qui operamini iniquitatem (Matth. VII, 22, 23). Unum vero signum electionis est soliditas charitatis, sicut scriptum est: In hoc scietur quia discipuli mei estis, si dilectionem habueritis ad invicem (Joan. XIII, 35). Haec autem miracula cum electi faciunt, longe dissimiliter a reprobis faciunt, quia quod electi ex charitate, hoc reprobi student agere per elationem. Sed eisdem electis et ipsa mira quae per charitatem faciunt, non jam palmae, sed adhuc pictura palmarum, quia de eis foris ostenditur quales apud omnipotentem Dominum intus habeantur. Ibi autem eis palma erit, ubi jam mortis contentio non erit. Nam praedicator egregius tunc aspexit palmam veram vincentibus dari, cum resurrectionem praevidit mortuorum fieri, sicut dicit: Oportet enim corruptibile hoc induere incorruptionem, et mortale hoc induere immortalitatem. Cum autem mortale hoc induerit immortalitatem, tunc fiet sermo qui scriptus est: Absorpta est mors in victoria. Ubi est, mors, victoria tua? ubi est, mors, stimulus tuus (I Cor. XV, 53, seq.)? Tunc ergo erit perfecta victoria, cum mors plene fuerit absorpta. In omne autem quod modo mirabiliter de signis agi conspicimus, non jam ipsam victoriam, sed adhuc imagines victoriae videmus. Quia ergo plerumque sanctis etiam et in locis sublimioribus positis, ut ad bona opera alii provocentur, virtutes et signa dantur, ante frontes interioris aedificii palmarum pictura ostenditur. Haec hodierno die tractata sufficiant, ut ad ea quae subjuncta sunt, valentiores, adjuvante Domino nostro Jesu Christo, veniamus, qui vivit et regnat cum Deo Patre in unitate Spiritus sancti Deus, per omnia saecula saeculorum. Amen.

HOMILIA VI

Tres duntaxat versus explicantur, et quanta in Christianis, maxime vero in apostolis, perfectio eluxerit ostenditur.

1. Postquam de contemplationis gratia obliquas fenestras insinuans propheta multa locutus est, eductum se exterius dicit, et gazophylacia vidisse commemorat. In quibus gazophylaciis quid aliud quam doctorum scientia designatur? Sed recte hac in re quaeri potest, cum doctores sancti spiritalia atque interna doceant, cur propheta eductum se exterius dicit, et gazophylacia foris vidisse? Sed sciendum est quia alia est contemplatio quae tantum videt quantum dicere non valet, alia vero scientia atque doctrina, quae tantum videt, quantum exprimere per linguam possit. In comparatione quippe illius luminis quod voce exprimi non potest quasi hoc totum foris est quod exprimi voce potest. Ait itaque: EZECH. XL, 17. — Et eduxit me ad atrium exterius, et ecce gazophylacia, et pavimentum stratum lapide in atrium per circuitum.

2. Quia sermone Graeco phylaso servare dicitur, et gazae lingua Persica divitiae vocantur, gazophylacium locus appellari solet quo divitiae servantur. Quid itaque per gazophylacia designatur, nisi, ut praediximus, corda doctorum sapientiae atque scientiae divitiis plena? Quia, juxta Pauli vocem: Alii datur per spiritum sermo sapientiae, alii sermo scientiae in eodem spiritu (I Cor. XII, 3). Sunt enim quidam qui per donum gratiae et ipsa intelligunt quae exponi a doctoribus non audierunt; hi videlicet sermonem sapientiae perceperunt. Et sunt quidam qui per semetipsos intelligere audita nequeunt, sed ea quae in expositoribus legerint retinent, atque scienter proferunt quae lecta didicerunt. Unde itaque isti nisi sermone scientiae pleni sunt? Quamvis hoc intelligi et aliter possit, quia sapientia ad vitam, scientia vero pertinet ad doctrinam. Qui igitur bene vivit, et prudenter praedicat, gazophylacium spiritalis aedificii recte nominatur, quia ab ejus ore coelestes divitiae dispensantur. His divitiis abundare discipulos idem magister gentium viderat, cum dicebat: Divites facti estis in illo, in omni verbo et omni scientia (I Cor. I, 5). Sunt itaque in sanctae Ecclesiae aedificio constructa gazophylacia, quia abundat divitiis scientiae lingua doctorum. Has veras esse divitias ipsa per se Veritas denuntiat, cum de transitoriis divitiis dicit: Fallacia divitiarum suffocat verbum (Matth. XIII, 22). Sapientia etenim atque scientia doctrinae spiritalis verae sunt divitiae, in quarum comparatione quae transire possunt falsae nominantur. De his divitiis per Salomonem dicitur: Thesaurus desiderabilis requiescit in ore sapientis (Prov. XXI, 20). Excepto autem eo, quod ad aeternam patriam divitiae spiritales ducunt, est eis a terrenis divitiis magna distantia, quia spiritales divitiae erogatae proficiunt, terrenae autem divitiae aut erogantur et deficiunt, aut retinentur et utiles non sunt. Qui ergo has in se veras divitias continent, recte gazophylacia dicuntur.

3. Et habent ipsa gazophylacia pavimentum per circuitum, quia eis adhaeret ac subjacet humilitas auditorum. Quod pavimentum recte stratum lapide in atrium dicitur, quia in latitudinem charitatis vicissim sibi junctae sunt animae fideles. Quae et lapides appellantur in fortitudine fidei, et stratae in pavimento sunt in compage humilitatis. Has fidelium mentes Petrus apostolus fortes in fide conspexerat, cum dicebat: Et vos tanquam lapides vivi superaedificamini domus spiritalis (I Petr. II, 5). De his lapidibus sanctae Ecclesiae Dominus per Isaiam dicit: Ponam jaspidem propugnacula tua, et portas tuas in lapides sculptos universos terminos tuos, in lapides desiderabiles omnes filios tuos doctos a Domino (Isai. LIV, 12). Omnipotens enim Deus sanctae Ecclesiae propugnacula jaspidem, qui lapis viridis coloris est, posuit, quia praedicatorum illius mentes internae viriditatis amore solidavit, ut transitoria cuncta despiciant, nihil in hoc mundo qui fine clauditur appetant, cuncta ejus gaudia velut arida contemnant. Unde et ipse pastor Ecclesiae, auditores suos ad pascua aeternae viriditatis vocans, de Deo loquitur, dicens: Secundum magnam misericordiam suam regeneravit nos in spem vivam, per resurrectionem Jesu Christi ex mortuis, in haereditatem incorruptibilem et incontaminatam et immarcessibilem, conservatam in coelis (I Petr. I, 3, 4).

4. Hujus sanctae Ecclesiae portae in sculptos lapides ponuntur, quia hi, per quorum nos vocem ad vitam aeternam ingredimur, sancta opera quae divinitus praecepta sunt, dum in semetipsis ostenderent, quasi in se sculpta tenuerunt. Portae etenim non sculptae, sed purae essent, si vocem quidem promerent, sed sancta in se opera non demonstrarent. At ubi secundum hoc se ostendunt vivere quod loquuntur, et portae sunt, quia intus ducunt; et sculptae, quia vivendo custodiunt quae aliis loquuntur. Hujus sanctae Ecclesiae universos terminos in lapides desiderabiles positos videmus, dum in ea fideles quosque fortes in fide et charitate conspicimus. Qui, ut quos dixerit lapides demonstraret, adjunxit: Omnes filios tuos doctos a Domino (Isai. LIV, 13). Quod ergo Isaias universos terminos Ecclesiae lapides desiderabiles vidit, hoc Ezechiel pavimentum lapide stratum per circuitum esse perhibuit, quia adhuc de gazophylaciis subdit: IBID. — Triginta gazophylacia in circuitu pavimenti.

5. Denarius numerus pro perfectione semper accipitur, quia in decem praeceptis legis custodia continetur. Activa etenim ac contemplativa vita simul in Decalogi mandatis conjuncta est, quia in eo et amor Dei, et amor servari proximi jubetur. Amor quippe Dei ad contemplativam, amor vero proximi pertinet ad activam. Sed unusquisque doctor, ut in activam vitam plene se dilatet, atque in contemplativam vigilanter surgat, in sanctae Trinitatis fide debet esse perfectus. Unde et eadem gazophylacia triginta esse commemorantur, ut cum denarius ter ducitur, vita et lingua doctoris in Trinitate solidetur.

6. Sed hac in re illud nobis est vigilanter intuendum, quod propheta, dum gazophylacia descripsisset, adjunxit: Pavimentum per circuitum. Atque inferius subjunxit: Gazophylacia in circuitu pavimenti. Quatenus et gazophylacia in circuitu pavimenti, et pavimentum in circuitu gazophylaciorum esse videatur. Pavimentum quippe et gazophylacia eo sunt ordine distincta, ut gazophylacia inter pavimentum et pavimentum inter gazophylacia fuerit stratum. Non hoc, fratres, sine magno mysterio est, quod in circuitu gazophylaciorum dicitur esse pavimentum, et in circuitu pavimenti narrantur esse gazophylacia. Habet enim pavimentum in circuitu gazophylacia, quia vitam audientium erudit quotidie et custodit lingua doctorum. Doctores etenim boni in sanctae eruditionis verbis modo fomentis dulcedinis, modo asperitate increpationis invigilant, ut auditorum suorum vitam a vitiis defendant. Sed habent ipsa quoque gazophylacia in circuitu pavimentum, quia saepe etiam doctorum cor vitiorum tentationibus tangitur, ut modo elevetur jactationis superbia, modo irae stimulis inflammetur. Sed cum bonorum auditorum vitam considerant, eamque profecisse suis exhortationibus pensant, erubescunt tales non esse quales auctore Deo per se conspiciunt alios factos esse, et ante se in mente stabiliunt quam plene in culpam labantur. Nam cum ipsa sua doctoribus verba ad memoriam redeunt, erubescunt non servare quod dicunt. Unde per Salomonem quoque dicitur: Anima laborantis laborat sibi, quia compulit eum os suum (Prov. XVI, 26). Os enim nostrum nos compellit ad laborem, quando per hoc quod dicimus a vitiis refrenamur, quia turpe nimis est ibi nos negligendo cadere, unde praedicando conati sumus alios levare. Habent ergo gazophylacia in circuitu pavimentum, quia doctorum magna custodia est vita venerabilis auditorum. Et suus eis sermo fit in adjutorium, quia erubescunt pulsantibus vitiis non resistere, qui contra vitia alios armaverunt.

7. Quia enim quandiu in hac vita vivimus, contra malignos spiritus quid aliud quam in acie stamus? sicut praediximus, doctoris animus forsitan aliqua elatione pulsatur. Sed sive ne ipse pereat, sive ne per exemplum suum alios ad perditionem trahat, vigilanter se et festine circumspicit, in cogitationibus remordet; adducta auditorum suorum vita ad memoriam, semetipsum humiliat, et quibus praevalet modis agit ne elatio principetur in mente, ne dominetur in opere. Scriptum quippe est: Initium omnis peccati superbia (Eccl. X, 15). Quis ergo erit ante Dei oculos fructus boni operis, si ex radice putruit elationis? Saepe, ut praedictum est, ejus animus tentatur ex ira; sed citius se ad se circumspiciendo recolligit, et disciplinae se pondere deprimens agit ne motus animi transeat in sermone, ne erumpat in voce. Fitque ut ira perturbati animi, ubi per negligentiam oritur, ibi per judicium suffocata moriatur. Qua ex re agitur ut ex concepta culpa animus virtutem pariat, quia etsi se fortiter custodire noluit ne ad motum surgeret, se tamen in commotione fortiter vicit. Unde bene per Salomonem dicitur: Melior est patiens viro forti, et qui dominatur animo suo expugnatore urbium (Prov. XVI, 32). Recte autem expugnatori urbium patiens praefertur, quia in illa actione victoriae homo victor est hominum, in hac autem mansuetudine patientiae animus victor est sui. Sequitur: VERS. 28. — Et pavimentum in fronte portarum secundum longitudinem portarum erat inferius.

8. Si portarum longitudinem ad locum referimus in quo portae fuerant constructae, secundum longitudinem portarum pavimentum erat inferius, quia quantum tenere locus portarum poterat, tantum tendebatur et pavimentum quod erat inferius. Longitudo ergo pavimenti a portis non erat dissimilis, sed tamen aequalitas pavimenti non erat cum portis. Quid est ergo quod pavimentum cum portis longum similiter erat, sed aequale non erat, nisi quod longe distat vita populorum a vita docentium? Quia etsi ad regna coelestia tendentes eamdem longanimitatem spei habent, eadem tamen vivendi studia non habent. Tendatur ergo pavimentum similiter in longum, quia ipsam fidem, ipsam spem in se retinent auditores, quam habere certum est praedicatores. Sed pavimentum inferius jaceat, ut omnes auditores praedicatores suos longe a suis meritis excellere cognoscant. Sin vero longitudinem portarum ipsam, sicut superius diximus, earum altitudinem intelligere debemus, dum, sicut paulo post scriptum est, ad portas gradibus ascendebatur, tanto pavimentum jacet inferius quanto unaquaeque porta surgit in altitudinem. Quia quanto sanctior est vita doctoris, tanto fit humilior sensus audientis. Et semetipsum despicit, dum praedicatoris sui vitam in magnam surgere altitudinem perpendit. Imitari etenim bona ejus alia forsitan potest, alia non potest. In quibus praevalet, proficit; in quibus minime praevalet, ad humilitatem crescit. Et hoc ipsum ergo ei in provectu est, quod ei imitabile ad provectum non est.

9. Ecce enim si praedicatorum nostrorum ea quae legimus dicta et facta pensamus, in quantam altitudinem surrexerint portae cognoscimus. Ut enim taceamus de ostensione signorum, loquamur de virtutibus cordium. Certe Paulus, qui se legi mortuum per legem dicit, quia ut in Christum crederet, ei hoc et lex ipsa praedicavit (Rom. II, 10), magno fidei ardore succensus, praecepta legis tenere carnaliter noluit, circumcisionem in gentibus fieri vetuit. Et cum Petrus apostolus servari adhuc in circumcisione legis consuetudinem vellet, ei in faciem restitit, eumque hac in re fuisse reprehensibilem dicit (Galat. II, 11). Et hoc ejus studium, discipulis loquens, non solum culpam, sed, quod est majus, hypocrisim, id est simulationem, nominat, dicens: Cum venisset Petrus Antiochiam, in faciem ei restiti, quia reprehensibilis erat (Ibid., 11). Et paulo post: Et simulationi ejus consenserunt caeteri Judaei (Ibid., 13). Idem vero apostolorum primus cum multa discipulos admoneret, atque a quibusdam detrahi de Pauli scriptis agnosceret, dicit: Sicut charissimus frater noster Paulus secundum datam sibi sapientiam scripsit vobis, loquens in eis de his in quibus sunt quaedam difficilia intellectu, quae indocti et instabiles depravant, sicut caeteras scripturas, ad suam ipsorum perditionem (II Pet. III, 1). Ecce Paulus in Epistolis suis scripsit Petrum reprehensibilem, et ecce Petrus in Epistolis suis asserit Paulum in his quae scripserat, admirandum. Certe enim nisi legisset Petrus Pauli Epistolas, non laudasset. Si autem legit, quia illic ipse reprehensibilis diceretur invenit. Amicus ergo veritatis laudavit etiam quod reprehensus est, atque ei et hoc ipsum placuit, quia in his non placuerat quae aliter quam debuerat sensit. Seque etiam minori fratri ad consensum dedit, atque in eadem re factus est sectator minoris sui, ut etiam in hoc praeiret, quatenus qui primus erat in apostolatus culmine esset primus et in humilitate. Pensate ergo, fratres charissimi, in quo mentis vertice stetit qui illas Epistolas laudavit in quibus scriptum se vituperabilem invenit. Quae illa mansuetudo tanta esse potuit, quae quies animi, quae soliditas mentis, atque imperturbatio cogitationis? Ecce a minore suo reprehenditur, et reprehendi non dedignatur. Non ad memoriam revocat quod primus in apostolatum vocatus sit, non quod claves regni coelestis acceperit, non quod peccata quaecunque in terra solveret, essent soluta et in coelo (Matth. IV, 18; XVI, 19, seq.), non quod in mare pedibus ambulavit (Matth. XIV, 29), non quod paralyticos in Jesu nomine jubendo erexerat (Act. IX, 33), non quod aegros corporis sui umbra sanaverat (Ibid. V, 15), non quod mentientes verbo occiderat (Ibid. V, 10), non quod mortuos oratione suscitabat (Ibid. IX, 40). Ne igitur increpationis verba dedignaretur audire, omnia dona quae acceperat quasi a memoria repulit, ut unum fortiter humilitatis donum teneret. Quis rogo nostrum, si vel extremum aliquod signum fecisset a minori fratre increpatus, increpationis verba patienter audiret? Nihil enim signi fecimus, et si quis nos fortasse de actione nostra reprehenderit, statim intumescimus, magnos quosdam nos tacite cogitamus, virtutes nobis ad animum reducimus, etiam quas non habemus. At contra Petrus cum virtutibus humilis in reprehensione permansit, sed porta surrexit in altitudinem. Hanc autem tantam mansuetudinem nos imitari non possumus; sed quia pavimentum sumus, longe inferius jacemus.

10. Sunt vero nonnulli qui non Petrum apostolorum principem, sed quemdam alium eo nomine qui a Paulo sit reprehensus accipiunt. Qui si Pauli studiosius verba legissent, ista non dicerent. Dicturus etenim Paulus: Cum venisset Petrus Antiochiam, ei in faciem restiti (Galat. II, 11), ut de quo Petro loqueretur ostenderet, in ipso suae narrationis initio praemisit, dicens: Creditum est mihi Evangelium praeputii, sicut Petro circumcisionis. Qui enim operatus est Petro in apostolatum circumcisionis, operatus est et mihi inter gentes (Ibid., 7, 8). Patet ergo de quo Petro Paulus loquitur, quem et apostolum nominat, et praefuisse Evangelio circumcisionis narrat.

11. Et fuerunt quidam qui secundam Petri Epistolam, in qua Epistolae Pauli laudatae sunt, ejus dicerent non fuisse. Sed si ejusdem Epistolae verba pensare voluissent, longe aliter sentire potuerant. In ea quippe scriptum est: Voce delapsa ad eum hujuscemodi a magnifica gloria: Hic est Filius meus dilectus, in quo mihi complacui (II Petr. I, 17). Atque subjungitur: Et hanc vocem nos audivimus, cum essemus cum ipso in monte sancto (Ibid., 18). Legant itaque Evangelium, et protinus agnoscent quia cum vox ista de coelo venit, Petrus apostolus in monte cum Domino stetit. Ipse ergo hanc Epistolam scripsit qui hanc vocem in monte de Domino audivit.

12. Sed quia pauca de Petro diximus, nunc si placet, ad Pauli mansuetudinem convertamur, et pensemus si possumus ille qui tanti ardoris est in zelo praedicationis, ut apostolorum quoque primo non parceret, quantae fuerit mansuetudinis in studio longanimitatis. Taceamus autem quod ter virgis caesus est, quia semel lapidatus est, quia ter naufragium fecit, quia nocte ac die in profundo maris fuit, quia a Judaeis quinquies quadragenas una minus accepit (II Cor. XI, 2, 3, seq.). Minus enim animum ad iracundiam commovent ea mala, quae nobis ab apertis adversariis irrogantur: hoc plus solet dolere, quod a propriis patimur. Unde et per Psalmistam ipsa Veritas contra traditorem suum loquitur, dicens: Quoniam si inimicus meus maledixisset mihi, supportassem utique. Tu vero unanimis dux meus, et notus meus, qui simul mecum dulces capiebas cibos (Psal. LIV, 15). Pensemus ergo, si possumus, Paulus apostolus, qui tantum patiens inter persecutores, quantum mansuetus inter discipulos fuerit. Certe Corinthum veniens, ab idolorum servitio Corinthios retraxit, quis esset verus Deus innotuit, et aeternae eis vitae gaudia praedicavit. Et cum magnam multitudinem populi in fide collegisset, tantam illic inopiam pertulit, ut victus sui gravi necessitate laboraret. Et panem terrae a discipulis non accepit, quibus panem coeli praedicavit. Insistebat verbo pro vita audientium, insistebat labori manuum pro vita corporis sui (I Cor. IV, 12; I Thess. II, 9; II Thess. III, 8). De terris quoque aliis stipendia ei a discipulis mittebantur, ut Corinthiis praedicare sufficeret. Ipse quippe ad eosdem Corinthios post per Epistolam loquitur, dicens: Cum essem apud vos, et egerem, nulli onerosus fui; nam quod mihi deerat suppleverunt fratres qui venerunt a Macedonia (II Cor. XI, 9). Quibus ad magnum quoque improperium praemisit, dicens: Alias Ecclesias spoliavi, accipiens stipendium ad ministerium vestrum (Ibid. 8). Pensemus ergo, si possumus, cujus hoc mansuetudinis fuerit, panem spiritus praedicare, et panem carnis non accipere; corda audientium de divitiis aeternis instruere, et inter eosdem discipulos fideles et abundantes fame laborare; inter satiatos pati inopiam, nec tamen quod patiebatur dicere; quae patiebatur non dicere, nec tamen dolere; videre dura erga se corda auditorum tenacium, nec a praedicatione desistere. Nam sicut apostolorum Acta testantur, anno et sex mensibus continue in eadem civitate praedicavit (Act. XVIII, 11). Cumque ab eisdem Corinthiis recessisset, ad eos postmodum scripsit quod apud eos positus pertulit (II Cor. XI, 23 seq.). Quare autem hoc eis cum inter eos viveret, nunquam dixit? Ne scilicet quod erga eum factum ex bona voluntate non fuerat, fieret ex jussione; et cum innotesceret eorum misericordia, remaneret voluntas ignota. Quare autem hoc postmodum longe positus scribit? Ne omnimodo discipuli incorrecti remanerent, et quales magistro in tenacia fuerant, aliis quoque fratribus tales essent. Vere in hoc Paulus, vere magister gentilium, sua negligens, aliena curans, implevit quod praedicaverat: Nemo quod suum est quaerat, sed quod alterius. Et non quae sua sunt singuli cogitantes, sed ea quae aliorum (I Cor. X, 24). Quanta itaque ista mansuetudinis virtus est? Quanta tranquillitas spiritus? Quis autem nostrum, si unum hujus mundi divitem ad omnipotentis Dei servitium convertisset, seque egere conspiceret, et illum sibi vitae subsidia non praebere, non protinus de ejus vita desperasset? Quis non incassum laborasse se diceret! Quis non ab ejus exhortatione obmutesceret, quem in semetipsum primum ferre fructum boni operis non videret?

13. Sed Paulus per mansuetudinem in virtutum vertice solidatus perstitit, praedicavit, dilexit, et bonum quod coeperat explevit, atque portando et persistendo discipulorum corda ad misericordiam perduxit (II Cor. IX, 3, 4, seq.). Nam eorum profectum postmodum scire se indicans, in eadem Epistola scribit: De ministerio quod fit in sanctos ex abundantia est mihi scribere vobis. Scio enim promptum animum vestrum, pro quo de vobis glorior apud Macedonas, quoniam Achaia parata est ab anno priore, et vestra aemulatio provocavit plurimos (Ibid., 1). De quibus rursus ait: Qui non solum facere, sed et velle coepistis ab anno priore (II Cor. VIII, 10). In quibus enim non tam opera quam pia vota requirebat, in eis procul dubio plus laudat pia vota quam opera. Notandum tamen est quia habet improperium haec ipsa consolatio, cum dicitur: Ab anno priore. Bonum quidem, sed tarde fecerant, atque ideo hoc magister non sine reprehensione laudabat. Medicus quippe est, medicamentum vulneri apponit, quod et ea quae purgata sunt refovet et ea quae putrida inveniuntur mordet. Sed haec tolerando atque praedicando, explevit quod coepit. Et mira longanimitatis virtute discipulorum duritiam emollivit ad misericordiae viscera, quia longitudo portae surrexit in altitudinem. Sed infirmi nos ad imitandum tantae mansuetudinis longanimitatem idonei non sumus, quia videlicet pavimentum sumus, et despecti in nostris moribus jacemus.

14. Ecce autem dum de duobus ducibus coelestis exercitus loquor, martyr quoque Stephanus memoriae occurrit, qui tentus pro Creatoris sui nomine, et in medium persecutorum deductus, imperterritus stetit, fiducialiter docuit, et ex zelo veritatis persecutores suos fortiter increpavit, dicens: Vos semper Spiritui sancto restitistis (Act. VII, 51). Cumque illi ad lapides currerent, et eum lapidibus necarent, flexo genu pro eisdem persecutoribus oravit, dicens: Domine, ne statuas illis hoc peccatum (Ibid., 59). Quae itaque ista virtus est, sic zelo fervere, ut eis a quibus tenebatur perfidiae suae improperia fiducialiter diceret; et sic diligere, ut in morte quoque pro eis a quibus moriebatur oraret? Sic quippe ex zelo inferbuit, ac si mansuetudinis nihil haberet; et sic mansuetus in eorum dilectione perstitit, ac si contra eos fervoris nihil habuisset. Pensemus inter haec ubi nostrae conscientiae reatus jacet. Quis enim nostrum, si saltem verbi contumeliam a proximo acceperit, non statim contumeliam reddit, non funditus commovetur, non ad odium erumpit, non praeceptum dilectionis obliviscitur? Sed hoc beatus Stephanus ex omnipotentis Dei gratia potuit, quia surgens in altitudinem porta fuit. Hoc nos miseri nostra virtute imitari non possumus, quia longe inferius sicut pavimentum jacemus.

15. Quid autem nos in vita sanctorum de nostra admiratione dicimus, cum ipsi quoque antiqui patres praedicatorum sanctae Ecclesiae vitam considerantes, valde admirati sunt? An non eorum vitam Psalmista admiratus est, cum dicebat: Mihi autem nimis honorati sunt amici tui, Deus, nimis confortatus est principatus eorum (Psal. CXXXVIII, 17)? Quod de quibus ejus amicis dicat Evangelium interroga, in quo Veritas praedicatoribus dicit: Vos amici mei estis (Joan. XV, 14). Isaias quoque eorum vitam intuens, ait: Qui sunt isti qui ut nubes volant, et quasi columbae ad fenestras suas (Isai. LX, 8)? Recte autem praedicatores sancti nubes appellati sunt, quia verbis pluunt, miraculis coruscant. Qui volare quoque ut nubes dicuntur, quia et in terra viventes extra terram fuerunt per omne quod egerunt. Unde et per quamdam nubem dicitur: In carne enim ambulantes non secundum carnem militamus (II Cor. X, 3)? Priores enim patres conjugiis utebantur, filios procreabant, substantias possidebant, curis rei familiaris intendebant. Istos autem per prophetiae jam spiritum praevidentes substantias deserere, conjugia non appetere, filios non procreare, nil in terra quaerere, nihil possidere, non eos per terram velut homines ambulantes, sed ut nubes volantes nominant. Velant etenim, quia mente ea quae sunt coelestia contemplantur. Qui terram quasi non tangunt, quia in ipsa nil appetunt. Qui et ad fenestras suas quasi columbae sunt, quia per mansuetudinis suae spiritum in hoc mundo per oculos nil concupiscunt. Consideremus ergo quantae altitudinis istae spiritalis aedificii portae sunt, quas et spiritales patres admirantur. Quantum itaque nos in earum admiratione humiliari necesse est, qui pavimentum sumus? Sed quia sub longitudinis appellatione altitudinem portarum audivimus, nunc aliquid de earum latitudine cognoscamus. Sequitur: VERS. 29. — Et mensus est latitudinem a facie portae inferioris, usque ad fontem atrii interioris extrinsecus, centum cubitos ad Orientem et ad Aquilonem.

16. In quibus verbis si portam aditum accipimus, quo ad cognitionem Domini intramus, porta inferior fides est, atrium vero interius contemplatio. Habet autem porta inferior latitudinem in facie, quia videlicet fides per charitatis suae amplitudinem habet eam quae videtur a proximis operationem. Quam dum fortiter a perfectioribus agi conspicimus, nos, qui in bonis actibus angustamur, exempla per eos magnae operationis accipimus. Et unaquaeque sancta actio quasi quaedam nobis fit latitudo itineris, quae prius erat angustia difficultatis. Habet quoque atrium interius frontem, quia contemplativa vita per quaedam signa desideriorum et gemituum ostendit quantum intus videat quae tantum amat. Denarius autem numerus per semetipsum multiplicatus in centenarium surgit. Unde recte per centenarium magna perfectio designatur, sicut de electis Veritas dicit: Omnis qui relinquit domum, vel fratres, aut sorores, aut patrem, aut matrem, aut uxorem, aut filios, aut agros propter nomen meum, centuplum accipiet, et vitam aeternam possidebit (Matth. XIX, 29). Neque etenim sanctus quisque ideo terrena deserit, ut haec possidere in hoc mundo multiplicius possit, quia quisquis terreno studio terram relinquit, terram non relinquit sed appetit. Nec qui unam uxorem deserit centum recepturus est; sed per centenarium numerum perfectio designatur, postquam etiam vita aeterna promittitur, quia quisquis pro Dei nomine temporalia atque terrena contemnit, et hic perfectionem mentis recipit, ut jam ea non appetat quae contemnit, et in sequenti saeculo ad aeternae vitae gloriam pervenit. Centies itaque recipit quod dedit, qui perfectionis spiritum accipiens, terrenis non indiget, etiamsi haec non habet. Ille enim pauper est, qui eget eo quod non habet. Nam qui et non habens habere non appetit, dives est. Paupertas quippe in inopia mentis est, non in quantitate possessionis. Nam cui cum paupertate bene convenit, non est pauper. Mensus est ergo vir latitudinem a facie portae inferioris, usque ad frontem atrii interioris extrinsecus, centum cubitos, quia Redemptor noster quotidie per magistros atque doctores in mensura perfectionis metitur vitam fidelium, vel in specie boni operis per fidem, vel in sanctis desideriis per contemplationem.

17. Multi etenim videntur in fide positi magna operari, sed in centum cubitis non mensurantur, quia per ipsa quae faciunt terrenam gloriam quaerunt. Et quidam videntur per abstinentiam cruciari, gemitibus insistere; sed eorum mensura ad centum cubitos minime ducitur, quia in his quae agunt ab humano judicio favores requirunt. Quis ergo est qui per centum cubitos mensuratur, nisi is cujus bona operatio recta intentione utitur, ut in eo quod agit non ad terrena lucra appetenda aut ad laudes transitorias reflectatur?

18. Ecce enim misericordiam proximis exhibere, possessa largiri, cum celeritate indigenti tribuere, latitudo in facie portae inferioris est. Sed si tua dans aliena non appetas, si terrenam gloriam de ipso bono opere non requiras, recte in centenario numero, id est in perfectione mensuraris. Nam qui videtur dare misericorditer propria, et rapit forsitan violenter aliena, iste adhuc quae sit via perfectionis ignorat, nec cognovit unde ad perfectionem tenditur, quia nec ipsum ejus initium invenit. Prius enim appetitum evellere a mente debuit, et postea quae jure possidet largiri. Unde scriptum est: Declina a malo et fac bonam (Psal. XXXVI, 37). Quid enim potest esse boni quod facit, qui necdum a malo declinavit? Et sunt quidam qui, sicut dictum est, ab alimentis abstinent, carnem cruciant, sed tamen si pulsati fuerint, cognoscuntur quia ad mundi gloriam anhelent. Isti frontem atrii interioris ostendunt, sed per centum cubitos non mensurantur.

19. Hi ergo in numero perfectionis sunt, de quibus per Paulum dicitur: Qui carnem suam crucifixerunt cum vitiis et concupiscentiis (Galat. V, 24). Et notandum quia non dicitur quod intrinsecus, sed extrinsecus ista mensurantur, quia videlicet Redemptor noster cum per nos facta hominum vel approbat, vel judicat, non intrinsecus, sed extrinsecus metitur. Unde et per Evangelium dicit: Ex fructibus eorum cognoscetis eos (Matth. VII, 16). Qui enim per hoc quod videmus cognoscimus operantis animum quem non videmus, sive latitudinem quae in facie portae est inferioris, sive frontem atrii interioris extrinsecus metimur. Cum enim alios conspicimus largiri eleemosynam, afflictis concurrere, oppressis subvenire, nihil eos in hoc mundo gloriae quaerere, nullis hujus mundi compendiis inhiare, atque alios videmus carnem domare, lacrymis insistere, verbis coelestibus occupari, nihil transitorii honoris appetere, quid aliud debemus nisi eos perfectos esse credere, sanctos aestimare? Quia ergo per hoc quod aspicimus eos perfectos esse videmus, eorum vitam per centum cubitos extrinsecus metimur.

20. Et quia multi in Judaea, plerique vero in gentilitate positi, ad hanc perfectionis summam pervenerunt, recte subjungitur: Ad Orientem et ad Aquilonem. Judaicus etenim populus Oriens jure dictus est, de cujus carne ille est natus, qui Sol justitiae vocatur. De quo per prophetam dicitur: Vobis autem qui timetis Dominum, orietur Sol justitiae (Malac. IV, 2). Per Aquilonem vero gentilitas figuratur, quae diu in perfidiae suae frigore torpuit, et in cujus corde ille regnavit, qui, attestante propheta, apud semetipsum dixit: Ponam sedem meam ad Aquilonem (Isai. XIV, 13). Quia itaque incarnatus omnipotens Deus alios perfectos ex Judaea, alios ex gentilitate perfectos intra sanctam Ecclesiam fecit, centum cubitos non solum ad Orientem mensus est, sed etiam ad Aquilonem.

21. Sed quia sub Aquilonis nomine de gentilitate sermo se intulit, considerare libet quantum super nos effusa sunt viscera Creatoris nostri. Omnes enim nos ex gentilitate venimus. Antiqui parentes nostri lignis et lapidibus servierunt, et, derelinquentes Deum a quo facti sunt, deos venerati sunt quos fecerunt. Nos autem per omnipotentis Dei gratiam ad lucem de tenebris educti sumus. Recolamus ergo de quibus tenebis venimus, ut de luce quam accepimus gratias agamus. Neque enim divinam misericordiam intelligit qui suae miseriae memor non est. Unde et per Psalmistam Deo dicitur: Mirifica misericordias tuas, Domine, qui salvos facis sperantes in te (Psal. XVI, 7). Tunc enim nobis Dei misericordiae mirae fiunt, cum nobis ad memoriam miseriae nostrae revocantur, quia, recolentes quid fuimus, intelligimus cui debemus quod sumus. Cantemus itaque cum gaudio Creatori nostro, quia de servitio creaturae colla mentis excussimus. Gaudeamus in nobis impletum esse quod per Isaiam dictum est: Et frenum erroris quod erat in maxillis populorum, canticum erit vobis, sicut vox sanctificatae solemnitatis (Isai. XXX, 23, 29). Frenum quippe erroris maxillas populorum constrinxerat, quando idolorum errore obligata gentilitas Deo vero confessionis laudem dare nesciebat. Sed hoc ipsum erroris frenum jam nobis in canticum versum est, cum gaudendo psallimus atque cantamus: Omnes dii gentium daemonia, Dominus autem coelos fecit (Psal. XCV, 5). Et rursum: Simulacra gentium argentum et aurum, opera manuum hominum: os habent, et non loquentur; oculos habent, et non videbunt; aures habent, et non audient; nares habent, et non odorabunt; manus habent, et non palpabunt; pedes habent, et non ambulabunt (Psal.

CXIII, 29, seq.). Qui itaque haec omnipotenti Domino psallendo dicimus, ipsum erroris nostri frenum, quod a laude Dei ora nostra ligaverat, vero Domino canticum fecimus. Bene autem dicitur: Sicut nox sanctificatae solemnitatis (Isai. XXX, 29), quia dum confessionis laudem Deo reddimus, in sanctificata solemnitate gaudemus. Respondeamus ergo moribus tantae misericordiae Redemptoris nostri, et qui lucem cognovimus, pravorum operum tenebras declinemus.

22. Quid est jam, rogo, quod in hoc mundo libeat? Ubique luctus aspicimus, undique gemitus audimus. Destructae urbes, eversa sunt castra, depopulati agri, in solitudinem terra redacta est. Nullus in agris incola, pene nullus in urbibus habitator remansit; et tamen ipsae parvae generis humani reliquiae adhuc quotidie et sine cessatione feriuntur. Et finem non habent flagella coelestis justitiae, quia nec inter flagella correctae sunt actionis culpae. Alios in captivitatem duci, alios detruncari, alios interfici videmus. Quid est ergo quod in hac vita libeat, fratres mei? Si et talem adhuc mundum diligimus, non jam gaudia, sed vulnera amamus. Ipsa autem quae aliquando mundi domina esse videbatur qualis remanserit Roma conspicimus. Immensis doloribus multipliciter attrita, desolatione civium, impressione hostium, frequentia ruinarum; ita ut in ea completum esse videamus quod contra urbem Samariam per hunc eumdem prophetam longe superius dicitur: Pone ollam, pone, inquam, et mitte in ea aquam, et congere frusta ejus in ea (Ezech. XXIV, 4). Et paulo post: Efferbuit coctio ejus, et discocta sunt ossa illius in medio ejus (Ibid., 5). Atque iterum: Congere ossa, quae igne succendam: consumentur carnes, et coquetur universa compositio, et ossa tabescent. Pone quoque eam super prunas vacuam, ut incalescat, et liquefiat aes ejus (Ibid., 10, 11). Tunc enim nobis olla posita est, cum haec est civitas constituta. Tunc in eam aqua missa est, et frusta ejus congesta sunt, quando ad eam undique populi confluebant, qui velut aqua calens actionibus mundi fervescerent, et quasi frusta carnium in ipso suo fervore liquarentur. De qua bene dicitur: Efferbuit coctio ejus, et discocta sunt ossa ejus in medio illius, quia prius quidem in ea vehementer incaluit actio gloriae saecularis, sed postmodum ipsa gloria cum suis sequacibus defecit. Per ossa etenim potentes saeculi, per carnes vero populi designantur, quia sicut carnes portantur ossibus, ita per potentes saeculi infirmitas regitur populorum. Sed ecce jam de illa omnes hujus saeculi potentes ablati sunt; ossa ergo excocta sunt. Ecce populi defecerunt, carnes ejus liquefactae sunt. Dicatur itaque: Congere ossa, quae igne succendam; consumentur carnes, et coquetur universa compositio ejus, et ossa tabescent. Ubi enim senatus? Ubi jam populus? Contabuerunt ossa, consumptae sunt carnes, omnis in ea saecularium dignitatum fastus exstinctus est. Excocta est universa compositio ejus. Et tamen ipsos nos paucos qui remansimus adhuc quotidie gladii, adhuc quotidie innumerae tribulationes premunt. Dicatur ergo: Pone quoque eam super prunas vacuam. Quia enim senatus deest, populus interiit, et tamen in paucis qui sunt dolores et gemitus quotidie multiplicantur, jam vacua ardet Roma. Quid autem ista de hominibus dicimus, cum, ruinis crebrescentibus, ipsa quoque destrui aedificia videmus? Unde apte de civitate jam vacua subditur: Incalescat, et liquefiat aes ejus. Jam enim et ipsa olla consumitur, in qua prius et carnes et ossa consumebantur, quia postquam defecerunt homines, etiam parietes cadunt. Ubi autem sunt qui in ejus aliquando gloria laetabantur? Ubi eorum pompa? Ubi superbia? Ubi frequens et immoderatum gaudium?

23. Impletum est in ea quod contra destructam Niniven per prophetam dicitur: Ubi est habitaculum leonum, et pascua catulorum leonum (Nahum. II, 11)? An ejus duces ac principes leones non erant, qui, per diversas mundi provincias discurrentes, praedam saeviendo et interficiendo rapiebant? Hic leonum catuli inveniebant pascua, quia pueri, adolescentes, juvenes saeculares, et saecularium filii huc undique concurrebant, cum proficere in hoc mundo voluissent. Sed jam ecce desolata, ecce contrita, ecce gemitibus oppressa est. Jam nemo ad eam currit, ut in hoc mundo proficiat; jam nullus potens et violentus remansit, qui opprimendo praedam diripiat. Dicamus ergo: Ubi est habitaculum leonum, et pascua catulorum leonum? Contigit ei quod de Judaea novimus per prophetam dictum: Dilata calvitium tuum sicut Aquila (Mich. I, 16). Calvitium quippe hominis in solo capite fieri solet, calvitium vero Aquilae in toto fit corpore, quia cum valde senuerit, plumae ejus ac pennae ex omnibus membris illius cadunt. Calvitium ergo suum sicut Aquila dilatat, quia plumas perdidit, quae populum amisit. Alarum quoque pennae occiderunt, cum quibus volare ad praedam consueverat, quia omnes potentes ejus exstincti sunt, per quos aliena rapiebat (Joan. Diac., l. IV, c. 66).

24. Haec autem quae de Romanae urbis contritione dicimus, in cunctis facta mundi civitatibus scimus. Alia etenim loca clade desolata sunt, alia gladio consumpta, alia fame cruciata, alia terrae hiatibus absorpta. Despiciamus ergo ex toto animo hoc praesens saeculum vel exstinctum; finiamus mundi desideria saltem cum mundi fine: imitemur bonorum facta quae possumus. Apud Orientem enim et Aquilonem multi sunt qui pro perfectione vitae centum cubitis mensurantur. Ex Judaea etenim et gentilitate, sicut dictum est, ad sanctitatis culmen excreverunt. Quamvis intelligi per Orientem et Aquilonem etiam justi et peccatores possint. Oriens quippe non immerito justi nominantur, qui, sicut in luce fidei nati sunt, in innocentia perstiterunt. Per Aquilonem vero recte peccatores accipimus, qui mentis frigore dilapsi sub peccati sui umbra torpuerunt. Sed quia omnipotentis Dei misericordia etiam tales ad poenitentiam revocat, compunctione et lacrymis lavat, virtutibus ditat, et usque ad perfectionis gloriam sublevat, non solum ad Orientem centum cubiti, sed etiam ad Aquilonem ducuntur, dum cum justis etiam peccatores per dona et poenitentiam ad perfectionem veniunt, largiente Domino nostro Jesu Christo, qui cum Patre et Spiritu sancto vivit et regnat Deus per omnia saecula saeculorum. Amen.

Septem versuum, a 20 ad 27, explicationem complectitur, plurimaque simul exhibet praecepta moralia, de Spiritus sancti donis, gradibusque ad ea ducentibus, de vera perfectione ac de bonorum operum necessitate.

1. Magna legentium debet esse discretio, ut in sacro eloquio cum quilibet unus sermo dicitur, non semper unam eamdemque rem significare credatur, sicut aliquando sol in bono, aliquando vero accipitur in malo. Solis etenim nomine aliquando ipse Redemptor noster signatur, aliquando persecutio. Attestante enim libro Sapientiae, in inferno impii dicturi sunt: Erravimus a via veritatis, et sol justitiae non luxit nobis (Sap. V, 6). Et de jactis seminibus Dominus dicit: Orto sole aruerunt (Matth. XIII, 6), quia videlicet, facta persecutione, in reproborum cordibus praedicationis verba siccantur. Sic leo Dominum signat. Unde scriptum est: Vicit leo de tribu Juda (Apoc. V, 5). Sic leonis nomine diaboli similitudo exprimitur, sicut per primum pastorem dicitur: Adversarius vester diabolus, sicut leo rugiens, circuit quaerens quem devoret (I Petr. V, 8). Sic bovis nomine sapiens designatur. Unde scriptum est: Non junges bovem et asinum (Deut. XXII, 10), id est, sapientem cum stulto in praedicatione non socies. Sic per bovem fatuus figuratur, sicut de eo qui in turpitudine amoris captus est, dicitur: Statimque eam sequitur, quasi bos ductus ad victimam (Prov. VII, 22); id est, sicut fatuus trahitur ad mortem. Haec igitur dixi, ne quia portam significare Dominum, vel praedicatores, vel Scripturam sacram, vel fidem exposui, ubicunque jam in hoc propheta porta legitur signare aliud non credatur. Cum enim de una porta propheta loqueretur, recte fides intellecta est, quia una est omnium electorum fides. Cum vero aliae portae nominantur, intelligi ora praedicatorum possunt, per quae vera vita cognoscitur, et per quae ascenditur ad sacramentorum spiritalium cognitionem. Nam porta per quam significari fidem diximus, notandum nobis est quia inferior appellatur. In hac enim vita dum sumus, quasi in imo positi adhuc inferius tenemur. Et recte inferior porta fides est, quia nobis in terra positis aperit cognitionem Dei. Itaque nunc dicitur: VERS. 20-22. — Portam quoque quae respiciebat viam Aquilonis atrii exterioris mensus est tam in longitudine quam in latitudine. Et thalamos ejus tres hinc, et tres inde; et frontes ejus, et vestibulum ejus secundum mensuram portae prioris: quinquaginta cubitorum longitudinem ejus, et latitudinem viginti et quinque cubitorum. Fenestrae autem ejus, et vestibulum, et sculpturae secundum mensuram portae quae respiciebat ad Orientem; et septem graduum erat ascensus ejus, et vestibulum ante eam.

2. De porta quae respiciebat viam Aquilonis atrii exterioris, ea ipsa replicantur quae jam de porta alia superius dicta sunt, atque alia subjunguntur quae de praedicta porta propheta tacuerat. Ut ergo de his latius disseramus quae necdum discussa sunt, debemus ea quae jam dicta sunt sub brevitate replicare. Porta enim viam Aquilonis respicit, cum praedicator quisque vitam peccatoris agnoscit, eique interiora vitae per verbum praedicationis aperit. Quae porta atrii exterioris dicitur. Exterius quippe est atrium vita praesens, in qua omne quod corporaliter agitur corporaliter etiam videtur. Quae tam in longitudine quam in latitudine mensuratur, quia cum ad fidem peccator ducitur, necesse est ut ejus doctor consideret, vel quantum in longitudinem spei, vel quantum in latitudinem charitatis ex ejus admonitione proficiat. Qui enim ad Deum convertitur, si adhuc bona vitae praesentis sperat, longitudinem non habet, quia brevis est vita in qua spem posuit. Si per terrenarum rerum concupiscentiam, et adhuc per proximi odium coangustatur, latitudinem non habet, quia nescit vel transitoria contemnere, vel se in proximi amore dilatare. Cum vero conversus quisque aeternae vitae gaudia longanimiter sperat, proximorum molestias cum charitate tolerat, et ea quae non habet concupiscere contemnit; longitudinem et latitudinem porta habet, quia gloria praedicatoris est profectus auditoris. Unde quibusdam per magnum praedicatorem dicitur: Gaudium meum et corona mea (Philip. IV, 1). Et rursum: Ecce nunc vivo, si vos statis in Domino (I Thess. III, 8). Atque iterum: Quae est nostra spes aut gaudium? Nonne vos ante Dominum (Ibid., II, 19)? Longitudo ergo et latitudo portae est quae ad Aquilonem respicit, quia cum infidelem quempiam in peccati sui frigore torpentem praedicator ad fidem converterit, per hoc quod eum in longitudinem spei tendit, et in amplitudinem charitatis dilatat, ejus gloriam suam facit. Et quia in cognitione sanctae Trinitatis ex verbo praedicationis auditores quique in ejusdem Trinitatis amore proficiunt, habet haec eadem porta thalamos tres hinc, et tres inde, quia omne quod per Testamentum Novum de Trinitate conditor loquitur, hoc etiam de Testamento Veteri ostendit. Et cor audientium in amore coelestis patriae proficit, ut anima inhaerens Deo quasi sponsa cum sponso in quodam jam thalamo sedeat, atque se a terrenis desideriis funditus avertat.

3. Vel certe, ut longe superius dictum est (Hom. 4, n. 5), quia tres sunt ordines bene viventium, bonorum scilicet conjugatorum, continentium, atque praedicatorum, et quia alii etiam in conjugiis positi amore coelestis patriae anhelant, alii autem spe aeterni gaudii etiam carnem macerant, omnesque actus terrenos refugiunt, et in cura hujus saeculi implicari contemnunt, alii vero et terrena bona despiciunt, et coelestia gaudia praedicant, quae cognoverunt, quid isti nisi in spiritali aedificio thalami sunt in quorum cogitatione et meditatione anima coelesti sponso sociatur? Quos tres bonorum ordines, quia non solum Ecclesia ex gentibus habet, sed aliquando etiam Synagoga habuit, dum magna multitudo spiritalium Redemptoris gratiam ardenter exspectavit, porta aedificii coelestis tres hinc, et tres inde thalamos habet, quia praedicator quisque, cum ad supernam patriam auditorem provocat, et novos patres et veteres anhelasse coelesti desiderio demonstrat. Plus enim plerumque exempla quam ratiocinationis verba compungunt; et cum praedicator dicit quales alii in conjugio, vel in continentia, vel in praedicatione erga omnipotentis Dei amorem in novo testamento fuerint, vel alii quales in veteri, porta quae loquitur ternos ex utroque latere habere se thalamos ostendit. Quae porta habet et frontem, quia sunt in praedicatoris vita aperta opera quae videntur. Habet et ante frontem vestibulum, quia priusquam bona opera insinuet, praedicat fidem, per quam anima humiliter veniens ad bonorum actuum altitudinem sublevetur. Quae cuncta secundum mensuram portae prioris sunt, juxta hoc quod subditur: VERS. 21. — Quia mensus est quinquaginta cubitorum longitudinem ejus, et latitudinem viginti quinque cubitorum.

4. Haec jam superius latius me dixisse meministis (Hom. 5, l. II). Per quinquagenarium enim numerum requiem diximus figurari, quia et quinquagesimus annus veteri populo in requiem datus est, quia appellatus est jubilaeus; et septenarius numerus, per quem hoc omne tempus evolvitur, septies multiplicatus ad quadraginta et novem ducitur. Cui monas additur, quia in unius contemplatione requies aeterna perficitur. Idem ergo quinquagenarius numerus nobis in longitudinem est, quia pervenire ad illam requiem non potest, nisi qui ad eam spem suam modo tendere longanimiter potest. Quia enim per quinquagenarium numerum ad aeternam requiem provocamur, etiam hoc nos omnino instruit quod in tabernaculo decem cortinae jussae sunt fieri, quae haberent ansulas quinquagenas, et circulos aureos quinquagenos a latere et summitate (Exod. XXV, 4, seq.). Cortinae etenim tabernaculi sancti omnes sunt, qui ex diversis virtutum coloribus in sanctae Ecclesiae ornamento proficiunt. Qui et interiora velant, et exteriora omnimodo exornant, quia eorum vita in quantum videtur, ornamentum est; et eorum intellectus intus absconditur, dum coelestia quae in mente servant, et dicere non possunt, in eis aliquo modo velantur. Recte autem decem cortinae sunt, quia per Decalogi custodiam ipsa sanctorum corda profecerunt. Hyacinthinae vero ansulae cortinarum fieri quinquaginta praeceptae sunt. Hyacinthus coeli speciem habet. Ansulae ergo cortinarom sunt praecepta coelestia, in quibus ligantur animae, ut ab inferioribus sublevatae superius pendeant. Quae videlicet ansulae habent et circulos aureos, intellectum scilicet vera sapientia fulgentem. Qui intellectus, quia esse debet per omnia circumspectus, et cautae sollicitudinis vigilantia munitus, recte per circulos designatur.

5. Et notandum quod a latere et summitate jubentur ansulae, vel circuli in cortinis fieri, quia praecepta coelestia et intellectus spiritualis, non solum debet nos sursum in Dei amorem suspendere, sed etiam proximo in charitate sociare. In eo enim quod conditorem nostrum diligimus, quasi per superiores ansulas in aere pendemus. In eo vero quod sicut nosmetipsos proximos amamus, ansulas et circulos a latere habemus, ut cortinae tabernaculi, id est fidelium animae per charitatem conjunctae sint, et non per discordiam divisae. Unde et hic post longitudinem quinquaginta cubitorum protinus latitudo subjungitur viginti et quinque cubitorum, quae videlicet latitudo ad charitatem proximi pertinet. Ipsa enim in fratrum amorem se dilatat, atque erga eos omne quod potest boni operis exercet. Cuncta autem bona opera quae corporaliter fiunt, per quinque corporis sensus exhibentur, videlicet per visum, auditum, tactum, gustum, odoratum. Quinarius vero numerus per semetipsum ductus ad vicesimum et quintum pervenit, quia bona opera cum agi coeperint, per fervorem animum ad augmentum excitant, et per semetipsa multiplicantur. Unde et latitudinem menti faciunt, ut non sit angusta per teporem, sed expansa in bonis actibus per charitatem. Omnis enim torpor teporis angustia est, omnis vero benignitas charitatis, magna latitudo. Nam etsi res desunt quae fortasse indigenti proximo praebeantur, ampla est substantia voluntatis bonae, quae sufficit ad regni retributionem, sicut scriptum est: In terra pax hominibus bonae voluntatis (Luc. II, 14). Sequitur: VERS. 22. — Fenestrae autem ejus, et vestibulum, et sculpturae secundum mensuram portae quae respiciebat ad Orientem.

6. Cuncta haec jam superius latius dicta sunt, et idcirco sermo non debet morosa expositione tardari. Hoc tamen magnopere notandum est, quod porta ad Aquilonem ea omnia habere perhibetur quae porta ad Orientem, fenestras scilicet contemplationis, vestibulum humilitatis, sculpturam bonae operationis. Omnes enim qui per hoc quod Deo in conversatione nati sunt in innocentia perstiterunt, portam ad Orientem habent, quia eis coelestis regni aditus patet a lumine quod acceperunt. Et omnes qui in peccatis postmodum lapsi torporis sui frigore sunt depressi, sed, dum per poenitentiam redeunt, ad amorem coelestis patriae recalescunt, portam ad Aquilonem habent, quia eis etiam post peccati sui frigus coelestis regni aditus per misericordiam patet. Ea ergo habere dicitur porta ad Aquilonem quae habet porta ad Orientem, quia et conversi peccatores sic ditantur virtutibus, sicut illi sunt divites qui cadere in peccatum vitaverunt. Unde et Psalmistae voce per Dominum dicitur: Cinerem sicut panem manducabam (Psal. CI, 10), quia sic poenitentes recipit ut justos. Scriptum quippe est de peccatoribus: Olim in cilicio et cinere poenitentiam egissent (Matth. XI, 21). Cinis ergo sicut panis comeditur, quando ad auctoris sui gratiam peccator per poenitentiam sicut innocens revocatur. Porta igitur ad Aquilonem habet fenestras, habet vestibulum, habet sculpturas, quia cum peccator ad vitam post culpas reducitur, saepe lumen contemplationis accipit, atque de ipsa memoria iniquitatis suae gratiam magnae humilitatis bonae quoque operationis efficaciam sumit, ut omne quod fieri praecipitur, in vita ejus quasi sculptum esse videatur. IBID. — Septem vero graduum erat ascensus ejus, et vestibulum ante eam.

7. Septem gradibus ad portam ascenditur, quia per sancti Spiritus septiformem gratiam aditus nobis vitae coelestis aperitur. Quam septiformem gratiam Isaias in ipso nostro capite, vel in ejus corpore, quod nos sumus, enumerans dicit: Requiescet super eum spiritus sapientiae et intellectus, spiritus consilii et fortitudinis, spiritus scientiae et pietatis, et replebit eum spiritus timoris Domini (Isai. XI, 2). Quos gradus, de coelestibus loquens, descendendo magis quam ascendendo numeravit, videlicet sapientiam, intellectum, consilium, fortitudinem, scientiam, pietatem, timorem. Et cum scriptum sit: Initium sapientiae timor Domini (Prov. IX, 10), constat procul dubio quia a timore ad sapientiam ascenditur, non autem a sapientia ad timorem reditur, quia nimirum perfectam habet sapientia charitatem. Et scriptum est: Perfecta charitas foras mittit timorem (I Joan. IV, 18). Propheta ergo, quia de coelestibus ad ima loquebatur, coepit magis a sapientia, et descendit ad timorem. Sed nos qui a terrenis ad coelestia tendimus, eosdem gradus ascendendo enumeremus, ut a timore ad sapientiam pervenire valeamus. In mente etenim nostra primus ascensionis gradus est timor Domini; secundus, pietas; tertius, scientia; quartus, fortitudo; quintus, consilium; sextus, intellectus; septimus, sapientia. Est enim timor Domini in mente. Sed qualis est iste timor, si cum eo pietas non est? Qui enim misereri proximo ignorat, qui compati ejus tribulationibus dissimulat, hujus timor ante omnipotentis Dei oculos nullus est, quia non sublevatur ad pietatem. Sed saepe pietas per inordinatam misericordiam errare solet, si fortasse pepercerit quae parcenda non sunt. Peccata enim quae feriri gehennae ignibus possunt disciplinae verbere sunt corrigenda. Sed inordinata pietas cum temporaliter parcit, ad aeternum supplicium pertrahit. Ut ergo vera et ordinata sit pietas, ad gradum est alium sublevanda, id est ad scientiam, ut sciat vel quid ex judicio puniat, vel quid ex misericordia dimittat. Sed quid si sciat quid agere quisque debeat, virtutem vero agendi non habeat? Scientia ergo nostra crescat ad fortitudinem, ut cum videt quid agendum sit, hoc agere per mentis fortitudinem possit, ne timore trepidet, et, pavore collapsa, non valeat bona defendere quae sentit. Sed saepe fortitudo si improvida fuerit, et minus contra vitia circumspecta, ipsa sui praesumptione in casum ruit. Ascendat ergo ad consilium, ut praevidendo praemuniat omne quod agere fortiter potest. Sed esse consilium non potest, si intellectus deest, quia qui non intelligit malum quod agentem gravat, quomodo potest bonum solidare quod adjuvat? Itaque a consilio ascendamus ad intellectum. Sed quid si intellectus magno quidem acumine vigilet, et moderari se nesciat per maturitatem? Ab intellectu ergo ascendatur ad sapientiam, ut hoc quod acute intellectus invenit, sapientia mature disponat. Quia igitur per timorem surgimus ad pietatem, per pietatem ad scientiam ducimur, per scientiam ad fortitudinem roboramur, per fortitudinem ad consilium tendimus, per consilium in intellectum proficimus, per intellectum ad maturitatem sapientiae pervenimus, septem gradibus ad portam ascendimus, per quam nobis aditus vitae spiritalis aperitur. Bene autem dicitur quia vestibulum erat ante eam, quia nisi quis prius humilitatem habuerit, ad hos gradus donorum spiritalium non ascendit, sicut scriptum est: Super quem requiescet spiritus meus, nisi super humilem et quietum, et trementem sermones meos (Isai. LXVI, 2). De quo per Psalmistam dicitur: Ascensus in corde ejus disposuit in convalle lacrymarum (Psal. LXXXIII, 6). Convallis quippe humilis locus est, et peccator quisque dum se in lacrymis humiliter affligit in corde, per ascensum virtutum proficit. Qui rursus ait: Emittit fontes in convallibus (Psal. CIII, 10), quia omnipotens Deus dona spiritalis gratiae humilibus praestat.

9. Potest quoque per vestibulum fides intelligi. Ipsa quippe est ante gradus et portam, quia prius ad fidem venimus, ut postmodum per spiritalium donorum gradus coelestis vitae aditum intremus. Non enim per virtutes venitur ad fidem, sed per fidem pertingitur ad virtutes. Cornelius enim centurio, cujus eleemosynae ante baptismum, angelo testante, laudatae sunt, non operibus venit ad fidem, sed fide venit ad opera (Act. X, 1, seq.). Nam et ei per angelum dicitur: Orationes tuae et eleemosynae ascenderunt in conspectu Dei (Ibid., 4). Si enim Deo vero et ante baptismum non crediderat, quem orabat? vel quomodo hunc omnipotens Deus exaudierat, si non ab ipso se in bonis perfici petebat? Sciebat igitur Creatorem omnium Deum, sed quod ejus omnipotens Filius incarnatus esset ignorabat. Neque enim poterat bona agere, nisi ante credidisset. Scriptum namque est: Sine fide impossibile est placere Deo (Hebr. XI, 6). Fidem ergo habuit, cujus orationes et eleemosynae placere Deo potuerunt. Bona autem actione promeruit ut Deum perfecte cognosceret, et incarnationis ejus mysterium crederet, quatenus ad sacramenta baptismatis perveniret. Per fidem ergo venit ad opera, sed per opera est solidatus in fide. Vestibulum itaque ante gradus est, quia qui prius credidit, ipse post virtutum gradibus ad portae aditum ascendit. Sequitur: VERS. 23. — Et porta atrii interioris contra portam Aquilonis, et Orientalem.

10. Hoc loco contra non pro adversitate ponitur, sed pro rectitudine; ita enim porta interioris atrii posita monstrabatur, ut porta Aquilonis et Orientis recto ad eam aditu tenderet. Quid est ergo quod porta interior recto itinere posita contra portam Orientis et Aquilonis ostenditur, nisi hoc, quod aperte datur intelligi, quia sive Judaico et gentili populo, seu justis et peccatoribus, sed post peccata conversis, aeque aditus regni coelestis aperitur? Larga est enim misericordia Creatoris nostri. Et porta interior non solum portam Orientis respicit, sed etiam Aquilonis, quia non solum his qui in innocentia permanent, sed etiam peccatoribus peccata sua poenitendo damnantibus aperiuntur interioris atrii gaudia, ut ineffabilia mysteria patriae coelestis agnoscant, agnoscendo sitiant, sitiendo currant, currendo perveniant. Haec interni gaudii secreta cognoverat, qui dicebat: Sitivit anima mea ad Deum vivum, quando veniam et apparebo ante faciem Dei (Psal. XLI, 3)? Praedicator gentium ad hunc aditum regni coelestis anhelabat, cum dicebat: Cupio dissolvi et esse cum Christo (Philip. I, 23). Haec exsultationis occultae secreta cognoverat sponsa, quae dicebat: Dilectus meus misit manum suam per foramen, et venter meus intremuit ad tactum ejus (Cant. V, 4). Dilectus etenim manum per foramen mittit, quando virtute sua Dominus nostrum animum per subtilem intellectum pulsat. Et venter in tactu illius contremiscit, quia infirmitas nostra per hoc quod coelestis gaudii intellectu tangitur, ipsa sua exsultatione turbatur, et fit in mente pavor cum laetitia, quia jam sentit quid de coelesti gaudio diligat, et adhuc metuit ne non recipiat quod vix tenuiter sentit. Quid igitur restat nisi ut se ad perfectionis vitae cursum dirigant omnes qui illa gaudia patriae coelestis agnoscunt? Unde et hic apte subjungitur: IBID. — Et mensus est a porta usque ad portam centum cubitos.

11. Centenarium numerum, quia decies per denarium ducitur, jam superius diximus esse perfectum (Hom. 6, n. 16). Is itaque qui aditum atrii interioris videt, profecto necesse est ut per vitam perfectionis currat, et a porta inchoationis usque ad consummationis ingressum perveniat. Mensuretur ergo atrium interius, quod a portis exterioribus usque ad portam interiorem tenditur, centum cubitis, ut qui intrare amando coepit, latitudinem perfectionis habeat in mente, quatenus in eo quem diligit hunc nec adversa coangustent, nec prospera elevent, sed, transitoria cuncta despiciens, quousque ad gaudia secreta perveniat, per atrium perfectionis currat. Sunt etenim multi qui jam in septem gradibus aditum portae exterioris intraverunt, juxta quemdam supernae dispensationis modum, per timorem Dei humiles, per pietatis studium misericordes, per scientiam discreti, per mentis fortitudinem liberi, per consilium cauti, per intellectum providi, per sapientiam maturi; sed, adhuc quibusdam necessitatibus obligati, hujus mundi curis inserviunt, et unde jam ex magna parte excusserunt animum, ibi adhuc tenentur inviti. Cumque superimposita terrenae occupationis portant onera, minus in praeceptis coelestibus exercentur. Anhelare medullitus ad aeternam patriam non vacat, ipsa in eis sua aliquo modo desideria languescunt, quia nimirum curis temporalibus praepeditum vera gaudia quae cognovit amare non tantum licet quantum libet. Hi plerumque a jugo mundi colla mentis excutiunt, omnia deserunt, terrenae curae pondera deponunt, atque ut ad coeleste desiderium latius animi sinum laxent, vitam remotam petunt, et in sanctis precibus intenti, sacris meditationibus dediti, quotidiano se fletu afficiunt, et vetustatem cordis igne amoris conflant, atque ad coeleste gaudium accendendo se innovant. Hi plerumque, in ipso suo desiderio accensi, exire jam de carne concupiscunt, atque ad vitam praesentem redire post fletum nolunt. Sed tamen differuntur, ut dilatus amor ex ipsa sua dilatione proficiat, et ardenti desiderio quasi quod negatur crescat. Sic in regione Gerasenorum qui liberatus a legione daemonum fuerat jam cum Domino ire volebat, sed tamen ei dicitur: Revertere in domum tuam, et narra quanta fecerit tibi Dominus (Luc. VIII, 39). Sic sponsa in Canticis canticorum sanctis desideriis anxia loquitur, dicens: In lectulo meo per noctes quaesivi quem diligit anima mea. Quaesivi illum, et non inveni (Cant. III, 1). In lectulo enim dilectum quaerit, quando in ipso suo otio et vacatione quam appetit jam videre anima Dominum concupiscit, jam ad eum exire desiderat, jam carere praesentis vitae tenebris anhelat. Sed quaerit illum, et non invenit, quia quamvis magno amore desiderat adhuc tamen ei non conceditur videre quem amat.

12. Tales itaque sanctorum mentes quid aliud in hoc desiderio faciunt, nisi quod jam a portis exterioribus per atrium interius ad portam currunt? Quibus saepe evenit ut cum se viderint magno coelestis gratiae munere compunctos, jam se perfectos existiment, et obedientes putent; sed quia nullus est qui dura praecipiat, patientes esse se credant, sed quia nemo eos per contumelias et adversitates pulsat. Et plerumque contingit ut spiritale ministerium vel inviti suscipiant, atque ad gubernationem fidelium deducantur. Qui cum magnis tribulationibus fuerint hinc inde pulsati, turbati mente, sese imperfectos inveniunt, qui non pulsati, perfectos se esse crediderunt. Qua ex re agitur ut se ad semetipsos colligant, et apud se tacite opprobrium suae infirmitatis erubescant, atque, ex ipsa sua confusione roborati, contra adversa patientiam opponant, et ex tribulatione proficiant, qui prius in otio ex ipsa sua securitate torpebant. Et veraciter esse tales incipiunt quales se esse prius inaniter putaverunt. Hi itaque cum a portis exterioribus usque ad interiorem portam per boni studii atrium differuntur, hoc ipsum in eis atrium centum cubitis mensuratur, quia dilatione et exercitatione sancta quotidie ad perfectionem proficiunt. Per quotidiana enim desideria in mente proficere, quasi centum est cubitis interius atrium mensurari. Idcirco ergo a portis usque ad portam centum sunt cubiti, ut quasi quaedam mora eundi sit ipsa dilatio vivendi, per quam quotidie in virtutibus crescitur, ut ad interiorem aditum perfectius perveniatur. Sequitur: VERS. 24-26. — Et eduxit me ad viam Australem, et ecce porta quae respiciebat ad Austrum; et mensus est frontem ejus, et vestibulum ejus juxta mensuras superiores; et fenestras ejus, et vestibula in circuitu, sicut fenestras caeteras, quinquaginta cubitorum longitudinem, et latitudinem viginti quinque cubitorum. Et in gradibus septem ascendebatur ad eam, et vestibulum ante fores ejus.

13. Cuncta haec in Orientis et Aquilonis porta jam dicta sunt, et congruum non est ut ea quae semel ac secundo exponentes diximus saepius replicemus. Notandum tamen nobis est quia in spiritali aedificio alter aditus ad Orientem, alius ad Aquilonem, atque alius ad Austrum patet. Sicut enim Aquilonis frigore peccatores, ita per Australem viam ferventes spiritu designantur, qui, calore sancti Spiritus accensi, velut in meridiana luce virtutibus excrescunt. Pateat itaque porta ad Orientem, ut hi qui sacramenta fidei bene inchoaverunt, et in nulla postmodum vitiorum profunditate demersi sunt, ad gaudia secreta perveniant. Pateat porta ad Aquilonem, ut hi qui post inchoationem caloris et luminis in peccatorum suorum frigore et obscuritate dilapsi sunt per compunctionem poenitentiae ad veniam redeant, et quae sit internae retributionis vera laetitia cognoscant. Pateat porta ad Meridiem, ut hi qui sanctis desideriis in virtutibus fervent per spiritalem intellectum quotidie interni gaudii mysteria penetrent. Inter haec autem quaeri potest, cum quatuor hujus mundi partes sint, cur in hoc aedificio exterioris atrii non quatuor, sed tres portae esse memorantur? Quod recte quaerendum fuerat, si Propheta non spiritale, sed corporale aedificium vidisset. Sancta enim Ecclesia, id est spiritale aedificium, ut ad secreta gaudia pertingat, tres solummodo portas habet, videlicet fidem, spem, atque charitatem: unam ad Orientem, aliam ad Aquilonem, tertiam ad Meridiem. Porta quippe ad Orientem est fides, quia per ipsam lux vera nascitur in mente. Porta ad Aquilonem spes, quia unusquisque in peccatis positus, si de venia desperaverit, misericordiam funditus perdit. Unde necesse est ut qui per suam iniquitatem exstinctus est, per spem misericordiae reviviscat. Porta ad Meridiem charitas, quia igne amoris ardet. In meridiana etenim parte sol in altum ducitur, quia per charitatem lumen fidei in Dei et proximi dilectione sublevatur. Tribus igitur portis ad interius atrium tenditur, quia per fidem, spem, atque charitatem ad gaudia secreta pervenitur. Alia quoque quaestio oritur, cur porta atrii interioris posita contra portam Orientis et Aquilonis dicitur, et quod ad Australem portam pateat tacetur. Sed quia per Orientem inchoantes, per Aquilonem lapsos diximus designari, dignum fuit ut vel de inchoantibus, quibus adhuc sol in tepore est, vel etiam de lapsis, sed per conversionem redeuntibus, aperte diceretur quod eis porta atrii interioris pateat, quatenus ex ipsis nos certos faceret de quibus dubitari potuerat. Hoc autem de porta Australi dicendum non erat, quia eos ad gaudia interna pertingere qui fervore spiritus in virtutibus permanent nullus ignorat. Usus quippe est sacri eloquii ea de quibus dubitari poterat aperte dicere, et ea quae constant tacere. Sequitur: VERS. 26. — Et caelatae palmae erant, una hinc, et altera inde in fronte ejus.

14. Quid hoc est, quod prius in frontibus pictura palmarum, nunc autem caelatae palmae in fronte esse memorantur? In caelatura quippe lapidum foris opera esse videntur. Sed, sicut jam superius diximus, pictura palmarum est ostensio signorum. Nunc vero caelatura palmarum dicitur, ut bonorum operum demonstratio designetur. Ipsis enim summis praedicatoribus dicitur: Videant opera vestra bona, et glorificent Patrem vestrum qui in coelis est (Matth. V, 16). Qui igitur in vita sua impressa esse sancta opera demonstrant, palmas in fronte caelatas habent, quia quanta illos in posterum victoria sequatur, jam nunc in sanctis suis operibus ostendunt. Vel certe quia fidem per Orientis, spem per Aquilonis, charitatem vero per Australem portam diximus designari, notandum nobis est quia in Orientis porta pictura palmarum, in Aquilonis vero et Meridiei, caelatura esse perhibetur, quia contingit saepe ut hi qui adhuc inchoantes sunt, necdum se in operibus solidis ac magnis exerceant; hi vero qui post iniquitates ad virtutes redeunt, plerumque, ut culpas suas ante omnipotentis Dei oculos tegere valeant, in magnis operibus exercentur. Et qui jam fervore spiritus in virtutibus excreverunt, quasi Meridies in sanctis actibus inardescunt. In Orientis ergo porta pictura est, in Aquilonis vero et Meridici caelatura, quia signum victoriae quod in inchoantibus ostenditur, hoc in revertentibus atque ferventibus jam solidius et robustius tenetur.

15. Notandum quoque magnopere est quod dicitur, Hinc et inde. Omnes enim qui ad vitae aditum tendimus, et ex dextro et ex sinistro latere habere palmam debemus. Quod enim hinc et inde dicitur, latus utrumque signatur. A dextro igitur palmam habet is quem prospera non extollunt; a sinistro palmam habet is quem adversa non dejiciunt. Quasi ex utraque parte portabat Paulus palmam cum diceret: Per arma justitiae a dextris et a sinistris, per gloriam et ignobilitatem, per infamiam et bonam famam, ut seductores, et veraces (II Cor. VI, 7). Non hunc adversa frangebant, non prospera in mentis tumorem sublevabant. Hinc inde ergo gestabat palmam, quia et in adversitate fortis, et in prosperitate humilis permanebat. Quisquis enim de prosperis extollitur, habere in dextera parte palmam nescit. Quisquis in adversitatibus frangitur, portare palmam a sinistro latere ignorat. Ut ergo hinc et inde palma gestetur in fronte, adesse semper nostris mentibus debet et in adversis fiducia, et in prosperis timor, ne aut adversa in desperationem pertrahant, aut prospera animum in sui fiduciam extollant. Hinc est quod idem egregius praedicator dicebat: Scio et humiliari, scio et abundare, ubique et in omnibus institutus sum. Et satiari et esurire, et abundare et penuriam pati, omnia possum in eo qui me confortat (Philip. IV, 12).

16. Nunquid nam, fratres, ars est aliqua, humiliari et abundare, satiari et esurire, abundare et penuriam pati, ut pro magno se ista scire tantus praedicator insinuet? Ars omnino, et mira disciplinae scientia, quae toto nobis cordis est adnisu discenda. Quem enim penuria sua non frangit, a gratiarum actione non retrahit, in rerum temporalium desiderium non accendit, scit humiliari. Hoc enim loco Apostolus humiliari, dicit penuriam pati. Nam statim e contrario subjungit: Scio et abundare. Qui enim acceptis rebus non extollitur, qui eas ad usum vanae gloriae non intorquet, qui solus non possidet quod accepit, sed hoc cum indigentibus misericorditer dividit, scit abundare. Qui acceptis alimentis non ad ingurgitationem ventris utitur, sed ad reparationem virtutis, nec plus carni tribuit quam necessitas petit, scit satiari. Qui alimentorum inopiam sine murmuratione tolerat, nec pro necessitate victus agit aliquid unde anima peccati laqueum incurrat, scit esurire. Quem ergo nec in abundantia superbia elevat, nec in necessitate cupiditas irritat, novit abundare, novit penuriam pati. Qui cum statim subderet, Omnia possum, ne elationis esse verba crederemus, adjunxit in quo, In eo qui me confortat. Ecce in altum ramus prodiit, sed quia in radice se tenuit, in viriditate permansit. In altum enim surgens aresceret, si se a radice divisisset. Sibi enim nihil tribuit, quia omnia se posse non in se, sed in eo qui se confortat fatetur. Hinc et inde ergo praedicator egregius palmam habet, quem nec abundantia in superbiam, nec inopia ad avaritiam pertrahit.

17. Discamus itaque, fratres, non solum in prosperis, sed in adversis quoque gratias agere. Pater enim nobis ex pietate sua factus est conditor noster, nosque adoptivos filios ad haereditatem regni coelestis nutrit. Et non solum donis reficit, sed etiam flagellis erudit. Discamus igitur abundare, ut cuncta quae ab eo accepimus, cum indigentibus partiamur. Et mentem abundantia non elevet, ne fortasse gaudeat quia hoc adest sibi quod deest alteri, et non jam communi bono, sed proprio laetetur. A privato gaudio Veritas ad commune discipulos revocat, cum eos de praedicatione redeuntes, et de subjectione daemonum laetantes admonet, dicens: Nolite gaudere super hoc, sed potius gaudete et exsultate, quia nomina vestra scripta sunt in coelo (Luc. X, 20). Non enim omnes electi daemonia ejiciunt, sed tamen electorum omnium nomina coelo tenentur ascripta. Admonentur ergo discipuli privatam laetitiam deponere, de communi autem et perpetua felicitate gaudere. Quisquis itaque in eo gaudet quod alter non habet, ex ipsa sua abundantia deterior factus, gaudium privatum habet. Contra hujus nos appetitum abundantiae Joannes admonet, dicens: Nolite diligere mundum, neque ea quae in mundo sunt (I Joan. II, 15). Qui mox rationem subdidit, quare: Si quis diligit mundum, non est charitas Patris in eo (Ibid.). Nemo enim potest duobus dominis servire (Matth. VI, 24), quia non valet simul transitoria et aeterna diligere. Si enim aeternitatem diligimus, cuncta temporalia in usu non in affectu possidemus. Qui eamdem rationem protinus subdidit, dicens: Quia omne quod in mundo est concupiscentia carnis est, et concupiscentia oculorum, et superbia vitae (I Joan. II, 16).

18. Ideo enim habere aliquid homines et ultra quam necesse est concupiscunt, ut habendo superbiant, et quia hoc alius non habet se in cogitationibus extollant. Quisquis itaque talis est, adhuc ad portandam abundantiam doctus non est. Saepe autem quod avaritia ex appetitu suggerit, necessitatem putat, et cum minora sufficiant, dolet majora deesse, atque incautus animus quamdam quasi necessitatem patitur quam parit. Et cum nimia sint quae desiderat, suam sibi avaritiam aliquo modo excusat. Abundantia itaque superbiae vicina est. Quam si quando etiam cupiditas intercepit, hanc, ut ita dixerim, quasi peregrina captivitas invasit. Si igitur abundandi artem scire volumus, necesse est ut non solum ea quae vicina sunt, sed ea etiam quae de longinquo veniunt vitia fugiamus. Discamus penuriam pati, ne ea quae non habemus habere etiam cum culpa requiramus, nec felices putemus quos rebus onustos cernimus. Nimia valde sunt ea quae sibi quasi in sumptus vitae praesentis praeparant. Multa portant, sed in via brevi magna est nobis in hoc itinere socia paupertas, quae animum non angustat, cum deest terrena substantia de qua aeterno judici rationes ponamus. Liberius ad patriam tendimus, quia quasi in via pondere caremus.

19. Discamus satiari, ne in sumendis alimentis corporis gulae magis quam necessitati serviamus Plus enim concupiscentia quam necessitas petit. Et saepe dum carnis inopiae satisfacere curamus, voluptas subrepit, modum refectionis excedit. Unde fit ut culpa transeat ad culpam, quia plerumque inde alia tentatio carnis nascitur, dum carni immoderatius in refectione servitur. Ex peccato etenim primi hominis, infirmante natura, in hoc mundo cum nostris tentationibus nascimur. Et caro nobis aliquando adjutrix est in bono opere, aliquando autem seductrix in malo. Si igitur ei plus quam debemus tribuimus, hostem nutrimus. Et si necessitati ejus quae debemus non reddimus, civem necamus. Satianda itaque est caro, sed ad hoc usque, ut in bono nobis opere famulari sufficiat. Nam quisquis ei tantum tribuit, ut superbiat, satiari penitus ignorat. Ars itaque magna est satiari, ne unusquisque per satietatem carnis ad iniquitatem prorumpat turpitudinis. Discamus esurire, ut nobis propter abundantiam sequentem nostra hic inopia placeat, ne nos ventris necessitas ad culpam trahat, ne peccatum menti ipsi indigentia suggerat; et dum caro fame afficitur, ad cupiditatem animus irritetur, et quaerat cum culpa providere unde carni valeat in necessitate satisfacere, ne cor in indignationem prosiliat, et linguam in murmurationis amaritudinem accendat. Qui igitur in carnis suae inopia se hinc inde circumspicit, atque a peccati laqueo custodit, novit esurire.

20. Nos itaque, fratres charissimi, iram atque avaritiam in adversitate fugientes, et elationem et immoderata gaudia in prosperitate declinantes, quia per fidem, spem, atque charitatem, interioris vitae atrium tribus portis intrare concupiscimus, palmas hinc et inde teneamus. Libet adhuc alterum civem coelestis patriae ad mentem reducere, et qualiter hinc inde palmam teneat demonstrare. Beatus etenim Job cum esset viris Orientalibus ditior, et ei prospera cuncta suppeterent, filii pollerent, familia cresceret, greges exuberarent, in tanto omnipotentis Dei timore perstitit, ut inter custodiam disciplinae, inter acta justitiae, inter multa humilitatis obsequia, misericordiae operibus intentus, sacrificiis offerendis deditus holocausta Domino pro singulis filiis immolaret, ne quis eorum saltem in corde peccasset (Job. I, 2, seq.). Pensemus ergo quanta et erat custodia boni operis, qui in filiis suis expiabat sacrificiis culpas cordis. Sed quam justus esset, in prosperitate innotuerat, valde autem ignotum erat si perseverare justus et inter flagella potuisset. Tangendus ergo erat verbere, ut vir ille sanctus in prosperis interrogaretur adversis, ut qui notus erat omnipotenti Domino, notus per flagella fieret nobis et sibimetipsi. Disponente itaque Domino consumpti sunt greges, interfecti custodes, eversa domus, exstincti filii, percussa caro a planta pedis usque ad verticem. Remansit uxor incolumis, quae verborum jaculis vulnera augeret. Sed hanc vir sanctus in tentatione, sanus in vulnere prudenter docet, eique respondet, dicens: Si bona accepimus de manu Domini, mala quare non suscipiamus (Job II, 10)? Amici quoque ad consolandum veniunt, ad contumelias prorumpunt, et in dolore vulnerum, addunt adhuc vulnera verborum. Immisericordem dicunt, raptorem nominant, violentum denuntiant, oppressorem pauperum fatentur.

Quid igitur miles Dei faceret inter dolentia vulnera et amara verba deprehensus? Ecce flagella Dei et verba hominum simul afflictum animum ad desperationem premunt; sed, virtute spiritus plenus, carnis vulneribus jacens, mentis robore stans, contra desperationis impulsum reduxit ad memoriam bona quae egerat. Quia misericors fuerat, dicit: Oculus fui caeco, et pes claudo (Job. XXIX, 15). Et rursum: Pater eram pauperum (Ibid., 16). Quia et disciplinae custos et benignus, dicit: Cumque sederem quasi rex, circumstante me exercitu, eram tamen moerentium consolator (Ibid., 25). Quia humilis fuerit, dicit: Si contempsi subire judicium cum servo meo et ancilla mea, cum disceptarent adversum me (Job. XXXI, 13). Quia hospitalis fuerit, fatetur: Si despexi praetereuntem, eo quod non habuerit indumentum (Ibid., 19). Quia largus in donis, dicit: Si non benedixerunt mihi latera ejus, et de velleribus ovium mearum calefactus est (Ibid., 20). Quia violentus non fuerit testatur, dicens: Si levavi super pupillum manum meam, cum viderem me in porta superiorem (Ibid., 21). Quia de inimici periculo nunquam exsultaverit, dicit: Si gavisus sum ad ruinam ejus qui me oderat (Ibid., 29). Quia patiens fuit, et etiam suorum malitiam aequanimiter pertulit, dicit: Si non dixerunt viri tabernaculi mei, Quis det de carnibus ejus ut saturemur (Ibid., 31)? Quid est ergo quod vir sanctus tot suas virtutes inter flagella enumerat? Quid est quod ore suo opera quae fecerat laudat nisi quia inter vulnera et verba quae hunc ad desperationem trahere poterant, ad spem animum reformant? Et qui in prosperitate humilis fuit, revocatis bonis suis ad memoriam, infractus in adversitate permansit. Cujus enim animum inter tot flagella illa verba ad desperationem non impellerent, nisi sibi ad memoriam bona quae fecerat revocasset? Vidit igitur sanctus vir mentem suam auditis tot malis ad desperationem concuti, et mirabiliter studuit in spe certa ex bonis suis actibus solidari. Sic impletur quod scriptum est: In die bonorum ne immemor sis malorum, et in die malorum ne immemor sis bonorum (Eccli.

XI, 27). Si enim cum bona habemus malorum reminiscimur quae aut jam passi sumus, aut adhuc pati possumus, accepta bona mentem non elevant, quia eorum gaudium timor memoriae malorum premit. Et si cum mala habemus bonorum reminiscimur quae aut jam accepimus, aut adhuc nos posse accipere speramus, malorum pondus animum in desperationem non deprimit, quia hunc ad spem memoria bonorum levat. Si itaque, fratres charissimi, sic per praecepta Dominica et per sanctorum exempla gradimur, ut nos nec prosperitas elevet, nec adversitas frangat, habere nos ante omnipotentis Dei oculos palmas hinc et inde monstramus. Cui est honor et gloria in saecula saeculorum. Amen.

1. Prophetae verba quae, largiente Domino, hodie charitati vestrae loquenda sunt lectione magis indigent quam expositione. Ea enim in tribus portis interioribus replicantur quae secundo jam, vel tertio de exterioribus dicta sunt. Pauca vero in earum descriptione permutantur. Unde necesse est ea nos quae jam dicta sunt legendo transcurrere, ut ea quae necdum dicta sunt licentius possimus enodare. Itaque nunc dicitur: VERS. 27-30. — Et porta atrii interioris in viam Australem, et mensus est a porta usque ad portam in via Australi centum cubitos. Et introduxit me in atrium interius ad portam Australem, et mensus est portam juxta mensuras superiores, thalamum ejus, et frontem ejus, et vestibulum ejus eisdem mensuris, et fenestras ejus, et vestibulum ejus in circuitu quinquaginta cubitos longitudinis, et latitudinis viginti quinque cubitos, et vestibulum per gyrum. Cuncta haec superius dicta atque exposita esse meministis (Maxime hom. superiori). Necdum vero est dictum quod de eodem vestibulo subditur: VERS. 30, 31. — Longitudine viginti et quinque cubitorum, et latitudine quinque cubitorum, et vestibulum ejus ad atrium exterius. Atque iterum hoc quod jam superius dictum fuerat replicatur, cum dicitur: Et palmas ejus in fronte (Ibid.). Et statim quod adhuc dictum non fuerat subditur: Et octo gradus erant in quibus ascendebatur ad eam (Ibid.). Hoc quoque quod de Australi porta scriptum est, de Orientali quoque porta in eodem ordine narratur. Nam protinus subinfertur: VERS. 32-34. — Et introduxit me in atrium interius per portam Orientalem, et mensus est portam secundum mensuras superiores, thalamum ejus, et frontem ejus, et vestibulum ejus sicut supra, et fenestras ejus, et vestibula ejus in circuitum longitudine quinquaginta cubitorum, et latitudine viginti quinque cubitorum. Et vestibulum ejus, id est atrii interioris, et palmae caelatae in fronte ejus hinc et inde, et in octo gradus ascensus ejus. Ea quoque quae de Australi porta et Orientali dicta sunt, in eisdem verbis etiam de porta quae ad Aquilonem respicit replicantur. Nam subditur: VERS. 35-37. — Et introduxit me ad portam quae respiciebat ad Aquilonem, et mensus est secundum mensuras superiores, thalamum ejus, et frontem ejus, et vestibulum ejus, et fenestras ejus per circuitum, longitudine quinquaginta cubitorum, et latitudine viginti quinque cubitorum. Et vestibulum ejus respiciebat in atrium exterius, et caelatura palmarum in fronte illius hinc et inde, et in octo gradibus ascensus ejus.

2. Quid itaque interiori atrio, quid thalamo, quid frontibus, quid vestibulo, quid fenestris, quid longitudine et latitudine, quid palmarum caelatura signetur, late jam superius diximus (Hom. 6 et 7), nec oportet ut in eisdem iterum, sed in his solummodo quae necdum dicta sunt occupemur. Nunc ergo quaerendum nobis est quae istae tres portae interiores sint, vel quid est quod earumdem portarum vestibula viginti quinque cubitis in longitudine, et quinque cubitis in latitudine metiuntur; vel cur ad eas non septem, sicut de portis exterioribus dictum fuerat, sed octo gradibus ascenditur. Porta enim atrii interioris quae superius dicta est de his tribus portis interioribus non est, quia illa contra Orientis et Aquilonis portam respicere dicitur, istae autem singulae interius ad Austrum vel Orientem et Aquilonem positae esse memorantur. Unde recte per illam aditus interior designatur, quia, sicut praecedenti locutione jam dictum est, vel Judaeis et gentilibus, vel inchoantibus atque in bono perseverantibus, vel a bono cadentibus, sed post culpas per poenitentiam surgentibus patet. Nunc autem postquam singulae in Oriente et Aquilone et Austro portae descriptae sunt, cur interioris atrii rursum portae singulae in Austro et Oriente atque Aquilone describuntur? Aspirante Domino, magna intentione opus est sinum tantae profunditatis indagare. Si enim portarum nomine sanctos praedicatores accipimus, sciendum nobis est quia una est Ecclesia in praedicatoribus testamenti veteris ac novi. Portae autem septem vel octo gradus habent, quia sancti Spiritus septiformem gratiam concorditer praedicant, octavo vero gradu annuntiant praemium retributionis aeternae. Unde scriptum est: Da partem septem, necnon et octo (Eccles. XI, 2). Quid itaque dicere possumus exteriores portas, nisi antiquos patres fuisse, qui per praecepta legis noverant opera populi magis quam corda custodire? ut interiores portas praedicatores sanctae Ecclesiae debeamus accipere, qui spiritalibus monitis discipulorum suorum corda custodiunt, ne malis quae non faciunt vel in cogitationibus delectentur. Per illas enim septem gradibus ascendi dicitur, istarum vero octo graduum ascensus esse perhibetur, quia et in veneratione legis dies septimus fuit, et in novo testamento octavus dies in sacramento est, is videlicet qui Dominicus appellatur, qui tertius a passione, sed octavus a conditione est, quia et septimum sequitur.

3. Sin vero portarum nomine solos intelligimus sanctos apostolos designari, qui videlicet primi nobis sunt sanctae Ecclesiae praedicatores, et nos fidem, spem, atque charitatem summopere tenere docuerunt, ipsi itaque nobis in his virtutibus portae sunt, qui nos per easdem virtutes ad interiorem intellectum aeternae sapientiae perducunt. Sed si ipsi exteriores portae sunt, quos accipimus interiores? Si vero ipsi interiores sunt, quos intelligimus exteriores? Qua in re intelligi utiliter potest quia ipsi nobis exteriores simul et interiores portae sunt. Cum enim adhuc inchoantibus non alta et mystica, sed quaedam quae capi praevalent, praedicant, portae exteriores sunt; cum vero perfectis profunda et mystica loquuntur, portae interiores. Videamus qualiter porta exterior pateat: Non potui vobis loqui quasi spiritalibus, sed quasi carnalibus, tanquam parvulis in Christo lac vobis potum dedi, non escam (I Cor. III, 1). Videamus qualiter porta interior pateat: Sapientiam loquimur inter perfectos (Ibid. II, 6). Videamus utrum ipsa eadem sit porta interior et exterior: Sapientibus et insipientibus debitor sum (Rom. I, 14). Qui rursum dicit: Sive mente excedimus, Deo; sive sobrii sumus, vobis (II Cor. V, 13). In hoc enim quod contemplando et loquendo sapientibus mente excedit, porta interior est; in hoc vero quod parvulis sobrie in praedicatione se temperat, et quanta ebrietate spiritus infundatur in mente cum praedicat non ostendit, exteriorem portam se esse manifestat. Ipsi itaque et exteriores portae nobis sunt et interiores, qui nos et in primo aditu fidei, spei atque charitatis instituunt, et cum jam proficientibus coelestis regni mysteria praedicant, per subtiliorem sensum nos ad interiora perducunt.

4. Unde et per septem gradus prius ascensus earum describitur, et postmodum per octo. Per octavum etenim gradum illius vitae mysteria signantur, quam in secretis suis perfecti intelligunt, qui jam cuncta temporalia mente transcendere noverunt, qui praesentem vitam quae septem dierum curriculo evolvitur plene despiciunt, qui de intima contemplatione pascuntur. Habent igitur portae spiritalis aedificii septem gradus, quia timorem Domini, pietatem et scientiam, fortitudinem et consilium, intellectum et sapientiam suis auditoribus praedicant. Sed cum jam omnia dimitti praecipiunt, cum nihil in hoc mundo diligi admonent, nil per affectum teneri, cum contemplationi coelestis patriae intendi, atque in ejus suadent mysteriis delectari, gradum addunt, et ad interiora trajiciunt. Iste gradus, docente Veritate, cuidam ostensus est, cui cum legis praecepta dicerentur, respondit: Haec omnia custodivi a juventute mea (Matth. XIX, 20). Quasi enim jam in septem gradibus stabat, cum a juventute sua omnia custodisse se diceret. Sed ei mox dicitur: Adhuc unum tibi deest: Si vis perfectus esse, vade, vende omnia quae habes, et da pauperibus, et habebis thesaurum in coelo, et veni sequere me (Ibid., 21). In quibus verbis octavum quidem gradum vidit, sed ascendere noluit, quia tristis abscessit. Quisquis itaque, contemptis rebus temporalibus, aeternitatis contemplatione pascitur, coelestis regni gaudia rimatur, post septem gradus quos timendo et operando atque intellectu sapientiae succrescendo tenuit, octavo gradu interioris portae aditum intravit.

5. Per octavum quoque numerum et dies aeterni judicii, et carnis resurrectio designatur. Unde et Psalmus qui pro octava scribitur a pavore judicii est inchoatus, cum dicitur: Domine, ne in ira tua arguas me, neque in furore tuo corripias me (Psal. VI, 2). Nunc enim tempus est misericordiae, in illo autem judicio dies irae. In quo videlicet die omne hoc tempus finitur quod septem diebus evolvitur. Quia autem post septem dies sequitur, jure octavus appellatur. In quo et caro nostra resurget ex pulvere, ut sive bona, sive mala quae egit, recipiat a Veritate. Unde et per legem quoque octavo die fieri circumcisio jubetur. Nam per membrum quod circumciditur mortalis propagatio generatur, decedentium quoque et succedentium numerus augetur. Sed quia in resurrectione mortuorum nec carnis jam propagatio agitur, et decessio atque successio nulla erit, quia sicut scriptum est: Neque nubent, neque nubentur, sed erunt sicut angeli in coelo (Matth. XXII, 30), octava die praecipitur praeputium incidi. Ibi enim locum jam carnis propagatio non habet, ubi resurgens caro perseverantiam aeternitatis habet. Per hoc membrum mater virgo descendit, quae Deum in utero sine virili admistione concepit, qui primus nobis aeternae patriae gloriam in sua resurrectione monstravit. Qui resurgens a mortuis, jam non moritur, et mors ei ultra non dominabitur (Rom. VI, 9). Nobisque exemplum dedit, ut ea fieri in die ultimo de nostra carne credamus quae facta de carne illius in die resurrectionis agnovimus.

6. Sed quia de carnis resurrectione nobis sermo se intulit, triste nimis et valde lugubre est quod quosdam in Ecclesia stare, et de carnis resurrectione dubitare cognoscimus [quod est haereticum]. Hanc autem antiqui patres venturam esse certissime crediderunt, etiam cum nullum adhuc ejusdem resurrectionis exemplum tenerent. Qua igitur damnatione digni sunt qui et exemplum jam dominicae resurrectionis acceperunt, et tamen adhuc de sua resurrectione diffidunt? Pignus tenent, et fidem non habent. Ecclesiam replent, sed quia de resurrectione sua dubitant, mente vacua stant. De hac resurrectione per beatum Job dicitur: Scio quod Redemptor meus vivit, et in novissimo die de terra surrecturus sum, et rursum circumdabor pelle mea, et in carne mea videbo Deum; quem visurus sum ego ipse, et oculi mei conspecturi sunt, et non alius (Job. XIX, 25, seq.). Hinc etiam per Psalmistam dicitur: In conspectu ejus procidunt universi qui descendunt in terram (Psal. XXI, 29). In terra enim mortui non spiritu, sed corpore descendunt. In conspectu ergo Domini procidunt qui in terram descendunt, quia resurgendo ad judicium veniunt qui nunc in pulvere putrescunt. Hinc iterum dicit: Sitivit in te anima mea, quam multipliciter et caro mea (Psal. LXII, 2). Sitit anima ut Deum videat; caro quid sitit, nisi ut resurgat? Hinc rursus ait: Aufer spiritum eorum, et deficient, et in pulverem suum revertentur (Psal. CIII, 29). Moxque de carnis resurrectione subjungit: Emitte spiritum tuum, et creabuntur, et renovabis faciem terrae (Ibid., 30). Hinc iterum dicit: Exsurge, Domine, in requiem tuam, tu et arca sanctificationis tuae (Psal. CXXXI, 8). Exsurrexit enim Dominus in requiem suam cum carnem suam de sepulcro suscitavit. Post hunc quoque exsurgit et arca, quia resurgit Ecclesia. Hinc per eumdem prophetam de quo loquimur scriptum est: Ossa arida, audite verbum Domini. Haec dicit Dominus Deus ossibus his: Ecce ego intromittam in vos spiritum, et vivetis. Et dabo super vos nervos, et succrescere faciam super vos carnes, et superextendam in vos cutem, et dabo vobis spiritum, et vivetis (Ezech. XXXVII, 4, seq.). Hinc est quod propheta alius per resurrectionem Domini humanum genus vidit in fine suscitari, atque ait: Vivificabit nos post duos dies, in die tertia suscitabit nos, et vivemus in conspectu ejus (Osee VI, 3). Hinc est quod cum de semetipso Dominus loqueretur, adjunxit: Nolite mirari hoc, quia venit hora in qua omnes qui in monumentis sunt audient vocem Filii Dei. Et procedent qui bona fecerunt in resurrectionem vitae; qui vero mala egerunt, in resurrectionem judicii (Joan. V, 28, 29). Hinc Paulus ait: Unde etiam salvatorem exspectamus Dominum Jesum Christum, qui reformabit corpus humilitatis nostrae, configuratum corpori claritatis suae (Philip. III, 20). Hinc iterum dicit: Si enim credimus quod Jesus mortuus est et resurrexit, ita et Deus eos qui dormierunt per Jesum, adducet cum eo (I Thess. IV, 14). Qui rursus ait: Primitiae dormientium Christus (I Cor. XV, 20). Si enim nos a mortis somno non surgimus, quomodo resurrectionem dominicam primitias habemus?

7. Ecce veteres ac novi Patres uno sibi spiritu de carnis resurrectione concordant. Ecce ipsa per se Veritas prius voce docuit quod de resurrectione carnis postmodum opere demonstravit, et tamen adhuc quorumdam infirmitas fidem non habet in domo fidei stans. Sed mirari solent qualiter caro reviviscere possit ex pulvere. Mirentur igitur altitudinem coeli, molem terrae, abyssos aquarum, omnia quae in mundo sunt, ipsos quoque angelos creatos ex nihilo. Minus est valde aliquid ex aliquo facere quam omnia ex nihilo fecisse. Ipsa nobis elementa, ipsae rerum species, resurrectionis imaginem praedicant. Sol enim quotidie nostris oculis moritur, quotidie resurgit. Stellae matutinis horis nobis occidunt, vesperi resurgunt. Arbusta aestivis temporibus plena foliis, floribus, ac fructibus videmus, quae hiemali tempore nuda foliis, floribus ac fructibus, et quasi arida remanent, sed vernali sole redeunte, cum a radice humor surrexerit, suo iterum decore vestiuntur. Cur ergo de hominibus diffiditur, quod fieri in lignis videtur? Sed saepe pulverem putrescentis carnis aspiciunt et dicunt: Unde ossa et medullae, unde caro vel capilli poterunt in resurrectione reparari? Haec itaque requirentes, parva semina ingentium arborum videant, atque si possunt dicant: Ubi in eis latet tanta moles roboris, tanta diversitas ramorum, tanta multitudo et viriditas foliorum, tanta species florum, tanta ubertas, sapor atque odor fructuum? Nunquidnam semina arborum odorem vel saporem habent, quem ipsae post arbores in suis fructibus proferunt? Si ergo ex semine arborum quod videri non potest produci potest, cur de pulvere carnis humanae diffiditur quia ex eo reparari forma valeat quae non videtur?

8. Saepe autem objicere inanem quaestiunculam solent, qua dicunt: Carnem hominis lupus comedit, lupum leo devoravit, leo moriens ad pulverem rediit, cum pulvis ille suscitatur, quomodo caro hominis a lupi et leonis carne dividitur? Quibus quid respondere aliud debemus, nisi ut prius cogitent qualiter in hunc mundum venerint, et tunc invenient qualiter resurgant? Certe tu homo qui hoc loqueris, aliquando in matris utero spuma sanguinis fuisti, ibi quippe ex patris semine et matris sanguine parvus ac liquidus globus eras. Dic, rogo, si nosti, qualiter ille humor seminis in ossibus duruit, qualiter in medullis liquidus remansit, qualiter in nervis solidatus est, qualiter in carnibus crevit, qualiter in cute extensus est, qualiter in capillis atque unguibus distinctus, ita ut capilli molliores carnibus, et ungues essent teneriores ossibus, carnibus duriores? Si igitur tot et tanta ex uno semine per species distincta sunt, et tamen in forma remanent conjuncta, quid mirum si possit omnipotens Deus in illa resurrectione mortuorum carnem hominis distinguere a carne bestiarum, ut unus idemque pulvis et non resurgat in quantum pulvis lupi et leonis est, et tamen resurgat in quantum pulvis est hominis? Vide itaque, homo, qualiter ad vitam venisti, et nequaquam dubites ad vitam qualiter redeas. Cur autem ratione vis comprehendere quomodo redeas, qui ignoras quomodo venisti? Da potentiae Creatoris tui quod comprehendere non vales de temetipso. Certe enim quia tu ex terra factus es, terra vero ex nihilo, tu es creatus ex nihilo. Ne ergo de carnis tuae resurrectione desperes, perpende prudenter quia minus est Deo reparare quod erat quam fecisse quod non erat.

9. Sed si non potes resurrectionis effectum ratione comprehendere, perpende quam multa sunt quae non intelligis qualiter sint, et tamen esse non dubitas. Dic, rogo, si nosti gyros coeli, terrae cardines, aquarum abyssos, ubi finiuntur, ubi suspensi sunt? Scimus autem quia quod ex nihilo factum est pendet in nihilo. Sed si est aliquid quod dicitur nihilum, jam nihil non est. Si autem nihil est nihilum, nusquam mundi moles dependet, nec est ubi sit quod creatum est ut sit. Quomodo ergo nusquam est quod novimus quia est? Sed haec fortasse ad te multa sunt, ad temetipsum homo revertere. Certe ex spiritu es creatus et limo, uno invisibili, altero visibili; uno sensibili, et altero insensibili. Quomodo ergo permisceri in te potuit spiritus et limus, atque ex diverso fieri res non diversa, ita ut in tanta convenientia misceretur spiritus et limus, ut cum caro atteritur spiritus marceat, et cum spiritus affligitur caro contabescat? Sed forsitan necdum praevales discutere temetipsum. Perpende, rogo, si vales, quomodo Rubrum mare virga divisum est (Exod. XIV, 21), quomodo petrae duritia percussione virgae undas emanavit (Num. XX, 11), quomodo Aaron virga sicca floruit (Ibid., XVII, 8), quomodo ex ejus genere veniens Virgo concepit, quomodo et in partu virgo permansit (Luc. I, 27, seq.; III, 23, seq.); quomodo quatriduanus mortuus, jussione suscitatus, ligatis manibus ac pedibus de sepulcro exiit, quem postmodum solvi Dominus per discipulos jussit (Joan. XI, 44, seq.); quomodo idem Redemptor noster, in vera carne atque ossibus resurgens, clausis ostiis ad discipulos intravit. (Joan. XX, 26).

10. Ecce haec investigare non vales, et tamen credis. Cur ergo de resurrectionis gloria disputando et discutiendo dubitas, qui tam multa mysteria sine discussione credidisti? Qui tamen si resurrectionem carnis non credis, omnia sine causa credidisti, quia in hoc angelorum spectaculo videris quidem velociter currere, sed postquam cursum peregeris, ne bravium accipias aversaris. Unde per Paulum dicitur: Sic currite ut comprehendatis (I Cor. IX, 24). Qui rursus ait: Si in hac vita in Christo tantum sperantes sumus, miserabiliores sumus omnibus hominibus (I Cor. XV, 19). Divinae autem virtutis mysteria quae comprehendi non possunt non intellectu discutienda sunt, sed fide veneranda. Sciendum itaque nobis est quia quidquid ratione hominis comprehendi potest mirum esse jam non potest, sed sola est in miraculis ratio potentia facientis. Ecce dum de resurrectione carnis loquimur, ab expositionis ordine paululum digressi sumus. Ad ea ergo quae coepimus redeamus.

11. Habent autem interiores portae vestibula, quae viginti et quinque cubitis in longitudinem metiuntur. Si enim octo ter ducimus, ad viginti et quatuor pervenimus. Cui unus additur, ut viginti et quinque teneamus. Auditores etenim boni, qui quasi quaedam vestibula sunt portarum, aeternae spei longanimitatem tenent, octavum diem in Trinitatis fide sustinent. Quae Trinitas, quia unus est Deus, octo quidem per tria ducunt, sed in unius Dei confessione solidantur. Plana sunt vestibula, quia humilia sunt corda bonorum auditorum. Habent longitudinem, quia in spei perseverant longanimitate. Viginti et quinque cubitis earum longitudo mensuratur, quia resurrectionem carnis in octava per Trinitatem credunt, et eamdem sanctam Trinitatem unum esse Deum fatentur. Habent quoque quinque cubitos in latitudinem, quia per vitam simplicem quae quinque sensibus ducitur circa amorem proximi dilatantur. Et notandum quia postquam portarum vestibula superius alia dicta sunt, postmodum vestibulum quod quinque cubitos habet in latitudinem exterius respicere dicitur, quia nimirum sunt auditores alii qui intellectum interioris vitae magis virtutibus proficiendo penetrant, et sunt quidam simplices qui bene quidem sed juxta sensus corporeos vivunt. Unde et exterius respicere dicuntur. Quasi enim extra respiciunt, quia juxta sensus corporeos vivunt. Sed tamen et exterius respicientes, intus sunt, quia etsi sensus corporeos intelligendo transcendere nesciunt, fidem tamen atque charitatem humiliter tenent. Et intus ergo sunt in spiritali aedificio per amorem, et quasi foris respiciunt per simplicitatem.

12. Potest per vestibulum quod exterius respicit fides inchoantium designari, et per vestibulum quod est interius fides perfectorum, qui jam per eam in signis et virtutibus emicant. Possunt etiam per vestibulum interius praecepta altiora, per vestibulum vero quod respicit exterius praecepta adhuc minima figurari. Per vestibulum quippe itur ad gradus et ad portam, quia per praecepta praedicationis pertingitur ad virtutes atque aditum gratiae coelestis. Cum vero jubetur aliis in cogitatione sua aeterna meditari, coelestia sapere; eisque dicitur in psalmis et hymnis et canticis spiritalibus vivere (Coloss. III, 16), quasi interius vestibulum ostenditur, quod quinquaginta cubitis longitudine, et viginti quinque latitudine mensuratur. De quibus numeris nunc tacemus, quia ex his jam multa superius diximus. Cum vero aliis praecipitur, Uxori vir debitum reddat, similiter autem et uxor viro (I Cor. VII, 3), quasi vestibulum quod exterius respicit designatur. Quod quamvis extra respiciat, tamen intus est, quia rudis auditor et adhuc agit quod carnis est, et tamen a bonorum numero alienus non est.

13. Potest autem et per Orientis portam Dominus, et per Austri Judaea, per Aquilonis vero conversa gentilitas designari. Portam autem Dominum dicimus, quia per ipsum intramus ad ipsum. Portas vero Judaeam et gentilitatem non incongrue nominamus, quia prius Hebraeis, et postmodum patribus ex gentilitate venientibus aditum aedificii coelestis agnovimus. Sed hac in re quaestio animum pulsat, cur in superiori narratione prophetae, prius Orientalis, postmodum Aquilonis, ac deinde Austri porta descripta est. Cumque easdem portas in interiori atrio narraret, prius portam Austri, deinde Orientis, et tertio in loco descripsit Aquilonis. Cur autem non eumdem ordinem quem coeperat tenuit, sed hunc in portarum descriptione permutavit, ut et prius diceret Orientis portam, Aquilonis et Austri, et postmodum Austri, Orientis et Aquilonis? Sed si Aquilonis nomine gentilitas designatur, cunctis studiose legentibus liquet quia ante Synagogam gentilitas fuit. Nam Heber ipse, a quo Hebraei appellati sunt, ex gentibus est electus (Genes. X, 21). Dicatur ergo porta Orientalis ante portam Aquilonis et Austri, quia in divinitate sua Dominus ante gentilitatem et Judaeam natus est, qui et ante omnia saecula. Dicatur vero narratione subsequenti porta Austri, Orientis et Aquilonis, quia Redemptor noster in humana natura inter Judaeam et gentilitatem nasci dignatus est, quia et in fine Synagogae venit, et ante initium Ecclesiae, quam ex gentibus collegit. In prima ergo descriptione sit Orientalis porta ante portam Aquilonis et Austri; in secunda autem inter portam Austri et Aquilonis Orientis porta nominetur, quia et ex divinitate antecessit omnia, et ex humanitate venit inter omnia, qui et decedentis Judaeae finis factus est, et subsequentis gentilitatis initium. Igitur quia ea quae necdum dicta fuerant, ut, Domino largiente, potuimus, rimati sumus et ea quae saepius sunt replicata transcurrimus, nunc ad ea veniamus quae sic jam per ordinem dicuntur, ut in eis pene nihil de his quae dicta sunt replicetur: VERS. 38. — Et per singula gazophylacia ostium in frontibus portarum.

14. Gazophylacia superius (Hom. 6, olim. 18, n. 1 et seq.) diximus corda doctorum, quae scientiae divitias servant. Frontes autem portarum sunt verba atque opera praedicatorum, in quibus eos foris agnoscimus quales apud se intrinsecus vivant. Est autem ostium per gazophylacia singula in frontibus portarum, quia unusquisque doctor in corde auditoris intellectum aperit in dictis et operibus patrum. Cum enim Petri apostoli praedicationem discutimus, cum Pauli verba perscrutamur, cum Joannis Evangelium investigamus, atque ex eorum verbis auditores nostros ad interiorem intellectum trahimus, quid aliud agimus, nisi ostium in portarum frontibus aperimus? Dicatur ergo: Per singula gazophylacia ostium in frontibus portarum, quia si doctor hoc quod loquitur apostolorum dictis minime confirmat, in frontibus portarum ostium non habet. Et si ostium non habet, dici jam gazophylacium spiritalis aedificii non potest, quia si intellectum non aperit, doctor non est. Cum vero auditores boni per ora docentium apostolorum dicta et opera cognoscunt, culpas suas apud semetipsos tacite reprehendunt, et lacrymis insequuntur omne quod se egisse inique meminerunt. Unde hic quoque de ostio quod est in frontibus portarum subditur: IBID. — Ibi lavabant holocaustum.

15. Qui enim se per fidem in conversatione sancta Domino devoverunt, holocaustum Domino facti sunt. Sed quia adhuc multa in se de corruptibili sua carne patiuntur, quia adhuc in eis cordis munditia sordidis cogitationibus inquinatur, quotidie ad lacrymas redeunt, assiduis fletibus affliguntur. Sanctorum enim patrum dicta et facta considerant, et cum se indignos pensant, in portarum ostio holocaustum lavant. Ecce etenim quis pro timore omnipotentis Domini esse patiens devovit, nulli convicium pro convicio reddere, omnia aequanimiter tolerare, et tamen cum hunc contumelia ab ore proximi illata subito percusserit, turbatus forte aliquid loquitur, quod loqui non debuit. Certe iste jam holocaustum est, sed adhuc inquinatum. Fortasse contra illatas contumelias patientiam exhibuit, tacitus permansit; sed tamen contra easdem contumelias quas portat dolore tangitur, ejusque animus in charitate sauciatur. Patientia enim vera est, quae et ipsum amat quem portat. Nam tolerare, sed odisse, non est virtus mansuetudinis, sed velamentum furoris. Hic itaque saepe in cogitatione sua se judicat, reprehendit semetipsum quia dolet, nec tamen apud se praevalet obtinere ne doleat. Jam ergo per bonam devotionem holocaustum est, sed tamen per dolorem quo tangitur adhuc inquinatum. Alius ea quae possidet apud semetipsum decrevit indigentibus cuncta tribuere, nil sibimet reservare, vitam suam soli supernae gubernationi committere; sed dum praebet pauperibus quae habet, fortasse cogitatio menti subrepit quae dicit: Unde vives, si cuncta dederis? Nec tamen desistit tribuere, sed quod laetus dare coeperat postmodum tristis praebet. Quid hujus mens nisi misericordiae holocaustum est? sed tamen per tristitiam cogitationis inquinatum. Aut enim deliberare summa non debuit, aut post deliberationem nullo modo dubitare. Alius, contempta mundi superbia, honores atque dignitates hujus saeculi decrevit vitare, ultimum appetit inter homines locum tenere, ut tanto excelsior inveniatur in permanenti gloria, quanto humilior aspicitur in transeunte vita. Is fortasse cum subito se a proximo despici agnoscit, dedignatur cur despicitur. Vult quidem esse in loco humili, sed tamen videri contemptibilis non vult. Hunc jam devotio elevat, sed adhuc infirmitas gravat. Jam ergo per devotionem holocaustum est, sed adhuc ex infirmitate inquinatum. Hi itaque qui in eis quae optime devoverunt, in aliqua infirmitatis suae culpa tanguntur, cum per verba doctorum dicta patrum intelligunt, et in quanta culpa jaceant agnoscunt, seque ipsos poenitentiae lamentis afficiunt, holocaustum in ostio portarum lavant.

16. Sciendum vero est quia hoc inter sacrificium atque holocaustum distat, quod omne holocaustum sacrificium est, sed non omne sacrificium holocaustum. In sacrificio etenim pars pecudis, in holocausto vero totum pecus offerri consueverat. Unde et holocaustum Latina lingua totum incensum dicitur. Pensemus ergo quid est sacrificium, quid holocaustum. Cum enim quis suum aliquid Deo vovet, et aliquid non vovet, sacrificium est. Cum vero omne quod habet, omne quod vivit, omne quod sapit, omnipotenti Deo voverit, holocaustum est. Nam sunt quidam qui adhuc mente in hoc mundo retinentur, et tamen ex possessis rebus subsidia egentibus ministrant, oppressos defendere festinant. Isti in bonis quae faciunt sacrificium offerunt, quia et aliquid de actione sua Deo immolant, et aliquid sibimetipsis reservant. Et sunt quidam qui nihil sibimetipsis reservant, sed sensum, linguam, vitam, atque substantiam quam perceperunt omnipotenti Domino immolant. Quid isti nisi holocaustum offerunt; imo magis holocaustum fiunt? Israeliticus etenim populus primum sacrificium in Aegypto obtulit, secundum vero in eremo (Exod. XII, XIII). Qui itaque adhuc mentem habet in saeculo, sed boni jam aliquid operatur, Deo sacrificium obtulit in Aegypto. Qui vero praesens saeculum deserit, et agit bona quae valet, quasi jam Aegypto derelicta sacrificium praebet in eremo, quia, repulso carnalium desideriorum strepitu, in mentis suae quiete atque solitudine Deo immolat quidquid operatur. Quamvis ergo, sicut dictum est, sacrificium sit etiam holocaustum, majus tamen est holocaustum sacrificio, quia mens quae hujus mundi delectatione non premitur, totum in omnipotentis Dei sacrificio incendit quod habet.

17. Sed sciendum nobis est quia sunt quidam qui, etiam saeculum relinquentes, totum quidem quod habent offerunt, sed tamen in bonis quae agunt minime compunguntur; et quidem bonum quod agunt holocaustum est, sed quia flere ac semetipsos dijudicare nesciunt, seque ex amore ad lacrymas non accendunt, perfectum eorum holocaustum non est. Hinc per Psalmistam dicitur: Memor sit Dominus omnis sacrificii tui, et holocaustum tuum pingue fiat (Psal. XIX, 4). Holocaustum quippe siccum est bonum opus quod orationis lacrymae non infundunt. Holocaustum vero pingue est quando hoc quod bene agitur corde humili etiam per lacrymas irrigatur. Unde rursus dicitur: Holocausta medullata offeram tibi (Psal. LXV, 15). Quisquis enim bonum opus agit, sed ex omnipotentis Dei amore atque desiderio flere nescit, holocaustum habet, sed medullam in holocausto non habet. Qui vero bona operatur, et visioni jam Creatoris sui inhiat, atque ad aeternae contemplationis gaudia pervenire festinat, seque ipsum ex amore quo accenditur in fletibus mactat, holocausta Domino medullata dedit. Studendum ergo nobis est et mala funditus relinquere, et bona quae sufficimus operari, atque in ipsis bonis quae agimus amore aeterni luminis compungi. Ipse enim cordis tenebras discutit amor lucis, ut subtilius videre valeamus ne qua in bonis quae agimus prava misceantur. Considerandum nobis quippe est opus nostrum quale sit quae cogitatio in opere, quae intentio in cogitatione. Et cum nostro bono operi admistum aliquid malitiae vel pravae delectationis agnoscimus, redeamus ad lacrymas, lavemus holocaustum.

18. Sunt autem quidam qui semetipsos in magnis actionibus Domino devoverunt, atque ad tantam perfectionem perveniunt, ut ab eis nulla unquam difficultate flectantur, quatenus deliberatione castitatis nequaquam caro in pravae cogitationis delectatione animum sternat. Nam et si quando per suggestionem pulsat, surgere non permittitur, quia vigore judicii calcatur. In deliberatione quoque patientiae nec sermo inordinatus ab ore prodeat, nec dolor tacitus animum premat, ut in largitate eleemosynae nulla inopiae suspicio tristitiam generet, ut in deliberatione humilitatis nullus despectus animum mordeat. Sed cum jam in his quae recte devoverunt sese fortiter exhibent, priora tamen peccata quae ab ipsis ante bonam deliberationem perpetrata sunt ad memoriam reducunt, et plangunt quidquid illicite se egisse meminerunt. Hi itaque per vitam quam tenent holocaustum sunt, sed per vitam quam ante tenuerunt inquinatum. Lavant ergo holocaustum in ostio portarum, quia in intellectu quem perceperunt de dictis patrum, lamentis se quotidianis afficiunt, et mundant vitam lacrymis, quam pravis aliquando actibus inquinaverunt. Nos itaque inter haec ad vitam praeteritam mentis oculos reducamus, reminiscamur qui fuimus, cum mundi hujus concupiscentias sequeremur. Et si jam Domino toto corde servimus, quia nos peccasse meminimus defleamus, in fletibus lavemus holocaustum.

19. Ecce omnipotenti Deo devovimus castitatem nostram; sed si adhuc immunda cogitatio mentem inquinat, redeamus ad lacrymas, lavemus holocaustum. Ecce patientiam nos servare decrevimus. Sed si adhuc ira perturbat, si mentem tacitus dolor excruciat, redeamus ad lacrymas, lavemus holocaustum. Ecce, jam novimus possessa tribuere, atque in hoc mundo humilem locum tenere; si qua adhuc animum inopiae suspicio deprimit, si despectus proximi in aliqua nos indignatione confundit, redeamus ad lacrymas, lavemus holocaustum. Magnus est enim Creatori nostro ad recipiendos fletus humilium misericordiae sinus. Ubi enim innumerabilium hominum fletus suscepti sunt, ibi locum suum inventurae sunt et lacrymae nostrae. Pensemus quid per alium prophetam dicitur: Et erit qui offenderit ex eis in illa die quasi David, et domus David quasi Dei, sicut angelus Domini in conspectu ejus (Zach. XII, 8). Haec est dies misericordiae, quae nobis de adventu Redemptoris nostri promissa est. Qui itaque offenderit erit quasi David, quia peccator ad poenitentiam redit; domus autem David quasi Dei, quia reversus quisque ad justitiam habitatio efficitur Creatoris sui, ut sit sicut angelus in conspectu ejus, quia misericordiae viscera quae in se expertus est annuntiando et aliis propinat. Hinc etiam paulo post illic dicitur: In die illa erit fons patens domus David habitantibus Jerusalem, in ablutionem peccatoris et menstruatae (Zach. XIII, 1).

20. Fons quippe occultus est unigenitus Patris invisibilis Deus. Fons vero patens est idem Deus incarnatus. Qui fons patens recte domus David dicitur, quia ex David genere noster ad nos Redemptor processit. Jerusalem vero visio pacis interpretatur. Hi autem Jerusalem habitant, qui in visionem pacis intimae mentem figunt. Peccator vero et menstruata est vel is qui delinquit in opere, vel mens quae labitur in prava cogitatione. Menstruatae namque ista pollutio est, quia et aliena carne non tangitur, et sua carne inquinatur. Sic itaque, sic est omnis anima, quae etsi malum opus non agit, polluta tamen cogitatione sordescit. Unde etiam per prophetam alium sub Judaeae specie de anima immundis desideriis occupata dicitur: Omnes qui quaerunt eam non deficient, in menstruis ejus invenient eam (Jerem. II, 24). Maligni quippe spiritus quaerentes non deficiunt cum inferre perditionem cupiunt, et nulla bonae cogitationis rectitudine repelluntur. Atque in menstruis suis animam inveniunt, quando in pollutis cogitationibus positam facile ad perversam operationem trahunt. Dicatur ergo: In die illa erit fons patens domus David habitantibus Jerusalem, in ablutionem peccatoris et menstruatae (Zach. XIII, 1), quia apertus jam nobis est fons misericordiae Redemptor noster, qui in domo David incarnari dignatus est, ut peccatorem lavet a perverso opere, et menstruatam mentem diluat ab immunda cogitatione. Patet igitur fons; curramus cum lacrymis, lavemur in hoc fonte pietatis.

21. In hoc fonte ipse quoque David lotus est cum rediit ad lamenta poenitentiae post maculas gravis culpae. Ipsum quippe invenire fontem quaerebat cum diceret: Redde mihi laetitiam salutaris tui, et spiritu principali confirma me (Psal. L, 14). Jesus enim Hebraice, Latine salutaris dicitur. Et quid est quod sibi laetitiam Jesu reddi postulabat, nisi quod hunc ante culpam contemplari consueverat, ejusque contemplationis gaudia in culpa perdiderat? Unde recte post poenitentiam visionis ejus laetitiam sibi reddi quaerebat. In hoc fonte misericordiae lota est Maria Magdalene, quae prius famosa peccatrix, postmodum lavit maculas lacrymis, detersit maculas corrigendo mores (Luc. VII, 37, 38, seq.). In hoc fonte misericordiae coram omnibus lavit Petrus quod negaverat, quia flevit amare (Matth. XXVI, 75). In hoc fonte misericordiae in fine suo lotus est latro, qui, semetipsum in morte reprehendens, a culpa sua ablutus est confessione veritatis (Luc. XXIII, 41). 22. Cur igitur pigri sumus? cur torpentes et frigidi remanemus, qui in hoc fonte pietatis tantos jam se lavisse cognovimus? Ergone de emundatione nostra desperabimus, qui tot exempla misericordiae in pignore tenemus? et cessamus veniam quaerere, atque cum lacrymis fiduciam habere, qui tantorum jam emundationem spei nostrae pignus accepimus? Quaerere enim misericordiae fontem deberemus, etiamsi clausus esset. Patet nunc, et negligimus. Mittamus oculos fidei in mundum universum, consideremus quanti peccatores diebus ac noctibus per lamenta in hoc fonte misericordiae lavantur, quanti post tenebras ad lucem, quanti post maculas ad munditiam redeunt. Curramus ergo cum talibus post mortis tenebras ad aquam vitae; consideremus quantum peccavimus, quantum quotidie peccamus, atque, ut appareamus mundi post culpas, lavemus holocaustum. Ad haec agenda adest gratia Redemptoris nostri, qui vivit et regnat in saecula saeculorum. Amen.

Quinque versus, a 39 ad 43, exponendi proponuntur, et vix tentato sensu litterali, spiritualis et moralis proferuntur, ac de pastoris officio in primis disseritur. Quid sumus de mysticis sensibus Ezechielis prophetae locuturi, qui ipsa ejus historiae verba vix capimus? Ecce etenim dicit: VERS. 39-41. — Et in vestibulo portae duae mensae hinc, et duae mensae inde, ut immoletur super eas holocaustum, et pro peccato, et pro delicto. Et ad latus exterius, quod ascendit ad ostium portae quae pergit ad Aquilonem, duae mensae; et ad latus alterum ante vestibulum portae, duae mensae. Quatuor mensae hinc, et quatuor mensae inde per latera portae. Octo mensae erant, super quas immolabant.

1. In quibus videlicet verbis magna caligo dubietatis oboritur, utrum haec de una porta qualibet, an de duabus, aut de singulis portis dicantur. Sed dum quaternae mensae per latera describuntur, ac postmodum in summa conclusionis dicitur: Octo mensae erant super quas immolabant, patet quia hoc spiritus non de singulis portis quas superius descripserat dicat, quia si portae sex superius enarratae quaternas mensas per latera haberent, simul omnes non octo, sed quadraginta et octo dicerentur. Rursum si hoc de una dicitur, magno obstaculo nostra intelligentia reverberatur, quod post descriptum portae vestibulum, ubi duae mensae hinc et duae mensae inde esse narratae sunt, adhuc ad latus exterius, quod ascendit ad ostium portae quae pergit ad Aquilonem, duae mensae esse memorantur, atque subjungitur: Et ad latus alterum ante vestibulum portae duae mensae. Si enim intra vestibulum portae binae per latera mensae erant, cum subditur: Et ad latus exterius duae mensae, atque ad latus alterum ante vestibulum duae mensae, inter quas etiam porta quae respicit viam Aquilonis esse memoratur, profecto patet aliud vestibulum intrinsecus, atque aliud extrinsecus fuisse, quia et prius porta interior, et postmodum hoc in loco exterior Aquilonis porta describitur. Nam eum tres portas superius descripsisset, tres quoque alias interioris atrii esse memoravit, quarum extremam Aquilonis portam narraverat, sed, ut praedictum est, atrii interioris. Nunc ergo cum duae mensae hinc in portae vestibulo et duae mensae inde describuntur, adhuc de eadem interiori porta sermo contexitur, quippe cum protinus subinfertur quia ad latus exterius, quod ascendit ad ostium portae quae pergit ad Aquilonem, duae mensae; et ad latus alterum ante vestibulum portae, duae mensae. Porta ergo interior binas per latera in vestibulo mensas habere descripta est, et porta exterior similiter binas. Quatuor autem hinc et quatuor inde mensae pariter fiunt, dum per latera singula binae in vestibulo portae interioris et binae hinc et inde exterius in Aquilonis porta describuntur, quae simul omnes octo sunt, in quibus immolatur. His itaque de exteriori narratione discussis, ad spiritalem intellectum sermo redeat, qui tanto jam esse, largiente Domino, facilior debet, quanto nos exterioris descriptionis ignorantia non angustat.

2. Possunt etenim portarum nomine, sicut superius dictum est, sancti praedicatores intelligi, ut vestibulum portae sit populus. Qui dum mente humili verba praedicationis suscipit, in eo mensae ad sacrificium ex virtutibus construuntur. Rursum nihil obstat si portam accipimus hoc, quod nobis per ora praedicantium sacri eloquii intellectus aperitur, ut vestibulum portae ejusdem nobis praedicationis verba sint quae prius humiliter accipimus, ut post ad sacri eloquii intelligentiam veniamus. Sit itaque nobis porta interior Testamentum Novum, porta vero exterior Testamentum Vetus, quia et hoc spiritalem intellectum aperit, et illud rudibus adhuc mentibus in historia sacri eloquii litteram custodivit. Habet autem porta interior in magna jam multitudine fidelium populorum duo latera, videlicet dilectionem Dei et dilectionem proximi. Binae autem mensae sunt hinc et inde, quia in dilectione Dei necessario tenenda est fides et vita, in dilectione autem proximi debet summopere patientia et benignitas custodiri. Est enim in dilectione Dei necessaria fides et vita, quia videlicet scriptum est: Sine fide impossibile est placere Deo (Hebr. XI, 6). Et rursus scriptum est: Fides sine operibus mortua est (Jac. II, 20, 26). Est autem in dilectione proximi nobis patientia et benignitas conservanda, quia de eadem dilectione scriptum est: Charitas patiens est, benigna est (I Cor. XIII, 4). Patiens scilicet, ut illata a proximis mala aequanimiter portet, benigna autem, ut sua bona proximis desiderabiliter impendat. Habet quoque porta exterior, videlicet lex, duo latera, spiritales patres et carnalem populum. In quibus singulis binae mensae sunt, quia habet in spiritalibus patribus doctrinam et prophetiam, habet in carnali populo circumcisionem et sacrificium. In his itaque octo mensis immolatur, quia quidquid fides credit, quidquid vita in exemplo boni operis ostendit, quidquid patientia humiliter tolerat, quidquid benignitas largiter ministrat, quidquid doctrina salubriter docet, quidquid prophetia in posterum praemonet, quidquid circumcisio ad mandatum exterius ligavit, quidquid sacrificium ex devotione offerentis egit, in omnipotentis Dei oculis hoc esse victimam ostendit. In lege enim etiam per carnale sacrificium quid aliud populus nisi devotionem sui cordis immolabat? Notandum vero quod quatuor mensae solummodo ad holocaustum fuisse memorantur, quas videlicet vestibuli portae interioris accipimus, ut de reliquis quatuor sentiamus quia ad sacrificium constructae fuerunt, non ad holocaustum. Holocaustum enim, sicut praecedenti jam locutione professus sum (Homil. super.), totum incensum dicitur. Et lex quidem Deum ac proximum diligi, divina mandata custodiri praecipit, ab alienarum rerum concupiscentia compescit; non tamen omnia dimitti jubet. In Testamento autem Novo nos Veritas contestatur, dicens: Nisi quis renuntiaverit omnibus quae possidet, non potest esse meus discipulus (Luc. XIV, 33). Atque iterum dicit: Qui vultpost me venire, abneget semetipsum (Ibid. IX, 23). Mensae ergo interioris portae holocaustum habent, quia in virtutibus Testamenti Novi quasi per holocaustum omnia incendimus, quando omnibus quae hujus mundi sunt renuntiamus. Mensae vero portae exterioris sacrificium habent, sed holocaustum non habent, quia praecepta legalia decimas offerri jubent, sed dimitti omnia non jubent.

3. De interioris autem vestibuli quatuor mensis dicitur: Ut immoletur super eas holocaustum, et pro peccato, et pro delicto. Hoc etenim inter peccatum et delictum distat, quod peccatum est mala facere, delictum vero est bona derelinquere, quae summopere sunt tenenda. Vel certe peccatum in opere est, delictum in cogitatione. Recte ergo in interioris portae quatuor mensis immolatur holocaustum, et pro peccato, et pro delicto, quia quicunque potuerit hoc praesens saeculum pleniter contemnere, et, derelinquens omnia, semetipsum Domino holocaustum dare, ipse jam perfecte novit et peccata operis plangere, et delicta cogitationis, vel quod malum fecit, vel quod bonum quod debuit facere non fecit. Qui etenim totum dimisit, culpas suas in fletibus jam liberius conspicit. Cumque ejus mentem terrena cura non praepedit, pro opere simul et cogitatione plangendo mentem suam omnipotenti Domino quid aliud quam holocaustum dedit?

4. Neque hoc a ratione videtur extraneum, quod propheta cum latus exterius diceret, et ostium portae nominaret, addidit: Quae pergit ad Aquilonem. In exteriori enim custodia litterae lex data tenebatur. Ostium vero portae est ipse historicus intellectus legis, qui ad Domini timorem ducit. Quae porta ad Aquilonem pergere dicitur, quia lex eadem sub timore mortis frigida Judaici populi corda constrinxit. Quasi enim per calorem ille populus curreret, si praecepta dominica ex amore servasset. Sed quia sub timore mortis propositae litteram custodivit, quasi in torpore frigoris remansit. Unde novis populis aeterna praemia amantibus, non autem temporalia tormenta timentibus, atque jam calentibus, dicitur: Non accepistis spiritum servitutis iterum in timore, sed spiritum adoptionis, in quo clamamus, Abba pater (Rom. VIII, 15). Dicatur autem: Quatuor mensae hinc, et quatuor mensae inde per latera portae. Dum enim fides et vita, doctrina et prophetia in bonorum mentibus custoditur, porta nostra, id est intellectus sacri eloquii, quatuor ex latere mensas habet. Cumque in proficientibus populis sancta praedicatio patientiam et benignitatem servat, quae prius in carnalibus circumcisionem et sacrificium custodivit, mensae quoque quatuor quasi ex alio latere monstrantur. Quae simul omnes octo ad immolandum fiunt, quatuor videlicet interiores ad holocaustum, quatuor vero exteriores ad sacrificium, quia et hi qui in sancta Ecclesia fidem, vitam, patientiam atque benignitatem custodiunt, summis jam procul dubio virtutibus pollent; et hi qui in synagoga doctrinam et prophetiam, circumcisionem et sacrificium cognoverunt, alia offerendo, atque sibimetipsis alia retinendo, devotionis suae victimam omnipotenti Domino dederunt. Sed quia superius dictum est idcirco mensas quatuor interioris vestibuli constructas, ut immoletur super eas holocaustum et pro peccato et pro delicto, unde mensae ipsae constructae sint inferius aperitur, cum subditur: VERS. 42. — Quatuor autem mensae ad holocaustum de lapidibus quadris exstructae.

5. Quos enim hoc loco lapides quadros accipimus, nisi quoslibet sanctos, quorum vita in prosperitate atque adversitate novit fortiter stare? Lapis etenim quadrus aeque stat, in quocunque latere fuerit versus. Quisquis ergo in prosperitate non extollitur, in adversitate non frangitur, suasionibus ad malum non trahitur, vituperationibus a bono opere non revocatur, lapis quadrus est. Et quasi ex omni latere statum habet, quia casum in qualibet permutatione non habet. Certe cum Judaeorum populum propheta a fide perire cognosceret, et sanctos apostolos surgere in Ecclesia praevideret, per quos multi sunt ex gentibus in fidei et vitae fortitudine solidati, in magna consolatione locutus est, dicens: Lapides ceciderunt, sed quadris lapidibus aedificabimus (Isai. IX, 10). Videns quippe in sancta Ecclesia apostolos, Martyres, atque doctores surgere, de lapidum casu, id est de Judaeorum perditione minus doluit, quia omnipotentis Dei aedificium, id est sanctam

Ecclesiam de quadris lapidibus aedificari conspexit. Mensae ergo quatuor de quadris lapidibus construuntur, quia fides et vita, patientia et benignitas de vita sanctorum in exemplum datae sunt sequentibus populis, ut jam vestibulum mensas habeat, id est virtutes vitae populus teneat, in quibus omnipotenti Deo orationis sacrificium in ara sui cordis incendat. Quidquid enim boni fideles sanctae Ecclesiae populi vel fecerunt, vel faciunt, hoc in exemplum de praedicatorum suorum vita susceperunt. Unde enim mensas hoc vestibulum haberet, nisi quadros lapides invenisset? Ut enim unum de quadris lapidibus breviter ad medium deducamus, vultis, fratres charissimi, fidem videre? Mihi vivere Christus est, et mori lucrum (Philip. I, 21). Vultis vitam cognoscere? Mihi mundus crucifixus est, et ego mundo (Galat. VI, 14). Vultis patientiam audire? Usque in hanc horam et esurimus, et colaphis caedimur, et instabiles sumus, et laboramus operantes manibus nostris; maledicimur, et benedicimus, persecutionem patimur, et sustinemus; blasphemamur, et obsecramus (I Cor. IV, 11-13). Vultis benignitatem cognoscere? Ego autem libentissime impendam, et superimpendar ipse pro animabus vestris (II Cor. XII, 15). Ac ne forsitan credamus quia eorum amori pro quibus impendi desiderat debitor fuerit, mox ad eosdem discipulos subjungit, dicens: Licet plus vos diligens, minus diligar (Ibid.). Cum ergo a populo fideli ad imitandas virtutes sanctorum praedicatorum vita cognoscitur, profecto in vestibulo de quadris lapidibus mensae construuntur. Habuit vero et Synagoga spiritales patres in doctrina atque prophetia, ex quibus exemplum vitae in virtutibus traheret. Sed rudis ejus populus, magis per timorem serviens quam per amorem sequens, vitam patrum noluit imitari quam vidit, atque ideo porta exterior quae ad Aquilonem pergit, mensas non habet ad holocaustum. Sed quia haec moraliter diximus, restat adhuc ut easdem mensas per intelligentiam typicam perscrutemur.

6. Porta etenim nostra in interiori vestibulo quatuor mensas habet, quia sancta Ecclesia quatuor evangelistarum praedicatione erudita est, per quorum doctrinam didicit cor in amorem Dei omnipotentis ascendere, et suas ei in sacrificio cogitationes immolare. Quarum duae hinc, et duae inde esse referuntur, quia duo evangelistae et quae de Domino viderunt attestati sunt, et duo illa narraverunt quae praecedentium auditu didicerunt. Vel certe quatuor mensae sunt interioris vestibuli, hoc quod patenter aspicimus, quia sancta Ecclesia ad eruditionem fidelium populorum quatuor regentium ordines accipit, quos Paulus ex dono omnipotentis Dei enumerat, dicens: Ipse dedit quosdam quidem apostolos, quosdam autem prophetas, alios vero evangelistas, alios autem pastores et doctores (I Cor. XII, 28; Ephes. IV, 11). Pastores vero et doctores unum regentium ordinem nominat, quia gregem Dei ipse veraciter pascit qui docet. Habuit quoque et porta exterior mensas quatuor, quia videlicet Synagoga obsequii exterioris observantiam per principes sacerdotum et seniores populi, per Scribas atque Pharisaeos tenuit. Qui scilicet Pharisaei etiam legis doctores vocati sunt. Sive autem exteriori seu interiori portae duae mensae hinc sunt, et duae inde, quia in exordiis suis sancta Ecclesia apostolos et prophetas habuit. Prophetas autem dicimus non eos qui in veteri populo fuerunt, sed eos qui in sancta Ecclesia post apostolos sunt exorti. Posteriori quoque tempore, quod nunc est, habet evangelistas atque doctores. Quia vero Evangelium bonum nuntium dicitur, evangelistas utique appellamus qui rudibus populis bona patriae coelestis annuntiant. Qui videlicet evangelistae atque doctores et priori quidem tempore fuerunt, sed et nunc usque, Domino largiente, permanent, quia adhuc quotidie et infideles populos ad fidem trahi, et fideles quosque in bonos mores per doctores erudiri cognoscimus. Apostoli vero et prophetae ab hoc tempore praesenti sublati sunt, atque ideo dicimus quia mensae hae portae nostrae, id est sanctae Ecclesiae quasi in alio latere fuerunt.

7. Habet et porta quae pergit ad Aquilonem duas mensas hinc, et duas inde, eosdem quos diximus principes sacerdotum et seniores populi in majori auctoritate regiminis, Scribas quoque et Pharisaeos, qui rudi illi populo minori loco praefuerunt. Sed hae mensae juxta portam sunt quae ad Aquilonem pergit, quia cum quatuor isti ordines populo praeessent, Synagoga in persecutione Redemptoris nostri saeviens, ad torporem perfidiae prorupit. Quae tamen mensae habuerunt sacrificium, quod juxta solam litteram tenuerunt; unde et ad torporem frigoris lapsi sunt, quia flamma spiritus succensi non sunt. Interiores autem mensae holocaustum habent, quia sive in cordibus apostolorum atque prophetarum, seu in mente evangelistarum atque doctorum, ignis spiritus et arsit et ardet. Qui pro eo quod omnem eorum cogitationem in bono opere absumit, flamma amoris Dei quasi holocaustum totum simul quod invenit incendit. Holocaustum enim offerunt, qui sive in bono opere, seu in sancta cogitatione medullitus accenduntur

8. Mensae vero hae ex quadris lapidibus factae sunt, quia dum quotidie sacri eloquii in suis cordibus verba meditantur, ad offerendum Domino orationis holocaustum, quasi ex quadris lapidibus construuntur. Verba etenim Scripturae sacrae lapides quadri sunt, quia ubique stant, quia ex nullo latere reprehensibilia inveniuntur. Nam in omne quod praeteritum narrant, in omne quod venturum annuntiant, in omne quod moraliter praedicant, in omne quod spiritaliter sonant, quasi in diverso latere statum habent, quia reprehensionem non habent. Corda itaque sanctorum mensae Dei sunt ad holocaustum ex quadris lapidibus constructae, quia qui Dei verba semper cogitant semetipsos Domino a carnali vita in cogitatione mactant. Unde scriptum est: Lex Dei ejus in corde ipsius, et non supplantabuntur gressus ejus (Psal. XXXVI, 31). Et unde rursum dicitur: In corde meo abscondi eloquia tua, ut non peccem tibi (Psal. CXVIII, 11). Sed quia mensae hae unde sint constructae cognovimus, etiam cujus mensurae sint audiamus. Sequitur: VERS. 42. — Longitudine unius cubiti et dimidii, et latitudine cubiti unius et dimidii, et altitudine cubiti unius.

9. Hunc locum quidam exposuit, dicens: Longitudine et latitudine habent mensae cubitum unum et dimidium, id est per quadrum, quae simul juncta tres cubitos faciunt. Qui tres cubiti habent in altitudinem cubitum unum, ut mysteria Trinitatis unius cubiti, hoc est divinae majestatis, mensuram conservent. Qui videlicet sensus expositionis idcirco non potest stare, quia in illa summa Trinitate quae omnia creavit, omnia continet, dimidium nihil est, nec ex duobus dimidiis aliquid unum. Neque enim quidquam imminutionis ac decisionis habet illa substantia, quae semper incommutabilis manens, nec detrimentum recipit, nec augmentum. Saepe autem diximus longitudinem ad longanimitatem spei, latitudinem vero ad charitatis amplitudinem pertinere. Mensae ergo quae ad holocaustum constructae sunt, longitudine cubiti unius et dimidii metiuntur, quia sancti patres atque doctores, qui se longanimiter ad secreta spei intimae extendunt, per hoc quod in virtutibus vivunt, quantum ad humanam quidem mensuram pertinet, valde perfecti sunt, quantum vero ad divina illa mysteria quae plene ab homine capi non possunt, quandiu in hac mortali carne subsistunt, perfecti non sunt. In semetipsis ergo jam cubitum habent, in Deo autem adhuc cubitum non habent, quia jam quidem in virtutibus plene proficiunt, sed tamen aliquid de Deo adhuc ex parte cognoscunt. Ecce iterum in mensura mensae ad testimonium Paulus occurrit. Videamus an ejus vita cubito integro mensuretur. Dicit enim: Quotquot perfecti sumus, hoc sapiamus (Philip. III, 15). Videamus si in his quae de Deo sentit jam se ad percipienda mysteria perfecte tetenderit: Ego me non arbitror comprehendisse (Ibid., 13). Qui rursus ait: Ex parte cognoscimus, et ex parte prophetamus; cum autem venerit quod perfectum est, evacuabitur quod ex parte est (I Cor. XIII, 9, 10). Qui iterum dicit: Nunc cognosco ex parte, tunc autem cognoscam sicut et cognitus sum (Ibid., 12). Si ergo perfectus est, et ex parte cognoscit, cubitum habet, quantum ad se, sed tamen dimidium super se. Tendantur ergo in longanimitate spei corda sanctorum, tendantur in perfectione quam habent, cubito uno. Sed quia adhuc plene videre non possunt, ubi spei oculum mittunt, hoc quod super unum cubitum habent, in dimidio cubito recidatur, quatenus in hac vita semper se imperfectos aspiciant, et ardentius ad perfectionem currant.

10. Habent quoque mensae latitudinem cubiti unius et dimidii, quia sanctorum corda in charitatis amplitudine dilatata juxta proximum quem diligunt et vident habent cubitum. Possunt enim perfecte diligere quos perfecte valent juxta aliquid scire. Omnipotentem vero Deum medullitus diligunt, medullitus sequuntur, sed tamen tantum diligere non possunt quantum debent, quia adhuc non valent videre quem diligunt; et mensura amoris minor est ubi adhuc mensura minor est cognitionis. Super unum ergo cubitum habent et dimidium, quia hoc eis jam in animo integrum est, quod valde minus est, id est charitas cum proximo; atque illud in eis quod valde majus est, id est amor Dei quem non vident, adhuc integrum non est. De hoc amore, qui hic incipitur, ut ex visione Domini in aeterna patria perficiatur, recte Isaias loquitur, dicens: Vivit Dominus, cujus ignis est in Sion, et caminus ejus in Jerusalem (Isai. XXXI, 9). Plus est autem caminum esse quam ignem, quia esse ignis et parvus potest, in camino autem vastior flamma succenditur. Sion vero speculatio, Jerusalem autem visio pacis dicitur. Pacem vero nostram hic interim speculamur, ut illic postmodum plene videamus. Ex amore ergo Domini in Sion ignis est, in Jerusalem caminus, quia hic amoris ejus flammis aliquatenus ardemus, ubi de illo aliquid contemplamur; sed ibi plene ardebimus, ubi illum plene videbimus quem amamus.

11. Altitudo vero mensarum est cubiti unius. Quae est enim altitudo sanctorum, nisi fides invisibilium? Per fidem enim creditur quod non videtur, atque ideo per hanc justorum mens ad altitudinem ducitur, ut cuncta visibilia despiciat in terra, et ea quae audit invisibilia sequatur in coelo. Sed unum cubitum habet altitudo mensarum, quia unitas est fidei in corde omnium sanctorum. Unum Deum esse Trinitatem et patres testamenti veteris, et praedicatores professi sunt testamenti novi. Altitudo itaque mensarum nil uno cubito amplius, nil minus habet, quia in magna sibi unitate concordat omnium fides patrum. Sed hi qui, jam in longanimitatem spei summis virtutibus proficientes, unum et dimidium cubitum habent, atque in latitudine charitatis uno ac dimidio cubito metiuntur, in altitudinem vero fidei uno cubito excrescunt, magni sunt, et summa admiratione venerandi. Debent ergo parvulorum animas in sinu suae conversationis suscipere, atque eas in conspectu Domini velut quoddam holocaustum ac sacrificium offerre. Unde aperte sequitur: IBID. — Super quas ponunt vasa in quibus immolatur holocaustum et victima.

12. Quid enim sunt animae fidelium, nisi vasa sancta quae verba pietatis capiunt, ut ex eorum mentibus holocaustum vitae atque orationis immoletur? Hinc est enim quod Paulus cum adhuc rudis esset in fidei vocatione, quia jam Domini verba perceperat, et coelesti gratia plenus erat, vas appellatur, cum dicitur: Vas electionis mihi est (Act. IX, 15). Hinc pastores atque doctores propheta admonet, dicens: Mundamini qui fertis vasa Domini (Isai LII, 11). Ipsi etenim quasi mensae vasa Domini portant, qui vitam fidelium erudiendo tolerant, ut quandoque hanc Domino ad holocaustum et sacrificium perducant. Sed neque hoc negligenter intuendum est, quod in eisdem vasis holocaustum et victima dicitur immolari. Holocaustum enim, sicut et superius diximus (Hom. superiori), victima est, non tamen victima semper holocaustum, quia cum quid ex parte offertur, et ex parte retinetur, sacrificium quidem est, sed holocaustum non est. Sunt vero in multitudine magna fidelium alii qui ea quae mundae sunt omnia relinquunt, cuncta quae possident tribuunt, nil sibimetipsis reservant, ad aeternam patriam medullitus anhelant, seque ex toto corde in lacrymis mactant. Hi videlicet vasa super mensam sunt, in quibus immolatur holocaustum. Et sunt alii qui curam propriae domus gerunt, de filiis cogitant, eisque haereditatem servant, qui tamen, aeterni judicii memores, misericordiam pauperibus impendunt, alimenta ac vestimenta eis ex parte qua decreverint tribuunt. Hi nimirum vasa super mensam sunt, in quibus victima immolata est, non holocaustum. Quia enim patientia et doctrina sanctorum admonendo et sustinendo, suadendo atque terrendo, aliorum corda usque ad hoc erudiunt, ut omnia deserant, et totos se in amore Domini accendant, aliorum vero ad hoc usque instruunt, ut quia omnia relinquere non valent, vel ex parte qua praevalent, misericordes fiant, et carnis curam cum animae cura partiantur, mensae Domini de quadris lapidibus instructae vasa portant, in quibus immolatur holocaustum et victima, quia et perfecti, sicut dictum est, cum omnia deserunt, totum cor in amorem Domini accendunt, et imperfecti sacrificium offerunt, quod ex parte devoverunt. Sequitur: VERS. 43. — Et labia earum palmi unius, reflexa intrinsecus per circuitum.

13. Quid est hoc, quod mensarum labia palmo metiuntur, nisi quod in palmo manus tenditur, et sancti patres atque doctores ea praedicant in quibus auditorum opera tenduntur? Quasi enim manum extendimus cum opera nostra dilatamus. Loquatur ergo unusquisque doctor, cor audientis exerceat, otiosorum torporem excutiat. Quos dum ad bona opera tetenderit, palmum se habere in labiis ostendat. Pensandum quoque quia in palmo digitus major ac minimus tenditur. Quid vero in majori ac minimo digito, nisi magna et extrema actio designatur? Palmum ergo mensae in labiis habeant, quatenus in doctorum suorum praedicatione magna opera faciat, ut agere et minima non omittat. Sic minimis intentus sit, ut piger in agendis majoribus non sit. Unde per Evangelium Veritas dicit: Vae vobis, scribae et Pharisaei hypocritae, quia decimatis mentham et anethum et cyminum, et relinquitis quae graviora sunt legis, judicium, misericordiam et fidem; haec oportuit facere, et illa non omittere (Matth. XXIII, 23). Per judicium quippe, et misericordiam, et fidem, major digitus operationis ostenditur. Per mentham vero, et anethum, et cyminum, digitus procul dubio minimus figuratur. Haec ergo oportuit facere, et illa non omittere, quia si opus nostrum palmo metiri volumus, sic necesse est ut tendatur minimus, quatenus major digitus non attrahatur.

14. Bene autem cum mensarum labia metiuntur, et mensura palmi dicitur, additur unius, ut ex doctorum praedicatione sicut unitas tenetur in fide, ita quoque unitas mentium servetur in opere, ne per opus bonum quod alter agit, alter ad discordiae malum prorumpat. Ita enim bona facere opera debemus, ut per haec quoque cum his cum quibus vivimus unanimitatem, in quantum recte possumus, conservemus, id est non deserendo quod agimus, sed praeveniendo bonis persuasionibus malum discordiae quod timemus. Sic in suis operibus unitatem palmi custodiens Paulus, discordiam generari prohibebat, cum quemdam lapsum atque ab Ecclesia abjectum jam velle recipere Corinthios videret, dicens: Si cui aliqud donastis, et ego. Nam et ego si quid donavi, propter vos in persona Christi, ut non circumveniamur a Satana (II Cor. II, 10). Qui videlicet solet de bonis mala generare, et hoc quod charitate agitur ad discordiam trahere. Unde et mox de ipso subjecit, dicens: Non enim ignoramus cogitationes ejus (Ibid., 11). Doctor autem qui per bona quae praedicat in suis auditoribus rectam operationem format, si mentes operantium ad unanimitatem non ligat, in labiis palmum habet, sed eam quae dicta est palmi unitatem non habet.

15. Pensandum vero est valde quod dicitur, quia earumdem mensarum labia interius sunt reflexa. Tunc enim mensarum labia intrinsecus reflectuntur, quando doctores ad conscientiam revocant tacita cogitatione quod dicunt, quando semetipsos subtiliter perscrutantur si faciunt quod loquuntur. Recte autem cum reflexa intrinsecus mensarum labia dicuntur, additur quoque per circuitum, ut non in una qualibet se parte considerent, atque ex alia semetipsos perpendere praetermittant, sed ubique semetipsos inspiciant, et, in quantum praevalent, studeant singula opere implere quae docent, ne si praedicantes facere bona dissimulant, sui vastatores sint cultores alieni. O doctor, ecce jam mensa es, jam vasa portas, jam in vasis fidelibus pondus holocausti et victimae sustines, sed intus reflecte labium, id est ad cor revoca sermonem. Audi quod dicis, operare quod praedicas. Si enim negligis implere quod praedicas, aliis messem seminas, et ipse a frumenti participatione jejunas. Unde scriptum est: Cujus messem famelicus comedet (Job. V, 5). Messem quippe doctoris qui bona loquitur, sed non operatur, famelicus comedit, quia is qui panem justitiae esurit operatur mandata quae audit, et ipse fructum non habet, qui seminando laboravit. Hinc Salomon ait: Abscondit piger manum suam sub ascella, nec ad os suum porrigit eam (Prov. XIX, 24). Nemo ita piger est, ut ad os manum vel comedendo reducere laborem putet. Sed piger nec ad os manum suam porrigit, qui nec hoc vult operari quod dicit. Hinc iterum de bene docentibus et male operantibus dicitur: Filii Ephraim intendentes areum, et mittentes sagittas, conversi sunt in die belli (Psal. LXXVII, 9). Intendunt arcum, atque sagittas mittunt, qui Scripturae sacrae sententias proponunt, et verbis rectis auditorum vitia feriunt; sed convertuntur in die belli, quia post semetipsos redeunt in tentatione vitiorum, et pectus opponere non volunt, quia in tentationum certamine non resistunt. Hinc iterum dicitur: Avertisti adjutorium gladii ejus, et non es auxiliatus ei in bello (Psal. LXXXVIII, 44). Gladius quippe doctoris est sermo Dei. Unde per Paulum dicitur: Et gladium spiritus, quod est verbum Dei (Ephes. VI, 17). Omnipotens itaque Deus cum doctorem respicit nolle operari quae dicit, in die belli adjutorii ejus gladium avertit, quia in tentationum certamine non permittit ei esse in adjutorium doctrinae verba quae dedit. Habet igitur gladium, sed hunc in bello non adjuvat, quia cum adversitas tentationis eruperit, verbi obliviscitur quod docebat. Ecce enim de patientia forsitan sermo doctori est, doctrinae suae magisterio dicere cogitur qualiter contra illata damna, contra auditas contumelias patientia servetur. Sed cum ipse vel damno, vel contumelia fuerit lacessitus, oblitus quod docuerat, vel in laesione proximi, vel in reddenda gravius contumelia excedit. Inter haec itaque cogitet quia mensa Dei est, labium intus reflectat, servet quod praedicat. Scriptum quippe est: In patientia vestra possidebitis animas vestras (Luc. XXI, 19). Et rursum scriptum est: Doctrina viri per patientiam noscitur (Prov. XIX, 11). Si itaque index doctrinae patientia est, tanto quisque doctus ostenditur, quanto patiens fuerit. Hinc est enim quod bonus ille discipulus qui magistrum tolli in aera videbat, per magnae charitatis affectum clamabat, dicens: Pater mi, pater mi, currus Israel et auriga ejus (IV Reg. II, 12). Quid est, fratres charissimi, quod Elias currus Israel et auriga dicitur, nisi quia auriga agitat, currus portat? Doctor ergo qui mores populi et per patientiam sustinet, et sacri eloquii verbis docet, et currus dicitur et auriga. Currus, quia tolerando portat; auriga, quia exhortando agitat. Currus, quia mala sustinet; auriga, quia populum bonis admonitionibus exercet.

16. Fortasse autem contra vanam gloriam sermo doctori est, et mire insinuans qualiter debeat declinari, eisdem ipsis sermonibus vanam gloriam quaerit, quibus contra eamdem vanam gloriam disputat. Si igitur hoc appetit adipisci quod prohibet, mensa intus labium non reflectit. Tunc autem mensa Domini ex quadris lapidibus exstructa habebit intus labium reflexum, si studuerit audire quod dicit. Scriptum quippe est: Ne quid per contentionem, neque per inanem gloriam (Philip. II, 3). Atque eisdem rursus egregius praedicator dicit: Nec quaerentes ab hominibus gloriam, neque a vobis, neque ab aliis (I Thess. II, 6). De praedicationis etenim labore laudem transitoriam quaerere, quid est aliud quam rem magnam vili pretio venundare? Sed est in doctrinae verbis grave periculum, quia saepe sermonem docentium favores audientium sequuntur, et cum doctores ab eo quod bene innotuerint, apparere jam minores in dictis nolunt, doctrinae verbum quod pro acquirendis animabus auditorum ex omnipotentis Dei amore inchoaverunt, in hoc postmodum pro acquirendis laudibus laborant. Et qui in verbis Dei quaerebant prius lucra spiritalia, temporales postmodum favores sequuntur. Unde fit ut sive recta quaelibet opera, seu sanctae doctrinae verba, in omnipotentis Dei judicio pereant, cum per haec quisque transitoriis favoribus anhelat. Hinc etenim per prophetam Judaeae dicitur quod in se ipsa incauta mens invenit, si saltem post culpam suas caute cogitationes rimetur: Olivam uberem, pulchram, fructiferam, speciosam vocavit Dominus nomen tuum. Ad vocem loquelae grandis exarsit ignis in ea, et combusta sunt fruteta ejus (Jerem. XI, 16). Olivam quippe uberem et pulchram, fructiferam et speciosam Dominus vocat, cujus vel efficaciam in operatione, vel sancta studia in verbis scientiae approbat. Sed ad vocem loquelae grandis exarsit ignis in ea, quia cum laudari quis coeperit, erubescit forsitan minor videri quam dicitur, et studet esse quod dicatur. Vox enim grandis loquelae est favor adulantis. Unde scriptum est: Qui benedicit proximo suo voce grandi de nocte consurgens, similis est maledicenti (Prov. XXVII, 14). Ad vocem ergo loquelae grandis exarsit ignis in ea, quia in magnitudine favoris flamma in corde accenditur de amore laudis. Sed omnia olivae fruteta comburuntur, quia ante omnipotentis Dei oculos, vel quae bene gesta vel quae scienter sunt dicta depereunt, cum jam non amore Domini, sed intentione transitoriae laudis fiunt. Sic enim saepe cogitationi bonae cogitatio sinistra subjungitur, ut vix ipse qui easdem cogitationes generat animus cognoscat. Unde praedicator egregius, cum loquens subtiliter diceret: Vivus est sermo Dei et efficax, et penetrabilior omni gladio ancipiti, et pertingens usque ad divisionem animae ac spiritus (Hebr. IV, 12). illico subjunxit: Compagum quoque et medullarum, et discretor cogitationum et intentionum cordis (Ibid.).

17. Distinguit enim Dei sermo compages et medullas, quia discernit cogitationes et intentiones cordis. Per compages quippe ossibus ossa

junguntur. Et saepe dum quid recta cogitatione agimus, sed subito in laudis amorem declinamus, atque hoc pro laude facimus quod prius facere pro veritate coeperamus, quia cogitationes cogitationibus adjunguntur, quasi quaedam in spiritu compages fiunt. Sed habent ossa, quae in compage juncta sunt, etiam medullas. Quod praedicator sanctus apertius intulit, cum subjunxit: Discretor cogitationum et intentionum cordis (Ibid.). Compages enim nostrae cogitationes sunt, medullae autem intentiones. Et saepe aliud cogitamus, atque aliud est quod per cogitationem intendimus. Nam si quis proposito nummorum praemio pupilli vel viduae causam defendat, et, fortasse Ecclesiam ingrediens, in suis precibus Deo dicat: Tu vides quia causam pupilli et viduae defendo, iste procul dubio quod cogitat scit, sed quo intendat ejus cogitatio ignorat. Aliud quippe cogitat, atque alio intendit. Non enim defensionem pupilli vel viduae, sed mercedem nummorum quaerit. Nam tolle temporale praemium, et pupillum ac viduam non defendit. Sermo itaque Dei discretor est cogitationum et intentionum cordis, quia non aspicit quid apud temetipsum cogitas, sed per medullam compagis, id est per intentionem cogitationis quid accipere requiras. Restat ergo ut doctor, cum loquitur, quasi mensa Dei semper intus labium reflectat, ne aut mala intentione loqui inchoet, aut cum bene coeperit, seductus favoribus, in appetitum alium declinet.

18. Fortasse autem de custodia disciplinae sermo doctori est. Et saepe etiam contingit ut disciplinae regulam quam scit dicere nesciat tenere, quia aut, nimio zelo motus, minus se per mansuetudinem temperat; aut nimia mansuetudine placidus, minus se contra vitia in zeli stimulo inflammat. Magna enim consideratione debemus pensare quod scriptum est, quia in vasis templi inter coronas et plectas, boves et leones et cherubim exsculpta sunt, et subter boves et leones lora dependentia (III Reg. VII, 29). Coronae quippe signum victoriae, plectae autem concordiae unanimitatem signant; Cherubim vero plenitudo scientiae dicuntur. Sacerdotes enim atque doctores inter coronas et plectas, id est inter fortitudinem boni operis qua ad victoriam currunt, et charitatis concordiam, qua a se vicissim non discrepant, per boves et leones atque cherubim designati sunt, quia in plenitudine scientiae quam habent necesse est ut et boum mansuetudinem teneant, et fervorem leonum, quatenus in disciplina quam praedicant, et ex sancto zelo accensi sint, et ex paterna dulcedine tranquilli. Quibus subter se lora dependeant, ut disciplinae suae retinacula quibus ipsi ligati sunt etiam subjectis suis sollicite impendant. Subter eos enim lora dependere est custodiae vincula subditis tenere. Quae tunc recte servantur, cum nec boum mansuetudo in zeli fervore amittitur, nec leonum terror in mansuetudine declinatur. Tanta quippe debet esse discretio, ut nec disciplina nimia, nec misericordia sit remissa, ne si inordinate culpa dimittitur, is qui est culpabilis, in reatu gravius astringatur; et rursus, si culpa immoderate retinetur, tanto qui corrigitur deterior fiat, quanto erga se nil ex benignitatis gratia agi considerat. Exhibenda itaque pravis est asperitas in ostensione, charitas in mente; ut et dura ostensio delinquentem coerceat, et charitatis custodia mercedem mansuetudinis non amittat.

19. Ecce, dum loquor, Joseph animum pulsat, ut ad ostendenda quae dico ipse testis veniat. Certe somnium quod de profectu suo viderat, fratribus narrans, per hoc quod innocenter retulit, malitiae contra se stimulos excitavit (Genes. XXXVII, 5). Ab eisdem fratribus Ismaelitis est venditus (Ibid., 21), in Aegyptum ductus, mira omnipotentis Domini dispensatione eidem Aegypto praelatus est (Ibid., XLI, 41). Cumque in terra Chanaan fames exsurgeret, fratres ad Aegyptum venerunt, Joseph praelatum Aegypto repererunt, eumque submissis ad terram cervicibus adoraverunt (Ibid. XLII, 7). Et quia mutare Dei consilium non valuerunt, quem ideo vendiderant ne adorarent, adoraverunt quia vendiderunt. Tunc ipse vir Dei, spiritu discretionis plenus, cognovit fratres non cognitus. Sed memor culpae, et remissor injuriae, mala fratrum nec reddere studuit, nec sine purgatione laxare. Nam suspecta voce protinus dixit: Exploratores estis vos; ut videatis infirmiora terrae venistis, jam nunc experimentum vestri capiam. Per salutem Pharaonis non egrediemini hinc (Ibid. XLII, 9). O jaculum in corde! Peregrini venerant, famis periculum fugiebant, frumenta quae quaerebant non acceperant, et feriri se insuper jactatione criminis videbant. Inter haec ducuntur ad carcerem, et, post triduum educti, adhuc in eadem asperitate terrentur. Jam reditur ad cor, jam culpae memoria pulsat animum, atque inter se invicem locuuntur: Merito haec patimur, quia peccavimus in fratrem nostrum, videntes angustiam animae illius, cum deprecaretur nos, et non audivimus; idcirco venit super nos ista tribulatio (Ibid., 21). In his autem cor Joseph amore vincitur, secessum petit, solvit flendo quod pietati debuit. Severus ad fratres revertitur, ut cruciatus eorum animus a culpa liberaretur. Post haec unus religatur in vinculis, dimittuntur caeteri cum frumentis, ut unus frater veniat, quem minimum habere se dixerant (Ibid., 34, 35). Venit postmodum frater. Vincebat mentem pietas cum frater innocens videretur; sed permanebat in ostensione asperitas, ut fratres noxii purgarentur. Frumenta dantur, scyphus in sacco junioris fratris absconditur, furti post eos quaestio movetur (Genes. XLIV, 2). Mittitur ut reducantur, addici in servitutem decernitur apud quem scyphus fuisset inventus. In sacco ultimi fratris invenitur. Tunc Benjamin reducitur, afflicti omnes fratres sequuntur. O tormenta misericordiae! Cruciat, et amat. Reversi igitur, in terram cum lacrymis prostrati, veniam postulant. Memores enim quid de illo patri promiserant, moerore intolerabili tabescebant. Tunc se ultra cohibere non valens pietas clausa prorupit ad medium, et excussit charitatis lacrymas de vultu severitatis (Genes. XLV, 1). Detersa est ira quae apparebat, et non erat; ostensa misericordia quae erat, et non apparebat. Sic vir sanctus facinus fratrum et dimisit, et vindicavit. Sic in vigore clementiam tenuit, ut delinquentibus fratribus nec sine ultione pius existeret, nec sine pietate districtus.

20. Ecce hoc est magisterium disciplinae, ut culpas et discrete noverit parcere, et pie resecare. Qui autem discretionis spiritum non habent, aut sic dimittunt peccata, ut non corrigant, aut sic quasi corrigendo feriunt, ut non dimittant. Doctor ergo cui de disciplinae moderamine loqui necesse est mensam Dei esse se sciat, atque intus labrum reflectat, ut quod docendo loquitur, hoc sub discretionis spiritu vigilanter operetur. Nec si quaedam sibi deesse considerat, oportet ub ab eorum praedicatione conticescat. Locus quippe ejus exigit ut loquatur. Verbis ergo suis semetipsum conveniat; et si non ideo loquitur quia non operatur, ideo operetur quia loqui compellitur. Ubi itaque se conspicit opere implere quod dicit, ibi auditores admoneat, eorumque animos ad studium bonae operationis accendat. Ubi autem necdum se videt implesse quod loquitur, ad bona de quibus auditores admonet se quoque pariter inflammet, ut ipse etiam simul discat in opere quod per eum loquitur veritas in praedicatione. Saepe enim quod vivendo nescimus, compulsi locutione doctrinae, loquendo discimus; et dum cogitatione nostrae pigritiae reatus nascitur in mente, eamdem mentem compunctio subito oborta transverberat, et sua voce excitata evigilat in opere, quae prius torpebat in otio sine voce. Ecce autem cum mensae labium palmo tenditur, id est cum per doctoris os contra vitia disputatur, atque ad bona opera cor auditorum accenditur, multi qui ejus verba audiunt quanta vel qualia mala perpetraverint recognoscunt; atque ad eum confitentes veniunt, eumque pro peccatis suis intercessorem fieri cum fletibus petunt, ut ipse orando deleat culpas quas praedicando manifestat. Unde et subditur: VERS. 43. — Super mensas autem carnes oblationis.

21. Doctores etenim sancti cum pro compunctis peccatoribus atque confitentibus omnipotenti Domino preces fundunt, per hoc quod veniam pro carnali eorum vita postulant, mensae Domini carnes oblationis portant. Ut ergo sint pro quibus conversis et flentibus rogent, oportet ut eisdem prius in peccato positis praedicent; et cum jam coeperint peccata relinquere, atque ad innocentiam festinare, necesse est ut erga eos in ore doctoris incrementa praedicationis excrescant, et quibusdam doctrinae suae verbo tanto vehementius insistat, quanto eos gravius cecidisse considerat, videlicet sciens quod ipse tanto mercedem magnae remunerationis accipiat, quanto verbis suis alios de profundioribus peccatis levat.

22. Libet inter haec sancti Evangelii ad medium verba deducere, cujus sacra historia per hoc quod factum miraculum narrat, mira quae quotidie aguntur denuntiat. Nam cum fessi atque jejuni ad Dominum populi convenissent, discipulis Dominus dixit: Misereor super turbam, quia ecce jam triduo sustinent me, nec habent quid manducent; et si dimisero eos jejunos in domos suas, deficient in via; quidam enim ex eis de longe venerunt (Marc. VIII, 2, 3). Turba triduo Dominum sustinet, quando multitudo fidelium peccata quae perpetravit, per poenitentiam declinans, ad Deum se in opere, locutione, atque in cogitatione convertit. Quos dimittere jejunos in domum suam Dominus non vult, ne deficiant in via, quia videlicet conversi peccatores in praesentis vitae via deficiunt, si in sua conscientia sine doctrinae sanctae pabulo dimittantur. Ne ergo lassentur in hujus peregrinationis itinere, pascendi sunt sancta admonitione. Valde autem pensanda est pia sententia quae processit ex ore Veritatis, qua dicitur: Quidam enim ex eis de longe venerunt (Ibidem). Est autem qui, nihil fraudis et nihil carnalis corruptionis expertus, ad omnipotentis Dei servitium festinavit. Iste de longinquo non venit, quia per incorruptionem et innocentiam proximus fuit. Alius nulla impudicitia, nullis flagitiis inquinatus, solum autem conjugium expertus, ad ministerium spiritale conversus est. Neque iste venit de longinquo, quia usus conjunctione concessa, per illicita non erravit. Alii vero post carnis flagitia, alii post falsa testimonia, alii post facta furta, alii post illatas violentias, alii post perpetrata homicidia ad poenitentiam redeunt, atque ad omnipotentis Dei servitium convertuntur: hi videlicet ad Dominum de longinquo veniunt.

Quanto etenim quisque plus in pravo opere erravit, tanto ab omnipotente Domino longius recessit. Nam et prodigus filius, qui patrem deseruit, abiit in regionem longinquam, in qua porcos pavit, quia vitia nutrivit (Luc. XV, 16). Dentur igitur alimenta eis etiam qui de longinquo veniunt, quia conversis peccatoribus doctrinae sanctae cibi praebendi sunt, ut in Deum vires reparent, quas in flagitiis amiserunt. Qui saepe a doctoribus tanto necesse est ut a largioribus cibis doctrinae satientur, quanto fessi majoribus vitiis venerunt. Et cum jam confiteri coeperint mala quae commiserunt, atque confitendo relinquere et fletibus punire, necesse est ut doctores sancti pro eorum peccatis sollicite exorent, quatenus mensae Domini carnes oblationis portent. Quod quoties agunt, in hoc quod pro alienis peccatis interveniunt, sua ante Dei oculos amplius detergunt, quia ea ipsa charitate se justificant, qua mira pietate pro alienis iniquitatibus se in lamentis mactant. Nec laboriosum debet esse doctoribus pro conversis peccatoribus lacrymas fundere, quando et ipse qui omnia creavit, homo factus, pro nostris iniquitatibus in cruce sanguinem fudit, qui vivit et regnat cum Patre in unitate Spiritus sancti Deus, in saecula saeculorum. Amen.

HOMILIA X

Quatuor versus, a 44 ad 48, exponendo sanctus Doctor de fide, spe, charitate, ac de bonis operibus Deo in cordis altari offerendis liberius excurrit, et hoc opus absolvit.

1. Sacri eloquii mysticos sensus Propheta per aspirationem sancti Spiritus prudenter intelligens, dicit: Mirabilia testimonia tua, ideo scrutata est ea anima mea (Psal. CXVIII, 129). Qui rursus ait: Revela oculos meos, et considerabo mirabilia de lege tua (Ibid., 18). Qui enim necdum occulta de apertis intelligit, oculos velatos habet. Qui vero jam intelligit, revelatis oculis mirabilia de lege Dei considerat, quia, spiritaliter litterae verba discutiens, quae interius magnitudo lateat pensat. An non est mirabile quando aliud auribus sonat, atque aliud exit ad intelligentiam quod non sonabat? Cui ergo verbum sacri eloquii nisi lapidi simile dixerim, in quo ignis latet? Qui manu quidem frigidus tenetur, sed, percussus ferro, per scintillas micat, atque hoc emittit ignem qui post ardeat, quod prius manus frigidum tenebat. Sic etenim, sic verba sunt sacri eloquii, quae quidem per narrationem litterae frigida tenentur; sed si quis haec, aspirante Domino, intento intellectu pulsaverit, de mysticis ejus sensibus ignem producit, ut in eis verbis post animus spiritaliter ardeat, quae prius per litteram ipse quoque frigidus audiebat. Ecce enim propheta dicit: VERS. 44. — Et extra portam interiorem gazophylacia cantorum in atrio interiori, quod erat in latere portae respicientis ad Aquilonem; et facies eorum contra viam Australem unam, ex latere portae Orientalis quae respiciebat ad viam Aquilonis.

2. In his itaque verbis litterae ad amorem Dei cujus animus infervescat, quin potius non ex ipsa eorum lectione tepefiat? Si autem latens in littera spiritalis medulla discutitur, per hoc scintillae intellectus exeunt, et incendunt quod prius cordis auribus frigidum sonabat. Nobis tamen, ut se aspirante Domino interior intellectus aperiat, ipsa prius narratio juxta litteram patefiat. Ait enim quia porta erat interior, atque extra hanc atrium, quod appellatur interius; ac deinde aliae, id est Aquilonis, Austri, atque Orientis portae describuntur, ut ipsum atrium quod esse extra portam interiorem dixerat a portis exterioribus esse interius ostendat. Atrium ergo hoc et foris, et intus est: foris, quia extra portam interiorem; intus autem, quia intra portas exteriores. Gazophylacia quoque cantorum esse in hoc eodem atrio narrantur, quae a latere portae posita dicuntur respicientis ad Aquilonem. Sed ipsa eadem gazophylacia ad Australem viam respiciunt. Et subditur: Ex latere portae Orientalis, quae respiciebat ad viam Aquilonis. In quibus verbis aperte intelligitur quia cantorum gazophylacia inter latus portae respicientis ad Aquilonem, et latus portae Orientalis fuerant posita, quae porta videlicet respiciebat ad viam Aquilonis. Facies itaque gazophylaciorum contra viam Australem, sed positio inter portam erat Orientis et Aquilonis. Porta ergo interior habebat ex latere portam Aquilonis, ex alio quoque latere portam Australem. In fronte vero vestibuli Orientalis porta surrexerat, atque sic atrium quod erat extra portam interiorem, ut hoc quoque esset interius, portae exterius ambiebant.

3. Haec de verbis litterae sub brevitate transcurrimus, ut in eis sensus mysticos non breviter exquiramus. In parte autem superiori tres portae descriptae sunt, id est Orientis, Aquilonis, et Austri; moxque interioris atrii tres aliae narratae, id est Austri, Orientis, et Aquilonis, ac deinde porta atrii interioris dicta est, in qua mensae de quadris lapidibus exstructae memorantur; et porta quae respiciebat ad Aquilonem, in qua mensae essent ad sacrificium, non ad holocaustum. Unde in interiori diximus significari Ecclesiam, in exteriori Synagogam. Sed, his expletis, rursum propheta incipit interiorem portam, atque tres alias, id est Aquilonis, Austri et Orientis describere, et in earum atrio interiori, quod erat extra portam interiorem, esse gazophylacia, cantores, sacerdotes, templum, altare, sacrificia perhibet. In quibus verbis quia de sanctae Ecclesiae institutione narrare alia ab eis quae prius dixerat coepit, patet quod interioris portae intellectum mutavit. Si enim sub uno intellectu omnia diceret, novo ordine ipsa atque alia non replicaret. Nam quomodo possumus extra portam interiorem atrium, gazophylacia, cantores, sacerdotes, templum, altare, sacrificia dicere, si per eamdem portam interiorem hoc loco sancta Ecclesia designatur? Cum enim cuncta haec intra ipsam sint, quomodo extra portam interiorem sunt, si extra Ecclesiam non sunt? Intelligi ergo porta interior potest ea de qua jam longe superius locuti sumus, quae contra portam Aquilonis et Orientalem dicitur posita, per quam figurari diximus aditum qui nobis ad interiora gaudia patriae coelestis aperitur, ut hic quoque per portas quae circa vestibulum narrantur sancta Ecclesia, per portam vero interiorem coelestis regni aditus figuretur. Sed ne quis me verba sancti Spiritus aestimet ad intellectum meum violenter inflectere, et dicat quia de porta interiori significationem sanctae Ecclesiae quam semel dixi mutare non debui, infulgente Dei omnipotentis gratia, quae coepimus ipsa teneamus, ut et porta interior signet Ecclesiam, quae nos ad interiora gaudia perducit; et gazophylacia, cantores, sacerdotes, templum, altare, sacrificia sint in atrio quod est extra portam, et tamen entra Ecclesiam non sint. Si enim subtili investigatione perquirimus, nil obstat intelligi ut interiorem portam, sicut dictum est, sanctam Ecclesiam sentiamus. De qua nunc dicitur: Et extra portam interiorem gazophylacia cantorum in atrio interiori. Duo sunt etenim quae dicuntur: porta interior, atque extra hanc atrium interius, quatenus hoc ipsum atrium et exterius sit et interius, a porta exterius, interius autem, sicut praediximus, portis quas narrando subjunxit.

4. Sancta enim Ecclesia duas vitas habet, unam quam temporaliter ducit, aliam quam in aeternum recipit; unam qua laborat in terra, aliam qua remuneratur in coelo; unam qua mercedes colligit, aliam vero in qua jam de receptis mercedibus gaudet, atque in utraque vita offert sacrificium. Hic videlicet sacrificium compunctionis, et ilic sacrificium laudis. De hoc sacrificio dicitur: Sacrificium Deo spiritus contribulatus (Psal. L, 19). De illo autem scriptum est: Tunc acceptabis sacrificium justitiae, oblationes et holocausta (Ibid., 21). De quo rursus ait: Ut cantet tibi gloria mea, et non compungar (Psal. XXIX, 13). In utroque autem sacrificio carnes offeruntur, quia hic oblatio carnis est maceratio corporis, ibi oblatio carnis est in laudem Dei gloria resurrectionis. Tunc quippe illic quasi in holocaustum offeretur caro, quando in aeterna incorruptione permutata nil contradictionis, nil mortalitatis habuerit, quia tota simul amoris ejus ignibus accensa in laude sine fine permanebit. Porta ergo haec interior, id est in sancta Ecclesia habeat interiora sua, illam videlicet vitam quae adhuc oculis nostris occulta est. Habeat extra eam atrium exterius, id est vitam praesentem, in qua omne bonum agitur, ut ad bonum sine fine perveniatur.

5. Sint ergo in interiori atrio, quod tamen extra portam est, gazophylacia cantorum, quia electi quique atque perfecti, qui adhuc in carne mortali subsistunt, et intra sinum sunt sanctae Ecclesiae, et adhuc extra secreta gaudia interioris vitae. Sint gazophylacia cantorum interius et exterius, quia corda sanctorum quae omnipotenti Deo desiderium suum per magni ardoris amorem cantant, et jam intus sunt, et adhuc intus non sunt, quia in sanctae Ecclesiae sinu posita, et jam vident per spiritum quod intus fortiter ament, et tamen adhuc non vident perfecte quod amant. Sint itaque in interiori atrio gazophylacia, sed extra portam, ut jam et intus sint per desiderium, et adhuc intus non sint per plenarium effectum. Quid sunt autem gazophylacia cantorum, nisi sancta desideria amantium? Qui praecepta divina quasi quasdam divitias custodiunt in mente, quas cantando servant, quia mandata Dei non ex timore, sed ex amore perficiunt; eisque ipsis sacri eloquii praeceptiones cantabiles fiunt, quia non ex tristitia, sed ex desiderio semper operantur. Vultis cor justi quasi cujusdam cantoris gazophylacium audire? Cantabiles mihi erant justificationes tuae in loco incolatus mei (Psal. CXVIII, 54). Justificationes Dei dicimus praecepta divina, quae nos justos faciunt, si impleantur. Quae tunc nobis in loco incolatus nostri cantabiles fiunt, quando in hac peregrinatione vitae praesentis ipsa eadem mandata diligimus, et ex desiderio implemus. Hinc est quod idem Psalmista iterum ex cantorum gazophylacio se insinuat, qui ait: Misericordiam et judicium cantabo tibi, Domine (Psal. C, 1).

6. Misericordiam Domini, qua peccata laxantur, cantare etiam peccator debet, id est hanc cum gaudio dicere atque sperare. Sed quis ita justus est, ut ejus sibi aeternum judicium ante mentis oculos revocet, et non contremiscat, ac potius venire ad illud examen tanti judicis praesumat, festinet, et gaudeat? Quisquis ille est, magnus est, quia, jam misericordiam Domini et judicium cantando, omnipotentem Deum, qui ejus peccata misericorditer relaxat, toto mentis affectu diligit, ac propterea ejus judicium non pertimescit. Charitas namque perfecta, ut Joannes apostolus ait, foras mittit timorem (I Joan. IV, 18). Cantat quippe judicium, ad quod intrare non trepidat. Sit ergo mens illius gazophylacium cantorum, ut per divitias misericordiae quas accipit laetus pergat ad judicium, quod jam non pertimescit. Videamus si placet, fratres charissimi, aliud quoque gazophylacium cantoris. Forsitan et ipse judicium cantat. Quid etenim dicit? Ego enim jam delibor, et tempus meae resolutionis instat. Bonum certamen certavi, cursum consummavi, fidem servavi; de reliquo reposita est mihi corona justitiae, quam reddet mihi Dominus in illa die justus judex (II Tim. IV, 6, seq.). Qui laborum suorum conscius, memor certaminis quod egit, memor fidei quam servavit, esse sibi in judicio repositam coronam dicit, eamque sibi in illa die reddi sperat potius quam donari, profecto patet quia judicium cantat, quod venire desiderat. Unde etiam subdit: Non solum autem mihi, sed et his qui diligunt adventum ejus (Ibid., 8). Nemo enim adventum judicis diligit, nisi qui se habere causam in judicio bonam novit. Eorum ergo corda qui adventum judicis diligunt gazophylacia cantorum sunt, quia per praesumptionem gratiae et vitae, per virtutes sancti desiderii cantant justi judicium, quod omnes injusti pertimescunt.

7. Meminit autem charitas vestra quia superiori locutione per portam Orientis fidem, per Aquilonis spem, per Austri autem charitatem diximus designari. Haec itaque gazophylacia inter portam Orientis et Aquilonis esse memorantur, atque ad viam Australem respicere, quia corda sanctorum, inter fidem et spem posita, Australem viam respiciunt, quoniam sanctae charitatis ignibus exardescunt. Ipsa quoque Orientalis porta respicere dicitur ad viam Aquilonis, quia nobis per fidem quidem omnia in baptismate peccata laxantur, sed tamen dum adhuc hic vivimus, etiam post fidem saepius ad peccata declinamus. Et quasi Orientis porta viam Aquilonis respicit, cum vita nostra post perceptam fidem adhuc aliquatenus in frigore culpae torpescit. Quis enim in hac vita valeat post fidem sine culpa vivere, cum Joannes dicat: Si dixerimus quia peccatum non habemus, ipsi nos seducimus, et veritas in nobis non est (I Joan. I, 8)? Cujus verbis Jacobus concordans, ait: In multis enim offendimus omnes (Jac. III, 2). Si autem peccata praeterita in fidei perceptione dimissa sunt, et adhuc post fidem ad peccata declinatur, quae nobis erit praesumptio justitiae, quae spes vitae permanentis nisi ut nunc, dum adhuc inter portam Orientis et Aquilonis sumus, ad viam Austri mentis oculos levemus, quatenus, ex sancta charitate ferventes, calor nos amoris liberet a culpa torporis et frigoris? Sint ergo gazophylacia inter portam Orientis et Aquilonis; sed, sicut dictum est, ad Australem viam facies intendant, ut inter hoc, quod nati in fide sumus, et quod post, ad peccata delapsi, de spe pietatis praesumimus, exerceamus nosmetipsos in ardore charitatis, et ibi tendamus oculos cordis, ubi accendimur ignibus amoris.

8. Potest autem per Aquilonis portam gentilitas, per Austri viam Judaea, per Orientis autem portam ipse Dominus designari. Per Aquilonem quippe non immerito gentilitas figuratur, quam ille in torporis frigore possedit qui dixit: Sedebo in monte testamenti, in lateribus Aquilonis (Isai. XIV, 13). Per Australem quoque portam recte Judaea accipitur, in qua spiritales patres coelesti amore ferbuerunt. Quorum unus loquitur, dicens: Converte, Domine, captivitatem nostram, sicut torrens in Austro (Psal. CXXV, 4). Quae etsi carnalem populum habuit in quo velut Aquilonis frigora portavit, in sanctis tamen suis doctoribus ac Prophetis ad Deum ac proximum calore charitatis arsit. Orientalis autem porta non immerito ipsum signat, de quo scriptum est: Ecce vir, Oriens nomen ejus (Zach. VI, 12). Et de quo Zacharias ait: Visitavit nos Oriens ex alto (Luc. I, 78). Sint ergo gazophylacia cantorum ex latere portae Aquilonis, quia non solum in Judaea fuerunt corda sanctorum spiritaliter accensa, sed etiam in gentilitatis multitudine ad sanctae fidei sacramenta conversae ardent corda sanctorum amore coelestis patriae, inhiant gaudiis aeternis, suspirant ad societatem suorum civium in coelo; sed tamen exempla hujus ardoris, quem dono sancti Spiritus acceperunt, a spiritalibus patribus Synagogae capiunt. Unde ipsa quoque gazophylacia et in Aquilonis latere posita oculos ad viam Australem tendunt. Ecce enim ex gentibus venimus; sed in hoc quod per sancti Spiritus amorem calemus, Judaeae patres aspicimus, qui nobis in suis dictis quotidie sancti desiderii exempla praebent.

9. An non quasi calore meridiani fervoris ardebat, qui aestuabat, dicens: Sicut cervus desiderat ad fontes aquarum, ita desiderat anima mea ad te, Deus. Sitivit anima mea ad Deum vivum; quando veniam et parebo ante faciem Dei (Psal. XLI, 2, 3)? Qui rursus ait: Psallam et intelligam in via immaculata, quando venies ad me (Psal. C, 2). Hoc quoque ardore succensus fuerat qui dicebat: Nunc dimittis, Domine, servum tuum secundum verbum tuum in pace, quia viderunt oculi mei salutare tuum (Luc. II, 29, 30). Quia ergo ex gentilitate venimus, sed sanctos Judaeae patres nobis in divini amoris imitatione proponimus, quasi quaedam cantorum gazophylacia ex latere portae quae viam Aquilonis respicit sumus, sed ad viam Austri facies tenemus.

10. Et notandum quod haec cadem gazophylacia inter portam Aquilonis et Orientis esse perhibentur, quia videlicet post incarnationem Dominicam multitudo gentium ad fidem venit, atque inter ipsos fideles populos et sacramenta dominicae incarnationis quam medullitus diligunt, corda amantium surgunt. Habeant ergo sancta gazophylacia, hinc Orientis portam, et inde Aquilonis, quia inter ipsa redemptionis suae mysteria quae sequuntur, et carnales quosdam quos et intra sanctam Ecclesiam tolerant, multi in Deum forti amore proficiunt, virtutibus excrescunt, aeterni judicis adventum quaerunt, et inter ea quae amant atque illa quae tolerant, quasi quaedam gazophylacia, divitias spiritus in mente servant. Nec inter sacramenta quae diligunt et quaedam contraria quae portant deficiunt, quia ad Australem viam facies intendunt. Quid enim patimur quod patres nostri pro amore Domini antea non pertulerunt.

11. Notandum vero quod inter portam Austri et Aquilonis Orientalis porta esse describitur, quia Dominus ac Redemptor noster de Judaea est natus, moxque in fide sua Ecclesiam ex gentibus traxit. Quasi enim inter meridianam portam et Aquilonis apparuit, quia ex illa venit, et istam in suum servitium convertit. Unde et bene dicitur quod porta eadem Orientalis ad viam respicit Aquilonis, quia natus Dominus Synagogam deseruit, et multitudinem gentium collegit. Notandum quoque est quod dum de gazophylaciis diceretur: Et facies eorum ad viam Australem, additum est unam, ut videlicet aperte sentiamus quia non alia est via ad coelestem patriam nobis qui ex gentilitate venimus, atque alia illis patribus qui fuerunt in Judaea; sed haec eadem una via est nobis et illis, quae nos ad aeterna gaudia perducit, quae nobis per Evangelium dicit: Ego sum via, veritas, et vita (Joan. XIV, 6). De qua Psalmista ait: Ut cognoscamus in terra viam tuam, in omnibus gentibus salutare tuum (Psal. LXVI, 3). Quod enim Hebraice Jesus, hoc Latine dicitur salutaris. In terra ergo via cognoscitur, quia Jesus, Deus ante saecula, et homo factus in fine saeculorum, gentibus est manifestatus. Una ergo est via et illis qui ab Austro sunt, et his qui ab Aquilonis parte respiciunt, quia electis Judaeis et gentibus Dominus ac Redemptor noster, expulsa poena formidinis, ad Patrem factus est iter amoris, atque adjutorium perventionis. Sequitur, — VERS. 45: — Et dixit ad me: Hoc gazophylacium quod respicit viam meridianam, sacerdotum est qui excubant in custodiis templi. Atque mox subditur: VERS. 46. — Porro gazophylacium quod respicit ad viam Aquilonis sacerdotum erit qui excubant ad ministerium altaris.

12. In quibus prophetae verbis prius nobis quaerendum est qui sint majoris ordinis sacerdotes, utrum hi qui in custodiis excubant templi, an qui in ministerio altaris. Sed quia paulo post subditur: Altare erat ante faciem templi, aperte ostenditur illos esse majoris ordinis sacerdotes qui in custodiis templi excubant, quia profecto in altari quod est interius ministrant. Hi autem qui ad altare quod ante faciem templi est excubant tanto inferiores sunt quanto in exterioribus ministrant. Quaerendum ergo nobis est qui sacerdotes sint qui templum custodiunt, et qui ad ministerium altaris excubare perhibentur. Magister gentium, fidelibus scribens, ait: Templum Dei sanctum est, quod estis vos (I Cor. III, 16). Qui itaque sacerdotes sunt qui templum Dei custodiunt, nisi hi qui orando, praedicando, spiritalibus actibus vigilando, sanctam Ecclesiam a malignorum spirituum immissionibus, a pravorum suasionibus, ab haereticorum erroribus defendunt? An non custos templi fuerat qui, labores suae passionis enumerans, dicit: In labore et aerumna, in vigiliis multis, in fame et siti, in jejuniis multis, in frigore et nuditate (II Cor. XI, 27)? Atque statim subdit: Praeter illa quae extrinsecus sunt, instantia mea quotidiana, sollicitudo omnium Ecclesiarum (Ibid., 28). Pensate, quaeso, custos templi quanta sollicitudine vigilet. Ecce enim in seipso inaestimabilia patitur, et cordis sui sollicitudinem aliis impartitur. Cujus rogo virtutis est plus de utilitate proximorum quam de sua afflictione cogitare? Quis hoc digne aestimet? quis digne penset? Laborat, luget, esurit, sitit, alget, jejunat, vigilat, et tamen vigilando de Ecclesiarum omnium sollicitudine cogitat. Ecce est solertissimus custos templi in exemplo propositus. Imitetur qui valet. Adversa etenim pro veritate pati, bona proximis impendere, circa animarum sollicitudinem vigilare, ne quis in perfidiam, ne quis in superbiam, ne quis in rapinam, vel immunditiam labatur, exquirere atque compescere, hoc est templum Dei, id est sanctam Ecclesiam, custodire.

13. Sunt autem minoris ordinis sacerdotes, qui ad ministerium altaris excubant, qui videlicet in adjutorium majorum peccata delinquentium subtiliter investigant, et vitam carnalium corrigunt, atque ad hoc usque perducunt, ut per lamenta poenitentiae quasi incendant carnem in sacrificio, quam prius vivere permiserant in peccato. Non enim hi qui sanctis Ecclesiis praesunt per semetipsos cuncta agere praevalent. Sed dum ipsi causis spiritalibus occupantur, si qua prava ac carnalia perpetrantur, haec aliis discutienda atque corrigenda committunt. Per quos dum carnalis vita corrigitur, et usque ad abstinentiae atque orationis studium a proficientibus pervenitur, quasi in altari jam caro incenditur, ut in conspectu omnipotentis Domini inde sacrificium redoleat, unde prius culpa displicebat.

14. Sed hac in re quaestio oritur, cum superius dictum sit quod gazophylacia ad Australem viam facies haberent, qua ratione nunc dicatur quia gazophylacium quod respicit viam meridianam sacerdotum est qui excubant in custodiis templi, et gazophylacium quod respicit viam Aquilonis sacerdotum qui excubant ad ministerium altaris. Si enim utraque facies ad Australem viam tendebant, quomodo nunc unum ad meridianam atque aliud ad Aquilonis viam respicere dicitur? Sed in his verbis agnoscimus quod gazophylacium sacerdotum qui excubant in custodiis templi ita positum fuerat, ut solam meridianam viam respiceret; gazophylacium vero sacerdotum qui excubant ad ministerium altaris ita erat in atrio, ut et ad Australem viam et Aquilonis faciem tenderet, quatenus et cum gazophylacio sacerdotum qui excubant in custodiis templi meridianam viam aspiceret, et tamen sine gazophylacio eorumdem sacerdotum gazophylacium sacerdotum qui excubant ad ministerium altaris Aquilonis viam videret. Sed quid est hoc, fratres charissimi? quid in his verbis mysticum possumus intueri, nisi hoc quod secundum ea quae praemissa sunt jam spiritalis auditor intelligit, quia sacerdotes majoris ordinis, qui excubant in custodiis templi, solam meridianam viam respiciunt, quoniam, solis studiis spiritalibus occupati, semper his quae amoris Dei sunt sollicite intendunt; sacerdotes autem minoris ordinis, qui discutiendis peccatis delinquentium praesunt, etiam ad Aquilonis viam oculos reflectunt, ut in mente peccantium quae sint torporis frigora videant, et haec, verbis correptionis usque ad poenitentiae gemitus perducentes, quasi carnes in altari Domini incendant? Respiciant etiam cum magnis sacerdotibus ad meridianam viam, quia, quantum ad semetipsos est, fervent igne charitatis, et succensi sunt flammis amoris Dei. Sed quia peccata delinquentium crebro corrigunt, etiam ad Aquilonis viam oculos reducunt. De utrisque autem sacerdotum ordinibus subditur: IBID. — Isti sunt filii Sadoch, qui accedunt de filiis Levi ad Dominum ut ministrent ei.

15. Sadoch Latine dicitur justus. Quis autem justus est, nisi ipse cui dicitur: Justus es, Domine, et rectum judicium tuum (Psal. CXVIII, 137)? Qui vero sunt filii justi, nisi hi de quibus scriptum est: Quotquot autem crediderunt in eum, dedit eis potestatem filios Dei fieri (Joan. I, 12)? Levi autem interpretatur assumptus. Quis autem a Domino assumptus est, nisi populus fidelis, qui per sacramenta fidei est a perfidis segregatus? Omnes ergo qui perseveranter spiritalibus actibus intendunt filii sunt justi. Et de filiis populi assumpti accedunt ad Dominum ut ministrent ei, quia de ipsis quoque fidelibus eliguntur, qui ad omnipotentis Dei ministerium veniant, et coelestibus studiis pro eruditione populi intendant.

16. Sed nobis solerter inquirendum est qui sunt qui Domino ministrant. Neque enim omnes qui legunt, omnes qui praedicant, omnes qui propria tribuunt, omnes qui per carnis abstinentiam corpus castigant, Domino ministrant. Qui enim legendo atque praedicando, gloriam propriam quaerunt, largiendo quae habent, et corpus in abstinentia macerando, laudes recipere ab hominibus appetunt, sibi, non Domino, ministrant. Quo contra per Psalmistam Dominus dicit: Ambulans in via immaculata, hic mihi ministrabat (Psal. C, 6). Habet enim maculam in via qui in bono opere quod agit terrenae gloriae sibi praemium proponit, qui in hoc mundo recipere mercedem quaerit, et foedat in conspectu Dei speciem boni operis macula pravae intentionis. Fortasse etenim quis disciplinae studio intentus fervet, culpas delinquentium resecat, qui tamen ad haec agenda si non ex omnipotentis Dei amore, sed zelo proprio ducitur, sibi in his, et non Domino, ministrat. Alius, ne asper esse videatur, multa leniter tolerat quae prave perpetrantur. Iste itaque, quia videri pro Domino districtus non vult, per lenitatis suae studium sibi, et non Domino, ministrat. Restat ergo ut sive in verbi ministerio fatigemur, sive indigentibus nostra largiamur, sive per abstinentiam carnem domemus, sive zelo moveamur, sive per patientiam aliquando leniter prava toleremus, ut nos summopere debeamus intentionem nostram discutere, quatenus omne quod facimus, non nostro, sed Domini zelo faciamus, ne in his quae agimus nobis potius quam Domino ministremus. Non enim Domino, sed sibi, ministraverant de quibus Paulus dicebat: Omnes quae sua sunt quaerunt, non quae sunt Jesu Christi (Philip. II, 21). Idem vero Paulus cum electis fratribus non sibi ministrare, sed Domino, et vivendo et moriendo festinabat, dicens: Nemo nostrum sibi vivit, et nemo sibi moritur. Sive enim vivimus, Domino vivimus; sive morimur, Domini sumus (Rom. XIV, 7, 8). Sibi enim sancti nec vivunt, nec moriuntur. Sibi non vivunt, quia per omne quod agunt, ad lucra spiritalia anhelant, atque orando, praedicando, sanctis operibus insistendo, coelestis patriae cives multiplicare desiderant. Sibi minime moriuntur, quia in conspectu hominum Deum de sua morte glorificant, ad quem pervenire etiam moriendo festinant. Pensemus itaque in morte sanctorum non quantum eorum opprobrium ab infidelibus fuit, sed quanta laus Domini in corde fidelium excrevit. Qui si suam laudem quaererent, profecto pati tot opprobria in morte timuissent. Sed nemo nostrum sibi vivit, et nemo sibi moritur, quia suam gloriam nec vivendo, nec moriendo quaesierunt. Videamus si ipse primus pastor Ecclesiae, qui sibi non vixit, sibi sit mortuus. Joannes ejus socius requiratur, et ex verbis Domini de morte pastoris ejusdem dicat: Hoc autem dixit significans qua morte clarificaturus esset Deum (Joan. XXI, 19). Non ergo sibi est mortuus qui Deum clarificavit in morte. Discamus igitur, fratres mei, intentionem nostram in omne quod agimus sollicita inquisitione discutere, et nostra non quaerere, si omnipotenti Deo volumus ministrare. Sed quia ex fideli populo filios Sadoch ad omnipotentis Dei ministerium diximus assumi, nunquid in eodem populo non sunt multi qui inveniantur in mandatis Dei vivere perfecti? Sunt omnino; nam subditur: VERS. 47. — Et mensus est atrium longitudine centum cubitorum, et latitudine centum cubitorum per quadrum.

17. Saepe jam per longitudinem longanimitatem spei, per latitudinem vero charitatis amplitudinem diximus signari. Centenarius autem numerus in quo denarius decies ducitur, quod summam perfectionis signet, plene superius dictum est (Hom. 6, olim 18, num. 16). Quid est igitur atrium spiritalis aedificii, nisi amplitudo fidelium populorum? Ipsa autem longanimitas spei et latitudo charitatis vacua in cordibus fidelium non est, nam per fidem quidquid valet operatur. Unde per Paulum dicitur: In Christo Jesu neque circumcisio aliquid valet, neque praeputium, sed fides quae per dilectionem operatur (Gal. V, 6). Si ergo in vita fidelium juxta quemdam modum per singulos perfecta est longanimitas spei, perfecta latitudo charitatis, perfecta certitudo fidei, perfectum studium operationis, atrium templi per quadrum centum cubitos habet. In mensura autem quadri non aliud latus majus est, atque aliud minus, sed cuncta simul quatuor latera aequali spatio tenduntur, quia et ipsas easdem virtutes, quas diximus, fidem scilicet, spem, charitatem atque operationem, quandiu in hac vita vivimus, aequales sibi esse apud nosmetipsos invenimus. Idcirco autem major spe et fide charitas dicitur, quia postquam ad auctoris nostri speciem pervenitur, spes quidem et fides transit, sed charitas permanet. Nam nunc et quantum credimus, tantum amamus; et quantum amamus, tantum de spe praesumimus. De fide quoque et operatione Joannes apostolus fatetur, dicens: Qui se dicit nosse Deum, et mandata ejus non custodit, mendax est (I Joan. II, 4). Notitia quippe Dei ad fidem pertinet, mandatorum custodia ad operationem. Cum ergo virtus, tempus et locus operandi suppetit, tantum quis operatur, quantum Deum noverit; et tantum se nosse Deum indicat, quantum pro Deo bona operatur. Metiantur ergo fidelis populi virtutes in quadrum, quia unusquisque qui in activae vitae exercitio versatur tantum credit quantum sperat, et amat, et operatur; tantum sperat quantum credit, operatur et amat; tantum amat quantum credit, sperat et operatur; tantum operatur quantum credit, amat et sperat. Quia itaque in sanctae Ecclesiae populo multi sunt et robusti per fidem, et longanimes per spem, et ampli per charitatem, et efficaces per operationem, atrium templi centum cubitis in quadro mensuratur.

18. Nam ut aliquid quoque de eorum virtutibus loquamur, saepe ex eis quosdam videmus prudentes per intelligentiam, fortes in adversitate, justos in operatione, temperantes a voluptatibus, atque in omni zelo discretionis se mensura moderantes. Qui dum prudentiam, fortitudinem, justitiam, atque temperantiam, vel, sicut eas enumerare quibusdam placet, prudentiam, temperantiam, fortitudinem, atque justitiam tenent, mensuram spiritalis atrii in quadro habent. Ecce enim ipsae virtutes quas habere bonos ac fideles diximus ita in quadro sunt, ut una aliam non excedat. Magna quippe est

prudentia; sed si minus est a voluptatibus temperans, minus in periculis fortis, minus in operationibus justa, profecto minus est prudens. Magna est temperantia; sed si minus intelligit unde se temperet, si adversa sustinere per fortitudinem minus valet, atque in timore animum dejicit, si per praecipitationem suam aliquando ad injustitiae opera prorumpit, minus est temperans. Magna est fortitudo; sed si minus intelligit quae bona custodiat, quibus malis resistat, si minus a voluptatis appetitu se temperat, sed vincitur delectatione, si justitiae opera minus tenet, atque aliquando in injustitiae dominatione superatur, minus est fortis. Magna est justitia; sed si minus quam debet inter justa et injusta opera discernit, si minus cor a mundi delectatione temperat, si minus se contra adversa confortat, minus est justa. Mensuretur ergo perfectorum fidelium vita per quadrum, et tantum habeat spiritalis atrii latus unum, quantum latera singula, quia unusquisque tantum prudens est quantum temperans, fortis et justus; tantum temperans quantum prudens, fortis et justus; tantum fortis quantum prudens, temperans et justus; tantum justus quantum prudens, temperans et fortis fuerit. Sunt tamen inter eos plurimi qui adhuc carnaliter vivunt. Qui et si fortasse litteras ignorant, et praecepta Dei legere non valent, certe in multorum fidelium conversatione bona quae imitentur vident. Ecce in Ecclesia voces sancti Evangelii atque apostolorum sonant, ecce exempla bene viventium quotidie omnium oculis opponuntur. Nec in excusatione dicere poterunt: Non vidimus quod imitari deberemus. Unde et subditur: IBID. — Et altare ante faciem templi.

19. Quid est templum, nisi fidelis populus? sicut per Paulum apostolum discipulis dicitur: Templum enim Dei sanctum est, quod estis vos (I Cor. III, 17). Et quid est altare Dei, nisi mens bene viventium? Qui peccatorum suorum memores lacrymis maculas lavant, carnem per abstinentiam macerant, nullis se mundi hujus actionibus miscent, quae habent indigentibus tribuunt, et habere quae non habent non concupiscunt. Recte igitur horum cor altare Dei dicitur, ubi ex moerore compunctionis ignis ardet, et caro consumitur. Et nunquid non tales, fratres charissimi, quotidie in sancto hoc fideli populo quasi in templi atrio videmus? Nunquid non eorum vitam nobis ad exemplum propositam indesinenter aspicimus? Altare ergo ante faciem templi est, cum multi in sanctae Ecclesiae conspectu sunt positi, qui, aeterni judicii memores, semetipsos quotidie Deo sacrificium in lamento compunctionis mactant. Qui, ut praedictum est, corpora castigant, quatenus hoc quod per Magistrum gentium dicitur impleant: Ut exhibeatis corpora vestra hostiam viventem, sanctam, Deo placentem (Rom. XII, 1). Hostia quippe occiditur ut offeratur. Sed hostia vivens est corpus pro Domino afflictum. Quod et hostia dicitur, et vivens, quia vivit in virtutibus, et est a vitiis occisum. Hostia videlicet, quia jam huic mundo est a pravis actibus mortuum; vivens autem, quia cuncta quae praevalet bona operatur.

20. Sed quia sub altaris nomine de compunctionis flamma sermo se intulit, necessarium puto quae sit diversitas ejusdem compunctionis ostendere. Alia quippe compunctio est quae per timorem nascitur, alia quae per amorem, quia aliud est supplicia fugere, aliud praemia desiderare. Unde etiam in tabernaculo per legem duo altaria fieri jubentur, unum videlicet exterius, aliud vero interius; unum in atrio, aliud ante arcam; unum quod aere coopertum est, aliud quod auro vestitur. Atque in altari aereo cremantur carnes, in altari vero aureo incenduntur aromata (Exod. XXXIX, 37, 38; XL, 5, seq. etc.). Quid est hoc, fratres charissimi, quod foris concremantur carnes, intus aromata, nisi hoc quod quotidie videmus, quia duo sunt compunctionis genera, quia alii adhuc per timorem plangunt, alii vero jam se per amorem in lamentis afficiunt? Multi namque, peccatorum suorum memores, dum supplicia aeterna pertimescunt, quotidianis se lacrymis affligunt. Plangunt mala quae fecerunt, et incendunt vitia igne compunctionis, quorum adhuc suggestiones in corde patiuntur. Quid isti nisi

21. Alii vero, a carnalibus vitiis liberi, aut longis jam fletibus securi, amoris flamma in compunctionis lacrymis inardescunt, coelestis patriae praemia cordis oculis proponunt, supernis jam civibus interesse concupiscunt. Dura eis apparet servitus, longitudo peregrinationis suae. Regem in decore suo videre desiderant, et flere quotidie ex ejus amore non cessant (Isai. XXXIII, 17). Quid isti nisi altare sunt aureum, in quorum corde aromata incensa sunt, quia virtutes ardent? Bene autem de eodem altari dicitur quod ante velum arcae sit positum in sancta sanctorum. Arca quippe testamenti ipse nobis factus est de quo scriptum esse novimus: In quo sunt omnes thesauri sapientiae et scientiae absconditi (Colos. II, 3). Arca intra velum est Redemptor noster in coelo. Altare vero aureum in quo thymiama incenditur ante velum sanctorum corda, quae cum magnis virtutibus in Dei amore succensa sunt, per sanctum desiderium in illo ardent quem adhuc revelata facie videre non possunt. Inter arcam quippe et altare velum est, quia hoc quod nos adhuc a visione Dei separat corruptionis nostrae obstaculum remotum non est. Sed quousque ante velum sumus oportet ut quasi thymiamatis incensum flamma amoris ardeamus. Per compunctionis autem lacrymas nil terrenum, nil transitorium quaerere debemus. Solus ipse nobis sufficiat qui fecit omnia. Transcendamus per desiderium omnia, ut mentem colligamus in unum. Non jam timore poenarum, non memoria vitiorum, sed amoris flamma succensi, ardeamus in lacrymis cum odore virtutum.

22. Ista electorum oratio jam prospiciebatur, cum in sponsae laude diceretur: Quae est ista quae ascendit per desertum sicut virgula fumi ex aromatibus myrrhae et thuris, et universi pulveris pigmentarii (Cant. III, 6)? Sancta quippe electorum Ecclesia cum ab hoc mundo in sanctis precibus ardenti amore se erigit, per desertum quod deserit ascendit. Qualiter vero ascendat adjungit: Sicut virgula fumi ex aromatibus (Ibid.). Fumus de incenso nascitur, sicut per Psalmistam dicitur: Dirigatur oratio mea sicut incensum in conspectu tuo (Psal. CXL, 2). Fumus excutere lacrymas solet. Itaque fumus est ex aromatibus, compunctio orationis concepta ex virtutibus amoris. Quae tamen oratio fumi virgula dicitur, quia dum sola coelestia postulat, sic recta progreditur, ut ad terrena atque temporalia petenda minime reflectatur. Et notandum quod non virga, sed virgula nuncupatur, quia interdum in compunctionis ardore tantae subtilitatis est vis amoris, ut hanc nec ipse animus possit comprehendere, qui illuminatus meruit habere.

23. Bene autem dicitur, myrrhae et thuris. Thus enim ex lege Domino in sacrificio incenditur. Per myrrham vero corpora mortua condiuntur, ne a vermibus corrumpantur. Myrrhae ergo et thuris sacrificium offerunt qui et carnem afficiunt, ne eis corruptionis vitia dominentur, et redolentem in conspectu Domini amoris sui hostiam incendunt, seque ipsos Deo in sanctis virtutibus exhibent. Unde et illic subditur: Et universi pulveris pigmentarii. Pulvis est pigmentarii virtus bene operantis. Et notandum quod virtutes bene operantium non pigmenta, sed pulveres dicuntur. Cum enim quaelibet bona agimus, pigmenta offerimus. Cum vero ipsa etiam bona quae agimus retractamus, et, ne quid in his sinistrum sit, judicio retractationis attendimus, quasi ex pigmentis pulverem facimus, ut orationem nostram Domino per discretionem et amorem subtilius incendamus.

24. Ecce haec, ut, Deo largiente, potuimus, coram vobis, fratres charissimi, rimati sumus. Nemo autem me reprehendat, si post hanc locutionem cessa vero, quia, sicut omnes cernitis, nostrae tribulationes excreverunt: undique gladiis circumfusi sumus, undique imminens mortis periculum timemus. Alii, detruncatis ad nos manibus redeunt, alii capti, alii interempti nuntiantur (Joan. Diac., l. IV, c. 67). Jam cogor linguam ab expositione retinere, quia taedet animam meam vitae meae (Job. X, 1). Jam nullus a me sacri eloquii studium requirat, quia versa in luctum cithara mea, et organum meum in vocem flentium (Ibid., XXX, 31). Jam cordis oculus in mysteriorum discussione non vigilat, quia dormitavit anima mea prae taedio (Psal. CXVIII, 28). Jam minus lectio animo dulcis est, quia oblitus sum manducare panem meum a voce gemitus mei (Psal. CI, 5). Cui autem vivere non licet, de Scripturae sacrae sensibus loqui mystica qualiter libet? Et qui cogor quotidie amare bibere, quando possum dulcia propinare? Quid igitur restat, nisi ut inter flagella quae ex nostris iniquitatibus patimur cum lacrymis gratias agamus? Ipse etenim qui nos creavit etiam pater nobis factus est per adoptionis spiritum quem dedit. Et aliquando filios pane nutrit, aliquando flagello corrigit, quia per dolores et munera ad haereditatem perpetuam erudit. Sit itaque gloria omnipotenti Domino nostro Jesu Christo, qui vivit et regnat cum Patre in unitate Spiritus sancti Deus, per omnia saecula saeculorum. Amen.

Expositio in Canticum Canticorum

Postquam a paradisi gaudiis expulsum est genus humanum, in istam peregrinationem uitae praesentis ueniens caecum cor ab spiritali intellectu habet.

Cui caeco cordi si diceretur uoce diuina: sequere deum uel dilige deum, sicut ei in lege dictum est, semel foris missum et per torporem infidelitatis frigidum non caperet, quod audiret.

Idcirco per quaedam enigmata sermo diuinus animae torpenti et frigidae loquitur et de rebus, quas nouit, latenter insinuat ei amorem, quem non nouit.

Allegoria enim animae longe a deo positae quasi quandam machinam facit, ut per illam leuetur ad deum.

Interpositis quippe enigmatibus, dum quiddam in uerbis cognoscit, quod suum est, in sensu uerborum intellegit, quod non est suum, et per terrena uerba separatur a terra.

Per hoc enim, quod non abhorret cognitum, intellegit quiddam incognitum.

Rebus enim nobis notis, per quas allegoriae conficiuntur, sententiae diuinae uestiuntur et, dum recognoscimus exteriora uerba, peruenimus ad interiorem intellegentiam.

Hinc est enim, quod in hoc libro, qui in canticis canticorum conscriptus est, amoris quasi corporei uerba ponuntur: ut a torpore suo anima per sermones suae consuetudinis refricata recalescat et per uerba amoris, qui infra est, excitetur ad amorem, qui supra est.

Nominantur enim in hoc libro oscula, nominantur ubera, nominantur genae, nominantur femora; in quibus uerbis non irridenda est sacra descriptio, sed maior dei misericordia consideranda est: quia, dum membra corporis nominat et sic ad amorem uocat, notandum est quam mirabiliter nobis cum et misericorditer operatur, qui, ut cor nostrum ad instigationem sacri amoris accenderet, usque ad turpis amoris nostri uerba distendit.

Sed, unde se loquendo humiliat, inde nos intellectu exaltat: quia ex sermonibus huius amoris discimus, qua uirtute in diuinitatis amore ferueamus.

Hoc autem nobis sollerter intuendum est, ne, cum uerba exterioris amoris audimus, ad exteriora sentienda remaneamus et machina, quae ponitur ut leuet, ipsa magis opprimat ne leuemur.

Debemus enim in uerbis istis corporeis, in uerbis exterioribus, quidquid interius est quaerere et, loquentes de corpore, quasi extra corpus fieri.

Debemus ad has sacras nuptias sponsi et sponsae cum intellectu intimae caritatis, id est cum ueste uenire nuptiali, necesse est: ne, si ueste nuptiali, id est digna caritatis intellegentia, non induimur, ab hoc nuptiarum conuiuio in exteriores tenebras, id est in ignorantiae caecitate, repellamur.

Debemus per haec uerba passionis transire ad uirtutem impassibilitatis.

Sic est enim scriptura sacra in uerbis et sensibus, sicut pictura in coloribus et rebus: et nimis stultus est, qui sic picturae coloribus inheret, ut res, quae pictae sunt, ignoret.

Nos enim, si uerba, quae exterius dicuntur, amplectimur et sensus ignoramus, quasi ignorantes res, quae depictae sunt, solos colores tenemus.

Littera occidit, scriptum est, spiritus autem uiuificat.

Sic enim littera cooperit spiritum, sicut palea tegit frumentum.

Sed iumentorum est paleis uesci, hominum frumentis.

Qui ergo humana ratione utitur, iumentorum paleas abiciat et frumenta spiritus edere festinet.

Ad hoc quippe utilis est, ut mysteria litterae inuolucris tegantur, quatenus sapientia requisita plus sapiat.

Hinc enim scriptum est: sapientes abscondunt intellegentiam: quia nimirum sub tegmine litterae spiritalis intellegentia cooperitur.

Hinc rursum in eodem libro dicitur: gloria dei celare uerbum menti enim deum quaerenti tanto deus gloriosius apparet, quanto subtilius atque interius inuestigatur, ut appareat.

Sed numquid, quod in mysteriis deus celat, nos requirere non debemus?

Debemus utique; nam sequitur: et gloria regum inuestigare sermonem qui enim iam corpora sua uel motus carnis regere et inuestigare nouerunt, reges sunt.

Regum ergo gloria est inuestigare sermonem: quia bene uiuentium laus est perscrutari secreta mandatorum dei.

Humanae ergo conuersationis uerba audientes, quasi extra homines esse debemus: ne, si humaniter quae dicuntur audimus, nihil diuinitatis de his, quae audire debemus, sentire possimus.

Quasi iam non homines esse desiderabat paulus discipulos suos, quibus dicebat: cum enim sit inter uos zelus et contentio, nonne homines estis?

Quasi non iam aestimabat homines discipulos suos dominus, cum dicebat: quem dicunt homines esse filium hominis?

Cui, cum uerba hominum respondissent, illico adiunxit: uos autem quem me dicitis? Cum enim super dicit homines ac deinde subiungit uos autem, inter homines et discipulos quandam distantiam fecit: quia uidelicet, diuina eis insinuans, esse eos supra homines faciebat.

Ait apostolus: si qua igitur in christo noua creatura, uetera transierunt et scimus, quia in resurrectione nostra ita corpus spiritui adnectitur, ut omne, quod fuerat passionis, in uirtute spiritus adsumatur.

Is ergo, qui deum sequitur, imitari debet cotidie resurrectionem suam: ut, sicut tunc nihil passibile habebit in corpore, ita nunc nihil passibile habeat in corde; ut secundum interiorem hominem iam noua creatura sit, iam quidquid uetustum sonuerit calcet, et in uerbis ueteribus solam uim nouitatis inquirat.

Scriptura enim sacra mons quidam est, de quo in nostris cordibus ad intellegendum dominus uenit.

De quo monte per prophetam dicitur: deus a libano ueniet et sanctus de monte umbroso et condenso iste mons et condensus est per sententias et umbrosus per allegorias.

Sed sciendum est quia, cum uox domini in monte sonat, uestimenta lauare praecipimur et ab omni carnis inquinatione mundari, si ad montem accedere festinamus.

Scriptum quippe est quia, si bestia tetigerit montem, lapidabitur.

Bestia enim tangit montem, quando irrationabilibus motibus dediti scripturae sacrae celsitudini propinquant, et non eam secundum quod debent intellegunt, sed irrationabiliter ad suae uoluptatis intellegentiam flectunt.

Omnis enim absurdus uel sensu piger, si circa hunc montem uisus fuerit, atrocissimis sententiis ueluti lapidibus necatur.

Ardet enim mons iste: quia scriptura sacra uidelicet, quem spiritaliter replet, amoris igne succendit.

Vnde scriptum est: ignitum eloquium tuum unde, cum uerba dei quidam in uia ambulantes, dixerunt: nonne cor nostrum ardens erat in nobis, cum aperiret nobis scripturas?

Vnde per moysen dicitur: in dextera eius ignea lex sinistra dei iniqui accipiuntur, qui in dextera parte non transeunt; dextera dei electi sunt, qui a sinistris separantur.

In dextera ergo dei lex ignea est: quia in electorum cordibus, qui ad dexteram ponendi sunt, flagrant praecepta diuina et caritatis ardore succensa sunt.

Iste ergo ignis, quidquid in nobis est exterius rubiginis et uetustatis, exurat: ut mentem nostram uelut holocaustum in dei contemplatione offerat.

Nec uacue adtendendum est, quod liber iste non canticum sed canticum canticorum uocatur.

Sicut enim in ueteri testamento alia sunt sancta et alia sancta sanctorum, alia sabbata et alia sabbata sabbatorum, ita in scriptura sacra alia sunt cantica et alia cantica canticorum.

Sancta erant in tabernaculo et quae exterius agebantur, sabbata erant quae et singulis ebdomadibus celebrabantur; sed sancta sanctorum secretiori quadam ueneratione suscipiebantur, et sabbata sabbatorum nonnisi in suis festiuitatibus colebantur.

Ita cantica canticorum secretum quoddam et sollemne interius est.

Quod secretum in occultis intellegentiis penetratur: nam, si exterioribus uerbis adtenditur, secretum non est.

Sciendum est etiam, quia in scriptura sacra alia sunt cantica uictoriae, alia cantica exhortationis et contestationis, alia cantica exultationis, alia cantica adiutorii, alia cantica coniunctionis cum deo.

Canticum uictoriae est, quod maria, transacto mari rubro, cecinit dicens: cantemus domino: gloriose enim honorificatus est, equum et ascensorem proiecit in mare canticum exhortationis et contestationis est, quod moyses israhelitis ad terram repromissionis propinquantibus dixit: adtende, caelum, et loquar: audiat terra uerba ex ore meo canticum exultationis est, quod anna, prospecta fecunditate ecclesiae in semetipsa cecinit dicens: exultauit cor meum in domino ubi per semetipsam figuram fecunditatem prolis ecclesiasticae expressit, cum dicit: sterilis peperit plurimos et, quae multos habebat filios, infirmata est canticum adiutorii dauid post proelium cecinit dicens: diligam te, domine, uirtus mea canticum uero coniunctionis cum deo hoc est canticum, quod in nuptiis sponsi et sponsae canitur, id est canticum canticorum.

Quod tanto est omnibus canticis sublimius, quanto et in nuptu sollemnitatis sublimioris offertur.

Per illa enim cantica uitia deuitantur, per ista uero unusquisque uirtutibus locupletatur; per illa cauetur hostis, per haec dominus familiari amore complectitur.

Et notandum, quia aliquando se dominus in scriptura sacra dominum uocat, aliquando patrem, aliquando sponsum.

Quando enim uult se timeri, dominum se nominat; quando uult honorari, patrem; quando uult amari, sponsum.

Ipse per prophetam dicit: si dominus ego sum, ubi est timor meus?

Si pater ego sum, ubi est honor meus?

Et rursum dicit: desponsaui te mihi in iustitia et fide uel certe: recordatus sum diei desponsationis tuae in deserto et quidem apud deum quando et quando non est; sed, quia prius timeri se uult ut honoretur, et prius honorari ut ad eius amorem perueniatur, et dominum se propter timorem nominat et patrem propter honorem et sponsum propter amorem: ut per timorem ueniatur ad honorem, per honorem uero eius perueniatur ad amorem.

Quanto ergo dignius est honor quam timor, tanto plus gaudet deus pater dici quam dominus: et, quanto carius est amor quam honor, tanto plus gaudet deus sponsus dici quam pater.

In hoc ergo libro dominus et ecclesia non dominus et ancilla, sed sponsus nominatur et sponsa: ut non soli timori, non soli reuerentiae, sed etiam amori deseruiatur et in his uerbis exterioribus incitetur affectus interior. Cum se dominum nominat, indicat quod creati sumus; cum se patrem nominat, indicat quod adoptati; cum se sponsum nominat, indicat quod coniuncti.

Plus autem est coniunctos esse deo, quam creatos et adoptatos.

In hoc ergo libro, ubi sponsus dicitur, aliquid sublimius insinuatur, dum in eo foedus coniunctionis ostenditur.

Quae nomina in testamento nouo (quia iam peracta coniunctio uerbi et carnis, christi et ecclesiae, celebrata est) frequenti iteratione memorantur.

Vnde iohannes dicit, domino ueniente: qui habet sponsam, sponsus est unde idem dominus dicit: non ieiunabunt filii sponsi, quandiu cum illis est sponsus unde ecclesiae dicitur: desponsaui uos uni uiro uirginem castam exhibere christo et rursum: ut exhiberet gloriosam ecclesiam, non habentem maculam aut rugam et rursum in apocalypsi iohannis: beati, qui ad cenam nuptiarum agni uocati sunt! Et rursum ibidem: et uidi sponsam quasi nouam nuptam descendentem de caelo nec hoc a magno mysterio abhorret, quod liber iste salomonis tertius in opusculis eius ponitur.

Veteres enim tres uitae ordines esse dixerunt: moralem, naturalem et contemplatiuam; quas graeci uitas ethicam, fisicam, theoricam nominauerunt.

In prouerbiis quoque moralis uita exprimitur, ubi dicitur: audi, fili mi, sapientiam meam et prudentiae meae inclina aurem tuam in ecclesiasten uero, naturalis: ibi quippe, quod omnia ad finem tendant, consideratur, cum dicitur: uanitas uanitantium et omnia uanitas in canticis uero canticorum contemplatiua uita exprimitur, dum in eis ipsius domini aduentus et adspectus desideratur, cum sponsi uoce dicitur: ueni de libano, ueni hos etiam ordines trium patriarcharum uita signauit: abraham, isaac uidelicet et iacob.

Moralitatem quippe abraham oboediendo tenuit.

Isaac uero naturalem uitam puteos fodiendo figurauit: in imo enim puteos fodere est per considerationem naturalem omnia, quae infra sunt, perscrutando rimari.

Iacob uero contemplatiuam uitam tenuit, qui ascendentes et descendentes angelos uidit.

Sed, quia naturalis consideratio ad perfectionem non perducitur, nisi prius moralitas teneatur, recte post prouerbia ecclesiastes ponitur.

Et, quia superna contemplatio non conspicitur, nisi prius haec infra labentia despiciantur, recte post ecclesiasten cantica canticorum ponitur.

Prius quippe est mores conponere; postmodum omnia, quae adsunt, tamquam non adsint considerare; tertio uero loco munda cordis acie superna et interna conspicere.

His itaque librorum gradibus quasi quandam ad contemplationem dei scalam fecit: ut, dum primum in saeculo bene geruntur honesta, postmodum etiam honesta saeculi despiciantur, ad extremum etiam dei intima conspiciantur.

Sic autem generaliter ex uoce ecclesiae aduentus domini in hoc opere praestolatur, ut etiam specialiter unaquaeque anima ingressum dei ad cor suum tamquam aditum sponsi in thalamum adspiciat.

Et sciendum, quia in hoc libro quatuor personae loquentes introducuntur: sponsus uidelicet, et sponsa, adulescentulae uero cum sponsa, et greges sodalium cum sponso.

Sponsa enim ipsa perfecta ecclesia est; sponsus, dominus; adulescentulae uero cum sponsa sunt inchoantes animae et per nouum studium pubescentes; sodales uero sponsi sunt siue angeli, qui saepe hominibus ab ipso uenientes apparuerunt, seu certe perfecti quique uiri in ecclesia, qui ueritatem hominibus nuntiare nouerunt.

Sed hi, qui singillatim adulescentulae uel sodales sunt, toti simul sponsa sunt, quia toti simul ecclesia sunt.

Quamuis et iuxta unumquemque tota haec tria nomina accipi possint.

Nam, qui deum iam perfecte amat, sponsa est; qui sponsum praedicat, sodalis est; qui adhuc nouellus uiam bonorum sequitur, adulescentula est.

Inuitamur ergo, ut simus sponsa; si hoc necdum praeualemus, simus sodales; si neque hoc adepti sumus, saltem adhuc thalamum adulescentulae conueniamus.

Quia igitur sponsum et sponsam dominum et ecclesiam diximus, uelut adulescentulae uel ut sodales audiamus uerba sponsi, audiamus uerba sponsae, et in eorum sermonibus feruorem discamus amoris.

Itaque, sancta ecclesia, diu praestolans aduentum domini, diu sitiens fontem uitae, quomodo optet uidere praesentiam sponsi sui, quomodo desideret, edicat:

osculetur me osculis oris sui angelos ad eam dominus, patriarchas ad illam et prophetas miserat, spiritalia dona deferentes; sed ipsa uero munera non per seruos sponsi, sed ipsum iam sponsum percipere quaerebat.

Ponamus ante oculos omne genus humanum ab exordio mundi usque ad finem mundi, totam uidelicet ecclesiam, unam esse sponsam, quae arras spiritali dono per legem perceperat; sed tamen sponsi sui praesentiam quaerebat, quae dicit: osculetur me osculis oris sui suspirans enim sancta ecclesia pro aduentu mediatoris dei et hominum, pro aduentu redemptoris sui, ad patrem uerba orationis facit, ut filium dirigat et sua illam praesentia inlustret, ut eidem ecclesiae non iam per prophetarum sed suo ore adlocutionem faciat.

Vnde et de eodem sponso in euangelio scriptum est, cum sederet in monte et sublimium praeceptorum uerba faceret: aperiens autem iesus os suum, dixit ac si dicatur: tunc os suum aperuit, qui prius ad exhortationem ecclesiae aperuerat ora prophetarum.

Sed ecce, cum suspirat, cum quasi absentem quaerit, subito intuetur praesentem.

Habet enim hoc gratia creatoris nostri, ut, cum de illo quaerentes eum loquimur, eius praesentia perfruamur.

Vnde in euangelio scriptum est, quia, dum cleopas et alius de illo in itinere uerba facerent, praesentem eum uidere meruerunt. Dum ergo sancta ecclesia incarnandum sponsum adhuc absentem desiderat, subito intuetur praesentem atque subiungit: quia meliora sunt ubera tua uino et odor unguentorum tuorum super omnia aromata uinum fuit scientia legis, scientia prophetarum.

Sed ueniens dominus, quia sapientiam suam per carnem uoluit praedicare, quasi fecit eam in carnis ubera lactescere: quam enim in diuinitate sua capere minime poteramus, in incarnatione eius agnosceremus.

Vnde non inmerito eius ubera laudantur: quia praedicationis eius condescensio hoc egit in cordibus nostris, quod doctrina legis agere minime ualuit.

Plus enim nos nutriuit incarnationis praedicatio quam legis doctrina.

Dicat ergo: meliora sunt ubera tua super uinum quod adhuc confirmans, subiungit ac dicit: et odor unguentorum tuorum super omnia aromata unguenta domini uirtutes sunt, unguentum domini spiritus sanctus fuit.

De quo ei per prophetam dicitur: unxit te deus, deus tuus, oleo laetitiae prae consortibus tuis hoc oleo tunc unctus est, cum incarnatus: non enim prius homo extitit, et postmodum spiritum sanctum accepit; sed, quia spiritu sancto mediante incarnatus est, eodem hoc oleo tunc unctus est, cum homo creatus est.

Odor ergo unguenti eius est flagrantia spiritus sancti, qui, ex illo procedens, in illo permansit.

Odor unguentorum eius est flagrantia uirtutum, quas operatus est.

Hauriat autem ecclesia aromata: quia habuit multa spiritus dona, quae in domo dei, id est in congregatione sanctorum, odorem bonae opinionis redderent et suauitatem futuri mediatoris nuntiarent.

Sed odor unguentorum tuorum super omnia aromata: quia flagrantia uirtutum sponsi, quae per incarnationem eius facta est, uicit praedicamenta legis, quae in arris ab sponso fuerant praerogata.

Tanto quippe amplius ad intellectum creuit ecclesia, quanto et amplioris uisionis gratia meruit inlustrari.

Illa legis aromata per angelos amministrata sunt, istud unguentum per praesentiam sponsi datum est.

Sed, quia claritate eius praesentiae superata sunt bona legis, quae sublimia esse credebantur, dicatur recte: odor unguentorum tuorum super omnia aromata hoc autem, quod generaliter de cuncta ecclesia diximus, nunc specialiter de unaquaeque anima sentiamus.

Ponamus ante oculos esse animam quandam donorum studiis inherentem, intellectum ex aliena praedicatione percipientem: quae per diuinam gratiam etiam ipsa inlustrari desiderat, ut aliquando etiam per se intellegat: quae nihil se intellegere nisi per uerba praedicatorum considerat; et dicat: osculetur me osculo oris sui ipse me tangat intus, ut cognoscam intellegentia, et non iam praedicatorum uocibus sed internae eius gratiae tactu perfruar.

Quasi osculo oris sui osculabatur moysen dominus, cum ei per fiduciam familiaris gratiae intellectum porrigeret.

Vnde scriptum est: si fuerit propheta, in somnium loquar ad eum, et non sicut famulo meo moysi: os enim ad os loquor ei os quippe ad os loqui quasi osculari est et interna intellegentia mentem tangere.

Sequitur: quia meliora sunt ubera tua uino ubera dei sunt, sicut prius diximus, humillimae incarnationis eius.

Sapientia autem saeculi quasi quoddam uinum est: debriat enim mentem, quia ab intellectu humilitatis alienam reddit.

Quasi quodam uino debriantur philosophi, dum per saecularem sapientiam uulgi morem transeunt.

Quam sapientiam sancta ecclesia despiciat, humillimam praedicationis dominicae incarnationem appetat: plus ei sapiat, quod per infirmitatem carnis eius nutritur, quam quod mundus hic per elationem falsae prudentiae extollitur; et dicat: quia meliora sunt ubera tua uino id est: humillima incarnationis tuae praedicatio elatam mundi sapientiam superat.

Vnde scriptum est: quod infirmum est dei, fortius est quam hominis: et, quod stultum est dei, sapientius est quam hominis sed, quia ipsi huius saeculi sapientes nonnumquam uidentur quibusdam uirtutibus studere (uideas enim plerosque habere caritatem, seruare mansuetudinem, honestatem exteriorem in omnibus exercere: quas tamen uirtutes, non ut deo, sed ut hominibus placeant, exhibent: quae idcirco uirtutes non sunt, quia deo placere non appetunt), olet tamen in humanis naribus, dum humano iudicio bonam opinionem reddunt.

Sed conparentur haec uero odori redemptoris nostri, conparentur ueris ueris uirtutibus; et dicatur: odor unguentorum tuorum super omnia aromata id est: flagrantia uirtutum tuarum omnem speciem uirtutum sapientium mundi superat, quia uidelicet fictas eorum imagines ex ueritate transcendit.

Quia secundo loco sentiri hoc, quod dictum est, de unaquaque anima diximus, adhuc eundem sensum, si possumus, adiuuante domino subtilius exequamur.

Omnis anima, quae timet deum, iam sub iugo eius est, sed adhuc longe, quia timet: nam tantum quisque ad deum proficit, quantum poenam timoris amittit et gratiam de illo caritatis percipit.

Ponamus ante oculos animam electi cuiuslibet, quae continuo desiderio in amorem uisionis sponsi accenditur: quia, quod in hac uita perfecte percipere non ualet, contemplatur eius celsitudinem et ex ipso amore conpungitur.

Ipsa enim conpunctio, quae per caritatem fit, quae ex desiderio accenditur, quasi quoddam osculum est: totiens enim anima osculatur deum, quotiens in eius amore conpungitur.

Sunt enim multi, qui iam quidem dominum metuunt, iam bonam operationem recipiunt; sed necdum osculantur, quia amore eius minime conpunguntur. Quod bene in conuiuio pharisaei signatum est, qui, cum dominum recepisset que cum osculanti mulieri pedes eius in corde suo derogaret, audiuit: intraui in domum tuam, osculum mihi non dedisti: haec autem, ex quo ingressa est, non cessauit osculari pedes meos omnis, qui iam

Sed, si nondum per amorem conpungitur, adhuc eius uestigia non osculatur.

Praeponitur ergo pastori mulier, quae osculatur: quia praeponitur exteriora suadenti is, qui in interno mentis ardore in desiderio domini conpungitur.

Bene autem dictum est: non cessauit osculari pedes meos non enim sufficit in amorem dei semel conpungi et quiescere, sed et conpunctio esse debet et crebrescere.

Vnde mulier ideo laudatur, quia osculari non desistit, id est conpungi minime cessauit.

Vnde et per prophetam dicitur: constituite diem sollemnem in confrequentationibus usque ad cornu altaris dies sollemnis est domino conpunctio cordis nostri.

Sed tunc in frequentatione dies sollemnis constituitur, cum ad lacrimas prae amore eius assidue mens mouetur.

Quandiu tribulationibus afficimur?, Illico terminum, quousque fieri debeat, subiunxit dicens: usque ad cornu altaris cornu quippe altaris est exaltatio sacrificii interioris: ubi cum peruenerimus, iam nequaquam necesse est, ut sollemnem diem domino de nostra lamentatione faciamus.

Anima ergo, quae iam per amorem conpungi desiderat, quae iam contemplari uisionem sponsi sui appetit, dicat: osculetur me osculo oris sui uel certe osculum oris eius est ipsa perfectio pacis internae: ad quam cum peruenerimus, nihil remanebit amplius, quod quaeramus.

Vbera autem sponsi tunc amplectimur, cum eum in aeterna patria iam per amplexum praesentiae contemplamur.

Dicat ergo: meliora sunt ubera tua uino ac si dicat: magna est quidem scientia, quam de te mihi in hac uita contulisti; magnum est uinum notitiae tuae, quo me debrias; sed ubera tua uino meliora sunt: quia tunc per speciem et per sublimitatem contemplationis transcenditur, quidquid de te modo per fidem scitur.

Et odor unguentorum tuorum super omnia aromata habet hic sancta ecclesia aromata, dum uirtute scientiae, uirtute castitatis, uirtute misericordiae, uirtute humilitatis, uirtute caritatis pollet.

Si sanctorum uita odorem aromatum ex uirtutibus non haberet, paulus non diceret: christi bonus odor sumus in omni loco sed longe excellentior est illa unctio contemplationis dei, ad quam quandoque ducendi sumus; longe excellentior est odor unguentorum dei aromatibus uirtutum nostrarum: et, si iam magna sunt, quae accepimus, ualde tamen potiora sunt, quae de contemplatione creatoris nostri accepturi sumus.

Dicamus huic ecclesiae, dicamus huic animae, sic amanti, sic aestuanti in amorem sponsi sui, unde tantum desiderium perceperit, unde notitiam diuinitatis eius apprehenderit.

Sed ecce, unde ipsa exprimit et dicit: unguentum effusum nomen tuum unguentum effusum est diuinitas incarnata.

Si enim sit unguentum in uasculo, odorem exterius minus; si uero effunditur, odor effusi unguenti dilatatur.

De qua effusione paulus dicit: qui, cum in forma dei esset, non rapinam arbitratus est esse se aequalem deo; sed semetipsum exinaniuit, formam serui accipiens quod paulus dixit exinaniuit, hoc salomon dixit effudit.

Quia ergo humano generi dominus per humilitatem incarnationis innotuit, dicatur ei: unguentum effusum est nomen tuum sequitur: ideo adulescentulae dilexerunt te quid hoc loco adulescentulas accipimus, nisi electorum animas per baptismum renouatas?

Vita quippe peccati ad ueterem hominem pertinet, uita iustitiae ad nouum.

Quia ergo unguentum foras se fudit, in amore suo adulescentulas ardentes fecit: quia renouatas animas desiderio suo flagrantes exhibuit.

Puerilis aetas amori necdum congruit, senilis ab amore desinit.

Puer est, qui uitae ardentis studium necdum coepit; senis est, qui coeperat quidem, sed desiit. Quia ergo neque hi flagrant in domino qui necdum coeperunt, neque hi qui iam quidem coeperant sed friguerunt, postposita puerili uel senili uita, adulescentulae currere dicuntur, id est illae animae quae in ipso feruoris amore sunt.

Quod tamen intellegere aliter possumus.

Iuueniles quippe aetates sunt ordo angelorum, quia nulla debilitate uicti sunt, nulla infirmitate superati.

Dicatur ergo: unguentum effusum est nomen tuum: ideo adulescentulae dilexerunt te id est: quia per incarnationem tuam notitiam tuam exterius effudisti, idcirco infirmae animae natura humana diligere praeualent.

Illae quippe uirtutes summae quasi aetates iuuenales etiam ibi te diligunt, ubi fusus non es: quia et ibi te uident, ubi in statu diuinitatis tuae contines.

Qui ergo ab illis summis ordinibus quasi a iuuenalibus aetatibus etiam non fusus uideris, exterius propter homines funderis: ut etiam ab adulescentulis, id est ab infirmis mentibus, diligaris.

Sequitur: trahe me omnis, qui trahitur, aut non ualens aut non uolens inuitus ducitur.

Sed, qui dicit: trahe me, habet aliquid quod uult, habet aliquid quod non ualet.

Natura humana sequi deum uult; sed, infirmitatis consuetudine superata, sicut debet, sequi non praeualet.

Videt ergo aliud in se esse quo tendit, aliud in se esse quod non ualet; et recte dicit: trahe me quasi uolentem nec ualentem se uiderat paulus, cum diceret: mente seruio legi dei, carne autem legi peccati; et: uideo aliam legem in membris meis, repugnantem legi mentis meae quia ergo est in nobis aliud quod nos incitat, aliud quod grauat, dicamus: trahe me post te curremus in odorem unguentorum tuorum in odorem unguentorum dei currimus, cum donis eius spiritalibus afflati in amore uisionis eius inhiamus.

Sciendum uero est, quia in eo, quod homines deum sequuntur, aliquando ambulant, aliquando currunt, aliquando fortiter currunt.

Quasi post deum ambulat, qui tepide sequitur; currit, qui feruenter sequitur; perfecte currit, qui perseueranter sequitur.

Inmobile enim erat cor ad sequendum deum et post eum ambulare nolebat, cum aduentus domini in mundo apparuit et ab insensibili sua statione humanas mentes mouit.

Vnde scriptum est: pedes eius steterunt, et mota est terra hic autem non motus sed cursus dicitur: quia non sufficit, ut sequamur, nisi etiam desiderando curramus.

quem sequebantur, praeferunt, dum suas uirtutes eligunt et eius, quem sequebantur, iudicia postponunt.

Vnde bene, cum diceretur currimus, praemissum est post te.

Post deum enim currunt, qui eius iudicia considerant, eius uoluntatem sibi praeferunt et peruenire ad eum sub digna operatione discretione contendunt.

Hinc propheta, uoluntatem dei considerans et sequens, ait: adhesit anima mea post te hinc petro consilium danti dicitur: redi post me, satanas! Non enim sapis, quae dei sunt, sed quae hominum quia ergo perfectae animae summa cautela dei iudicia contuentur et neque per torporem neque per indiscretum feruorem praeuenire praesumunt, bene dicitur: post te currimus in odorem unguentorum tuorum tunc enim post te currimus, quando et amando sequimur et timendo diuina iudicia non praeuenimus.

Exultabimus et laetabimur in te ecclesia dei quasi quaedam domus regis est.

Et ista domus habet portam, habet ascensum, habet triclinium, habet cubicula.

Omnis, qui intra ecclesiam fidem habet, iam portam domus istius ingressus est: quia, sicut porta reliqua domus aperit, ita fides reliquarum uirtutum ostium habet.

Omnis, qui intra ecclesiam spem habet, iam ad ascensum domus uenit: spes enim eleuat cor, ut sublimia appetat et ima deserat.

Omnis, qui in ista domo positus caritatem habet, quasi in tricliniis deambulat: lata enim est caritas, quae usque ad inimicorum dilectionem tenditur.

Omnis, qui in ecclesia positus iam sublimia secreta rimatur, iam occulta iudicia considerat, quasi in cubiculum intrauit.

De porta domus istius dicebat quidam: aperite mihi portas iustitiae et ingressus in eas confitebor domino de ascensu spei dicebat: ascensus in corde eius disposuit de tricliniis latis domus istius dicitur: latum mandatum tuum nimis in mandato lato specialiter caritas designatur.

De cubiculo regis loquebatur, qui dicebat: secretum meum mihi; et alias: audiui archana uerba, quae non licet hominibus loqui primus ergo aditus domus istius porta fidei, secundus prouectus ascensus spei, tertius latitudo caritatis, quartus iam perfectio caritatis ad cognitionem secretorum dei.

Quia ergo sancta ecclesia in membris suis perfectis, in sanctis doctoribus, in eis, qui iam pleni et radicati sunt in mysteriis dei, quasi ad sublimia secreta peruenit et adhuc in ista uita posita iam illa penetrat, introduxit me rex in cubiculum suum ait. Per prophetas enim, per apostolos, per doctores, qui in ista uita positi iam sublimia secreta illius uitae penetrabant, ecclesia in cubiculum regis illius ingressa fuerat.

Et caute intuendum est, quia non dicit in cubiculum sponsi sed in cubiculum regis.

Nominando enim regem, reuerentiam secretorum uult ostendere: quia, quanto potens est cubiculum, tanto maior est reuerentia exhibenda in his, ad quae intratur.

Ne ergo, dum cognoscit secreta dei unusquisque dum occulta iudicia rimatur, dum ad sublimia contemplationis adtollitur, extollatur et in superbia delabatur, regis dicitur cubiculum intrare.

Id est: cui tanto maior reuerentia exhibenda est, quanto magis anima ad cognoscenda eius secreta ducitur: ut unusquisque, qui proficit, qui iam exaltatus per gratiam et ad sublimia secreta peruenit, se ipsum adtendat et ex ipso profectu amplius humilietur.

Vnde et hezechihel, quotiens ad sublimia contemplanda ducitur, filius hominis uocatur.

Ac si ei dicatur: adtende, quod es: et non extollaris de his, ad quae adtolleris.

Sed paucorum est in ecclesia ista sublimia et occulta iudicia dei rimari et conprehendere.

Tamen, dum uidemus fortes uiros posse ad tantam sapientiam peruenire, ut contemplentur secreta dei in cordibus suis, et nos paruuli habeamus fiduciam.

Quia quandoque ad ueniam, quandoque ad eius gratiam ueniamus.

Vnde et ex uerbis adulescentularum subditur: exultabimus et laetabimur in te dum ecclesia in his, qui perfecti sunt, ingreditur cubiculum regis, adulescentulae spem sibi exultationis promittunt: quia, dum fortes ad sublimia contemplanda perueniunt, infirmi spem de uenia peccatorum sumunt.

Introduxit me rex in cubiculum suum.

Exultabimus et laetabimur in te, memores uberum tuorum super uinum.

Recti diligunt te habet iste sponsus ubera, qui etiam rex propter reuerentiam uocatur.

Habet ubera, sanctos uiros corde adherentium sibi.

Vbera in arca pectoris fixa sunt: ex interno nutrimento trahunt ad eos, quos foras nutriunt.

Sancti ergo uiri ubera sponsi sunt: quia ex intimis trahunt et exterius nutriunt.

Vbera illius sunt apostoli, ubera illius sunt omnes praedicatores ecclesiae.

Vinum, sicut et superius diximus, fuit in prophetis, uinum fuit in lege; sed, quia ampliora mandata data sunt per apostolos, quam data fuerant per prophetas, memores uberum tuorum super uinum: quia, qui ista possunt implere, quae in nouo testamento mandata sunt, illam scientiam legis sine dubio transcendunt.

Quod tamen intellegere et aliter possumus.

Memores uberum tuorum super uinum sunt multi, qui uinum quidem sapientiae habent, sed cognitionem humilitatis non habent: istos scientia inflat, quia caritas non aedificat.

Sunt uero multi, qui sic habent uinum scientiae, ut sciant considerare dona doctrinae, dona spiritalis gratiae: dona enim spiritalis gratiae quasi quaedam mamillae sunt in pectore, quae subtiliter occultis meatibus spiritalibus ministrant et nutriunt.

Memores ergo uberum tuorum super uinum: quia hi, qui sectari sciunt dona gratiae tuae, ut sibi non tribuant quod sapiunt, et de eadem sapientia quam acceperunt non extolluntur, super illos, qui de sapientia sua extolluntur, et efferuntur.

Plus est enim humiliter sapere, quam sapere; neque enim uere sapere est, humiliter non sapere.

Memores ergo uberum tuorum super uinum: quia scientes considerare dona spiritalis gratiae transcendunt eos, qui scientiam quidem habent, sed cognitionem in memoriam donorum non habent.

Aperte ergo dicere est: memores uberum tuorum super uinum: quia fortior est humilitas quam scientia.

Vinum enim est scientia, quae inebriat; memoria uberum, quae debriat, quae ad cognitionem donorum reuocat.

Memores ergo uberum tuorum super uinum: quia uincit humilitas abundantiam scientiae.

Recti diligunt te ac si diceret: non recti adhuc timent.

Recti diligunt te omnis enim, qui bona opera pro timore agit, etsi in opere rectus est, in desiderio rectus non est: uellet enim non esse, quod timeret, et opera bona non faceret. Qui uero opera bona pro amore agit, et in opere et in desiderio rectus est.

Sed dulcedo amoris timentibus absconditur.

Vnde scriptum est: quam magna multitudo dulcedinis tuae, domine, quam abscondisti timentibus te, et perfecisti eam sperantibus in te! Dulcedo enim dei timentibus deum incognita est, amantibus fit nota.

Qui ergo per amorem studuerit rectus esse, perfecta dilectio illius est: ut iudicem uenientem non timeat, ut, quidquid de aeternis suppliciis audierit, non formidet.

Vnde et paulus, dum de aduentu iudicis spectaret, dum praemia uitae aeternae quaereret, dixit: quae praeparauit deus non solum mihi, sed et omnibus qui diligunt aduentum eius praemia enim aeterna diligentibus a iudice praeparantur: quia omnis, qui se opera mala agere scit, iudicem uenientem timet; qui uero de operibus suis praesumit, iudicis aduentum quaerit.

Parantur ergo praemia expectantibus aduentum dei et diligentibus aduentum eius: quia non diligunt aduentum iudicis, nisi de causa sua praesumentes.

Omnis autem certitudo rectitudinis in dilectione est, et ideo recte dicitur: recti diligunt te nigra sum et formosa, filiae hierusalem, sicut tabernacula cedar, sicut pellis salomonis.

Nolite me considerare, quod fusca sim: quia decolorauit me sol scimus quia in primordiis ecclesiae, dum praedicata fuisset gratia redemptoris nostri, alii crediderunt ex iudaea, alii non crediderunt; sed hi, qui crediderunt, ab infidelibus despecti sunt et persecutionem passi quasi in uia gentium discessisse iudicati sunt.

Vnde ecclesia in eisdem clamat aduersus eos, qui conuersi non sunt: nigra sum, sed formosa, filiae hierusalem nigra quidem uestro iudicio, sed formosa per inlustrationem gratiae.

Quomodo nigra? Sicut tabernacula cedar cedar interpretatur tenebrae: cedar enim secundus fuit de genere ismahel; et cedar tabernacula esau fuerunt.

Quomodo ergo nigra? Sicut tabernacula cedar: quia in conspectu uestro ad similitudinem gentium iudicata sum, id est ad similitudinem peccatorum.

Quomodo formosa? Sicut pellis salomonis fertur salomon, quando templum aedificauit, omnia illa uasa templi factis pellibus cooperuisse.

Sed nimirum pelles salomonis decorae esse potuerunt, quae tabernaculo aptae essent.

Quae, si in tabernaculo eius fuerunt, nonnisi decorae esse potuerunt in obsequium regis.

Sed, quia salomon interpretatur pacificus, nos ipsum uerum salomonem intellegamus: quia omnes animae adherentes deo pelles salomonis sunt, macerantes se ipsas et in obsequium regis pacis redigentes.

Sum uero in iudicio uestro sicut tabernacula cedar, quia quasi in uia gentium discessisse iudicor; sed iuxta ueritatem sicut pelles salomonis sum, quia in obsequium regis adhereo.

Nolite me considerare, quod fusca sim: quia decolorauit me sol peccatricem adtendebat illam partem, quae christo crediderat, pars illa, quae non crediderat.

Sed dicat ista: nolite me considerare, quod fusca sim: quia decolorauit me sol sol, ipse dominus, ipse ueniens decolorauit me.

Praeceptis suis ostendit, quia pulchra non fuit in praeceptis legis.

Sol, quem arctius tangit, ipsum decolorat.

Ita et dominus ueniens, quem per gratiam suam strictius tetigit, decolorauit: quia, dum plus appropinquamus ad gratiam, plus nos peccatores esse cognoscimus.

Videamus paulum ex iudaea uenientem, in sole decoloratum: quod si uolentes in christo iustificari, inuenti sumus et ipsi peccatores qui se in christo peccatorem inuenit in sole se decoloratum inuenit.

Sed ecce, pars ista, quae ex iudaea credidit, persecutionem ab infidelibus iudaeis passa est, afflicta multis tribulationibus pressa.

Vnde sequitur: filii matris meae pugnauerunt contra me: quia filii synagogae, qui in infidelitate remanserunt, bellum persecutionis contra synagogae fideles gesserunt.

Sed, dum persecutionem patitur ea pars, quae ex iudaeis uenit ad fidem, discessit ad praedicationem gentium: deseruit iudaeam et uenit ad praedicationem gentium.

Vnde et sequitur: posuerunt me custodem in uineis, uineam meam non custodiui: quia, dum me persequuntur hi, qui in iudaea sunt, in ecclesiis me custodem fecerunt.

Vineam meam non custodiui: quia iudaeam deserui.

Vnde et paulus dicit, unde et apostoli: nobis missum fuerat uerbum dei; sed, quia indignos uos iudicastis, ecce imus ad gentes ac si dicat: nos uineam nostram custodire uolumus; sed, quia nos ipsi respuitis, ad alienarum nos uinearum custodiam transmittitis.

Ista, quae de synagoga diximus ad fidem conuersam, dicamus modo de ecclesia ad fidem uocatam: nigra sum, sed formosa, filiae hierusalem ecclesia ex gentibus ueniens considerat fidelium animas, quas inuenit, quas et filias hierusalem uocat. Hierusalem quippe uisio pacis dicitur.

Considerat quid fuit, quid facta est: et confitetur praeteritas culpas, ne superba sit, confitetur praesentem uitam, ne ingrata; et dicit: nigra sum, sed formosa nigra per meritum, formosa per gratiam; nigra per uitam praeteritam, formosa per conuersationem sequentem.

Quomodo nigra? Sicut tabernacula cedar cedar tabernacula gentium fuerunt, tabernacula tenebrarum fuerunt; et gentibus dictum est: fuistis aliquando tenebrae, nunc autem lux in domino quomodo formosa?

Mortificata caro per paenitentiam quasi pellis in obsequium regis adducitur.

Omnes per paenitentiam se ipsos affligentes membra christi se faciunt.

Membra ergo christi per paenitentiam afflicta pellis salomonis sunt, quia mortificata caro fiunt.

Sed ecce, erant in iudaea fideles, qui dedignabantur ad fidem uenire gentiles.

Vnde et petrum redarguunt, quod cornelium susceperat.

Vnde in ecclesia gentium subiungit: nolite me considerare, quod fusca sim nolite despicere gentilitatem infidelitatis meae, nolite despicere peccata priora, nolite adtendere quod fui.

Quare? Quia decolorauit me sol sol in eo decolorat, in quo arctius et districtius se inprimit.

Deus, quando districtum iudicium tenet, quasi districtionem suam amplius exhibet; et decolorat, dum amplius fulget: quia, dum districtionem subtilius exercet, districte adiudicat.

Quasi enim radios suos suspendit sol, quando clementer opera nostra considerat; quasi districte uirtutem suam exhibeat, quando districte opera nostra pensat.

Sed o tu, sic afflicta, sic destituta, quid meruisti?

Quid ex dono consecuta es? Filii matris meae pugnauerunt contra me filii matris sunt apostoli: mater enim omnium hierusalem superna est.

Ipsi pugnauerunt contra ecclesiam, dum ab infidelitate in fide praedicationibus suis quasi quibusdam lanceis confoderunt.

Vnde et paulus quasi quidam pugnator dicit: cogitationum consilia destruentes et omnem altitudinem extollentem se aduersus scientiam dei quia altitudinem destruit, utique pugnator est.

Isti ergo pugnatores, isti filii matris hierusalem debellauerunt ecclesiam ab errore suo, ut illam fundarent ad iustitiam.

Filii matris meae pugnauerunt contra me et quid fecerunt pugnantes?

Posuerunt me custodem in uineis uineae ecclesiae sunt uirtutes, quae fructificant: quia, dum depugnant in me uitia, quasi de mala mea me expugnant.

Fructificationem et uirtutum studia mihi dederunt: in uineis me custodem fecerunt, ut fructificationem afferrent.

Post expugnationem specialiter dicat: uineam meam non custodiui uinea ecclesiae antiqua consuetudo erroris est: quae, dum custos ad uirtutes ponitur, deseruit uineam illam antiquam consuetudinem erroris sui.

Diximus de synagoga ad fidem uenientem, diximus de gentilitate conuersa; dicamus modo generaliter de tota simul ecclesia, et specialiter quid de unaquaque anima sentiendum est.

Solent praui auditores doctores suos non considerare quod sunt, sed quod fuerunt; sani uero doctores et confitentur quod fuerunt, et proferunt quod sunt: ut nec peccatores se abscondant, nec iterum dona uelut ingrati denegent.

Dicat ergo in istis ecclesia: nigra sum, sed formosa nigra per me, formosa per donum; nigra de praeterito, formosa ex eo quod facta sum in futuris.

Quomodo nigra? Quomodo formosa? Nigra sicut tabernacula cedar, formosa sicut pellis salomonis et non est iustum, ut aliquis ex praeterita uita pensetur, et non magis adtendatur quod fuit, sed quod est.

Vnde subiungit: nolite me considerare, quod fusca sim: quia decolorauit me sol aliquando in scriptura sacra sol ponitur nimius aestus terrenorum desideriorum.

Vnde ergo fusca? Quia decolorauit me sol et ardore amoris terreni apud sponsum decolorata sum, id est indecora apud regem facta.

Filii matris meae pugnauerunt contra me in omni creatura duae creaturae rationales sunt conditae, humana et angelica. Cecidit angelus, persuasit homini.

Mater enim omnis creaturae benignitas et potentia dei.

Nos ergo et angeli, ex eo quod rationales conditi sumus, quasi quandam societatem fraternitatis habemus.

Sed, quia angeli ab eadem potentia conditi sunt, a qua et nos, qui tamen cadentes angeli cotidie contra nos bellum gerunt, dicat: filii matris meae pugnauerunt contra me ecce, dum pugnant isti spiritus rationales, isti spiritus filii matris, dum pugnant contra animam, faciunt eam rebus terrenis incumbere, actionibus saecularibus uacare, res transitorias quaerere.

Vnde et subiungit: posuerunt me custodem in uineis, uineam meam non custodiui uineae enim sunt actiones terrenae.

Et quid? Vineam meam, id est animam meam, uitam meam, mentem meam, custodire neglexi: quia, dum exterius in rerum terrenarum actione inuoluta sum, ab interna custodia elapsa sum.

Plerique ex eo se considerant quod iuxta ipsos est, non ex eo quod sunt.

Iuxta ipsos sunt dignitates, iuxta ipsos sunt exteriora ministeria: et, dum custodiunt quod iuxta se habent, se ipsos custodire neglegunt.

Dicat ergo: posuerunt me custodem in uineis, uineam meam non custodiui id est: dum exteriori custodiae in actionibus saeculi deseruio, interioris custodiae sollicitudinem amisi.

Sed ecce, reducta anima ad gratiam creatoris sui iam amet, iam requirat ubi redemptorem suum inueniat.

Vnde sequitur: indica mihi, quem diligit anima mea: ubi pascis, ubi cubas in meridie in meridie sol feruentior est.

Omnis, qui in fide feruet, in amore desiderii feruet.

Iste sponsus, qui subter hinnulus uocatur, in corde ipsorum pascit uirtutum uiriditatem, in corde ipsorum recumbit in meridie, in feruore caritatis.

Indica mihi, quem diligit anima mea: ubi pascis, ubi cubas in meridie quare sic quaeris, ubi pascat, ubi cubet?

Causam reddidit inquisitionis suae: ne uagari incipiam post greges sodalium tuorum sodales dei sunt amici, familiares, sicut sunt omnes, qui bene uiuunt.

Sed multi apparent sodales esse, et sodales non sunt.

Multi enim doctores, dum peruersam doctrinam suaderent, sodales quidem uidebantur, sed inimici extiterunt.

Dum adhuc doctor esset arrius, sabellius, montanus, quasi sodales uidebantur: sed, dum districte discussi sunt, inimici apparuerunt.

Et plerumque fideles animae, dum inherent uerbo dei, dum amant in doctoribus unde proficiant, cauere nesciunt peruersorum uerba doctorum et ex ipsorum ore deficiunt.

Quam multae enim plebes istae, quae de sodalibus crediderunt et, dum eos sequuntur, per greges sodalium errauerunt! Dicit ergo: indica mihi, ubi pascas, ubi cubes in meridie: ne uagari incipiam post greges sodalium tuorum ac si dicat: indica, in quorum corda ueraciter requiescis: ne incipiam uagari post greges eorum, qui sodales tui uidentur, id est qui familiares tui creduntur, et non sunt.

Omnes sacerdotes, omnes doctores sodales dei sunt, quantum ad speciem; quantum uero ad uitam, multi non sodales sed aduersarii sunt.

Sed haec ipsa, quae diximus de hereticis magistris, possumus de catholicis non bene agentibus dicere.

Multi enim paruuli intra ecclesiam fideles appetunt bene uiuere, uolunt uitam rectitudinis tenere, considerant uitam sacerdotum, qui eis praepositi sunt: et, dum sacerdotes ipsi non bene uiuunt, dum hi qui praesunt non recte uiuunt, hi qui subsequuntur in errorem dilabuntur.

Vnde ecclesia quasi in eisdem paruulis et fidelibus dicit: indica mihi, quem diligit anima mea: ubi pascis, ubi cubas in meridie uitam mihi ueraciter seruientium tibi indica: ut sciam ubi pascis uiriditatem uirtutum, ut sciam ubi cubes in meridie, id est ubi requiescas in feruore caritas; ne, dum greges sodalium tuorum adspicio, ipsa uagari nesciens incipiam, cui me uerbis et doctrinis committam.

Caute enim debet omnis auditor, omnis infirmus considerare, cuius uerbis se credere debeat, cuius magisterio uti debeat, cuius exempla sequi debeat.

Et ecce, uerba sponsi redduntur ad sponsam: si ignoras te, o pulchra inter mulieres, egredere et abi post uestigia gregum et pasce hedos tuos iuxta tabernacula pastorum omnis anima nihil debet amplius curare, quam ut se ipsam sciat.

Qui enim se ipsum scit, cognoscit quia ad imaginem dei factus est.

Si ad imaginem dei factus est, non debeat similitudinem iumentorum sequi, siue in luxuria siue in appetitu praesenti dissolui. De qua ignorantia alibi dicitur: homo, cum in honore esset, non intellexit: conparatus est iumentis insipientibus et similis factus est illis uestigia gregum sunt actiones populorum: quae, quanto multae tanto sunt, inpeditae, tanto peruersae.

Dicatur ergo ecclesiae: si ignoras te, o pulchra inter mulieres, egredere et abi post uestigia gregum et pasce hedos tuos iuxta tabernacula pastorum o tu, quae foeda per ignorantiam, per fidem pulchra facta es inter aliorum animas! Quod euidenter dicitur ad ecclesiam electorum.

Si ignoras te: id est, si hoc ipsum, quod ad imaginem meam facta es egredere: id est, exi.
Si uero non cognoscis, a quo facta es, egredere et abi, uade post uestigia gregum: sequere, non exempla mea, sed exempla populorum.

Et pasce hedos tuos iuxta tabernacula pastorum hedi nostri sunt motus carnales, hedi nostri sunt temptationes inlicitae.

Abi post uestigia gregum: id est, discede post exempla populorum.

Et pasce hedos tuos: id est, nutri motus carnales, non iam sensus spiritales sed motus carnales.

Abi iuxta tabernacula pastorum.

Si agnos pasceres, in tabernacula pastorum pasceres: id est, in doctrinis magistrorum, in doctrinis apostolorum, in doctrinis prophetarum.

Si uero hedos pascis, iuxta tabernacula pastorum pasce; ut fide uoceris christiana et non operibus, quia intra uideris esse per fidem et non intra per opera.

Quia ecce increpasti, ecce redarguisti (quid enim non dicis, quod tu benigne iam in ea operatus es?), Dic plane: nam sequitur: equitatui meo in curribus pharaonis adsimilaui te, amica mea omnes, qui luxuriae, qui superbiae, qui auaritiae, qui inuidiae, qui fallaciae deseruiunt, adhuc sub curru pharaonis sunt: equi quasi quidam sub curru pharaonis sunt, id est sub regimine diaboli.

Omnis uero, qui in humilitate, in castitate, in doctrina, in caritate feruet, iam equus effectus est creatoris nostri, iam in curru dei positus est, iam sessorem deum habet.

Vnde cuidam, cui iam dominus praesidebat, dicitur: durum est tibi aduersus stimulum calcitrare ac si diceret: meus equus es: iam contra me calces iactare non potes, iam tibi ego praesideo.

De istis equis alibi dicitur: misisti in mari equos tuos turbantes aquas multas habet ergo currus deus, qui animabus sanctis praesidet et per animas sanctas circumquaque percurrit.

Vnde scriptum est: currus dei decem milia, multiplex milium laetantium habet currus pharao: qui tamen currus in mari rubro summersi sunt, quia multi peruersi in baptismate mutati sunt.

Dicat ergo sponsus: equitatui meo in curribus pharao adsimilaui te, amica mea id est: dum adhuc tu esses in curribus pharaonis, dum adhuc operibus daemonicis deseruires, ego te equitatui meo adsimilaui: quia adtendi, quid per praedestinationem in te fecerim; et equis meis te conparaui.

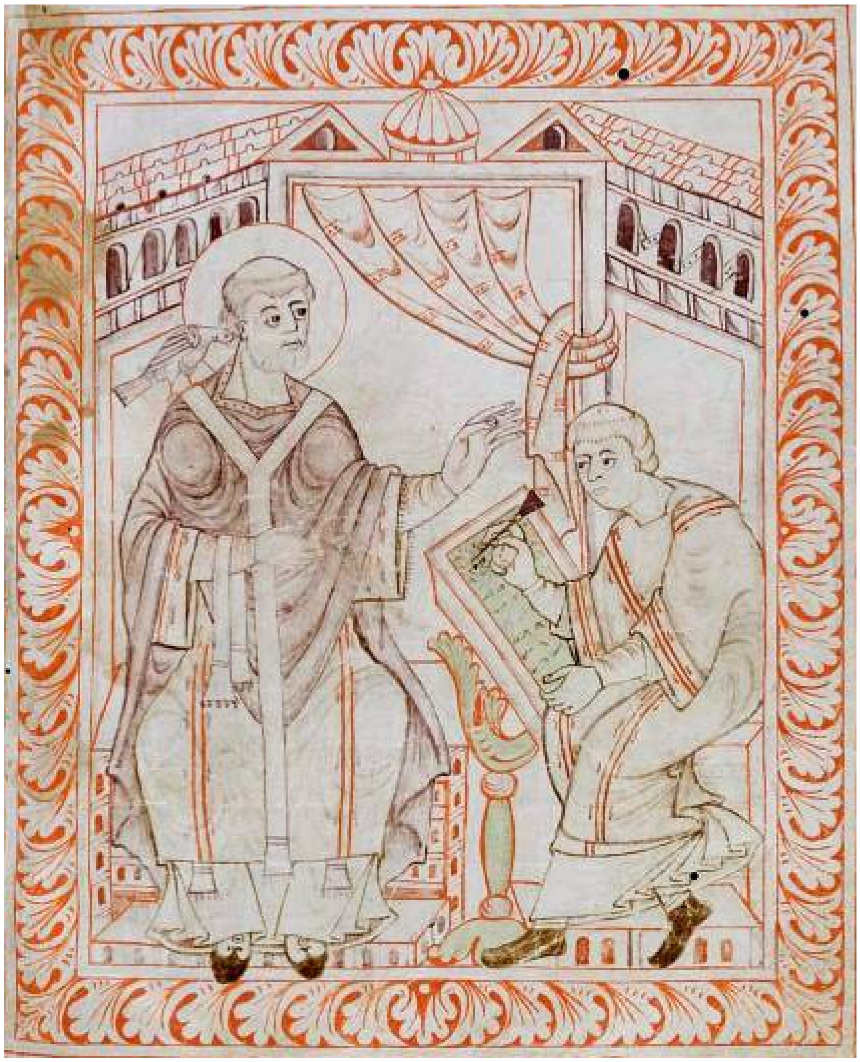
Videt enim multos deus adhuc luxuriae, adhuc auaritiae seruientes; et tamen adtendit in secreto iudicio, quid iam de ipsis operatus est: quia habet equos deus, sed multos uidet adhuc equos esse pharaonis.

Et, quia condiderat occulto iudicio, occulta praedestinatione ad bonum commutandos, similes illos adtendit iam equis suis: quia uidet illos ad currum suum ducturus, qui prius in curru pharaonis deseruiebant.

Vbi consideranda sunt occulta iudicia: quia multi uidentur per praedicationem, per sapientiam, per castitatem, per largitatem, per longanimitatem equi dei esse; et tamen occulto dei iudicio equis pharaonis adsimilantur: et multi uidentur per auaritiam, per superbiam, per inuidiam, per luxuriam equi pharaonis esse; et tamen occulto dei iudicio equis dei adsimilantur: quia et illos uidet de bono ad mala uerti, et istos uidet de malo ad bona reduci.

Sicut ergo per discretionem multi, qui equi uidentur dei, equi sunt pharaonis per reprobam uitam, quae illos sequitur: ita per pietatem multi, qui equi pharaonis uidentur, eius electi per sanctam uitam, quam in fine suo seruaturi sunt, equis dei adsimilantur.



Vnde blanditur sponsus et dicit: equitatui meo in curribus pharaonis adsimilaui te, amica mea id est: tu adhuc in curribus pharaonis subdita deseruiebas, sub uitia currebas; sed ego adtendi, quid de te per praedestinationem feci.

Equitatui meo te adsimilaui: id est, electis meis similem te adtendi.

Chap. XXIII.

How the holy Pope Gregory sent Augustine, with other monks, to preach to the English nation, and encouraged them by a letter of exhortation, not to desist from their labour. [596 a.d.]

In the year of our Lord 582, Maurice, the fifty-fourth from Augustus, ascended the throne, and reigned twenty-one years. In the tenth year of his reign, Gregory, a man eminent in learning and the conduct of affairs, was promoted to the Apostolic see of Rome, and presided over it thirteen years, six months and ten days. He, being moved by Divine inspiration, in the fourteenth year of the same emperor, and about the one hundred and fiftieth after the coming of the English into Britain, sent the servant of God, Augustine, and with him divers other monks, who feared the Lord, to preach the Word of God to the English nation. They having, in obedience to the pope's commands, undertaken that work, when they had gone but a little way on their journey, were seized with craven terror, and began to think of returning home, rather than proceed to a barbarous, fierce, and unbelieving nation, to whose very language they were strangers; and by common consent they decided that this was the safer course. At once Augustine, who had been appointed to be consecrated bishop, if they should be received by the English, was sent back, that he might, by humble entreaty, obtain of the blessed Gregory, that they should not be compelled to undertake so dangerous, toilsome, and uncertain a journey. The pope, in reply, sent them a letter of exhortation, persuading them to set forth to the work of the Divine Word, and rely on the help of God. The purport of which letter was as follows:

"Gregory, the servant of the servants of God, to the servants of our Lord. Forasmuch as it had been better not to begin a good work, than to think of desisting from one which has been begun, it behoves you, my beloved sons, to fulfil with all diligence the good work, which, by the help of the Lord, you have undertaken. Let not, therefore, the toil of the journey, nor the tongues of evil-speaking men, discourage you; but with all earnestness and zeal perform, by God's guidance, that which you have set about; being assured, that great labour is followed by the greater glory of an eternal reward. When Augustine, your Superior, returns, whom we also constitute your abbot, humbly obey him in all things; knowing, that whatsoever you shall do by his direction, will, in all respects, be profitable to your souls. Almighty God protect you with His grace, and grant that I may, in the heavenly country, see the fruits of your labour, inasmuch as, though I cannot labour with you, I shall partake in the joy of the reward, because I am willing to labour. God keep you in safety, my most beloved sons. Given the 23rd of July, in the fourteenth year of the reign of our most religious lord, Mauritius Tiberius Augustus, the thirteenth year after the consulship of our lord aforesaid, and the fourteenth indiction."

Chap. XXIV.

How he wrote to the bishop of Arles to entertain them. [596 a.d.]

The same venerable pope also sent at the same time a letter to Aetherius, archbishop of Arles, exhorting him to give favourable entertainment to Augustine on his way to Britain; which letter was in these words:

"To his most reverend and holy brother and fellow bishop Aetherius, Gregory, the servant of the servants of God. Although religious men stand in need of no recommendation with priests who have the charity which is pleasing to God; yet because an opportunity of writing has occurred, we have thought fit to send this letter to you, Brother, to inform you, that with the help of God we have directed thither, for the good of souls, the bearer of these presents, Augustine, the servant of God, of whose zeal we are assured, with other servants of God, whom it is requisite that your Holiness readily assist with priestly zeal, affording him all the comfort in your power. And to the end that you may be the more ready in your help, we have enjoined him to inform you particularly of the occasion of his coming; knowing, that when you are acquainted with it, you will, as the matter requires, for the sake of God, dutifully dispose yourself to give him comfort. We also in all things recommend to your charity, Candidus, the priest, our common son, whom we have transferred to the administration of a small patrimony in our Church. God keep you in safety, most reverend brother. Given the 23rd day of July, in the fourteenth year of the reign of our most religious lord, Mauritius Tiberius Augustus, the thirteenth year after the consulship of our lord aforesaid, and the fourteenth indiction."

Chap. XXV.

How Augustine, coming into Britain, first preached in the Isle of Thanet to the King of Kent, and having obtained licence from him, went into Kent, in order to preach therein. [597 a.d.]

Augustine, thus strengthened by the encouragement of the blessed Father Gregory, returned to the work of the Word of God, with the servants of Christ who were with him, and arrived in Britain. The powerful Ethelbert was at that time king of Kent; he had extended his dominions as far as the boundary formed by the great river Humber, by which the Southern Saxons are divided from the Northern. On the east of Kent is the large Isle of Thanet, containing, according to the English way of reckoning, 600 families, divided from the mainland by the river Wantsum, which is about three furlongs in breadth, and which can be crossed only in two places; for at both ends it runs into the sea. On this island landed the servant of the Lord, Augustine, and his companions, being, as is reported, nearly forty men. They had obtained, by order of the blessed Pope Gregory, interpreters of the nation of the Franks, and sending to Ethelbert, signified that they were come from Rome, and brought a joyful message, which most undoubtedly assured to those that hearkened to it everlasting joys in heaven, and a kingdom that would never end, with the living and true God. The king hearing this, gave orders that they should stay in the island where they had landed, and be furnished with necessaries, till he should consider what to do with them. For he had before heard of the Christian religion, having a Christian wife of the royal family of the Franks, called Bertha; whom he had received from her parents, upon condition that she should be permitted to preserve inviolate the rites of her religion with the Bishop Liudhard, who was sent with her to support her in the faith. Some days after, the king came into the island, and sitting in the open air, ordered Augustine and his companions to come and hold a conference with him. For he had taken precaution that they should not come to him in any house, lest, by so coming, according to an ancient superstition, if they practised any magical arts, they might impose upon him, and so get the better of him. But they came endued with Divine, not with magic power, bearing a silver cross for their banner, and the image of our Lord and Saviour painted on a board; and chanting litanies, they offered up their prayers to the Lord for the eternal salvation both of themselves and of those to whom and for whom they had come. When they had sat down, in obedience to the king's commands, and preached to him and his attendants there present the Word of life, the king answered thus: "Your words and promises are fair, but because they are new to us, and of uncertain import, I cannot consent to them so far as to forsake that which I have so long observed with the whole English nation. But because you are come from far as strangers into my kingdom, and, as I conceive, are desirous to impart to us those things which you believe to be true, and most beneficial, we desire not to harm you, but will give you favourable entertainment, and take care to supply you with all things necessary to your sustenance; nor do we forbid you to preach and gain as many as you can to your religion." Accordingly he gave them an abode in the city of Canterbury, which was the metropolis of all his dominions, and, as he had promised, besides supplying them with sustenance, did not refuse them liberty to preach. It is told that, as they drew near to the city, after their manner, with the holy cross, and the image of our sovereign Lord and King, Jesus Christ, they sang in concert this litany: "We beseech thee, O Lord, for Thy great mercy, that Thy wrath and anger be turned away from this city, and from Thy holy house, for we have sinned. Hallelujah."

Chap. XXVI.

How St. Augustine in Kent followed the doctrine and manner of life of the primitive Church, and settled his episcopal see in the royal city. [597 a.d.]

As soon as they entered the dwelling-place assigned to them, they began to imitate the Apostolic manner of life in the primitive Church; applying themselves to constant prayer, watchings, and fastings; preaching the Word of life to as many as they could; despising all worldly things, as in nowise concerning them; receiving only their necessary food from those they taught; living themselves in all respects conformably to what they taught, and being always ready to suffer any adversity, and even to die for that truth which they preached. In brief, some believed and were baptized, admiring the simplicity of their blameless life, and the sweetness of their heavenly doctrine. There was on the east side of the city, a church dedicated of old to the honour of St. Martin, built whilst the Romans were still in the island, wherein the queen, who, as has been said before, was a Christian, was wont to pray. In this they also first began to come together, to chant the Psalms, to pray, to celebrate Mass, to preach, and to baptize, till when the king had been converted to the faith, they obtained greater liberty to preach everywhere and build or repair churches.

When he, among the rest, believed and was baptized, attracted by the pure life of these holy men and their gracious promises, the truth of which they established by many miracles, greater numbers began daily to flock together to hear the Word, and, forsaking their heathen rites, to have fellowship, through faith, in the unity of Christ's Holy Church. It is told that the king, while he rejoiced at their conversion and their faith, yet compelled none to embrace Christianity, but only showed more affection to the believers, as to his fellow citizens in the kingdom of Heaven. For he had learned from those who had instructed him and guided him to salvation, that the service of Christ ought to be voluntary, not by compulsion. Nor was it long before he gave his teachers a settled residence suited to their degree in his metropolis of Canterbury, with such possessions of divers sorts as were necessary for them.

Chap. XXVII.

How St. Augustine, being made a bishop, sent to acquaint Pope Gregory with what had been done in Britain, and asked and received replies, of which he stood in need. [597-601 a.d.]

In the meantime, Augustine, the man of God, went to Arles, and, according to the orders received from the holy Father Gregory, was ordained archbishop of the English nation, by Aetherius, archbishop of that city. Then returning into Britain, he sent Laurentius the the priest and Peter the monk to Rome, to acquaint Pope Gregory, that the English nation had received the faith of Christ, and that he was himself made their bishop. At the same time, he desired his solution of some doubts which seemed urgent to him. He soon received fitting answers to his questions, which we have also thought meet to insert in this our history:

The First Question of the blessed Augustine, Bishop of the Church of Canterbury. — Concerning bishops, what should be their manner of conversation towards their clergy? or into how many portions the offerings of the faithful at the altar are to be divided? and how the bishop is to act in the Church?

Gregory, Pope of the City of Rome, answers. — Holy Scripture, in which we doubt not you are well versed, testifies to this, and in particular the Epistles of the Blessed Paul to Timothy, wherein he endeavours to show him what should be his manner of conversation in the house of God; but it is the custom of the Apostolic see to prescribe these rules to bishops when they are ordained: that all emoluments which accrue, are to be divided into four portions; — one for the bishop and his household, for hospitality and entertainment of guests; another for the clergy; a third for the poor; and the fourth for the repair of churches. But in that you, my brother, having been instructed in monastic rules, must not live apart from your clergy in the Church of the English, which has been lately, by the will of God, converted to the faith, you must establish the manner of conversation of our fathers in the primitive Church, among whom, none said that aught of the things which they possessed was his own, but they had all things common.

But if there are any clerks not received into holy orders, who cannot live continent, they are to take wives, and receive their stipends outside of the community; because we know that it is written concerning the same fathers of whom we have spoken that a distribution was made unto every man according as he had need. Care is also to be taken of their stipends, and provision to be made, and they are to be kept under ecclesiastical rule, that they may live orderly, and attend to singing of psalms, and, by the help of God, preserve their hearts and tongues and bodies from all that is unlawful. But as for those that live in common, there is no need to say anything of assigning portions, or dispensing hospitality and showing mercy; inasmuch as all that they have over is to be spent in pious and religious works, according to the teaching of Him who is the Lord and Master of all, "Give alms of such things as ye have over, and behold all things are clean unto you."

Augustine's Second Question. — Whereas the faith is one and the same, are there different customs in different Churches? and is one custom of Masses observed in the holy Roman Church, and another in the Church of Gaul?

Pope Gregory answers. — You know, my brother, the custom of the Roman Church in which you remember that you were bred up. But my will is, that if you have found anything, either in the Roman, or the Gallican, or any other Church, which may be more acceptable to Almighty God, you should carefully make choice of the same, and sedulously teach the Church of the English, which as yet is new in the faith, whatsoever you can gather from the several Churches. For things are not to be loved for the sake of places, but places for the sake of good things. Choose, therefore, from every Church those things that are pious, religious, and right, and when you have, as it were, made them up into one bundle, let the minds of the English be accustomed thereto.

Augustine's Third Question. — I beseech you, what punishment must be inflicted on one who steals anything from a church?

Gregory answers. — You may judge, my brother, by the condition of the thief, in what manner he is to be corrected. For there are some, who, having substance, commit theft; and there are others, who transgress in this matter through want. Wherefore it is requisite, that some be punished with fines, others with stripes; some with more severity, and some more mildly. And when the severity is greater, it is to proceed from charity, not from anger; because this is done for the sake of him who is corrected, that he may not be delivered up to the fires of Hell. For it behoves us to maintain discipline among the faithful, as good parents do with their children according to the flesh, whom they punish with stripes for their faults, and yet they design to make those whom they chastise their heirs, and preserve their possessions for those whom they seem to visit in wrath. This charity is, therefore, to be kept in mind, and it dictates the measure of the punishment, so that the mind may do nothing beyond the rule prescribed by reason. You will add to this, how men are to restore those things which they have stolen from the church. But let not the Church take more than it has lost of its worldly possessions, or seek gain from vanities.

Augustine's Fourth Question. — Whether two full brothers may marry two sisters, who are of a family far removed from them?

Gregory answers. — Most assuredly this may lawfully be done; for nothing is found in Holy Writ on this matter that seems to contradict it.

Augustine's Fifth Question. — To what degree may the faithful marry with their kindred? and is it lawful to marry a stepmother or a brother's wife?

Gregory answers. — A certain secular law in the Roman commonwealth allows, that the son and daughter of a brother and sister, or of two full brothers, or two sisters, may be joined in matrimony; but we have found, by experience, that the offspring of such wedlock cannot grow up; and the Divine law forbids a man to "uncover the nakedness of his kindred." Hence of necessity it must be the third or fourth generation of the faithful, that can be lawfully joined in matrimony; for the second, which we have mentioned, must altogether abstain from one another. To marry with one's stepmother is a heinous crime, because it is written in the Law, "Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy father:" now the son, indeed, cannot uncover his father's nakedness; but in regard that it is written, "They twain shall be one flesh," he that presumes to uncover the nakedness of his stepmother, who was one flesh with his father, certainly uncovers the nakedness of his father. It is also prohibited to marry with a sister-in-law, because by the former union she is become the brother's flesh. For which thing also John the Baptist was beheaded, and obtained the crown of holy martyrdom. For, though he was not ordered to deny Christ, and it was not for confessing Christ that he was killed, yet inasmuch as the same Jesus Christ, our Lord, said, "I am the Truth," because John was killed for the truth, he also shed his blood for Christ.

But forasmuch as there are many of the English, who, whilst they were still heathens, are said to have been joined in this unholy union, when they attain to the faith they are to be admonished to abstain, and be made to know that this is a grievous sin. Let them fear the dread judgement of God, lest, for the gratification of their carnal desires, they incur the torments of eternal punishment. Yet they are not on this account to be deprived of the Communion of the Body and Blood of Christ, lest they should seem to be punished for those things which they did through ignorance before they had received Baptism. For in these times the Holy Church chastises some things with zeal, and tolerates some in mercy, and is blind to some in her wisdom, and so, by forbearance and blindness often suppresses the evil that stands in her way. But all that come to the faith are to be admonished not to presume to do such things. And if any shall be guilty of them, they are to be excluded from the Communion of the Body and Blood of Christ. For as the offence is, in some measure, to be tolerated in those who did it through ignorance, so it is to be rigorously punished in those who do not fear to sin knowingly.

Augustine's Sixth Question. — Whether a bishop may be consecrated without other bishops being present, if there be so great a distance between them, that they cannot easily come together?

Gregory answers. — In the Church of England, of which you are as yet the only bishop, you cannot otherwise ordain a bishop than in the absence of other bishops. For when do bishops come over from Gaul, that they may be present as witnesses to you in ordaining a bishop? But we would have you, my brother, to ordain bishops in such a manner, that the said bishops may not be far asunder, to the end that there be no lack, but that at the ordination of a bishop other pastors also, whose presence is of great benefit, should easily come together. Thus, when, by the help of God, bishops shall have been ordained in places near to one another, no ordination of a bishop is to take place without assembling three or four bishops. For, even in spiritual affairs, we may take example by the temporal, that they may be wisely and discreetly conducted. For surely, when marriages are celebrated in the world, some married persons are assembled, that those who went before in the way of matrimony, may also partake in the joy of the new union. Why, then, at this spiritual ordinance, wherein, by means of the sacred ministry, man is joined to God, should not such persons be assembled, as may either rejoice in the advancement of the new bishop, or jointly pour forth their prayers to Almighty God for his preservation?

Augustine's Seventh Question. — How are we to deal with the bishops of Gaul and Britain?

Gregory answers. — We give you no authority over the bishops of Gaul, because the bishop of Arles received the pall in the old times of my predecessors, and we must by no means deprive him of the authority he has received. If it shall therefore happen, my brother, that you go over into the province of Gaul, you are to concert with the said bishop of Arles, how, if there be any faults among the bishops, they may be amended. And if he shall be lukewarm in keeping up discipline, he is to be fired by your zeal; to whom we have also written, that aided by the presence of your Holiness in Gaul, he should exert himself to the utmost, and put away from the behaviour of the bishops all that is opposed to the command of our Creator. But you shall not have power to go beyond your own authority and judge the bishops of Gaul, but by persuading, and winning them, and showing good works for them to imitate, you shall recall the perverted to the pursuit of holiness; for it is written in the Law, "When thou comest into the standing corn of thy neighbour, then thou mayest bruise the ears with thine hand and eat; but thou shalt not move a sickle unto thy neighbours' standing corn." For thou mayest not apply the sickle of judgement in that harvest which thou seest to have been committed to another; but by the influence of good works thou shalt clear the Lord's wheat of the chaff of its vices, and convert it by exhortation and persuasion in the body of the Church, as it were, by eating. But whatsoever is to be done by authority, must be transacted with the aforesaid bishop of Arles, lest that should be omitted, which the ancient institution of the fathers has appointed. But as for all the bishops of Britain, we commit them to your care, that the unlearned may be taught, the weak strengthened by persuasion, and the perverse corrected by authority.

Augustine's Eighth Question. — Whether a woman with child ought to be baptized? Or when she has brought forth, after what time she may come into the church? As also, after how many days the infant born may be baptized, lest he be prevented by death? Or how long after her husband may have carnal knowledge of her? Or whether it is lawful for her to come into the church when she has her courses, or to receive the Sacrament of Holy Communion? Or whether a man, under certain circumstances, may come into the church before he has washed with water? Or approach to receive the Mystery of the Holy Communion? All which things are requisite to be known by the ignorant nation of the English.

Gregory answers. — I do not doubt but that these questions have been put to you, my brother, and I think I have already answered you therein. But I believe you would wish the opinion which you yourself might give and hold to be confirmed by my reply also. Why should not a woman with child be baptized, since the fruitfulness of the flesh is no offence in the eyes of Almighty God? For when our first parents sinned in Paradise, they forfeited the immortality which they had received, by the just judgement of God. Because, therefore, Almighty God would not for their fault wholly destroy the human race, he both deprived man of immortality for his sin, and, at the same time, of his great goodness and loving-kindness, reserved to him the power of propagating his race after him. On what ground, then, can that which is preserved to human nature by the free gift of Almighty God, be excluded from the privilege of Holy Baptism? For it is very foolish to imagine that the gift can be opposed to grace in that Mystery in which all sin is blotted out. When a woman is delivered, after how many days she may come into the church, you have learnt from the teaching of the Old Testament, to wit, that she is to abstain for a male child thirty-three days, and sixty-six for a female. Now you must know that this is to be received in a mystery; for if she enters the church the very hour that she is delivered, to return thanks, she is not guilty of any sin; because the pleasure of the flesh is a fault, and not the pain; but the pleasure is in the copulation of the flesh, whereas there is pain in bringing forth the child. Wherefore it is said to the first mother of all, "In sorrow thou shalt bring forth children." If, therefore, we forbid a woman that has brought forth, to enter the church, we make a crime of her very punishment. To baptize either a woman who has brought forth, if there be danger of death, even the very hour that she brings forth, or that which she has brought forth the very hour it is born, is in no way prohibited, because, as the grace of the Holy Mystery is to be with much discretion provided for those who are in full life and capable of understanding, so is it to be without any delay administered to the dying; lest, while a further time is sought to confer the Mystery of redemption, if a small delay intervene, the person that is to be redeemed be dead and gone.

Her husband is not to approach her, till the infant born be weaned. An evil custom is sprung up in the lives of married people, in that women disdain to suckle the children whom they bring forth, and give them to other women to suckle; which seems to have been invented on no other account but incontinency; because, as they will not be continent, they will not suckle the children whom they bear. Those women, therefore, who, from evil custom, give their children to others to bring up, must not approach their husbands till the time of purification is past. For even when there has been no child-birth, women are forbidden to do so, whilst they have their courses, insomuch that the Law condemns to death any man that shall approach unto a woman during her uncleanness. Yet the woman, nevertheless, must not be forbidden to come into the church whilst she has her courses; because the superfluity of nature cannot be imputed to her as a crime; and it is not just that she should be refused admittance into the church, for that which she suffers against her will. For we know, that the woman who had the issue of blood, humbly approaching behind our Lord's back, touched the hem of his garment, and her infirmity immediately departed from her. If, therefore, she that had an issue of blood might commendably touch the garment of our Lord, why may not she, who has her courses, lawfully enter into the church of God? But you may say, Her infirmity compelled her, whereas these we speak of are bound by custom. Consider, then, most dear brother, that all we suffer in this mortal flesh, through the infirmity of our nature, is ordained by the just judgement of God after the fall; for to hunger, to thirst, to be hot, to be cold, to be weary, is from the infirmity of our nature; and what else is it to seek food against hunger, drink against thirst, air against heat, clothes against cold, rest against weariness, than to procure a remedy against distempers? Thus to a woman her courses are a distemper. If, therefore, it was a commendable boldness in her, who in her disease touched our Lord's garment, why may not that which is allowed to one infirm person, be granted to all women, who, through the fault of their nature, are rendered infirm?

She must not, therefore, be forbidden to receive the Mystery of the Holy Communion during those days. But if any one out of profound respect does not presume to do it, she is to be commended; yet if she receives it, she is not to be judged. For it is the part of noble minds in some manner to acknowledge their faults, even when there is no fault; because very often that is done without a fault, which, nevertheless, proceeded from a fault. Thus, when we are hungry, it is no sin to eat; yet our being hungry proceeds from the sin of the first man. The courses are no sin in women, because they happen naturally; yet, because our nature itself is so depraved, that it appears to be defiled even without the concurrence of the will, a defect arises from sin, and thereby human nature may itself know what it is become by judgement. And let man, who wilfully committed the offence, bear the guilt of that offence against his will. And, therefore, let women consider with themselves, and if they do not presume, during their courses, to approach the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of our Lord, they are to be commended for their praiseworthy consideration; but when they are carried away with love of the same Mystery to receive it according to the custom of the religious life, they are not to be restrained, as we said before. For as in the Old Testament the outward works are observed, so in the New Testament, that which is outwardly done, is not so diligently regarded as that which is inwardly thought, that the punishment may be with discernment. For whereas the Law forbids the eating of many things as unclean, yet our Lord says in the Gospel, "Not that which goeth into the mouth defileth a man; but that which cometh out of the mouth, this defileth a man." And afterwards he added, expounding the same, "Out of the heart proceed evil thoughts." Where it is abundantly shown, that that is declared by Almighty God to be polluted in deed, which springs from the root of a polluted thought. Whence also Paul the Apostle says, "Unto the pure all things are pure, but unto them that are defiled and unbelieving, nothing is pure." And presently, declaring the cause of that defilement, he adds, "For even their mind and conscience is defiled." If, therefore, meat is not unclean to him whose mind is not unclean, why shall that which a woman suffers according to nature, with a clean mind, be imputed to her as uncleanness?

A man who has approached his own wife is not to enter the church unless washed with water, nor is he to enter immediately although washed. The Law prescribed to the ancient people, that a man in such cases should be washed with water, and not enter into the church before the setting of the sun. Which, nevertheless, may be understood spiritually, because a man acts so when the mind is led by the imagination to unlawful concupiscence; for unless the fire of concupiscence be first driven from his mind, he is not to think himself worthy of the congregation of the brethren, while he sees himself burdened by the iniquity of a perverted will. For though divers nations have divers opinions concerning this affair, and seem to observe different rules, it was always the custom of the Romans, from ancient times, for such an one to seek to be cleansed by washing, and for some time reverently to forbear entering the church. Nor do we, in so saying, assign matrimony to be a fault; but forasmuch as lawful intercourse cannot be had without the pleasure of the flesh, it is proper to forbear entering the holy place, because the pleasure itself cannot be without a fault. For he was not born of adultery or fornication, but of lawful marriage, who said, "Behold I was conceived in iniquity, and in sin my mother brought me forth." For he who knew himself to have been conceived in iniquity, lamented that he was born from sin, because he bears the defect, as a tree bears in its bough the sap it drew from the root. In which words, however, he does not call the union of the married couple iniquity, but the will itself. For there are many things which are lawful and permitted, and yet we are somewhat defiled in doing them. As very often by being angry we correct faults, and at the same time disturb our own peace of mind; and though that which we do is right, yet it is not to be approved that our mind should be disturbed. For he who said, "My eye was disturbed with anger," had been angry at the vices of sinners. Now, seeing that only a calm mind can rest in the light of contemplation, he grieved that his eye was disturbed with anger; because, whilst he was correcting evil actions below, he was obliged to be confused and disturbed with regard to the contemplation of the highest things. Anger against vice is, therefore, commendable, and yet painful to a man, because he thinks that by his mind being agitated, he has incurred some guilt. Lawful commerce, therefore, must be for the sake of children, not of pleasure; and must be to procure offspring, not to satisfy vices. But if any man is led not by the desire of pleasure, but only for the sake of getting children, such a man is certainly to be left to his own judgement, either as to entering the church, or as to receiving the Mystery of the Body and Blood of our Lord, which he, who being placed in the fire cannot burn, is not to be forbidden by us to receive. But when, not the love of getting children, but of pleasure prevails, the pair have cause to lament their deed. For this the holy preaching concedes to them, and yet fills the mind with dread of the very concession. For when Paul the Apostle said, "Let him that cannot contain have his own wife;" he presently took care to subjoin, "But this I say by way of permission, not of commandment." For that is not granted by way of permission which is lawful, because it is just; and, therefore, that which he said he permitted, he showed to be an offence.

It is seriously to be considered, that when God was about to speak to the people on Mount Sinai, He first commanded them to abstain from women. And if purity of body was there so carefully required, where God spoke to the people by the means of a creature as His representative, that those who were to hear the words of God should abstain; how much more ought women, who receive the Body of Almighty God, to preserve themselves in purity of flesh, lest they be burdened with the very greatness of that inestimable Mystery? For this reason also, it was said to David, concerning his men, by the priest, that if they were clean in this particular, they should receive the shewbread, which they would not have received at all, had not David first declared them to be clean. Then the man, who, afterwards, has been washed with water, is also capable of receiving the Mystery of the Holy Communion, when it is lawful for him, according to what has been before declared, to enter the church.

Augustine's Ninth Question. — Whether after an illusion, such as is wont to happen in a dream, any man may receive the Body of our Lord, or if he be a priest, celebrate the Divine Mysteries?

Gregory answers. — The Testament of the Old Law, as has been said already in the article above, calls such a man polluted, and allows him not to enter into the church till the evening, after being washed with water. Which, nevertheless, a spiritual people, taking in another sense, will understand in the same manner as above; because he is imposed upon as it were in a dream, who, being tempted with uncleanness, is defiled by real representations in thought, and he is to be washed with water, that he may cleanse away the sins of thought with tears; and unless the fire of temptation depart before, may know himself to be in a manner guilty until the evening. But a distinction is very necessary in that illusion, and one must carefully consider what causes it to arise in the mind of the person sleeping; for sometimes it proceeds from excess of eating or drinking; sometimes from the superfluity or infirmity of nature, and sometimes from the thoughts. And when it happens either through superfluity or infirmity of nature, such an illusion is not to be feared at all, because it is to be lamented, that the mind of the person, who knew nothing of it, suffers the same, rather than that he occasioned it. But when the appetite of gluttony commits excess in food, and thereupon the receptacles of the humours are oppressed, the mind thence contracts some guilt; yet not so much as to hinder the receiving of the Holy Mystery, or celebrating Mass, when a holy day requires it, or necessity obliges the Mystery to be shown forth, because there is no other priest in the place; for if there be others who can perform the ministry, the illusion proceeding from over-eating ought not to exclude a man from receiving the sacred Mystery; but I am of opinion he ought humbly to abstain from offering the sacrifice of the Mystery, but not from receiving it, unless the mind of the person sleeping has been disturbed with some foul imagination. For there are some, who for the most part so suffer the illusion, that their mind, even during the sleep of the body, is not defiled with filthy thoughts. In which case, one thing is evident, that the mind is guilty, not being acquitted even in its own judgement; for though it does not remember to have seen anything whilst the body was sleeping, yet it calls to mind that, when the body was awake, it fell into gluttony. But if the illusion of the sleeper proceeds from evil thoughts when he was awake, then its guilt is manifest to the mind; for the man perceives from what root that defilement sprang, because what he had consciously thought of, that he afterwards unconsciously endured. But it is to be considered, whether that thought was no more than a suggestion, or proceeded to delight, or, what is worse, consented to sin. For all sin is committed in three ways, viz., by suggestion, by delight, and by consent. Suggestion comes from the Devil, delight from the flesh, and consent from the spirit. For the serpent suggested the first offence, and Eve, as flesh, took delight in it, but Adam, as the spirit, consented. And when the mind sits in judgement on itself, it must clearly distinguish between suggestion and delight, and between delight and consent. For when the evil spirit suggests a sin to the mind, if there ensue no delight in the sin, the sin is in no way committed; but when the flesh begins to take delight in it, then sin begins to arise. But if it deliberately consents, then the sin is known to be full-grown. The seed, therefore, of sin is in the suggestion, the nourishment of it in delight, its maturity in the consent. And it often happens that what the evil spirit sows in the thought, in that the flesh begins to find delight, and yet the soul does not consent to that delight. And whereas the flesh cannot be delighted without the mind, yet the mind struggling against the pleasures of the flesh, is after a manner unwillingly bound by the carnal delight, so that through reason it opposes it, and does not consent, yet being bound by delight, it grievously laments being so bound. Wherefore that great soldier of our Lord's host, groaned and said, "I see another law in my members warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin, which is in my members." Now if he was a captive, he did not fight; but he did fight; wherefore he was a captive and at the same time therefore fought against the law of the mind, which the law that is in the members opposed; but if he fought, he was no captive. Thus, then, man is, as I may say, a captive and yet free. Free on account of justice, which he loves, a captive by the delight which he unwillingly bears within him.

Chap. XXVIII.

How Pope Gregory wrote to the bishop of Arles to help Augustine in the work of God. [601 a.d.]

Thus far the answers of the holy Pope Gregory, to the questions of the most reverend prelate, Augustine. Now the letter, which he says he had written to the bishop of Arles, was directed to Vergilius, successor to Aetherius, and was in the following words:

"To his most reverend and holy brother and fellow bishop, Vergilius; Gregory, servant of the servants of God. With how much kindness brethren, coming of their own accord, are to be entertained, is shown by this, that they are for the most part invited for the sake of brotherly love. Therefore, if our common brother, Bishop Augustine, shall happen to come to you, let your love, as is becoming, receive him with so great kindness and affection, that it may refresh him by the benefit of its consolation and show to others how brotherly charity is to be cultivated. And, since it often happens that those who are at a distance first learn from others the things that need correction, if he bring before you, my brother, any sins of bishops or others, do you, in conjunction with him, carefully inquire into the same, and show yourself so strict and earnest with regard to those things which offend God and provoke His wrath, that for the amendment of others, the punishment may fall upon the guilty, and the innocent may not suffer under false report. God keep you in safety, most reverend brother. Given the 22nd day of June, in the nineteenth year of the reign of our most religious lord, Mauritius Tiberius Augustus, the eighteenth year after the consulship of our said lord, and the fourth indiction."

Chap. XXIX.

How the same Pope sent to Augustine the Pall and a letter, along with several ministers of the Word. [601 a.d.]

Moreover, the same Pope Gregory, hearing from Bishop Augustine, that the harvest which he had was great and the labourers but few, sent to him, together with his aforesaid envoys, certain fellow labourers and ministers of the Word, of whom the chief and foremost were Mellitus, Justus, Paulinus, and Rufinianus, and by them all things in general that were necessary for the worship and service of the Church, to wit, sacred vessels and altar-cloths, also church-furniture, and vestments for the bishops and clerks, as likewise relics of the holy Apostles and martyrs; besides many manuscripts. He also sent a letter, wherein he signified that he had despatched the pall to him, and at the same time directed how he should constitute bishops in Britain. The letter was in these words:

"To his most reverend and holy brother and fellow bishop, Augustine; Gregory, the servant of the servants of God. Though it be certain, that the unspeakable rewards of the eternal kingdom are reserved for those who labour for Almighty God, yet it is requisite that we bestow on them the benefit of honours, to the end that they may by this recompense be encouraged the more vigorously to apply themselves to the care of their spiritual work. And, seeing that the new Church of the English is, through the bounty of the Lord, and your labours, brought to the grace of God, we grant you the use of the pall in the same, only for the celebration of the solemn service of the Mass; that so you may ordain twelve bishops in different places, who shall be subject to your jurisdiction. But the bishop of London shall, for the future, be always consecrated by his own synod, and receive the pall, which is the token of his office, from this holy and Apostolic see, which I, by the grace of God, now serve. But we would have you send to the city of York such a bishop as you shall think fit to ordain; yet so, that if that city, with the places adjoining, shall receive the Word of God, that bishop shall also ordain twelve bishops, and enjoy the honour of a metropolitan; for we design, if we live, by the help of God, to bestow on him also the pall; and yet we would have him to be subject to your authority, my brother; but after your decease, he shall so preside over the bishops he shall have ordained, as to be in no way subject to the jurisdiction of the bishop of London. But for the future let there be this distinction as regards honour between the bishops of the cities of London and York, that he who has been first ordained have the precedence. But let them take counsel and act in concert and with one mind dispose whatsoever is to be done for zeal of Christ; let them judge rightly, and carry out their judgement without dissension.

"But to you, my brother, shall, by the authority of our God and Lord Jesus Christ, be subject not only those bishops whom you shall ordain, and those that shall be ordained by the bishop of York, but also all the prelates in Britain; to the end that from the words and manner of life of your Holiness they may learn the rule of a right belief and a good life, and fulfilling their office in faith and righteousness, they may, when it shall please the Lord, attain to the kingdom of Heaven. God preserve you in safety, most reverend brother.

"Given the 22nd of June, in the nineteenth year of the reign of our most religious lord, Mauritius Tiberius Augustus, the eighteenth year after the consulship of our said lord, and the fourth indiction."

Chap. XXX.

A copy of the letter which Pope Gregory sent to the Abbot Mellitus, then going into Britain. [601 a.d.]

The aforesaid envoys having departed, the blessed Father Gregory sent after them a letter worthy to be recorded, wherein he plainly shows how carefully he watched over the salvation of our country. The letter was as follows:

"To his most beloved son, the Abbot Mellitus; Gregory, the servant of the servants of God. We have been much concerned, since the departure of our people that are with you, because we have received no account of the success of your journey. Howbeit, when Almighty God has led you to the most reverend Bishop Augustine, our brother, tell him what I have long been considering in my own mind concerning the matter of the English people; to wit, that the temples of the idols in that nation ought not to be destroyed; but let the idols that are in them be destroyed; let water be consecrated and sprinkled in the said temples, let altars be erected, and relics placed there. For if those temples are well built, it is requisite that they be converted from the worship of devils to the service of the true God; that the nation, seeing that their temples are not destroyed, may remove error from their hearts, and knowing and adoring the true God, may the more freely resort to the places to which they have been accustomed. And because they are used to slaughter many oxen in sacrifice to devils, some solemnity must be given them in exchange for this, as that on the day of the dedication, or the nativities of the holy martyrs, whose relics are there deposited, they should build themselves huts of the boughs of trees about those churches which have been turned to that use from being temples, and celebrate the solemnity with religious feasting, and no more offer animals to the Devil, but kill cattle and glorify God in their feast, and return thanks to the Giver of all things for their abundance; to the end that, whilst some outward gratifications are retained, they may the more easily consent to the inward joys. For there is no doubt that it is impossible to cut off every thing at once from their rude natures; because he who endeavours to ascend to the highest place rises by degrees or steps, and not by leaps. Thus the Lord made Himself known to the people of Israel in Egypt; and yet He allowed them the use, in His own worship, of the sacrifices which they were wont to offer to the Devil, commanding them in His sacrifice to kill animals, to the end that, with changed hearts, they might lay aside one part of the sacrifice, whilst they retained another; and although the animals were the same as those which they were wont to offer, they should offer them to the true God, and not to idols; and thus they would no longer be the same sacrifices. This then, dearly beloved, it behoves you to communicate to our aforesaid brother, that he, being placed where he is at present, may consider how he is to order all things. God preserve you in safety, most beloved son.

"Given the 17th of June, in the nineteenth year of the reign of our most religious lord, Mauritius Tiberius Augustus, the eighteenth year after the consulship of our said lord, and the fourth indiction."

At which time he also sent Augustine a letter concerning the miracles that he had heard had been wrought by him; wherein he admonishes him not to incur the danger of being puffed up by the number of them. The letter was in these words:

"I know, dearly beloved brother, that Almighty God, by means of you, shows forth great miracles to the nation which it was His will to choose. Wherefore you must needs rejoice with fear, and fear with joy concerning that heavenly gift; for you will rejoice because the souls of the English are by outward miracles drawn to inward grace; but you will fear, lest, amidst the wonders that are wrought, the weak mind may be puffed up with self-esteem, and that whereby it is outwardly raised to honour cause it inwardly to fall through vain-glory. For we must call to mind, that when the disciples returned with joy from preaching, and said to their Heavenly Master, 'Lord, even the devils are subject to us through Thy Name;' forthwith they received the reply, 'In this rejoice not; but rather rejoice, because your names are written in heaven.' For their minds were set on private and temporal joys, when they rejoiced in miracles; but they are recalled from the private to the common joy, and from the temporal to the eternal, when it is said to them, 'Rejoice in this, because your names are written in heaven.' For all the elect do not work miracles, and yet the names of all are written in heaven. For those who are disciples of the truth ought not to rejoice, save for that good thing which all men enjoy as well as they, and in which their joy shall be without end.

"It remains, therefore, most dear brother, that amidst those outward actions, which you perform through the power of the Lord, you should always carefully judge yourself in your heart, and carefully understand both what you are yourself, and how much grace is bestowed upon that same nation, for the conversion of which you have received even the gift of working miracles. And if you remember that you have at any time sinned against our Creator, either by word or deed, always call it to mind, to the end that the remembrance of your guilt may crush the vanity which rises in your heart. And whatsoever gift of working miracles you either shall receive, or have received, consider the same, not as conferred on you, but on those for whose salvation it has been given you."

Chap. XXXII.

How Pope Gregory sent letters and gifts to King Ethelbert. [601 a.d.]

The same blessed Pope Gregory, at the same time, sent a letter to King Ethelbert, with many gifts of divers sorts; being desirous to glorify the king with temporal honours, at the same time that he rejoiced that through his own labour and zeal he had attained to the knowledge of heavenly glory. The copy of the said letter is as follows:

"To the most glorious lord, and his most excellent son, Ethelbert, king of the English, Bishop Gregory. Almighty God advances good men to the government of nations, that He may by their means bestow the gifts of His loving-kindness on those over whom they are placed. This we know to have come to pass in the English nation, over whom your Highness was placed, to the end, that by means of the blessings which are granted to you, heavenly benefits might also be conferred on your subjects. Therefore, my illustrious son, do you carefully guard the grace which you have received from the Divine goodness, and be eager to spread the Christian faith among the people under your rule; in all uprightness increase your zeal for their conversion; suppress the worship of idols; overthrow the structures of the temples; establish the manners of your subjects by much cleanness of life, exhorting, terrifying, winning, correcting, and showing forth an example of good works, that you may obtain your reward in Heaven from Him, Whose Name and the knowledge of Whom you have spread abroad upon earth. For He, Whose honour you seek and maintain among the nations, will also render your Majesty's name more glorious even to posterity.

"For even so the most pious emperor, Constantine, of old, recovering the Roman commonwealth from the false worship of idols, brought it with himself into subjection to Almighty God, our Lord Jesus Christ, and turned to Him with his whole mind, together with the nations under his rule. Whence it followed, that his praises transcended the fame of former princes; and he excelled his predecessors in renown as much as in good works. Now, therefore, let your Highness hasten to impart to the kings and peoples that are subject to you, the knowledge of one God, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost; that you may surpass the ancient kings of your nation in praise and merit, and while you cause the sins of others among your own subjects to be blotted out, become the more free from anxiety with regard to your own sins before the dread judgement of Almighty God.

"Willingly hear, devoutly perform, and studiously retain in your memory, whatsoever counsel shall be given you by our most reverend brother, Bishop Augustine, who is trained up in the monastic rule, full of the knowledge of Holy Scripture, and, by the help of God, endued with good works; for if you give ear to him when he speaks on behalf of Almighty God, the sooner will Almighty God hear his prayers for you. But if (which God forbid!) you slight his words, how shall Almighty God hear him on your behalf, when you neglect to hear him on behalf of God? Unite yourself, therefore, to him with all your mind, in the fervour of faith, and further his endeavours, by that virtue which God has given you, that He may make you partaker of His kingdom, Whose faith you cause to be received and maintained in your own.

"Besides, we would have your Highness know that, as we find in Holy Scripture from the words of the Almighty Lord, the end of this present world, and the kingdom of the saints, which will never come to an end, is at hand. But as the end of the world draws near, many things are about to come upon us which were not before, to wit, changes in the air, and terrors from heaven, and tempests out of the order of the seasons, wars, famines, pestilences, earthquakes in divers places; which things will not, nevertheless, all happen in our days, but will all follow after our days. If, therefore, you perceive that any of these things come to pass in your country, let not your mind be in any way disturbed; for these signs of the end of the world are sent before, for this reason, that we may take heed to our souls, and be watchful for the hour of death, and may be found prepared with good works to meet our Judge. Thus much, my illustrious son, I have said in few words, with intent that when the Christian faith is spread abroad in your kingdom, our discourse to you may also be more copious, and we may desire to say the more, as joy for the full conversion of your nation is increased in our mind.

“I have sent you some small gifts, which will not appear small to you, when received by you with the blessing of the blessed Apostle, Peter. May Almighty God, therefore, perfect in you His grace which He has begun, and prolong your life here through a course of many years, and in the fulness of time receive you into the congregation of the heavenly country. May the grace of God preserve you in safety, my most excellent lord and son.

“Given the 22nd day of June, in the nineteenth year of the reign of our most religious lord, Mauritius Tiberius Augustus, in the eighteenth year after his consulship, and the fourth indiction.”

Chap. XXXIII.

How Augustine repaired the church of our Saviour, and built the monastery of the blessed Peter the Apostle; and concerning Peter the first abbot of the same.

Augustine having had his episcopal see granted him in the royal city, as has been said, recovered therein, with the support of the king, a church, which he was informed had been built of old by the faithful among the Romans, and consecrated it in the name of the Holy Saviour, our Divine Lord Jesus Christ, and there established a residence for himself and all his successors. He also built a monastery not far from the city to the eastward, in which, by his advice, Ethelbert erected from the foundation the church of the blessed Apostles, Peter and Paul, and enriched it with divers gifts; wherein the bodies of the same Augustine, and of all the bishops of Canterbury, and of the kings of Kent, might be buried. Nevertheless, it was not Augustine himself who consecrated that church, but Laurentius, his successor.

The first abbot of that monastery was the priest Peter, who, being sent on a mission into Gaul, was drowned in a bay of the sea, which is called Amfleat, and committed to a humble tomb by the inhabitants of the place; but since it was the will of Almighty God to reveal his merits, a light from Heaven was seen over his grave every night; till the neighbouring people who saw it, perceiving that he had been a holy man that was buried there, and inquiring who and whence he was, carried away the body, and interred it in the church, in the city of Boulogne, with the honour due to so great a person.

Chap. XXXIV.

[603 a.d.]

At this time, the brave and ambitious king, Ethelfrid, governed the kingdom of the Northumbrians, and ravaged the Britons more than all the chiefs of the English, insomuch that he might be compared to Saul of old, king of the Israelites, save only in this, that he was ignorant of Divine religion. For he conquered more territories from the Britons than any other chieftain or king, either subduing the inhabitants and making them tributary, or driving them out and planting the English in their places. To him might justly be applied the saying of the patriarch blessing his son in the person of Saul, "Benjamin shall ravin as a wolf; in the morning he shall devour the prey, and at night he shall divide the spoil." Hereupon, Aedan, king of the Scots that dwell in Britain, being alarmed by his success, came against him with a great and mighty army, but was defeated and fled with a few followers; for almost all his army was cut to pieces at a famous place, called Degsastan, that is, Degsa Stone. In which battle also Theodbald, brother to Ethelfrid, was killed, with almost all the forces he commanded. This war Ethelfrid brought to an end in the year of our Lord 603, the eleventh of his own reign, which lasted twenty-four years, and the first year of the reign of Phocas, who then was at the head of the Roman empire. From that time, no king of the Scots durst come into Britain to make war on the English to this day.

Book II

Chap. I.

Of the death of the blessed Pope Gregory.[604 a.d.]

At this time, that is, in the year of our Lord 605, the blessed Pope Gregory, after having most gloriously governed the Roman Apostolic see thirteen years, six months, and ten days, died, and was translated to an eternal abode in the kingdom of Heaven. Of whom, seeing that by his zeal he converted our nation, the English, from the power of Satan to the faith of Christ, it behoves us to discourse more at large in our Ecclesiastical History, for we may rightly, nay, we must, call him our apostle; because, as soon as he began to wield the pontifical power over all the world, and was placed over the Churches long before converted to the true faith, he made our nation, till then enslaved to idols, the Church of Christ, so that concerning him we may use those words of the Apostle; "if he be not an apostle to others, yet doubtless he is to us; for the seal of his apostleship are we in the Lord."

He was by nation a Roman, son of Gordianus, tracing his descent from ancestors that were not only noble, but religious. Moreover Felix, once bishop of the same Apostolic see, a man of great honour in Christ and in the Church, was his forefather. Nor did he show his nobility in religion by less strength of devotion than his parents and kindred. But that nobility of this world which was seen in him, by the help of the Divine Grace, he used only to gain the glory of eternal dignity; for soon quitting his secular habit, he entered a monastery, wherein he began to live with so much grace of perfection that (as he was wont afterwards with tears to testify) his mind was above all transitory things; that he rose superior to all that is subject to change; that he used to think of nothing but what was heavenly; that, whilst detained by the body, he broke through the bonds of the flesh by contemplation; and that he even loved death, which is a penalty to almost all men, as the entrance into life, and the reward of his labours. This he used to say of himself, not to boast of his progress in virtue, but rather to bewail the falling off which he imagined he had sustained through his pastoral charge. Indeed, once in a private conversation with his deacon, Peter, after having enumerated the former virtues of his soul, he added sorrowfully, “But now, on account of the pastoral charge, it is entangled with the affairs of laymen, and, after so fair an appearance of inward peace, is defiled with the dust of earthly action. And having wasted itself on outward things, by turning aside to the affairs of many men, even when it desires the inward things, it returns to them undoubtedly impaired. I therefore consider what I endure, I consider what I have lost, and when I behold what I have thrown away, that which I bear appears the more grievous.”

So spake the holy man constrained by his great humility. But it behoves us to believe that he lost nothing of his monastic perfection by reason of his pastoral charge, but rather that he gained greater profit through the labour of converting many, than by the former calm of his private life, and chiefly because, whilst holding the pontifical office, he set about organizing his house like a monastery. And when first drawn from the monastery, ordained to the ministry of the altar, and sent to Constantinople as representative of the Apostolic see, though he now took part in the secular affairs of the palace, yet he did not abandon the fixed course of his heavenly life; for some of the brethren of his monastery, who had followed him to the royal city in their brotherly love, he employed for the better observance of monastic rule, to the end that at all times, by their example, as he writes himself, he might be held fast to the calm shore of prayer, as it were, with the cable of an anchor, whilst he should be tossed up and down by the ceaseless waves of worldly affairs; and daily in the intercourse of studious reading with them, strengthen his mind shaken with temporal concerns. By their company he was not only guarded against the assaults of the world, but more and more roused to the exercises of a heavenly life.

For they persuaded him to interpret by a mystical exposition the book of the blessed Job, which is involved in great obscurity; nor could he refuse to undertake that work, which brotherly affection imposed on him for the future benefit of many; but in a wonderful manner, in five and thirty books of exposition, he taught how that same book is to be understood literally; how to be referred to the mysteries of Christ and the Church; and in what sense it is to be adapted to every one of the faithful. This work he began as papal representative in the royal city, but finished it at Rome after being made pope. Whilst he was still in the royal city, by the help of the grace of Catholic truth, he crushed in its first rise a new heresy which sprang up there, concerning the state of our resurrection. For Eutychius, bishop of that city, taught, that our body, in the glory of resurrection, would be impalpable, and more subtile than wind and air. The blessed Gregory hearing this, proved by force of truth, and by the instance of the Resurrection of our Lord, that this doctrine was every way opposed to the orthodox faith. For the Catholic faith holds that our body, raised by the glory of immortality, is indeed rendered subtile by the effect of spiritual power, but is palpable by the reality of nature; according to the example of our Lord's Body, concerning which, when risen from the dead, He Himself says to His disciples, "Handle Me and see, for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see Me have." In maintaining this faith, the venerable Father Gregory so earnestly strove against the rising heresy, and with the help of the most pious emperor, Tiberius Constantine, so fully suppressed it, that none has been since found to revive it.

He likewise composed another notable book, the "Liber Pastoralis," wherein he clearly showed what sort of persons ought to be preferred to rule the Church; how such rulers ought to live; with how much discrimination they ought to instruct the different classes of their hearers, and how seriously to reflect every day on their own frailty. He also wrote forty homilies on the Gospel, which he divided equally into two volumes; and composed four books of Dialogues, in which, at the request of his deacon, Peter, he recounted the virtues of the more renowned saints of Italy, whom he had either known or heard of, as a pattern of life for posterity; to the end that, as he taught in his books of Expositions what virtues men ought to strive after, so by describing the miracles of saints, he might make known the glory of those virtues. Further, in twenty-two homilies, he showed how much light is latent in the first and last parts of the prophet Ezekiel, which seemed the most obscure. Besides which, he wrote the "Book of Answers," to the questions of the holy Augustine, the first bishop of the English nation, as we have shown above, inserting the same book entire in this history; and the useful little "Synodical Book," which he composed with the bishops of Italy on necessary matters of the Church; as well as private letters to certain persons. And it is the more wonderful that he could write so many lengthy works, seeing that almost all the time of his youth, to use his own words, he was frequently tormented with internal pain, constantly enfeebled by the weakness of his digestion, and oppressed by a low but persistent fever. But in all these troubles, forasmuch as he carefully reflected that, as the Scripture testifies, "He scourgeth every son whom He receiveth," the more severely he suffered under those present evils, the more he assured himself of his eternal hope.

Thus much may be said of his immortal genius, which could not be crushed by such severe bodily pains. Other popes applied themselves to building churches or adorning them with gold and silver, but Gregory was wholly intent upon gaining souls. Whatsoever money he had, he took care to distribute diligently and give to the poor, that his righteousness might endure for ever, and his horn be exalted with honour; so that the words of the blessed Job might be truly said of him, "When the ear heard me, then it blessed me; and when the eye saw me, it gave witness to me: because I delivered the poor that cried, and the fatherless, and him that had none to help him. The blessing of him that was ready to perish came upon me, and I caused the widow's heart to sing for joy. I put on righteousness, and it clothed me; my judgement was as a robe and a diadem. I was eyes to the blind, and feet was I to the lame. I was a father to the poor; and the cause which I knew not, I searched out. And I brake the jaws of the wicked, and plucked the spoil out of his teeth." And a little after: "If I have withheld," says he, "the poor from their desire; or have caused the eyes of the widow to fail; or have eaten my morsel myself alone, and the fatherless hath not eaten thereof: (for from my youth compassion grew up with me, and from my mother's womb it came forth with me.")

To his works of piety and righteousness this also may be added, that he saved our nation, by the preachers he sent hither, from the teeth of the old enemy, and made it partaker of eternal liberty. Rejoicing in the faith and salvation of our race, and worthily commending it with praise, he says, in his exposition of the blessed Job, "Behold, the tongue of Britain, which only knew how to utter barbarous cries, has long since begun to raise the Hebrew Hallelujah to the praise of God! Behold, the once swelling ocean now serves prostrate at the feet of the saints; and its wild upheavals, which earthly princes could not subdue with the sword, are now, through the fear of God, bound by the lips of priests with words alone; and the heathen that stood not in awe of troops of warriors, now believes and fears the tongues of the humble! For he has received a message from on high and mighty works are revealed; the strength of the knowledge of God is given him, and restrained by the fear of the Lord, he dreads to do evil, and with all his heart desires to attain to everlasting grace." In which words the blessed Gregory shows us this also, that St. Augustine and his companions brought the English to receive the truth, not only by the preaching of words, but also by showing forth heavenly signs.

The blessed Pope Gregory, among other things, caused Masses to be celebrated in the churches of the holy Apostles, Peter and Paul, over their bodies. And in the celebration of Masses, he added three petitions of the utmost perfection: “And dispose our days in thy peace, and bid us to be preserved from eternal damnation, and to be numbered in the flock of thine elect.”

He governed the Church in the days of the Emperors Mauritius and Phocas, and passing out of this life in the second year of the same Phocas, he departed to the true life which is in Heaven. His body was buried in the church of the blessed Apostle Peter before the sacristy, on the 12th day of March, to rise one day in the same body in glory with the rest of the holy pastors of the Church. On his tomb was written this epitaph:

Receive, O Earth, his body taken from thine own; thou canst restore it, when God calls to life. His spirit rises to the stars; the claims of death shall not avail against him, for death itself is but the way to new life. In this tomb are laid the limbs of a great pontiff, who yet lives for ever in all places in countless deeds of mercy. Hunger and cold he overcame with food and raiment, and shielded souls from the enemy by his holy teaching. And whatsoever he taught in word, that he fulfilled in deed, that he might be a pattern, even as he spake words of mystic meaning. By his guiding love he brought the Angles to Christ, gaining armies for the Faith from a new people. This was thy toil, thy task, thy care, thy aim as shepherd, to offer to thy Lord abundant increase of the flock. So, Consul of God, rejoice in this thy triumph, for now thou hast the reward of thy works for evermore.

Nor must we pass by in silence the story of the blessed Gregory, handed down to us by the tradition of our ancestors, which explains his earnest care for the salvation of our nation. It is said that one day, when some merchants had lately arrived at Rome, many things were exposed for sale in the market place, and much people resorted thither to buy: Gregory himself went with the rest, and saw among other wares some boys put up for sale, of fair complexion, with pleasing countenances, and very beautiful hair. When he beheld them, he asked, it is said, from what region or country they were brought? and was told, from the island of Britain, and that the inhabitants were like that in appearance. He again inquired whether those islanders were Christians, or still involved in the errors of paganism, and was informed that they were pagans. Then fetching a deep sigh from the bottom of his heart, "Alas! what pity," said he, "that the author of darkness should own men of such fair countenances; and that with such grace of outward form, their minds should be void of inward grace." He therefore again asked, what was the name of that nation? and was answered, that they were called Angles. "Right," said he, "for they have an angelic face, and it is meet that such should be co-heirs with the Angels in heaven. What is the name of the province from which they are brought?" It was replied, that the natives of that province were called Deiri. "Truly are they De ira," said he, "saved from wrath, and called to the mercy of Christ. How is the king of that province called?" They told him his name was Aelli; and he, playing upon the name, said, "Allelujah, the praise of God the Creator must be sung in those parts."

Then he went to the bishop of the Roman Apostolic see (for he was not himself then made pope), and entreated him to send some ministers of the Word into Britain to the nation of the English, that it might be converted to Christ by them; declaring himself ready to carry out that work with the help of God, if the Apostolic Pope should think fit to have it done. But not being then able to perform this task, because, though the Pope was willing to grant his request, yet the citizens of Rome could not be brought to consent that he should depart so far from the city, as soon as he was himself made Pope, he carried out the long-desired work, sending, indeed, other preachers, but himself by his exhortations and prayers helping the preaching to bear fruit. This account, which we have received from a past generation, we have thought fit to insert in our Ecclesiastical History.

Pope St. Gregory I by Gilbert Roger Hudleston

From 'Catholic Encyclopedia, Volume 6', 1913

Doctor of the Church; born at Rome about 540; died 12 March 604. Gregory

“is certainly one of the most notable figures in Ecclesiastical History. He has exercised in many respects a momentous influence on the doctrine, the organization, and the discipline of the Catholic Church. To him we must look for an explanation of the religious situation of the Middle Ages; indeed, if no account were taken of his work, the evolution of the form of medieval Christianity would be almost inexplicable. And further, in so far as the modern Catholic system is a legitimate development of medieval Catholicism, of this too Gregory may not unreasonably be termed the Father. Almost all the leading principles of the later Catholicism are found, at any rate in germ, in Gregory the Great. (F.H. Dudden, “Gregory the Great”, 1, p. v).”

This eulogy by a learned non-Catholic writer will justify the length and elaboration of the following article.

I. FROM BIRTH TO 574

Gregory's father was Gordianus, a wealthy patrician, probably of the famous gens Amicia, who owned large estates in Sicily and a mansion on the Caelian Hill in Rome, the ruins of which, apparently in a wonderful state of preservation, still await excavation beneath the Church of St. Andrew and St. Gregory. His mother Silvia appears also to have been of good family, but very little is known of her life. She is honoured as a saint, her feast being kept on 3 November. Portraits of Gordianus and Silvia were painted by Gregory's order, in the atrium of St. Andrew's monastery, and a pleasing description of these may be found in John the Deacon (Vita, IV, lxxxiii). Besides his mother, two of Gregory's aunts have been canonised, Gordianus's two sisters, Tarsilla and Æmilians, so that John the Deacon speaks of his education as being that of a saint among saints. Of his early years we know nothing beyond what the history of the period tells us. Between the years 546 and 552 Rome was first captured by the Goths under Totila, and then abandoned by them; next it was garrisoned by Belisarius, and besieged in vain by the Goths, who took it again, however, after the recall of Belisarius, only to lose it once more to Narses. Gregory's mind and memory were both exceptionally receptive, and it is to the effect produced on him by these disasters that we must attribute the tinge of sadness which pervades his writings and especially his clear expectation of a speedy end to the world. Of his education, we have no details. Gregory of Tours tells us that in grammar, rhetoric and dialectic he was so skilful as to be thought second to none in all Rome, and it seems certain also that he must have gone through a course of legal studies. Not least among the educating influences was the religious atmosphere of his home. He loved to meditate on the Scriptures and to listen attentively to the conversations of his elders, so that he was "devoted to God from his youth up". His rank and prospects pointed him out naturally for a public career, and he doubtless held some of the subordinate offices wherein a young patrician embarked on public life. That he acquitted himself well in these appears certain, since we find him about the year 573, when little more than thirty years old, filling the important office of prefect of the city of Rome. At that date the brilliant post was shorn of much of its old magnificence, and its responsibilities were reduced; still it remained the highest civil dignity in the city, and it was only after long prayer and inward struggle that Gregory decided to abandon everything and become a monk. This event took place most probably in 574. His decision once taken, he devoted himself to the work and austerities of his new life with all the natural energy of his character. His Sicilian estates were given up to found six monasteries there, and his home on the Caelian Hill was converted into another under the patronage of St. Andrew. Here he himself took the cowl, so that “he who had been wont to go about the city clad in the trabea and aglow with silk and jewels, now clad in a worthless garment served the altar of the Lord” (Greg. Tur., X, i).

II. AS MONK AND ABBOT (C. 574-590)

There has been much discussion as to whether Gregory and his fellow-monks at St. Andrew's followed the Rule of St. Benedict. Baronius and others on his authority have denied this, while it has been asserted as strongly by Mabillon and the Bollandists, who, in the preface to the life of St. Augustine (26 May), retract the opinion expressed earlier in the preface to St. Gregory's life (12 March). The controversy is important only in view of the question as to the form of monasticism introduced by St. Augustine into England, and it may be said that Baronius's view is now practically abandoned. For about three years Gregory lived in retirement in the monastery of St. Andrew, a period to which he often refers as the happiest portion of his life. His great austerities during this time are recorded by the biographers, and probably caused the weak health from which he constantly suffered in later life. However, he was soon drawn out of his seclusion, when, in 578, the pope ordained him, much against his will, as one of the seven deacons (regionarii) of Rome. The period was one of acute crisis. The Lombards were advancing rapidly towards the city, and the only chance of safety seemed to be in obtaining help from the Emperor Tiberius at Byzantium. Popo Pelagius II accordingly dispatched a special embassy to Tiberius, and sent Gregory along with it as his apocrisiarius, or permanent ambassador to the Court of Byzantium. The date of this new appointment seems to have been the spring of 579, and it lasted apparently for about six years. Nothing could have been more uncongenial to Gregory than the worldly atmosphere of the brilliant Byzantine Court, and to counteract its dangerous influence he followed the monastic life so far as circumstances permitted. This was made easier by the fact that several of his brethren from St. Andrew's accompanied him to Constantinople. With them he prayed and studied the Scriptures, one result of which remains in his "Morals", or series of lectures on the Book of Job, composed during this period at the request of St. Leander of Seville, whose acquaintance Gregory made during his stay in Constantinople. Much attention was attracted to Gregory by his controversy with Eutychius, Patriarch of Constantinople, concerning the Resurrection. Eutychius had published a treatise on the subject maintaining that the risen bodies of the elect would be "impalpable, more light than air". To this view Gregory objected the palpability of Christ's risen body. The dispute became prolonged and bitter, till at length the emperor intervened, both combatants being summoned to a private audience, where they stated their views. The emperor decided that Gregory was in the right, and ordered Eutychius's book to the burned. The strain of the struggle had been so great that both fell ill. Gregory recovered, but the patriarch succumbed, recanting his error on his death bed. Mention should be made of the curious fact that, although Gregory's sojourn at Constantinople lasted for six years, he seems never to have mastered even the rudiments of Greek. Possibly he found that the use of an interpreter had its advantages, but he often complains of the incapacity of those employed for this purpose. It must be owned that, so far as obtaining help for Rome was concerned, Gregory's stay at Constantinople was a failure. However, his period as ambassador taught him very plainly a lesson which was to bear great fruit later on when he ruled in Rome as pope. This was the important fact that no help was any longer to be looked for from Byzantium, with the corollary that, if Rome and Italy were to be saved at all, it could only be by vigorous independent action of the powers on the spot. Humanly speaking, it is to the fact that Gregory had acquired this conviction that his later line of action with all its momentous consequences is due.

In the year 586, or possibly 585, he was recalled to Rome, and with the greatest joy returned to St. Andrew's, of which he became abbot soon afterwards. The monastery grew famous under his energetic rule, producing many monks who won renown later, and many vivid pictures of this period may be found in the “Dialogues”. Gregory gave much of his time to lecturing on the Holy Scriptures and is recorded to have expounded to his monks the Heptateuch, Books of Kings, the Prophets, the Book of Proverbs, and the Canticle of V+Canticles. Notes of these lectures were taken at the time by a young student named Claudius, but when transcribed were found by Gregory to contain so many errors that he insisted on their being given to him for correction and revision. Apparently this was never done, for the existing fragments of such works attributed to Gregory are almost certainly spurious. At this period, however, one important literary enterprise was certainly completed. This was the revision and publication of the “Magna Moralia”, or lectures on the Book of Job, undertaken in Constantinople at the request of St. Leander. In one of his letters (Ep., V, liii) Gregory gives an interesting account of the origin of this work. To this period most probably should be assigned the famous incident of Gregory’s meeting with the English youths in the Forum. The first mention of the event is in the Whitby life (c, ix), and the whole story seems to be an English tradition. It is worth notice, therefore, that in the St. Gall manuscript the Angles do not appear as slave boys exposed for sale, but as men visiting Rome of their own free will, whom Gregory expressed a desire to see. It is Venerable Bede (Hist. Eccl., II, i) who first makes them slaves. In consequence of this meeting Gregory was so fixed with desire to convert the Angles that he obtained permission from Pelagius II to go in person to Britain with some of his fellow-monks as missionaries. The Romans, however, were greatly incensed at the pope’s act. With angry words they demanded Gregory’s recall, and messengers were at once dispatched to bring him back to Rome, if necessary by force. These men caught up with the little band of missionaries on the third day after their departure, and at once returned with them, Gregory offering no opposition, since he had received what appeared to him as a sign from heaven that his enterprise should be abandoned. The strong feeling of the Roman populace that Gregory must not be allowed to leave Rome is a sufficient proof of the position he now held there. He was in fact the chief adviser and assistant of Pelagius II, towards whom he seems to have acted very much in the capacity of secretary (see the letter of the Bishop of Ravenna to Gregory, Epp., III, lxvi, "Sedem apostolicam, quam antae moribus nunc etiam honore debito gubernatis"). In this capacity, probably in 586, Gregory wrote his important letter to the schismatical bishops of Istria who had separated from communion with the Church on the question of the Three Chapters (Epp., Appendix, III, iii). This document, which is almost a treatise in length, is an admirable example of Gregory's skill, but it failed to produce any more effort than Pelagius's two previous letters had, and the schism continued.

The year 589 was one of widespread disaster throughout all the empire. In Italy there was an unprecedented inundation. Farms and houses were carried away by the floods. The Tiber overflowed its banks, destroying numerous buildings, among them the granaries of the Church with all the store of corn. Pestilence followed on the floods, and Rome became a very city of the dead. Business was at a standstill, and the streets were deserted save for the wagons which bore forth countless corpses for burial in common pits beyond the city walls. Then, in February, 590, as if to fill the cup of misery to the brim, Pelagius II died. The choice of a successor lay with the clergy and people of Rome, and without any hesitation they elected Gregory, Abbot of St. Andrew's. In spite of their unanimity Gregory shrank from the dignity thus offered him. He knew, no doubt, that its acceptance meant a final good-bye to the cloister life he loved, and so he not only refused to accede to the prayers of his fellow citizens but also wrote personally to the Emperor Maurice, begging him with all earnestness not to confirm the election. Germanus, prefect of the city, suppresses this letter, however, and sent instead of it the formal schedule of the election. In the interval while awaiting the emperor's reply the business of the vacant see was transacted by Gregory, in commission with two or three other high officials. As the plague still continued unabated, Gregory called upon the people to join in a vast sevenfold procession which was to start from each of the seven regions of the city and meet at the Basilica of the Blessed Virgin, all praying the while for pardon and the withdrawal of the pestilence. This was accordingly done, and the memory of the event is still preserved by the name "Sant' Angelo" given to the mausoleum of Hadrian from the legend that the Archangel St. Michael was seen upon its summit in the act of sheathing his sword as a sign that the plague was over. At length, after six months of waiting, came the emperor's confirmation of Gregory's election. The saint was terrified at the news and even meditated flight. He was seized, however, carried to the Basilica of St. Peter, and there consecrated pope on 3 September, 590. The story that Gregory actually fled the city and remained hidden in a forest for three days, when his whereabouts was revealed by a supernatural light, seems to be pure invention. It appears for the first time in the Whitby life (c. vii), and is directly contrary to the words of his contemporary, Gregory of Tours (Hist. Franc., X, i). Still he never ceased to regret his elevation, and his later writings contain numberless expressions of strong feeling on this point.

III. AS POPE (590-604)

Fourteen years of life remained to Gregory, and into these he crowded work enough to have exhausted the energies of a lifetime. What makes his achievement more wonderful is his constant ill-health. He suffered almost continually from indigestion and, at intervals, from attacks of slow fever, while for the last half of his pontificate he was a martyr to gout. In spite of these infirmities, which increased steadily, his biographer, Paul the Deacon, tells us "he never rested" (Vita, XV). His work as pope is of so varied a nature that it will be best to take it in sections, although this destroys any exact chronological sequence. At the very outset of his pontificate Gregory published his "Liber pastoralis curae", or book on the office of a bishop, in which he lays down clearly the lines he considers it his duty to follow. The work, which regards the bishop pre-eminently as the physician of souls, is divided into four parts. He points out in the first that only one skilled already as a physician of the soul is fitted to undertake the "supreme rule" of the episcopate. In the second he describes how the bishop's life should be ordered from a spiritual point of view; in the third, how he ought to teach and admonish those under him, and in the fourth how, in spite of his good works, he ought to bear in mind his own weakness, since the better his work the greater the danger of falling through self-confidence. This little work is the key to Gregory's life as pope, for what he preached he practiced. Moreover, it remained for centuries the textbook of the Catholic epioscopate, so that by its influence the ideal of the great pope has moulded the character of the Church, and his spirit has spread into all lands.

(1) Life and Work in Rome

As pope Gregory still lived with monastic simplicity. One of his first acts was to banish all the lay attendants, pages, etc., from the Lateran palace, and substitute clerics in their place. There was now no magister militum living in Rome, so the control even of military matters fell to the pope. The inroads of the Lombards had filled the city with a multitude of indigent refugees, for whose support Gregory made provision, using for this purpose the existing machinery of the ecclesiastical districts, each of which had its deaconry or "office of alms". The corn thus distributed came chiefly from Sicily and was supplied by the estates of the Church. The temporal needs of his people being thus provided for, Gregory did not neglect their spiritual wants, and a large number of his sermons have come down to us. It was he who instituted the "stations" still observed and noted in the Roman Missal (see STATIONS). He met the clergy and people at some church previously agreed upon, and all together went in procession to the church of the station, where Mass was celebrated and the pope preached. These sermons, which drew immense crowds, are mostly simple, popular expositions of Scripture. Chiefly remarkable is the preacher's mastery of the Bible, which he quotes unceasingly, and his regular use of anecdote to illustrate the point in hand, in which respect he paves the way for the popular preachers of the Middle Ages. In July, 595, Gregory held his first synod in St. Peter's, which consisted almost wholly of the bishops of the suburbicarian sees and the priests of the Roman titular churches. Six decrees dealing with ecclesiastical discipline were passed, some of them merely confirming changes already made by the pope on his own authority.

Much controversy still exists as to the exact extent of Gregory's reforms of the Roman Liturgy. All admit that he did make the following modifications in the pre-existing practice:

- In the Canon of the Mass he inserted the words "diesque nostros in tua pace disponas, atque ab aeterna damnatione nos eripi, et in electorum tuorum jubras grege numerari";
- he ordered the Pater Noster to be recited in the Canon before the breaking of the Host;

- he provided that the Alleluia should be chanted after the Gradual out of paschal time, to which period, apparently, the Roman use had previously confined it;
- he prohibited the use of the chasuble by subdeacons assisting at Mass;
- he forbade deacons to perform any of the musical portions of the Mass other than singing the Gospel.

Beyond these and some few minor points it seems impossible to conclude with certainty what changes Gregory did make. As to the much-disputed question of the Gregorian Sacramentary and the almost more difficult point of his relation to the plain song or chant of the Church, for Gregory's connection with which matters the earliest authority seems to be John the Deacon (Vita, II, vi, Xvii), see GREGORIAN CHANT; SACRAMENTARY. There is no lack of evidence, however, to illustrate Gregory's activity as manager of the patrimony of St. Peter. By his day the estates of the Church had reached vast dimensions. Varying estimates place their total area at from 1300 to 1800 square miles, and there seems no reason for supposing this to be an exaggeration, while the income arising therefrom was probably not less than $1,500,000 a year. The land lay in many places - Campania, Africa, Sicily, and elsewhere - and, as their landlord, Gregory displayed a skill in finance and estate management which excites our admiration no less than it did the surprise of his tenants and agents, who suddenly found that they had a new master who was not to be deceived or cheated. The management of each patrimony was carried out by a number of agents of varying grades and duties under an official called the rector or defensor of the patrimony. Previously the rectors had usually been laymen, but Gregory established the custom of appointing ecclesiastics to the post. In doing this he probably had in view the many extra duties of an ecclesiastical nature which he called upon them to undertake. Thus examples may be found of such rectors being commissioned to undertake the filling up of vacant sees, holding of local synods, taking action against heretics, providing for the maintenance of churches and monasteries, rectifying abuses in the churches of their district, with the enforcing of ecclesiastical discipline and even the reproof and correction of local bishops. Still Gregory never allowed the rectors to interfere in such matters on their own responsibility. In the minutiae of estate management nothing was too small for Gregory's personal notice, from the exact number of sextarii in a modius of corn, or how many soluli went to one golden pound, to the use of false weights by certain minor agents. He finds time to write instructions on every detail and leaves no complaint unattended to, even from the humblest of his multitude of tenants. Throughout the large number of letters which deal with the management of the patrimony, the pope's determination to secure a scrupulously righteous administration is evident. As bishop, he is the trustee of God and St. Peter, and his agents must show that they realize this by their conduct. Consequently, under his able management the estates of the Church increased steadily in value, the tenants were contented, and the revenues paid in with unprecedented regularity. The only fault ever laid at his door in this matter is that, by his boundless charities, he emptied his treasury. But this, if a fault at all, was a natural consequence of his view that he was the administrator of the property of the poor, for whom he could never do enough.

(2) Relations with the Suburbicarian Churches

As patriarchs of the West the popes exercise a special jurisdiction over and above their universal primacy as successors of St. Peter; and among Western churches, this jurisdiction extends in a most intimate manner over the churches of Italy and the isles adjacent. On the mainland much of this territory was in the hands of the Lombards, with whose Arian clergy

Gregory was, of course, not in communion. Whenever opportunity offered, however, he was careful to provide for the needs of the faithful in these parts, frequently uniting them to some neighboring diocese, when they were too few to occupy the energies of a bishop. On the islands, of which Sicily was by far the most important, the pre- existing church system was maintained. Gregory appointed a vicar, usually the metropolitan of the province, who exercised a general supervision over the whole church. He also insisted strongly on the holding of local synods as ordered by the Council of Nicaea, and letters of his exist addressed to bishops in Sicily, Sardinia, and Gaul reminding them of their duties in this respect. The supreme instance of Gregory's intervention in the affairs of these dioceses occurs in the case of Sardinia, where the behaviour of Januarius the half-witted, aged Metropolitan of Cagliari, had reduced the church to a state of semi-chaos. A large number of letters relate to the reforms instituted by the pope (Epp., II, xlvii; III, xxxvi; IV, ix,xxiii-xxvii, xxix; V, ii; IX, i, xi, ccii-cciv; XIV, ii). His care over the election of a new bishop whenever a vacancy occurs is shown in many cases, and if, after his examination of the elect, which is always a searching one, he finds him unfitted for the post, he has no hesitation in rejecting him and commanding another to be chosen (Epp., I, lv, lvi; VII, xxxviii; X, vii). With regard to discipline the pope was specially strict in enforcing the Church's laws as to the celibacy of the clergy (Epp., I, xlii, 1; IV. v, xxvi, xxxiv; VII, i; IX, cx, ccxviii; X, xix; XI, lvi a; XIII, xxxviii, xxxix); the exemption of clerics from lay tribunals(Epp., I, xxxix a; VI, xi, IX, liii, lxxvi, lxxix; X, iv; XI, xxxii; XIII, 1); and the deprivation of all ecclesiastics guilty of criminal or scandalous offences (Epp., I, xviii, xlii; III, xlix; IV, xxvi; V, v, xvii, xviii; VII, xxxix; VIII, xxiv; IX, xxv; XII, iii, x, xi; XIV, ii). He was also inflexible with regard to the proper application of church revenues, insisting that others should be as strict as he was in disposing of these funds for their proper ends (Epp., I, x, lxiv; II, xx-xxii; III, xxii; IV, xi; V, xii, xlviii; VIII, vii; XI, xxii, lvi a; XIII, xlvi; XIV, ii).

(3) Relations with Other Churches

With regard to the other Western Churches limits of space prevent any detailed account of Gregory's dealings, but the following quotation, all the more valuable as coming from a Protestant authority, indicates very clearly the line he followed herein: "In his dealings with the Churches of the West, Gregory acted invariably on the assumption that all were subject to the jurisdiction of the Roman See. Of the rights claimed or exercised by his predecessors he would not abate one tittle; on the contrary, he did everything in his power to maintain, strengthen, and extend what he regarded as the just prerogatives of the papacy. It is true that he respected the privileges of the Western metropolitans, and disapproved of unnecessary interference within the sphere of their jurisdiction canonically exercised. . . . But of his general principle there can be no doubt whatever" (Dudden, I, 475). In view of later developments Gregory's dealings with the Oriental Churches, and with Constantinople in particular, have a special importance. There cannot be the smallest doubt that Gregory claimed for the Apostolic See, and for himself as pope, a primacy not of honor, but of supreme authority over the Church Universal. In Epp., XIII, l, he speaks of "the Apostolic See, which is the head of all Churches", and in Epp., V, cliv, he says: "I, albeit unworthy, have been set up in command of the Church." As successor of St. Peter, the pope had received from God a primacy over all Churches (Epp., II, xlvi; III, xxx; V, xxxvii; VII, xxxvii). His approval it was which gave force to the decrees of councils or synods (Epp., IX, clvi), and his authority could annul them (Epp., V, xxxix, xli, xliv). To him appeals might be made even against other patriarchs, and by him bishops were judged and corrected if need were (Epp., II, l; III, lii, lxiii; IX, xxvi, xxvii). This position naturally made it impossible for him to permit the use of the title Ecumenical Bishop assumed by the Patriarch of Constantinople, John the Faster, at a synod held in 588. Gregory protested, and a long controversy followed, the question still at issue when the pope died. A discussion of this controversy is needless here, but it is important as showing how completely Gregory regarded the Eastern patriarchs as being subject to himself; "As regards the Church of Constantinople," he writes in Epp., IX, xxvi, "who can doubt that it is subject to the Apostolic See? Why, both our most religious lord the emperor, and our brother the Bishop of Constantinople continually acknowledge it." At the same time the pope was most careful not to interfere with the canonical rights of the other patriarchs and bishops. With the other Oriental patriarchs his relations were most cordial, as appears from his letters to the patriarchs of Antioch and Alexandria.

(4) Relations with the Lombards and the Franks

Gregory's consecration as pope preceded by a few days only the death of Authari, King of the Lombards, whose queen, the famous Theodelinde, then married Agilulf, Duke of Turin, a warlike and energetic prince. With Agilulf and the Dukes Ariulf of Spoleto and Arichis of Benevento, Gregory soon had to deal, as, when difficulties arose, Romanus, the exarch, or representative, of the emperor, preferred to remain in sulky inactivity at Ravenna. It soon became clear that, if any successful resistance was to be made against the Lombards, it must be by the pope's own exertions. How keenly he felt the difficulty and danger of his position appears in some of the earliest letters (Epp., I, iii, viii, xxx); but no actual hostilities began till the summer of 592, when the pope received a threatening letter from Ariulf of Spoleto, which was followed almost immediately by the appearance of that chief before the walls of Rome. At the same time Arichis of Benevento advanced on Naples, which happened at the moment to have no bishop nor any officer of high rank in command of the garrison. Gregory at once took the surprising step of appointing a tribune on his own authority to take command of the city (Epp., II, xxxiv), and, when no notice of this strong action was taken by the imperial authorities, the pope conceived the idea of himself arranging a separate peace with the Lombards (Epp., II, xlv). No details of this peace have come down to us, but it seems certain that it was actually concluded (Epp., V, xxxvi). Dr. Hodgkin (Italy and her Invaders, v, 366) pronounces Gregory's action herein to have been wise and statesmanlike, but, at the same time, undoubtedly ultra vires, being quite beyond any legal competency then possessed by the pope, who thus "made a memorable stride towards complete independence". Gregory's independent action had the effect of rousing up Romanus the exarch. Wholly ignoring the papal peace, he gathered all his troops, attacked and regained Perugia, and then marched to Rome, where he was received with imperial honours. The next spring, however, he quitted the city and took away its garrison with him, so that both pope and citizens were now more exasperated against him than before. Moreover, the exarch's campaign had roused the Northern Lombards, and King Agilulf marched on Rome, arriving there probably some time in June, 593. The terror aroused by his advance is still mirrored for us in Gregory's homilies on the Prophet Ezechiel, which were delivered at this time. The siege of the city was soon abandoned, however, and Agilulf retired. The continuator of Prosper (Mon. Germ. SS. Antiq., IX, 339) relates that Agilulf met the pope in person on the steps of the Basilica of St. Peter, which was then outside the city walls, and "being melted by Gregory's prayers and greatly moved by the wisdom and religious gravity of this great man, he broke up the seige of the city"; but, in view of the silence both of Gregory himself and of Paul the Deacon on the point, the story seems scarcely probable. In Epp., V, xxxix, Gregory refers to himself as "the paymaster of the Lombards", and most likely a large payment from the papal treasury was the chief inducement to raise the seige. The pope's great desire now was to secure a lasting peace with the Lombards, which could only be achieved by a proper arrangement between the imperial authorities and the Lombard chiefs. On Queen Theodelinde, a Catholic and a personal friend, Gregory placed all his hopes. The exarch, however, looked at the whole affair in another light, and, when a whole year was passed in fruitless negotiations, Gregory began once again to mediate a private treaty. Accordingly, in May, 595, the pope wrote to a friend at Ravenna a letter (Epp., V, xxxiv) threatening to make peace with Agilulf even without the consent of the Exarch Romanus. This threat was speedily reported to Constantinople, where the exarch was in high favour, and the Emperor Maurice at once sent off to Gregory a violent letter, now lost, accusing him of being both a traitor and a fool. This letter Gregory received in June, 595. Luckily, the pope's answer has been preserved to us (Epp., V, xxxvi). It must be read in its entirety to be appreciated fully; probably very few emperors, if any, have ever received such a letter from a subject. Still, in spite of his scathing reply, Gregory seems to have realized that independent action could not secure what he wished, and we hear no more about a separate peace. Gregory's relations with the Exarch Romanus became continually more and more strained until the latter's death in the year 596 or early in 597. The new exarch, Callinicus, was a man of far greater ability and well disposed towards the pope, whose hopes now revived. The official peace negotiations were pushed on, and, in spite of delays, the articles were at length signed in 599, to Gregory's great joy. This peace lasted two years, but in 601 the war broke out again through an aggressive act on the part of Callinicus, who was recalled two years later, when his successor, Smaragdus, again made a peace with the Lombards which endured until after Gregory's death. Two points stand out for special notice in Gregory's dealings with the Lombards: first, his determination that, in spite of the apathy of the imperial authorities, Rome should not pass into the hands of some half-civilized Lombard duke and so sink into insignificance and decay; second, his independent action in appointing governors to cities, providing munitions of war, giving instructions to generals, sending ambassadors to the Lombard king, and even negotiating a peace without the exarch's aid. Whatever the theory may have been, there is no doubt about the fact that, besides his spiritual jurisdiction, Gregory actually exercised no small amount of temporal power.

Of Gregory's relations with the Franks there is no need to write at length, as the intercourse he established with the Frankish kings practically lapsed at his death, and was not renewed for about a hundred years. On the other hand he exercised a great influence on Frankish monasticism, which he did much to strengthen and reshape, so that the work done by the monasteries in civilizing the wild Franks may be attributed ultimately to the first monk-pope.

(5) Relations with the Imperial Government

The reign of Gregory the Great marks an epoch in papal history, and this is specially the case in respect to his attitude towards the imperial Government centered at Constantinople. Gregory seems to have looked upon Church and State as co-operating to form a united whole, which acted in two distinct spheres, ecclesiastical and secular. Over this commonwealth were the pope and the emperor, each supreme in his own department, care being taken to keep these as far as possible distinct and independent. The latter point was the difficulty. Gregory definitely held that it was a duty of the secular ruler to protect the Church and preserve the "peace of the faith" (Mor., XXXI, viii), and so he is often found to call in the aid of the secular arm, not merely to suppress schism, heresy, or idolatry, but even to enforce discipline among monks and clergy (Epp., I, lxxii; II, xxix; III, lix; IV, vii, xxxii; V, xxxii; VIII, iv; XI, xii, xxxvii; XIII, xxxvi). If the emperor interfered in church matters the pope's policy was to acquiesce if possible, unless obedience was sinful, according to the principle laid down in Epp. XI, xxix; "Quod ipse [se imperator] fecerit, si canonicum est, sequimur; si vero canonicum non est, in quantum sine peccato nostro, portamus." In taking this line Gregory was undoubtedly influenced by his deep reverence for the emperor, whom he regarded as the representative of God in all things secular, and must still be treated with all possible respect, even when he encroached on the borders of the papal authority. On his side, although he certainly regarded himself as "superior in place and rank" to the exarch (Epp., II, xiv), Gregory objected strongly to the interference of ecclesiastical authorities in matters secular. As supreme guardian of Christian justice, the pope was always ready to intercede for, or protect anyone who suffered unjust treatment (Epp., I, xxxv, xxxvi, xlvii, lix; III, v; V, xxxviii; IX, iv, xlvi, lv, cxiii, clxxxii; XI, iv), but at the same time he used the utmost tact in approaching the imperial officials. In Epp., I, xxxix a, he explains for the benefit of his Sicilian agent the precise attitude to be adopted in such matters. Still, in conjunction with all this deference, Gregory retained a spirit of independence which enabled him, when he considered it necessary, to address even the emperor in terms of startling directness. Space makes it impossible to do more than refer to the famous letters to the Emperor Phocas on his usurpation and the allusions in them to the murdered Emperor Maurice (Epp., XIII, xxxiv, xli, xlii). Every kind of judgement has been passed upon Gregory for writing these letters, but the question remains a difficult one. Probably the pope's conduct herein was due to two things: first, his ignorance of the way in which Phocus had reached the throne; and second, his view that the emperor was God's representative on earth, and therefore deserving of all possible respect in his official capacity, his personal character not coming into the question at all. It should be noted, also, that he avoids any direct flattery towards the new emperor, merely using the exaggerated phrases of respect then customary, and expressing the high hopes he entertains of the new regime. Moreover, his allusions to Maurice refer to the sufferings of the people under his government, and do not reflect on the dead emperor himself. Had the empire been sound instead of in a hopelessly rotten state when Gregory became pope, it is hard to say how his views might have worked out in practice. As it was, his line of strong independence, his efficiency, and his courage carried all before them, and when he died there was no longer any question as to who was the first power in Italy.

(6) Missionary Work

Gregory's zeal for the conversion of the heathen, and in particular of the Angles, has been mentioned already, and there is no need to dwell at length on the latter subject, as it has been fully treated under AUGUSTINE OF CANTERBURY, SAINT. In justice to the great pope, however, it must be added that he lost no opportunity for the exercise of his missionary zeal, making every effort to root out paganism in Gaul, Donatism in Africa, and the Schism of the Three Chapters in North Italy and Istria. In his treatment of heretics, schismatics, and pagans his method was to try every means - persuasions, exhortations, threats - before resorting to force; but, if gentler treatment failed, he had no hesitation in accordance with the ideas of his age, in resorting to compulsion, and invoking the aid of the secular arm therein. It is curious, therefore, to find him acting as a champion and protector of the Jews. In Epp., I, xiv, he expressly deprecates the compulsory baptism of Jews, and many instances appear in which he insists on their right to liberty of action, so far as the law permitted, both in civil affairs and in the worship of the synagogue (Epp., I, xxxiv; II, vi; VIII, xxv;

IX, xxxviii, cxcv; XIII, xv). He was equally strong, however, in preventing the Jews from exceeding the rights granted to them by the imperial law, especially with regard to the ownership by them of Christian slaves (Epp., II, vi; III, xxxvii; IV, ix, xxi; VI, xxix; VII, xxi; VIII, xxi; IX, civ, ccxiii, ccxv). We shall probably be right, therefore, in attributing Gregory's protection of the Jews to his respect for law and justice, rather than to any ideas of toleration differing from those current at the time.

(7) Gregory and Monasticism

Although the first monk to become pope, Gregory was in no sense an original contributor to monastic ideals or practice. He took monasticism as he found it established by St. Benedict, and his efforts and influence were given to strengthening and enforcing the prescriptions of that greatest of monastic legislators. His position did indeed tend to modify St. Benedict's work by drawing it into a closer connection with the organization with the organization of the Church, and with the papacy in particular, but this was not deliberately aimed at by Gregory. Rather he was himself convinced that the monastic system had a very special value for the Church, and so he did everything in his power to diffuse and propagate it. His own property was consecrated to this end, he urged many wealthy people to establish or support monasteries, and he used the revenues of the patrimony for the same purpose. He was relentless in correcting abuses and enforcing discipline, the letters on such matters being far too numerous for mention here, and the points on which he insists most are precisely those, such as stability and poverty, on which St. Benedict's recent legislation had laid special stress. Twice only do we find anything like direct legislation by the pope. The first point is that of the age at which a nun might be made abbess, which he fixes at "not less than sixty years" (Epp., IV, xi),. The second is his lengthening of the period of novitiate. St. Benedict had prescribed at least one year (Reg. Ben., lviii); Gregory (Epp., X, ix) orders two years, with special precautions in the case of slaves who wished to become monks. More important was his line of action in the difficult question of the relation between monks and their bishop. There is plenty of evidence to show that many bishops took advantage of their position to oppress and burden the monasteries in their diocese, with the result that the monks appealed to the pope for protection. Gregory, while always upholding the spiritual jurisdiction of the bishop, was firm in support of the monks against any illegal aggression. All attempts on the part of a bishop to assume new powers over the monks in his diocese were condemned, while at times the pope issued documents, called Privilegia, in which he definitely set forth certain points on which the monks were exempt from episcopal control (Epp., V, xlix; VII, xii; VIII, xvii; XII, xi, xii, xiii). This action on Gregory's part undoubtedly began the long progress by which the monastic bodies have come to be under the direct control of the Holy See. It should be mentioned that in Gregory's day the current view was that ecclesiastical work, such as the cure of souls, preaching, administering the sacraments, etc., was not compatible with the monastic state, and in this view the pope concurred. On the other hand a passage in Epp., XII, iv, where he directs that a certain layman "should be tonsured either as a monk or a subdeacon", would suggest that the pope held the monastic state as in some way equivalent to the ecclesiastical; for his ultimate intention in this case was to promote the layman in question to the episcopate.

(8) Death, Canonization, Relics, Emblem

The last years of Gregory's life were filled with every kind of suffering. His mind, naturally serious, was filled with despondent forebodings, and his continued bodily pains were increased and intensified. His "sole consolation was the hope that death would come quickly" (Epp., XIII, xxvi). The end came on 12 March, 604, and on the same day his body was laid to rest in front of the sacristy in the portico of St. Peter's Basilica. Since then the relics have been moved several times, the most recent translation being that by Paul V in 1606, when they were placed in the chapel of Clement V near the entrance of the modern sacristy. There is some evidence that the body was taken to Soissous in France in the year 826, but probably only some large relic is meant. Venerable Bede (Hist. Eccl., II, i) gives the epitaph placed on his tomb which contains the famous phrase referring to Gregory as consul Dei. His canonization by popular acclamation followed at once on his death, and survived a reaction against his memory which seems to have occurred soon afterwards. In art the great pope is usually shown in full pontifical robes with the tiara and double cross. A dove is his special emblem, in allusion to the well-known story recorded by Peter the Deacon (Vita, xxviii), who tells that when the pope was dictating his homilies on Ezechiel a veil was drawn between his secretary and himself. As, however, the pope remained silent for long periods at a time, the servant made a hole in the curtain and, looking through, beheld a dove seated upon Gregory's head with its beak between his lips. When the dove withdrew its beak the holy pontiff spoke and the secretary took down his words; but when he became silent the servant again applied his eye to the hole and saw the dove had replaced its beak between his lips. The miracles attributed to Gregory are very many, but space forbids even the barest catalogue of them.

(9) Conclusion

It is beyond the scope of this notice to attempt any elaborate estimate of the work, influence, and character of Pope Gregory the Great, but some short focusing of the features given above is only just. First of all, perhaps, it will be best to clear the ground by admitting frankly what Gregory was not. He was not a man of profound learning, not a philosopher, not a conversationalist, hardly even a theologian in the constructive sense of the term. He was a trained Roman lawyer and administrator, a monk, a missionary, a preacher, above all a physician of souls and a leader of men. His great claim to remembrance lies in the fact that he is the real father of the medieval papacy (Milman). With regard to things spiritual, he impressed upon men's minds to a degree unprecedented the fact that the See of Peter was the one supreme, decisive authority in the Catholic Church. During his pontificate, he established close relations between the Church of Rome and those of Spain, Gaul, Africa, and Illyricum, while his influence in Britain was such that he is justly called the Apostle of the English. In the Eastern Churches, too, the papal authority was exercised with a frequency unusual before his time, and we find no less an authority than the Patriarch of Alexandria submitting himself humbly to the pope's "commands". The system of appeals to Rome was firmly established, and the pope is found to veto or confirm the decrees of synods, to annul the decisions of patricarchs, and inflict punishment on ecclesiastical dignitaries precisely as he thinks right. Nor is his work less noteworthy in its effect on the temporal position of the papacy. Seizing the opportunity which circumstances offered, he made himself in Italy a power stronger than emperor or exarch, and established a political influence which dominated the peninsula for centuries. From this time forth the varied populations of Italy looked to the pope for guidance, and Rome as the papal capital continued to be the centre of the Christian world. Gregory's work as a theologian and Doctor of the Church is less notable. In the history of dogmatic development he is important as summing up the teaching of the earlier Fathers and consolidating it into a harmonious whole, rather than as introducing new developments, new methods, new solutions of difficult questions. It was precisely because of this that his writings became to a great extent the compendium theologiae or textbook of the Middle Ages, a position for which his work in popularizing his great predecessors fitted him well. Achievements so varied have won for Gregory the title of “the Great”, but perhaps, among our English-speaking races, he is honoured most of all as the pope who loved the bright-faced Angles, and taught them first to sing the Angels’ song.

IV. HIS WRITINGS

Genuine, Doubtful, Spurious

Of the writings commonly attributed to Gregory the following are now admitted as genuine on all hands: “Moralium Libri XXXV”; “Regulae Pastoralis Liber”; “Dialogorum Libri IV”; “Homiliarum in Ezechielem Prophetam Lobri II”; “Homiliarum in Evangelia Libri II”; “Epistolarum Libri XIV”. The following are almost certainly spurious: “In Librum Primum Regum Variarum Expositionum Libri VI”; “expositio super Cantica Canticorum”; “Expositio in VII Psalmos Poenitentiales”; “Concordia Quorundam Testimoniorum S. Scripturae”. Besides the above there are attributed to Gregory certain liturgical hymns, the Gregorian Sacramentary, and the Antiphonary. (See ANTIPHONARY; SACRAMENTARY.)

CHIEF SOURCES.-First of all come the writings of Gregory himself, of which a full account is given above, the most important from a biographical point of view being the fourteen books of his Letters and the four books of Dialogues. The other early authorities are ST. GREGORY OF TOURS (d. 594 or 595), Historia Francorum, Bk. X, and the Liber Pontificalis, both practically contemporary. To the seventh century belong ST. ISIDORE OF SEVILLE. De Viris Illustribus, XL, and ST. ILDEPHONSUS OF TOLEDO, De Viris Illustribus, I. Next come the Vita Antiquissima, by an anonymous monk of Whitby, written probably about 713, and of special interest as representing an essentially English tradition in regard to the saint; THE VEN. BEDE, Hist. Eccles., II, whose work was finished in 731;

PAUL THE DEACON, who compiled a short Vita Gregorii Magni between 770 and 780, which may be supplemented from the same writers more famous work Historia Longobardorum; lastly JOHN THE DEACON, who, at the request of John VIII (872-882), produced his Vita Gregorii in answer to the complaint that no history of the saint had yet been produced in Rome. Besides these direct authorities considerable light on the period of St. Gregory's life may be gathered from the works of various contemporary chroniclers and historians.

G. ROGER HUDLESTON

Saint Gregory by Frederick Homes Dudden

From ‘1911 Encyclopædia Britannica, Volume 12’

SAINT GREGORY, surnamed the Great (c. 540–604), the first pope of that name, and the last of the four doctors of the Latin Church, was born in Rome about the year 540. His father was Gordianus “the regionary,” a wealthy man of senatorial rank, owner of large estates in Sicily and of a palace on the Caelian Hill in Rome; his mother was Silvia, who is commemorated as a saint on the 3rd of November. Of Gregory’s early period we know few details, and almost all the dates are conjectural. He received the best education to be had at the time, and was noted for his proficiency in the arts of grammar, rhetoric and dialectic. Entering on a public career he held, about 573, the high office of prefect of the city of Rome; but about 574, feeling irresistibly attracted to the “religious” life, he resigned his post, founded six monasteries in Sicily and one in Rome, and in the last — the famous monastery of St Andrew — became himself a monk. This grateful seclusion, however, he was not permitted long to enjoy. About 578 he was ordained “seventh deacon” (or possibly archdeacon) of the Roman Church, and in the following spring Pope Pelagius II. appointed him “apocrisiarius,” or resident ambassador, at the imperial court in Constantinople. Here he represented the interests of his church till about 586, when he returned to Rome and was made abbot of St Andrew’s monastery. His rule, though popular, was characterized by great severity, as may be inferred from the story of the monk Justus, who was denied Christian burial because he had secreted a small sum of money. About this time Gregory completed and published his well-known exposition of the book of Job, commenced in Constantinople: he also delivered lectures on the Heptateuch, the books of Kings, the Prophets, the book of Proverbs and the Song of Songs. To this period, moreover, Bede's incident of the English slave-boys (if indeed it be accepted as historical) ought to be assigned. Passing one day through the Forum, Gregory saw some handsome slaves offered for sale, and inquired their nation. "Angles," was the reply. "Good," said the abbot, "they have the faces of angels, and should be coheirs with the angels in heaven. From what province do they come ?" "From Deira." "Deira. Yea, verily, they shall be saved from God's ire (de ira) and called to the mercy of Christ. How is the king of that country named?" "Ælla." "Then must Allelulia be sung in Ælla's land." Gregory determined personally to undertake the conversion of Britain, and with the pope's consent actually set out upon the mission, but on the third day of his journey he was overtaken by messengers recalling him to Rome. In the year 590 Pelagius II. died of the plague that was raging in the city; whereupon the clergy and people unanimously chose Gregory as his successor. The abbot did his best to avoid the dignity, petitioned the emperor Maurice not to ratify his election, and even meditated going into hiding; but, "while he was preparing for flight and concealment, he was seized and carried off and dragged to the basilica of St Peter," and there consecrated bishop, on the 3rd of September 590.

The fourteen years of Gregory's pontificate were marked by extraordinary vigour and activity. "He never rested," writes a biographer, "he was always engaged in providing for the interests of his people, or in writing some composition worthy of the church, or in searching out the secrets of heaven by the grace of contemplation." His mode of life was simple and ascetic in the extreme. Having banished all lay attendants from his palace, he surrounded himself with clerics and monks, with whom he lived as though he were still in a monastery. To be spiritual needs of his people he ministered with pastoral zeal, frequently appointing “stations” and delivering sermons; or was he less solicitous in providing for their physical necessities. Deaconries (offices of alms) and guest-houses were liberally endowed, and free distributions of food were made to be poor in the convents and basilicas. The funds for these and similar purposes were supplied from the Patrimony of St Peter — the papal estates in Italy, the adjacent islands, Gaul, Dalmatia and Africa. These extensive domains were usually administered by specially appointed agents, — rectors and defensors, — who resided on the spot; but the general superintendence devolved upon the pope. In this sphere Gregory manifested rare capacity. He was one of the best of the papal landlords. During his pontificate the estates increased in value, while at the same time the real grievances of the tenants were redressed and their general position was materially improved. Gregory’s principal fault as a man of business was that he was inclined to be too lavish of his revenues. It is said that he even impoverished the treasury of the Roman Church by his unlimited charities.

Within the strict bounds of his patriarchate, i.e. the churches of the suburbicarian provinces and the islands, it was Gregory’s policy to watch with particular care ever the election and discipline of the bishops. With wise toleration he was willing to recognize local deviations from Roman usage (e.g. in the ritual of baptism and confirmation), yet he was resolute to withstand any unauthorized usurpation of rights and privileges. The following rules he took pains to enforce: that clerics in holy orders should not cohabit with their wives or permit any women, except those allowed by the canons, to live in their houses; that clerics accused on ecclesiastical or lesser criminal charges should be tried only in the ecclesiastical courts; that clerics in holy orders who had lapsed should “utterly forfeit their orders and never again approach the ministry of the altar”; that the revenues of each church should be divided by its bishop into four equal parts, to be assigned to the bishop, the clergy, the poor and the repair of the fabric of the church.

In his relations with the churches which lay outside the strict limits of his patriarchate, in northern Italy, Spain, Gaul, Africa and Illyricum and also in the East, Gregory consistently used his influence to increase the prestige and authority of the Roman See. In his view Rome, as the see of the Prince of the Apostles, was by divine right "the head of all the churches." The decrees of councils would have no binding force "without the authority and consent of the apostolic see": appeals might be made to Rome against the decisions even of the patriarch of Constantinople: all bishops, including the patriarchs, if guilty of heresy or uncanonical proceedings, were subject to correction by the pope. "If any fault is discovered in a bishop," Gregory wrote, "I know of no one who is not subject to the apostolic see." It is true that Gregory respected the rights of metropolitans and disapproved of unnecessary interference within the sphere of their jurisdiction canonically exercised; also that in his relations with certain churches (e.g. those in Africa) he found it expedient to abstain from any obtrusive assertion of Roman claims. But of his general principle-there can be no doubt. His sincere belief in the apostolic authority of the see of St Peter, his outspoken assertion of it, the consistency and firmness with which in practice he maintained it (e.g. in his controversies with the bishops of Ravenna concerning the use of the pallium, with Maximus the "usurping" bishop of Salona, and with the patriarchs of Constantinople in respect of the title "ecumenical bishops"), contributed greatly to build up the system of papal absolutism. Moreover this consolidation of spiritual authority coincided with a remarkable development of the temporal power of the papacy. In Italy Gregory occupied an almost regal position. Taking advantage of the opportunity which circumstances offered, he boldly stepped into the place which the emperors had left vacant and the Lombard kings had not the strength to seize. For the first time in history the pope appeared as a political power, a temporal prince. He appointed governors to cities, issued orders to generals, provided munitions of war, sent his ambassadors to negotiate with the Lombard king and actually dared to conclude a private peace. In this direction Gregory went farther than any of his predecessors: he laid the foundation of a political influence which endured for centuries. "Of the medieval papacy," says Milman, "the real father is Gregory the Great."

The first monk to become pope, Gregory was naturally a strong supporter of monasticism. He laid himself out to diffuse the system, and also to carry out a reform of its abuses by enforcing a strict observance of the Rule of St Benedict (of whom, it may be noted, he was the earliest biographer). Two slight innovations were introduced: the minimum age of an abbess was fixed at sixty, and the period of novitiate was prolonged from one year to two. Gregory sought to protect the monks from episcopal oppression by issuing privilegia, or charters in restraint of abuses, in accordance with which the jurisdiction of the bishops over the monasteries was confined to spiritual matters, all illegal aggressions being strictly prohibited. The documents are interesting as marking the beginning of a revolution which eventually emancipated the monks altogether from the control of their diocesans and brought them under the direct authority of the Holy See. Moreover Gregory strictly forbade monks to minister in parish churches, ordaining that any monk who was promoted to such ecclesiastical cure should lose all rights in his monastery and should no longer reside there. "The duties of each office separately are so weighty that no one can rightly discharge them. It is therefore very improper that one man should be considered fit to discharge the duties of both, and that by this means the ecclesiastical order should interfere with the monastic life, and the rule of the monastic life in turn interfere with the interests of the churches."

Once more, Gregory is remembered as a great organizer of missionary enterprise for the conversion of heathens and heretics. Mose important was the two-fold mission to Britain — of St Augustine in 596, of Mellitus, Paulinus and others in 601; but Gregory also made strenuous efforts to uproot paganism in Gaul, Italy, Sicily, Sardinia and Corsica, Arianism in Spain, Donatism in Africa, Manichaeism in Sicily, the heresy of the Three Chapters in Istria and northern Italy. In respect of the methods of conversion which he advocated he was not less intolerant than his contemporaries. Towards the Jews, however, he acted with exceptional lenity, protecting them from persecution and securing them the enjoyment of their legal privileges. The so-called "simoniacal heresy," particularly prevalent in Gaul, Illyricum and the East, he repeatedly attacked; and against the Gallican abuse of promoting laymen to bishoprics he protested with vigour.

The extent and character of Gregory's works in connexion with the liturgy and the music of the church is a subject of dispute. If we are to credit a 9th century biographer, Gregory abbreviated and otherwise simplified the Sacramentary of Gelasius, producing a revised edition with which his own name has become associated, and which represents the groundwork of the modern Roman Missal. But though it is certain that he introduced three changes in the liturgy itself (viz. the addition of some words in the prayer Hanc igitur, the recitation of the Pater Noster at the end of the Canon immediately before the fraction of the bread, and the chanting of the Allelulia after the Gradual at other times besides the season of Easter) and two others in the ceremonial connected therewith (forbidding deacons to perform any musical portion of the service except the chanting of the gospel, and subdeacons to wear chasubles), neither the external nor the internal evidence appears to warrant belief that the Gregorian Sacramentary is his work. Ecclesiastical tradition further ascribes to Gregory the compilation of an Antiphonary, the revision and rearrangement of the system of church music, and the foundation of the Roman schola cantorum. It is highly doubtful, however, whether he had anything to do either with the Antiphonary or with the invention or revival of the cantus planus; it is certain that he was not the founder of the Roman singing-school, though he may have interested himself in its endowment and extension.

Finally, as Fourth Doctor of the Latin Church, Gregory claims the attention of theologians. He is the link between two epochs. The last of the great Latin Fathers and the first representative of medieval Catholicism he brings the dogmatic theology of Tertullian, Ambrose and Augustine into relation with the Scholastic speculation of later ages. "He connects the Graeco-Roman with the Romano-Germanic type of Christianity." His teaching, indeed, is neither philosophical, systematic nor truly original. Its importance lies mainly in its simple, popular summarization of the doctrine of Augustine (whose works Gregory had studied with infinite care, but not always with insight), and in its detailed exposition of various religious conceptions which were current in the Western Church, but had not hitherto been defined with precision (e.g. the views on angelology and demonology, on purgatory, the Eucharistic Sacrifice, and the efficacy of relics). In his exposition of such ideas Gregory made a distinct advance upon the older theology and influenced profoundly the dogmatic development of the future. He imparted a life and impulse to prevailing tendencies, helping on the construction of the system hereafter to be completed in Scholasticism. He gave to theology a tone and emphasis which could not be disregarded. From his time to that of Anselm no teacher of equal eminence arose in the Church.

Gregory died on the 12th of March 604, and was buried the same day in the portico of the basilica of St Peter, in front of the sacristy. Translations took place in the 9th, 15th and 17th centuries, and the remains now rest beneath the altar in the chapel of Clement VIII. In respect of his character, while most historians agree that he was a really great man, some deny that he was also a great saint. The worst blot on his fair fame is his adulatory congratulation of the murderous usurper Phocas; though his correspondence with the Frankish queen Brunhilda, and the series of letters to and concerning the renegade monk Venantius also present problems which his admirers find difficult of solution. But while it may be admitted that Gregory was inclined to be unduly subservient to the great, so that at times he was willing to shut his eyes to the vices and even the crimes of persons of rank; yet it cannot fairly be denied that his character as a whole was singularly noble and unselfish. His life was entirely dominated by the religious motive. His sole desire was to promote the glory of God and of his church. At all times he strove honestly to live up to the light that was in him. “His goal,” says Lau, “was always that which he acknowledged as the best.” Physically, Gregory was of medium height and good figure. His head was large and bald, surrounded with a fringe of dark hair. His face was well-proportioned, with brown eyes, aquiline nose, thick and red lips, high-coloured cheeks, and prominent chin sparsely covered with a tawny beard. His hands, with tapering fingers, were remarkable for their beauty.

Gregory’s Works. — The following are now universally admitted to be genuine: — Epistolarum libri xiv., Moralium libri xxxv., Regulae pastoralis liber, Dialogorum libri iv., Homiliarum in Ezechielem prophetam libri ii., Homiliarum in Evangelia libri ii. These are all printed in Migne’s Patrologia Latina. The Epistolae, however, have been published separately by P. Ewald and L. M. Hartmann in the Monumenta Germaniae historica (Berlin, 1887–1899), and this splendid edition has superseded all others. The question of the chronological reconstruction of the Register is dealt with by Ewald in his celebrated article in the Neues Archiv der Gesellschaft für ältere deutsche Geschichtskunde, iii. p-625; and briefly by T. Hodgkin, Italy and her Invaders, v. 333-343. For information about these writings of Gregory, consult especially G. I. T. Lau, Gregor I. der Grosse, pt. ii. chap. i. Die Schriften Gregors and F. Homes Dudden, Gregory the Great (see Index II. B.). In addition to the above-mentioned works there are printed under Gregory’s name in Migne’s Patrologia Latina, vol. Ixxix., the following: — Super Cantico Canticorum expositio, In librum primum Regum variarum expositionum libri vi., In septem psalmos poenitenttales expositio and Concordia quorundam testimoniorum s. scripturae. But (with the possible exception of the first) none of these treatises are of Gregorian authorship. See the discussions in Migne, Lau and Dudden.

Authorities. — (a) The principal ancient authorities for the life and works of Gregory are given in their chronological order. They are: Gregory of Tours, Historia Francorum, x. I ; Liber pontificalis, "Vita Gregorii Magni"; Isidore of Seville, De vir. illustr. 40, and Ildefonsus of Toledo, De vir. illustr. i.; an anonymous Vita Gregorii (of English authorship) belonging to the monastery of St Gall, discovered by Ewald and published by F. A. Gasquet, A Life of Pope St Gregory the Great (1904); Bede, Historia ecclesiastica, ii. c. i ; Paul the Deacon, Vita Gregorii Magni (770–780); John the Deacon, Vita Gregorii (872–882). (b) Recent Literature: J. Barmby, Gregory the Great (1892); T. Bonsmann, Gregor I. der Grosse, ein Lebensbild (1890); F. Homes Dudden, Gregory the Great: his place in History and Thought (2 vols., 1905); G. J. T. Lau, Gregor I. der Grosse nach seinem Leben und seiner Lehre geschildert (1845); C. Wolfsgruber, Gregor der Grosse (1897). See also F. Gregorovius, Rome in the Middle Ages (Eng. trans.) ii. 16-103; T. Hodgkin, Italy and her Invaders, v. cc. 7-10; H. K. Mann, The Lives of the Popes, i. 1-250; F. W. Kellett, Pope Gregory the Great and his Relations with Gaul; L. Pingaud, La Politique de Saint Grégoire le Grand; W. Wisbaum, Die wichtigsten Richtungen und Ziele der Tätigkeit des Papstes Gregors des Grossen; W. Hohaus, Die Bedeutung Gregors des Grossen als liturgischer Schriftsteller; E. G. P. Wyatt, St Gregory and the Gregorian Music; and the bibliographies of Gregory in Chevalier, Répertoire des sources historiques du moyen age, and A. Potthast, Bibliotheca historica medii aevi.
